YOUR letter reached me, and I read its contents. I had before the receipt of your communication obtained full particulars of the affair from Major Harrison, and had therefore prepared myself and instructed my vizier, Moolla Wullee Mahomed, to get ready to meet you. We only waited for your reply, which we expected in a day or two, I had resolved to await arrival of your letter for two or three days, and then if my coming to visit you were difficult, to send my vizier Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, to meet you and to grant to you and my vizier full authority to act on my behalf in all matters connected with the good of my State, feeling sure at the same time that measures will be adopted which will result in my welfare and that of my subjects. In reference to the plunder of kafilahs mentioned by you, I have to state that I had given the necessary warning to the merchants, and told them to avoid the Bolan route for fear of the evil doings and robberies of the rebels around and in the vicinity of the Bolan Pass. I also informed them that they should take that route which they might consider the more safe and free from danger. They took no notice of this warning and took the route by the Bolan at their own wish, but before they did so, I caused documents of idemnification to be executed by them which are still in my possession. If perchance I am unable to come, I will give all these papers in charge of my vizier.

I have issued proclamations to officers in Kutchee and Kohistan, copies (four) of which are appended, one of these is for your information, the second is addressed to Naib Moolla Mahomed and Shukkur Khan, Commander of the Regiment "Waffadar," the third to Kumbur, Naib of Gundava, the fourth to Moolla Shahibdad, Nazim of Bagh, my object in sending these to you is to request you to send copies of the last three to their respective destinations, in order to avoid delay in their transmission from me direct, or their being intercepted by the rebels. Consider me as your true friend as before, &c.

Enclosure 4 in No. 45.

Abstract Translation of Copy of a Proclamation issued by his Highness the Khan of Khelat to all the Officers in his Dominions, sent for the information of the Commissioner in Sind.

IN consideration of the friendship existing between our Government and the British, the latter have agreed to engage in promoting a cessation of the disturbances caused by the Brahooees and to give peace to our subjects, you are therefore directed to see that there is no breach of the peace by any person belonging to your forces, and that all acts of hostility with the Brahooees are avoided. Make this public, and let every one of my subjects refrain from wrong doing. This is my pleasure. See that it is not departed from, and that every one feels himself bound by it.

Enclosure 5 in No. 45.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Moolla Wullee Mahomed, Vizier, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 25th of Zoolkaid 1288.

I RECEIVED your purwana and perused it. The reading of its contents made me glad. You will know all the particulars from his Highness the Khan's letter. It will be with great joy that I obey the orders of my master to proceed to Kutchee to meet you. If it pleases God, it will soon happen. Consider me as the faithful servant of both the Governments, and be doing me kindness as heretofore.

No. 1370, dated Bombay Castle, 6th March 1872.

From C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed by the Right Honourable the Governor in Council to transmit herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of a Diary by the Assistant Surgeon at Khelat, for the week ending the 3rd ultimo, received under endorsement of the Commissioner in Sind, No. 170 of the 17th idem.

Enclosure in No. 46.

Diary, No. 4, by Assistant Surgeon R. Bowman, M.D., for the week ending 3d February 1872.

The following information has been forwarded by Major Harrison from Khelat :—

On the 22nd January letters from Nawab Mahomed Khan and Shukkur Khan were forwarded for my perusal. The former reported his return to Dadur from Peer Kutta, and that his having proceeded into Afghan territory had been disapproved of by the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier. Shukkur Khan had gone with 100 of his men to a place called Tung; a skirmish ensued, but no casualties occurred; he then returned to his camp, and on the following day the chiefs came and made their salaam to him, and asked to be forgiven, and that if his Highness would pardon them they would proceed with him, Shukkur Khan, to Khelat, and, pending reference, agreed to remain where they were.

On the 28th other letters were received from the above persons. Nawab Mahomed Khan mentioned that ill-disposed Brahooees had taken up a position in Western Kutchee, and were plundering the inhabitants, and that it would be necessary to establish regular outposts as they did not care about the Belooch levies. The following Lehrees had made their salaam :—Shere Taj Khan and Sobrah Khan; other Brahooees would follow their example if his Highness sanctioned a treaty. Regarding the latter the chiefs make three stipulations :—

1st.—That whatever faults they have committed shall be forgiven.
2nd.—That their lives should be spared.
3rd.—That their hereditary lands, and what they had purchased should be restored to them.

Sirda Moolla Mahomed had proceeded into the Murree Hills with nine Sowars. The Juttuck and Lotanee chiefs, Chakur Khan and Kumal Khan, had constant disputes with Nawab Mahomed Khan, wanting to draw pay and subsistence for 500 men, whereas they only had 200. This dispute at last ended in Chakur Khan being placed in confinement, but released at the intercession of the Moosanee Sirdar, and presented with a loongee. The Nawab requested permission to dismiss the levies, as also that money should be sent to meet current expenses.

Shukkur Khan stated that the rebels had been assisted by the Khan of Seebee, and that he had charge of all the property they had plundered in Kutchee, and from the kafilas, and that if his Highness would give the necessary instructions he would attack Seebee.

His Highness has replied to Nawab Mahomed Khan, that he has taken the subject of treaty into consideration, and will intimate his intentions at a future date. To Shukkur Khan he writes :—Proceeding into Afghan country has been disapproved of by Colonel Phayre, C.B. The English* Government are on friendly terms with the Ameer and myself, and I am hopeful that they will solicit him, the Ameer, to either order this property to be restored, or to sanction my proceeding against Seebee.

Sirdar Faquir Mahomed displays great inquisitiveness regarding my movements. I have just received a letter from him, asking what General Pollock passed through the country for, and where I am going to, &c., &c.

Darogah Atta Mahomed writes that he had been fighting seven days with Bhai Khan, but that whenever he left the fort to meet them they retreated from one date-grove to another. Sirda Gajee Khan had been written to three times to reinforce Atta Mahomed, but had made no effort to do so. Meer Hussun and Meer Nawab Moolahzais Gitchkees were holding the fort of Khooda Budeen for his Highness, and could be relied upon. His Highness, when visiting me on Friday the 26th, stated that he had reliable information that Sirdar Bhai Khan had sent for Meer Esan Khan, his Highness' brother-in-law, to try and arrange matters for him with Darogah Atta Mahomed.

A post for General Pollock despatched from Jacobabad on the 16th was received here on the 29th, at 9 a.m., and forwarded at once.

General Pollock was at Mustoong on the 27th, and expected to be at Quettah on the 29th. Syud Noor Mahomed, the Afghan Commissioner, had arrived at Killah Kassim, near Kooch Lak, with 100 Infantry and 160 Sowars.

* This point may be noticed hereafter when the Khan arrives. It does not, however, appear to me that the interference of the British Government is in any way called for. If the Seebee Sirdar does not of himself give up any plunder he may have in possession, after affairs are arranged between his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars, the Khan might then address his Highness the Ameer on the subject, begging the latter to dispose of the matter. But he certainly should not propose to proceed against Seebee, a possession of Cabul.

(Sd.) W. L. M.

Zemindars from the village of Meedpoor have sent to Beebee Gunjan, stating that when they were putting aside her revenue or share of grain they were surrounded by Sarawan Brahooees, who claimed her share on the plea that Kutchee now belonged to them; that they at once asked for protection from Kumbur, the Naib, who came over with 20 Sowars, but being outnumbered retired, and that the Brahooees then carried off what they considered Government property.

The Jan Sing of Kozdar reports that he has received information from Wud, stating that the Minguls had collected 100 camels for Sirdar Noordeen. Ali Khan, Jamote, declines to allow him to remain any longer at Beyla. It is supposed he will return to Wud as soon as the baggage animals reach Beyla. Abdool Azeez reports to the same effect from Bhagwana.

The Belooch who were assembled here to garrison the fort have been allowed to return to their homes under instructions from his Highness the Khan.

The last Kossid from Jacobabad states that a party of Brahooees were looting between Kotra and Kharee.

Enclosure in No. 47.

No. 5, dated Kozdar, 10th February 1872.

Diary by Assistant Surgeon R. Bowman, M.D., for the week ending 10th February 1872.

His Highness the Khan has informed Major Harrison that he had heard from Candahar that some of the merchants plundered in the Bolan Pass near Dadur had complained to the Sub-Governor of that place of the treatment they had experienced at the hands of the Brahooees, and that he at once ordered Sirdar Moollah Mahomed's brother-in-law, Aladad Badoozai, to be blown away from a gun. This order was rescinded at the intercession of Syud Ali Mahomed of Mustoong. Sirdar Abdool Rahman Zuggur Mingul has written to his Highness to say that Azaad Khan has been warned by the Ameer not to take part in any Brahooee disputes against his Highness the Khan, and that he, Abdool Rahman, has offered his services to Azaad Khan as a mutual friend to make up any misunderstanding that exists between him and the Khan; this information has been corroborated by letter received here from Nal.

Meer Mahomed, the Mingul Sirdar residing at present at Baghwan, reports that Noordeen Mingul has left Beylah with 100 camels, carrying supplies, ammunition, guns, &c. with the object of attacking Wud and Kozdar; also that he had marched as far as a mountain pass named Kumarooe, when he dismissed all his followers with the exception of thirty men, with whom he returned to Beylah. The Jam Singh reports that there are constant disputes between the Minguls and Jamotes.

A Raisanee named Nubbee Buksh was met in the Moolla Pass; he stated he was en route to Beylah with a message from Sirdar Moollah Mahomed for Noordeen.

Naib Peer Buksh, writting from Kotra to the Jam Singh, states that on the 27th January a man named Khan Mahomed Zehree gave him the following verbal information under instructions from Vakeel Mahomed Khan Meeah Khan Raisanee. Munnoo Khan Giranee, Jamal Khan, and Buzkhan, with a detachment from his Highness' force, had gone to disperse the Badoozai and Nicharee tribes, who were looting near Kundah under Sarhing Khan Badoozai and Bahawur Khan Nicharee: in the fight which ensued, three of the Khan's force were wounded, 10 or 12 of the lootoos killed, Sarhing Khan received two wounds, one from a bullet, the other a sword-cut; the Oomaenee tribe, who had given the plunderers assistance, were also punished; 1,000 sheep, 60 camels, and other property belonging to these people, were seized by the Khan's force. Meeah Khan and Munoo Khan are at present residing in Kundah.

No news from Mekran has been received during the week.

Two Candahar kafilas chiefly consisting of wool, have passed through this en route to Kurrachee viâ the Raj Road. A kafila of 150 camels from Kurrachee for Candahar passed through on the 5th instant; they report everything quiet on the road; on the 8th there were several showers of sleet and rain during the day.

Referring to my letter No. 1370, dated the 6th instant, I have the honour to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a Diary (No. 6), by the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending the 17th ultimo, received under endorsement of the Commissioner in Sind, No. 183 of the 27th idem.

Enclosure in No. 48.

No. 6, dated Kozdar, 17th February 1872.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 17th February 1872.

Aladad Badoozai, brother-in-law of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, left Candahar with five followers, passed through Kharan, and was sent by the chief of that place, Azaad Khan, to join Noordeen Mingul at Wud.

Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed has left Nal for Jao; object not known, but it is supposed that he does not wish to meet Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

Shortly after Nawab Mahomed Khan's departure with a force to Kutchee, his Highness the Khan wrote to Darogah Atta Mahomed to hand over charge of the Kedj district to Sirdar Bhai Khan or Sirdar Esau Khan Gitchkees. These instructions could not be carried out owing to disturbances created by the former chief. Through the intervention of the latter Sirdar hostilities have ceased, and Darogah Atta Mahomed has handed over charge of Kedj, and the Toorbut Fort to his Assistant, Ali Jan, returning himself to Khelat with the detachment viâ Kotewah.

I left Khelat with Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed on the 11th, arrived at Kozdar on the 16th, and after halting here to-day, the 17th, proceed down the Moolla Pass, and expect to be at Gundava on the 23rd or 24th.

In continuation of my letter No. 1552, dated the 13th instant, I am directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of the diary from the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 24th ultimo, and of its enclosure, received under endorsement of the Commissioner in Sind, No. 204 of the 2nd instant.

Enclosure 1 in No. 49.

No. 7, dated Gundava, the 24th February 1872.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for week ending 24th February 1872.

Left on Sunday the 18th with my escort, Dr. Bowman, and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, en route to Gundava, arriving at the latter place to-day, the 24th. In the Moolla Pass we met several Belooch returning to their homes from Nawab Mahomed Khan's camp, amongst them Sirdar Kaisah Khan Moosanee.

The Mugzee chief, Kaisah Khan, and the Rhind Sirdar's son, Sirdar Khan, met Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed between Peer Chuttur and Kotra with about 800 followers, and escorted us to our camp. Both chiefs visited me in the course of the afternoon.

Many of the poorer classes of Brahooees who live in the hills came from a distance to see the Shahgassee, as they scarcely credited he was still alive. All of them brought their little offerings, and the expression of good will among all classes showed the esteem and respect that is felt for Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

Nawab Mahomed Khan wrote to the Shahgassee and myself, stating that he had been ordered by the Political Superintendent to proceed to Gundava, but that he had written to point out that scarcity of forage and supplies rendered it advisable for him to remain at Bagh, and that he should stay there until an answer was received, unless the Shahgassee gave him orders to move. The Shahgassee has, I believe, sanctioned the force remaining where they are, pending the Political Superintendent's reply.

His Highness forwarded a letter from Darogah Atta Mahomed, reporting that the rebels had made their salaam, and that on their being asked whether they would prefer his assistant, Ali Jan, or Sirdar Faquir Mahomed as Naib of Mekran, they elected the former. Darogah Atta Mahomed had also made arrangements for Major St. John and his party. Copy and translation of letter are attached.

Sirdar Faquir Mahomed has written me a friendly letter, stating that he had proceeded to Jao, but that his son Meah Kaira was at Nal and would be always willing to do anything for me.

The very sudden change from cold to heat has told on the health of the escort, but Dr. Bowman reports that the majority of the sick will be fit for duty in a few days.

Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 2 in No. 49.

Dated 17th Zoolkaid (corresponding with the 29th January 1872).

From Darogah Atta Mahomed to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I have received your letter, your kindness to me is great, may God keep you in safety. On the 15th Zoolkaid, Wednesday, 27th January, Mea Bhai Khan and other Belooch of Kedj came and made their salaam, acknowledged their allegiance to you, and agreed to pay revenue. Oomer Kossid took a month on the road, being ill 15 days. I asked the chiefs and other people under whose orders they would be most happy, Sirdar Faquir Mahomed or Ali Jan; they all with one consent elected the latter. I, therefore, appointed him Naib, and handed the fort of Toorbut over to him.

I have given Ali Jan and the chiefs strict orders to do everything they can for Major St. John, and that on his leaving Mekran he should be asked for a letter stating whether he had received every attention and assistance.

Agreeably to your order I left with the detachment, guns, &c. on the 17th Zoolkaid, 29th January. I have ordered the detachment at Punjoor to meet me at Muska. I have also written to Sirdar Gazee Khan at Punjoor and Shabban, Jan Singh, that they may rest satisfied and contented, and to be always ready and willing to perform your service.

The sowar that I took into your service at Punjoor still remains at that place. Please send a relief for the 20 sowars at Kedj.

Please write to your Naibs at Kolewah and Muska to provide supplies for my party.

In the late disturbances the detachment and all under my orders have behaved remarkably well.

I AM to communicate to you the following observations of the Right Honourable the Governor General in Council, with reference to your letter No. 1174, dated 26th February 1872, forwarding copy of a communication from the Commissioner in Sind, to the effect that the Khan of Khelat has accorded to Colonel Merewether full authority to act in his behalf in bringing to an end the present disturbances in his Highness' dominions.

2. I am to state that as the Khan has placed his case in the hands of the Commissioner in Sind, and the Sirdars have now ceased hostilities, pending a settlement of the dispute and as the Government of India has laid down clearly the course to be pursued in conducting negociations in the matter in its letters No. 8C.—P. and No, 222P, dated respectively the 11th and 24th January 1872, and in its subsequent telegrams, and has further given Colonel Merewether full discretionary power within the scope of those instructions, His Excellency in Council hopes soon to hear that the Commissioner has succeeded in effecting a settlement satisfactory to all parties, and giving a hope of permanent peace in the future.

TRANSLATION of a Letter from the Jan Singh, of Jalawan, to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

ON a former occasion I gave you news from this place; I hope it may have reached you in safety. Sirdar Noordeen will enter Wudd on the 18th Zoolhuj, 28th February. The Lassees have not accompanied him. The Bezonjaos on the Purali and in Beyla are with him. He has also sent a man to collect the Minguls. I write this for your information. By God's blessing and his Highness' good fortune, everything is all correct. Kindly write to me of your welfare.

P.S.—Ibrahim Roonja and 100 followers are with Noordeen. The latter has also sent a messenger to Sirdar Azaad Khan.

Enclosure 3 in No. 51.

TRANSLATION of a Letter from the Jalawan Jan Singh to Molee Dost Mahomed.

ON the 18th Zoolhuj, 28th February, Noordeen will enter Wudd. Ibrahim Roonja is the only Lassee with him. He has 100 followers. The Bezonjaos of Beylah are with Noordeen. He has Keywul Mistree with him, two guns, and one mortar. Noordeen will probably await the result of the Shahgassee's conference. He has sent to Sirdar Azaad Khan. We are all well here. Write to me of your welfare.

I AM directed to forward to you, for submission to the Government of India, the accompanying copy of a memorandum from the Commissioner of Sind, No. 351, dated the 6th instant, enclosing copy of a letter addressed by him to the Khan of Khelat, relative to the settlement of the claims of the Sirdars of Beloochistan.

Enclosure in No. 52.
Dated the 6th April 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS,—Your Highness' Wuzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, arrived here on the 1st March, and has ever since then been most zealous and useful in carrying out your Highness' instructions to give me every assistance as he would to you.

The proceedings in reference to which he came here have now been brought to a close, and I have given him, for your Highness' information, a copy of the decision I arrived at.

He assured me in presence of the Sirdars that the terms granted in your Highness' name should be strictly adhered to.

I sincerely trust that the clemency that has been once more extended to these Sirdars will be fully and properly appreciated by them, and that the consideration they have been treated with will lead them to be in future good and faithful subjects of your Highness, so that peace and order may be undisturbed in your dominions.

The entire approval of the British Government has been accorded to what has been done, and, in communicating that approval, I have to represent to your Highness that, while it is anticipated that the conduct of the Sirdars of Beloochistan will be such as to prevent all cause for disquietude, it is also expected and trusted that every effort will be used by your Highness to draw the affections and sympathies of your chiefs towards yourself, so that they may always look up to you, and endeavour earnestly and heartily to promote the stability of your Government and the prosperity of the country generally. No Government can be strong unless justice guides it, and there is thorough union of all parts thereof. It cannot stand by itself. On this occasion mediation by me has been permitted in the hope that it may be beneficial. But at the same time I am constructed to inform your Highness that, while in future every aid will be afforded you when it is needed in the shape of advice from the Political Agent with you, from the Political Superintendent on the Frontier here, and from the Commissioner in Sind, you must depend upon your own powers and your own good management for the proper ruling of your country. That any armed intervention on the part of the British Government between you and your chiefs can never be permitted. Such as explained by General Jacob to your brother would only tend to weaken, not strengthen, your position, and must not be looked for.

I have in conclusion to express to your Highness the gratification experienced by Her Majesty's Government at the frank and sincere manner in which you entrusted to me power to act in your behalf, and agreed to abide by whatever conclusions I might see fit to come to, and I have had much pleasure in intimating to your Highness' Wuzeer the manner in which Her Majesty's Government desires to show its appreciation of what has passed. This will be communicated to you by him and by Major Harrison, and I trust it may prove satisfactory to your Highness.

With expressions of sincere friendship and earnest desire for your welfare and the prosperity of your country, I subscribe myself, &c.

With reference to recent correspondence regarding Khelat affairs, I am directed to forward to you, for submission to the Government of India, the accompanying copy of a letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 340, dated the 5th instant, giving cover to copy of papers connected with the settlement of the claims of the Sirdars of Beloochistan, lately in rebellion.

2. I am to state that the enclosure to my No. 2221, dated 15th idem, should have been delayed for the present correspondence.

Enclosure 1 in No. 53.

No. 340, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 5th April 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to His Excellency the Right Hon. Sir W. R. S. V. FitzGerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

I have the honour to report that the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, Wuzeer to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, arrived here on the 1st March, accompanied by Major Harrison, Political Agent at that Court. I received a visit of ceremony from the Shahgassee on the same day and returned it on the following morning.

2. The Sirdars of Sarawan named below, having been summoned to attend on the 4th idem, arrived that afternoon :—

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee.
„ Shadee Khan, Bungulzye.
„ Jundo Khan, Shawanee.
„ Syud Khan, Mahomedshahee.
„ Dost Mahomed, Lehree.
„ Alladina Khoord, with his two sons—
1. Dost Mahomed,
2. Yar Mahomed.

I received them in a ceremonial durbar on the morning of the 6th, at which were also present—

Colonel Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.
His Highness' Wuzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.
Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat.
Mr. F. R. S. Wyllie, Assistant Commissioner.

3. On the 7th the above officers being again present, the Sirdars attended in Durbar, when I addressed them as follows :—

"The British Government has noticed with much concern the disturbances which have been going on in Beloochistan, and so seriously affecting the prosperity of that country and the well-being of all in it.

"The British Government is in alliance with the sovereign of Beloochistan, and, regarding him, his Sirdars, and subjects as friendly neighbours, has always been desirous to assist in promoting any measures that may be for the benefit of that country, its ruler, chiefs, and people.

"Differences have unfortunately occurred beween his Highness the Khan and certain of his nobles. It appears to the British Government that its good offices may advantageously be employed in bringing about adjustment of these differences by friendly mediation.

"I am instructed accordingly to so use them, and his Highness the Khan has with proper frankness and good-will fully authorised me to engage in this mediation on his behalf and you also, Sirdars of Sarawan, have accepted the same.

"I shall now call upon you each separately and individually to lay before me any points in which you may consider yourselves to have been sufferers, and any rights which you may consider yourselves justly entitled to hold.

"In doing so, however, I must tell you that in anything you submit to me, you must recollect that the British Government can only listen to such claims as are based on true justice and the undoubted customs of your country, and I would urge you all in making your statements to recollect that unfounded claims cannot be attended to; that as Sirdars you are bound to bear in remembrance that you have a public duty to perform, viz., to apply your best powers in maintaining good government in your country for the security of all, and that you should not allow any personal fancies to make you forgetful of your public duties.

"I feel sure that your good sense and regard for your country's welfare will confirm this view to you, and I will now proceed to call on the first Sirdar, Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, to submit what he wishes to have considered."

4. I then called on each Sirdar separately to state what he wished to be taken into consideration, commencing with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee. These statements are given hereafter, as well as the remarks obtained from his Highness' Wuzeer on the same. Before proceeding further, however, I should explain the exact position of each of these six Sirdars, who were the leaders, or engaged in the late revolution which commenced at Moostung in October last and ended in Kutchee in January.

5. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is the head of the Raisanee tribe of Brahooees. He holds lands at Khanack, near Moostung and Mittree, in Kutchee.

The Raisanee is one of the principal tribes of Sarawan, but not always the head one, as has hitherto been erroneously supposed. The Shawanee is the oldest and was always the leading one, carrying the standard of Sarawan in battle until the time of Mahomed Khan, father of Mehrab Khan, when the standard was taken from them owing to the then chief, Abdool Kadur, having fallen under the displeasure of the Khan, and given to Hybut, Raisanee, great-grandfather of Moolla Mahomed. In Mehrab Khan's reign, Meeroolla Khan, son of Hybut, Raisanee, rebelled, and the standard was taken away and re-given to the Shawanees. In Meer Nusseer Khan's time it was again taken from the Shawanees and placed in the hands of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, who forfeited it by rebellion, and it was restored to the Shawanees who hold it now. The standards of Sarawan and Jalawan are always kept by the Khan, excepting when his vassals are called out for active service. They are then formally delivered to and carried in front of the head of the tribe to whom they are entrusted for the time being. The Raisanees were originally Patans before they settled with the Brahooes under a man named "Rais," whence their name, not because they were "the head," as supposed by "Masson."

6. Shadee Khan, Bungulzye, is present head of that tribe, his father, Wudera Adam Khan, having died last year. The Bungulzyes are the third in importance of the Sarawan tribes and hold lands near Moostung and at Mull in Kutchee. Adam Khan was always well esteemed by the Khans. He, however, sided with Shere Dil Khan in 1863. Being afterwards forgiven by the present Khan he was treated well by him, but was unfortunately led away by Moolla Mahomed and Alladina Khoord. Part of the Bungulzyes remained faithful to the Khan, and are with him at Khelat under Shahdad Khan, cousin of Adam Khan.

7. Jundo Khan, Shawanee, is only a minor chief of that clan, which, as above mentioned, is really the leading as well as the most powerful and numerous in Sarawan, It is not really a Brahooee tribe, but supposed to be of Persian origin. It has, however, for long been incorporated among the Brahooees. The true head of the clan is Abdool Kadur, but he is an imbecile, and for some time past endeavours have been made to get the Khan to recognise one of the other Sirdars as chief, but he would not do so. Moombarik Khan, Shawanee, who was killed in the fight at Moostung in October last, aspired to the leadership. The Shawanee hold lands near Moostung and at Hajee-ka-Shere in Kutchee.

8. Syud Khan, Mahomedshahee. The Mahomedshahees rank about fourth, and have lands near Moostung and near Bagh in Kutchee.

9. Dost Mahomed Lehree.—The Lehrees hold lands in the hills between Moostung and Dadur, principally at Narmack and near Bagh in Kutchee. Jehangeer Khan, father of Dost Mahomed, was a man well spoken of, until led away by others. He had been pardoned by the Khan for a previous act of rebellion and released from imprisonment to be reinstated in his former possessions. But in spite of this clemency he joined in the outbreak at Moostung in October and was killed in the fight. On his person was found a letter believed to be from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, written from Canhahar, calling upon him to create disturbances on behalf of the Sirdars in exile, Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen Mingul. This letter had no seal attached, but as Moolla Mahomed did shortly after join the insurgents and Noordeen Mingul went to Jalawan to cause rebellion, it may be fairly assumed that there was truth in Moolla Mahomed's connexion with the latter, especially as the Khan of Khelat received at the same time information from Candahar that the Brahooee Sirdars, Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen, were in communication with Jehangeer Khan, Lehree, and Syud Ali Mahomed of Moostung.

10. Alladina Khoord.—The Khoords hold lands on the Dusht-i-bedowlut at the top of the Bolan Pass and at Moras in the hills, a little to the left of that pass, also some near Bagh in Kutchee. The possessions of the Dusht and Moras yield very little to the Khoords, and they have always been known as restless and questionable in their behaviour. Having little to lose, they were ready to join in any disturbance that took place, and this has particularly been the case with Alladina, who is a subtle character, most unscrupulous in his sayings and doings. He has been repeatedly pardoned by the Khan, and has been left in possession of his estates; but this leniency has had no effect whatever on him. Much of the evil that has occurred in the country during the past nine years may with justice be laid at the door of this reckless schemer.* The Khoords, as their name shows, are not of Brahooee origin, but, as far as I can learn, have been associated with them for a great many years. A portion of the clan under Aftar Khan and Mullik, cousins of Alladina, remained faithful to the Khan, but Aftar Khan died lately; some of his followers are here with the Shahgassee.

11. As the lands in the hilly country produce nothing in the winter, it has always been the custom since Kutchee was taken from the Culhoras of Sind and given to the Brahooees by Nadir Shah, in compensation for the death of Abdoolla Khan, Khan of Khelat, to give Sirdars grants of land in Kutchee as well. All these they held under feudal service.

12. It will be observed that the disaffected Sirdars of Sarawan, numbering only six, all belong to either Moostung or its immediate neighbourhood, where also resided Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, the most influential of the party, and it will be seen from the papers which follow that they have, since the outbreak of 1867 (also commenced at Moostung), blindly followed his leading. It will lead to a clearer understanding of the position if his career is briefly followed before reviewing the statements made by the Sirdars.

13. In the younger Nusseer Khan's reign Moolla Mahomed was treated with great distinction and regard by that sovereign, and it is not improbable, as has been supposed, that Nusseer Khan's strong leaning to this powerful chief led the Darogah, Gool Mahomed, to perpetrate the atrocious deed of causing Nusseer Khan to be poisoned from the dread that his, the Darogah's, influence would be sacrificed for that of the Sirdar. Moolla Mahomed was present with the Sirdars, who with the Jam of Beyla presented themselves at Khelat in September 1857 on the present Khan's accession under the pretence of doing homage, but who, as Sir Bartle Frere wrote, "thought the "occasion propitious for pressing claims on the Khan, some of which appear to have "been reasonable and well-founded, while others were quite the reverse." They assembled their followers then with a view to enforce the Khan's attention to their claims, but the Darogah met them successfully and remained master of the situation, as well as in possession of the Fort of Khelat and the person of the Khan, then a youth of between 17 and 18, just freed from the harem. Matters went tolerably smoothly for a time, though that ill-feeling existed between the Khan and his nobles is shown by Sir Henry Green's report in 1863, when he wrote :—"Much of the ill-feeling towards the Khan is "doubtless caused by his capricious and unstable character, but his chiefs by the "unreasonableness of their demands and insolence of their conduct towards him render "any permanent settlement of their differences most difficult. His power over them is "slight, and although their lands are held by feudal tenure any attempt made by his "Highness to enforce even the extradition of a culprit leads to their banding together and "defying his authority." Unfortunately, the year before that the Khan had passed a grave personal affront* on Sirdar Taj Mahomed, Zehree, the principal Chief of Jalawan, in the matter of a marriage. Moolla Mahomed at that time made common cause with Taj Mahomed, and the revolution of 1863 followed, when the Khan was wounded at Gundava by his half-brother, Shere Dil, and had to flee for his life. The Chiefs set up Shere Dil and maintained him as long as he had money or power to bestow favours. The whole treasure of the Khanate that was in the "Miri" at Khelat, amounting, it is said, to some nine lakhs of rupees, was either plundered or squandered. In May 1864, Shere Dil was murdered, and Meer Khodadad Khan recalled and reinstated on the throne, mainly through the assistance of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee. After the restoration Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed were all powerful at first and acted much as they liked. This was viewed with great disfavor by many of the other Sirdars, who remonstrated with the Khan on the subject. Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed dreaded the loss of their power, and the latter still evinced his personal discontent. In March 1865, when the Khan was at Bagh in Kutchee, these two Sirdars plotted together to assassinate him and put his infant son on the throne, that there might be less check on them. The conspiracy was discovered in time and failed by the prompt action of the faithful Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. Moolla Mahomed went off to his own place, Mittree, about 27 miles north of Bagh, but Taj Mahomed remained and was not interfered with. He then endeavoured to carry out the Khan's assassination by himself. This was detected also, and then only was Taj Mahomed made a prisoner, continuing in confinement until his death, in August 1867. One of the demands made by the rebel Sirdars in 1869 was blood-money for Taj Mahomed, meaning to convey thereby that he had been killed by the Khan. Sir Henry Green stated, "as no inquiries I have made can prove the truth of the report, "I place little faith in it." The Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, declares most decidedly that Taj Mahomed died a natural death; that he himself saw the body laid out, and can speak positively to no signs whatever of a forcible death; and that there are plenty of others who could do the same. If force had been intended by anyone, two years would not have been allowed to pass before it was used. This question of blood-money has been lately revived by the Sirdars, but is utterly unsound and most offensive. Sir Henry Green, in writing of Taj Mahomed's character said :—"One thing is, how-"ever, beyond a doubt, that a more desperate intriguer or a greater traitor did not exist "in any Native Court in Asia, and so long as he remained at large, his Highness the "Khan's position could never have been safe."† On hearing of Taj Mahomed's arrest Moolla Mahomed fled to Candahar. From March 1865 to October 1867, that is from the time "Taj Mahomed was secured and Moolla "Mahomed had fled, the most perfect tranquillity reigned throughout Beloochistan." This tranquillity was only disturbed by Moolla Mahomed returning from Candahar in 1867, and joining in an outbreak, which commenced at that time amongst the unsettled characters of Moostung, when Hubbeeb Khan, a Raisanee chief, was killed. The Khan had a great liking for this Hubbeeb Khan,‡ and hearing he was being misled sent and warned him not to forget his faith. But Hubbeeb Khan could not resist the temptation, and joined the others, who brought about the émeute for no real grievances, but mainly at the bidding of Moolla Mahomed, at Candahar. The Shahgassee was sent against the rebels, defeated them on several occasions, till they at last dispersed, and Moolla Mahomed fled to the Murrees. It was then Sir H. Green offered to mediate on behalf of Moolla Mahomed, and to obtain the Khan's pardon for him. Unfortunately departure for Europe prevented his doing this, and the matter had to lie over, Moolla Mahomed remaining quiet in Seebee. In the autumn of 1868 the Jam of Beyla rebelled and called on Moolla Mahomed to join him, but the latter kept aloof on this occasion and stayed where he was. In March 1869 Sir H. Green's promise was taken up under my orders by Colonel Phayre, and mediation with the Khan entered on. But Moolla Mahomed, instead of going direct to Khelat, as instructions were issued by me that he should do, either in company with Captain Harrison (then appointed Political Agent), or immediately following him, chose to go off to Beyla, and approached Khelat, not as a suer for pardon, but with the Jam of Beyla, Noordeen Mingul, and Azaad Khan of Kharan, at the head of a large body of armed followers, and preferring demands which it was utterly impossible the Khan could accede to. Notwithstanding this the Khan accepted the intercession of Captain Harrison, which was used in accordance with Sir H. Green's promise, and agreed to restore to Moolla Mahomed all his old rights and privileges, with the prospect of others, if he behaved well and faithfully.* It did not suit the views of the Jam and Azaad Khan that Moolla Mahomed should be reconciled to the Khan, so they dissuaded him against accepting the offers made him, and he unhappily possessed an idea that he would receive support from the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Sind, spurned the Khan's clemency, fled to Seebee again and afterwards to Candahar, where he remained until he thought he saw a favourable opportunity of renewing disturbances in October last. It will be observed from the above abbreviated account that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed arrayed himself in hostile attitude to, and attempted to coerce, the Khan into compliance with his demands, firstly in 1857, secondly in 1863, thirdly in 1865, fourthly in 1867, fifthly in 1869, and sixthly in 1871, while the Khan has been ever ready and willing to forgive past offences and restore him to his old position.

* At the same time the Khan forgave and restored their old lands to Wuderah Adam Khan Bungulzye and Alladina Khoord.

14. The only disaffected Sirdar of consequence lately in Jalawan has been Noordeen Mingul. It is universally allowed that he has no complaint to urge against the Khan, but he has steadily thrown in his lot with Sirdar Meer Khan, formerly Jam of Beyla, with whom he is connected by marriage. In the same way as with his relative, he has been repeatedly pardoned by the Khan for various rebellions in which he has engaged in company with Sirdar Meer Khan, but this kindness has been thrown away upon him. He was informed of the intended mediation here, that it had been allowed for all the chiefs of Beloochistan who desired to accept it on condition of their disbanding their followers and submitting, and that they had agreed to it. He has not only failed to present himself as the others have done, but he has continued in hostile attitude to the Khan, and has committed various outrages on the Khelat and Beyla road since he heard of the arrangement that had been made. He has therefore forfeited all claims to consideration at the present time, as appended correspondence will show (Appendix A.).

15. Sirdar Meer Khan of Beyla has always held a somewhat different position to the other Sirdars. As Jam of Beyla he was almost independent, though he was bound to give feudal service to the reigning Khan of Khelat. He is now about 42 years old. A sister of his was one of Mehrab Khan's wives, and he is himself married to a half-sister of the present Khan of Khelat, and daughter of Mehrab Khan. He is of a most restless and intriguing nature. In Meer Nusseer Khan's time he took up arms to screen Noordeen Mingul, who had murdered Khan Mahomed Mingul. During the present Khan's reign Sirdar Meer Khan has altogether appeared in seven rebellions against his sovereign, and been twice imprisoned. His object was to supplant the Khan. He was each time pardoned by his Highness the Khan mainly through the intercession of the Beebee Gunja, a stepmother of the present Khan, and mother of Meer Khan's first wife. He is also married to a sister of Noordeen Mingul. The first wife has been long separated from Meer Khan, and has resided with her mother and the Khan at Khelat. The other accompanied Meer Khan to Hyderabad, and is there still. On the last outbreak Meer Khan, having been defeated by the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, fled into Sind. He was granted an asylum provided he abstained from engaging in any way in the affairs of his old country, or of Khelat generally, and was at first located in Kurrachee. Being so near Beyla the temptation was too strong for him to resist; he was then changed to Hyderabad, but here also he continued communicating with his old country contrary to the stipulations, until at last a letter from him was intercepted, in which he wrote of the disturbances then going on in Beloochistan as of use to restore him to his old position. This open and clear breach of the stipulations under which he was allowed to reside at Hyderabad showed he could not be permitted to remain longer in so near neighbourhood to the Khan of Khelat's dominions, and he was removed to the Deccan.

16. Ali Khan is a very petty chief, cousin by a junior branch of Meer Khan. He has little or no influence except amongst his own personal followers, which do not muster 200. He has no sympathy with the proceedings of Moolla Mahomed or Noordeen Mingul. Indeed he carefully kept the latter apart from him, and would not allow him, Noordeen, to enter Beyla, as that Sirdar wished to do when he came from Candahar in November last. Ali Khan's action is purely in behalf of his relative Meer Khan, whose return he naturally wishes for. He is assisted in this, as I frequently before reported, by certain bunniahs, merchants of Beyla, to whom Meer Khan is largely indebted, and who know the only chance they have of ever seeing any of their money again. These merchants supply Meer Khan now with funds, and they also enabled Ali Khan Jamote to bribe the officers of the Khan's troops, so that they refused to fight, and he obtained possession of Beyla unopposed. The other tribes of Beyla, Roonjas and others, do not side with Ali Khan, and have lately asked the Khan to send a ruler to them. They were very tired of the losses brought on them by the continued disturbances brought on by Sirdar Meer Khan, and they would gladly see Ali Khan brought to order. Major Harrison last May marched through the whole of this country from Soumeeanee to Khelat without any guard, only three peons, and found the people most civil and contented, excepting Ali Khan and his immediate followers, who kept away from him.

17. The disturbances in Mekran merely related to the manner in which taxation was being levied, were purely local, and had no connexion whatever with the proceedings of Moolla Mahomed and his party, neither have the chiefs of Mekran any sympathy with the latter.

18. I will now return to the statements alluded to in paragraph 4.* They were all nearly of the same character, that they asked for their hereditary lands in the hill country (styled by them Khorassan) and Kutchee, as possessed in the time of Meer Nusseer Khan the younger, to be restored to them; also annual allowances given for feudal service, besides land; daily allowance of food when in attendance on the sovereign; marks (dresses) of honour when dismissed from attendance; and grants given by the present Khan of Khelat in his days of adversity, that is, when he was being restored in 1864, and now refused in his days of prosperity.

* Appendix B. p. 185.

To each a reply† is given by his Highness the Khan's Wuzeer, Wullee Mahomed Shahgassee, pointing out that the four first were always given by the present Khan till the Sirdars acted rebelliously, and as regards the fifth, that they were obtained by deception, and discontinued because the Sirdars failed to render the services they had covenanted to perform. I would also add myself that in conversation at the time with the Wuzeer he informed me that the annual and daily allowances claimed were very far in excess of what was ever given, as he could prove from the State accounts. It was not thought necessary to send to Khelat for these, as, in the event of the Sirdars' rights being given to them, it could be stated that they would be in accordance with what they received in the time of Nusseer Khan the younger. In regard to the extra lands claimed by Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Shadee Khan, Syud Khan, Sumunder Khan for Dost Mahomed, and Alladina Khoord, the Wuzeer informed me that these were bestowed in the first instance by Shere Dil Khan when he was put up by these Sirdars; that the present Khan on his restoration confirmed them, but as far as Moolla Mahomed was concerned, that Sirdar voluntarily resigned them at Khelat in 1864 in his, the Wuzeer's presence. This the Sirdar could not gainsay. The other four claimants never assumed possession of the lands they mentioned in Deh Bubber, and had they done so they had now clearly forfeited them by engaging in rebellion.

† Appendix B. p. 185.

19. On the 8th, 9th, and 11th, Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, Shadee Khan, Bungulzye, and Alladina Khoord were questioned on the statements orally made by them. The questions and answers given are appended, with marginal notes by me. It was not thought necessary to question the other Sirdars, but that all might be in a position to have everything they wished to adduce recorded, I decided that they should be allowed to submit a joint statement, as also separate ones, all of which would be remarked on by the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. Each paper, as received from the Sirdars, was given over to the Wuzeer for his remarks thereon, and all afterwards carefully translated, as well as the final letter from the Wuzeer to Major Harrison, Political Agent, to which I would call particular attention as giving his opinion of the Sirdars and their conduct, and what he understands to be the wishes and desire of his master, his Highness the Khan, in his conduct towards those under his rule.

Appendix D. p. 197.

20. It is unnecessary for me to review the whole of these statements. They, with the Shahgassee's answer, speak for themselves. I have, however, added a few marginal notes explanatory of certain points in the general statements by the chiefs, and in that of the chief Sirdar, Moolla Mahomed, as well as in the replies by the Wuzeer. These papers most conclusively show how unfounded and ill-suited are the complaints adduced against his Highness the Khan of Khelat. Many of them are most frivolous, while others are most unreasonable, as the wrongs the Sirdars imagine themselves to have sustained have been almost entirely brought about by their own deliberate acts in opposition to the sovereign of the country to whom they were bound by rule and custom to pay allegiance. Their views of obedience and proper government are vague to a degree. They seem to imagine that the sovereign of the country is only to rule as they choose to determine, and only to exert authority as they choose to deem proper. That conspiracy on their part against the person and authority of the ruler is not only justifiable, but in a measure a duty they owe to themselves; that no matter how few in number they may be who fancy themselves aggrieved (in this case only (8) eight at the utmost), they have a right to dictate to the sovereign how he is to act towards themselves without any regard to the interests or well-being of the general body, and that whenever it suits their purpose they may become, as they term it, "Yazee" ("discontentedly independent or rebellious") without being held responsible in any way for the acts they may commit, or the injury they may cause to others. According to them such a thing as supremacy of the king could not exist, but, on the contrary, it is the ruler only who did wrong, and they the only judges of such. No government could last under such a state of affairs, and their endeavour to demonstrate that such was ever warranted by custom is simply absurd. The real truth is that, instead of tyrannizing, the Khan has been too lenient. Acts which in any other country would have been treated with stern severity have been overlooked, and the perpetrators readmitted to favour. His Highness the Khan so often pardoned rebellion that it was becoming a custom, and resorted to whenever opportunity seemed to offer, and unless such proceedings as these of the Sirdars are most distinctly and decidedly discountenanced by us, the power they have learned to look to for consideration, the most disastrous dissolution of government in Beloochistan must follow.

21. There would appear to be some foundation for one act on the part of his Highness the Khan or his followers which savoured of not sufficient regard for the interests of the people, that, during his tour last summer, in some places an undue quantity of forage (Lucerne) was appropriated and full compensation not given. At least the Wuzeer's replies on this point are not complete, and in conversation he allowed this might have been the case. But I would point out that this was the first time for eight years or so that the Khan had been able to visit that neighbourhood, and it is after all not such an unusual circumstance when native rulers traverse their country. I do not mean to say it is right, but surely it is not sufficient to warrant rebellion as means of obtaining redress.

22. One good result will follow from having all these papers placed on record. It will plainly show how very inexpedient and unsafe it is to attach too ready faith to the interested statements of people circumstanced as these Sirdars were, and how easily wrong conclusions may be formed from the statements of only one side being before and accepted by anyone not fully acquainted with the general facts, and who has not had opportunities of gaining personal knowledge of all concerned. I allude to the unfortunate and most partial views entertained by Colonel Phayre in regard to the position the Sirdars held, and should hold, to their sovereign the Khan of Khelat.

23. Having most carefully perused all the documents and weighed well what was adduced on both sides, I could only come to the following decision, which was on the 28th read to the Sirdars in durbar, the Wuzeer of his Highness the Khan being present, also Lieutenant-Colonel Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent on the Upper Sind frontier, Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, and my assistant, Mr. F. R. S. Wyllie

"SIRDARS,—I have heard from you, orally given, the statements you wish to submit in regard to claims you considered you were entitled to as chiefs of Beloochistan.

"I have also received long written statements from you, all setting forth what you conceive to be grievances you have suffered at the hands of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

"I have made most careful inquiry into all these statements, and have had the advantage of information which the Wuzeer of Khelat, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, could, from his position, place at my disposal, information which has been the more important and valuable from his universally acknowledged honesty and truthfulness.

"After carefully weighing all I have no hesitation in pronouncing that you Sirdars are in the wrong.

"You have assumed to yourselves the right of deciding what was just and what was unjust in matters purely personal. This is utterly incompatible with good order and proper government.

"You would limit the power of your sovereign till he became a mere cypher. Such was never done in the great Nusseer Khan's time, nor ever afterwards.

"You have brought forward an array of petty circumstances which you style grievous acts against yourselves, but which in reality are most of them based on no fair grounds, while some of them are simply complaints against the ruler of the country on account of measures which he, as sovereign, found it necessary to introduce. If such were allowable no country could be at peace, no government last for a day.

"In regard to one question on which Sirdar Moolla Mahomed lays great stress, the marriage of his Highness the Khan with a relative of Sirdar Taj Mahomed in 1862, that was more a personal than an administrative matter, and it would have been best that influential Sirdars, having the good of their country at heart, should have endeavoured to bring about an adjustment of any difference that chanced to follow, and should not have used the circumstance as a means of fostering and promoting ill-will and discontent.

"From the records of the past nine years it would appear that persons having a grievance, fancied or real, have rushed into rebellion against the governing power without any consideration of duty towards the ruler of the country, or of the well-being of their fellow-countrymen. The ruler has repeatedly extended forgiveness, but it has availed nothing.

"I find that the hereditary estates and grants you asked for in your oral statements have never been resumed from you, excepting when you were in rebellion, and that as regards you, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, all was given back by his Highness the Khan to you at Khelat in 1869, but not taken advantage of. The same happened with Adam Khan, Bungulzye, and Alladina Khoord.

"Allowances, daily allowances, and marks of honour have always been given you in accordance with established custom, whenever you have been performing the duties for which those grants were originally provided.

"The lands alluded to as given by his Highness the Khan, Meer Khodadad Khan, and now withdrawn, were, as you well know, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, presented to you in the first instance by Shere Dil Khan for assistance in setting him up and deposing Meer Khodadad Khan. The latter continued the grant on his restoration, but you very properly then, and with correct feeling, abandoned the claim. But even had this not been the case, your subsequently acting in open rebellion caused them to be justly forfeited.

"These same remarks apply to the other Sirdars who claim lands in Bubber, near Bagh, obtained in the same manner. These claims cannot be recognized.

"The request of compensation for the death of Hubbeeb Khan is utterly unreasonable. He rose in rebellion notwithstanding that his Highness the Khan sent friendly warning to him, and he met his death as the consequence of his own acts. During the late rebellion initiated by you, great injury has been done to the country and much misery been inflicted on poor unoffending people.

"The pillage of the kafilahs in the Bolan Pass was an outrage for which there could be no excuse. To obtain your own ends you deliberately plundered peaceful merchants who were travelling through your country and who trusted in your protection.

"By orders of my Government I have agreed to mediate on this occasion and do so in the hope that such events as have occurred may never be repeated. That the Sirdars of Beloochistan will bear in mind that the prosperity of the country depends on unanimity, not division, and in their affording cordial aid in the maintenance of good government, and in supporting the sovereign who has been called to rule the country. That the desired end can never be obtained if each Sirdar thinks only of himself and not of the good of all.

"His Highness the Khan will gladly avail himself of their counsel and support them when they are given for the general benefit. But the course hitherto followed by the Sirdars I am now addressing has kept them apart from him and prevented his availing himself of these.

"The only object the British Government has in view is that there should be a firm and stable Government in Beloochistan, peace and prosperity throughout that country. These should come from the ruler and ruled of that country, not from any one else, and for that reason the British Government desires it to be clearly understood that it does not wish to interfere between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars, but merely to give its good offices to promote the welfare of all, and bring about the preservation of order throughout the country. It looks to his Highness the Khan as the head and representative of the country, and trusts that by good rule he will command the respect and affection of his nobles and subjects.

"On the present occasion his Highness the Khan has delegated to me full powers to act in his name, and I accordingly do so now, when stating that, though I conceive the Sirdars have erred greatly in what they have done, I consider also that they have been much misled, and in the hopes of future adherence to only a loyal and true path the door of clemency should be held open to them. I would say for his Highness the Khan that their lands be restored to them and all allowances be accorded as was the case in the time of Meer Nusseer Khan the younger, and that they may be allowed to reside peaceably on their estates on condition that they pay due and proper allegiance to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, their lawful sovereign.

"That the property plundered from the kafilahs be given up to the owners.

"That all property seized during the late rebellion by the Sirdars and their followers from the ryots of Beloochistan, whether in Khorassan or Kutchee, be restored.

"As regards Crown property, the Khan will generously forego such and make no demand on that account.

"And I hereby, in the name of his Highness Meer Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, call on you, Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, to see that these terms are carried into effect.

24. Notwithstanding I could not consider otherwise than that the Sirdars were in the wrong, I felt so convinced that they had acted recently from misdirected views, and to a certain extent from the impression that they possessed the sympathy, and might receive the support of one high in authority on this frontier; that some allowance should once more be made for them, and one more opportunity given them of returning to the allegiance they owed to their sovereign. I, therefore, in virtue of the power entrusted to me by that sovereign to act in his behalf, decided in his name that they should be restored to their old hereditary possessions and position. Trusting that this clemency, having the approval of the British Government, may be properly understood by them, and that they will, in future, show themselves worthy of its having been extended to them, by following a totally different course to that they have so ill advisedly hitherto given themselves to. The Wuzeer before all assembled engaged on behalf of his master that the terms now granted should be scrupulously adhered to.

25. The second and third stipulations I considered only equitable and unquestionably necessary. Were they not enforced a premium on rebellion would have been established, and the faithful many would have been in a worse position than the rebellious few. The Sirdars and their followers would have largely benefited by the plunder they got possession of when engaged in lawless proceedings, and it would have been to the advantage of the unruly in future to side with any chief who chose to raise the standard of revolt, while traders who were passing through the country relying on the good-will of the inhabitants thereof, and the poor people of the country, who were leading peaceful lives, would have been the chief sufferers.

26. His Highness the Khan had experienced heavy losses from Crown property being carried off by the rebels, and of revenue by the suspension of all agriculture in Kutchee during the time disturbances were going on. He, however, through his Wuzeer generously consented to forego all claims in this respect, that he might not appear to be too hard on those he was willing to forgive, and that they might not be closely pushed when they returned to their position as good and loyal subjects.

27. At first the Sirdars raised objections to Nos. 2 and 3, but I informed them that no deviation could be allowed, and dismissed them for the day. On the following morning they waited on me again, and, after a short conversation, accepted the terms unreservedly, and said they would do their utmost to carry out those parts which they had at first begged to be relieved from.

28. I trust these proceedings will meet with the approval of your Excellency in Council. On receipt of that approbation, which I have asked for by telegram, the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed will at once return to Khelat, accompanied by the Sirdars, that they may tender their allegiance and pay their respects to his Highness the Khan. Major Harrison, the Political Agent, will follow to continue his duties with his Highness the Khan.

29. Before leaving this part I would venture to bring to your Excellency's notice that his Highness the Khan's Government has suffered greatly in a pecuniary point of view from the late disturbances. His revenue from the province of Kutchee has either been carried off (being almost entirely in kind), or what had not been collected he considers it would be a most hard measure to endeavour to recover now in the present impoverished state of the inhabitants. He has liberally foregone any claim on the lately rebellious Sirdars and their followers for Crown property they possessed themselves of, that no apparent harshness on his part might interfere with the settlement of the differences which have so unhappily existed. He has also shown himself most thoroughly earnest in his desire to act immediately and exactly up to the wishes of the British. He at once frankly entrusted full power to me to act as I found best in his behalf, and for the good of all, in the disastrous circumstances, which were not only injuring his country and people, but were likely to produce ill effects to British interests. I would, therefore, earnestly ask and most strongly recommend, that to mark the approval of the British Government of his liberal action towards his offending subjects, and of the true determination he has displayed to act only as appeared suitable to that Government, that a sum of one lakh of rupees may be presented to him to assist in meeting present pressing demands upon his resources, and to enable him to start fair once more.

30. Of the poverty of his Highness the Khan I am assured from the knowledge I have of his circumstances, though a different statement has been set about by interested parties. When he was driven from his Government in 1863, everything he possessed, cash, jewels, &c., was plundered by his half-brother, and the rebels who set up the latter. Since his restoration he has been continually harassed by the rebellious conduct of factious nobles, has been put to great expense in meeting their efforts to subvert his authority, and been compelled to engage in large expenditure to sustain his power by keeping up regular paid troops in place of that support which should have been given by those very nobles according to the rules under which they held their lands. It is a great mistake also to suppose that those lands were confiscated to the State on the defection of the individual nobles. They were mostly left with portions of the tribes who remained faithful. The Sirdars flying the country lost by non-possession, but the Khan gained nothing by them. In the late rebellion one of the great difficulties the Khan experienced was his inability from poverty to call out Sirdars with their tribes who remained faithful to him, these being the greater portion of his subjects, while the rebel Sirdars only mustered eight all told. The cost of calling out these retainers is very great, as each has to be provisioned according to his rank and position.

31. Some time back I wrote to Major Harrison, the Political Agent, and asked him to favour me with his opinion, formed from his residence with the Khan, as to the extent of his wealth. His reply was lost in a post, which was reported to have been plundered by some robbers between Gundava and this in January last. He has since given me, a nearly as he can recollect, what he wrote at the time demi-officially. It was to the following effect, dated 15th January:—"I received your letter late yesterday, informing "me of General Pollock's movements, and asking what his Highness' means were, as a "report had been circulated that he was very wealthy. On the outbreak occurring in "Moostung, his Highness urged me to ask the English Government for assistance in "money and arms. I at once told him that I had heard he had accumulated three lakhs "of rupees, and received the following reply:—That he had jewels which he had "collected for some years past, but that his actual cash balance roughly calculated was "not more than a lakh. That the districts from which his principal revenues were "derived, viz., Moostung and Kutchee, had been plundered so completely by the "Brahooees, that no revenue would be derived for a year at least, and that, unless aided, "he did not see how he could live and keep things going; on Nawab Mahomed Khan "being sent to Kutchee with about 700 troops these were not only paid up to date, but "each man received a gratuity of one month's pay. The Belooch levies also received "their usual allowances of grain and money besides handsome khilluts. With a liberal "expenditure like this how long would a lakh of rupees last." Further, Major Harrison wrote:—"Perhaps it is as well, under all circumstances, that you are to mediate between "the rebel chiefs and his Highness, for serious disturbances would have arisen on future "occasions, such as the death of the Shahgassee or his Highness. I do not, however, "believe that there will be permanent quiet in the country unless the Sirdars are fully convinced that the Khan has the support of the English, and my opinion is that this might be brought about by modifying the present Treaty to the former one, in which the Khan would have had personal assistance or aid under certain circumstances. I do not think personal* force would ever be required, but if the Brahooees realised that such might occur it would have a deterrent effect in future "rebellious organisations and conspiracies. In the present crisis it may not be out of Note. Major Harrison knows now this could not be allowed.

" place to tell you what I think of these chiefs. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is a proud " ambitious man, but with means too limited to support his pretensions. Consequently " he has always been dissatisfied and tried to wrest land and other concessions from his " Highness. Sirdar Noordeen was very wealthy; had no complaints whatever against " his Highness, but from his restless intriguing nature joined in every disturbance. " Sirdar Alladina Khoord's lands are a mere waste, and he finds plundering more " profitable than what he could realise in a legitimate manner."

The above, though not the exact words is, Major Harrison believes, the substance of the letter which was lost and never reached me.

32. The Crown lands are very limited both in extent and value. The best in the country have been given out in feudal tenure to the chiefs. The Khan's annual income therefore, is very small. The help I recommend would be invaluable just now, and I trust that it may be granted.

33. I would now proceed to offer a few remarks on the future. There cannot, in my opinion, be the least doubt what course should be followed with regard to Khelat or Beloochistan, as it should be correctly termed. His Highness the Khan is de facto and de jure Ruler of that country. We have Treaty engagements with him, under which he is bound to keep his subjects from injuring British territory or people, to protect trade &c., &c., but the Treaty is with him as ruler only, and under none of the engagements are we called upon to interfere directly in the manner in which he carries on his Government. It is, however, an object to us that there should be a strong and well-regulated Government in his country, and it has been the custom hitherto to give him freely through the Political Agent at his Court the best advice on occasions of difficulty. I must say I know of no occasion when such advice has been rejected, and I can confidently state that the Khan has invariably done his best to act as would be approved by the British Government. But he has had great difficulties to contend against in the ambitious practices of certain of his nobles. They are not many. They can easily be numbered and named, but they have been sufficient by their restless intrigues to keep the country in a perpetual state of turmoil, destructive of all advance in prosperity. It is the state of our own country under the Plantagenets over again. Its real condition is most correctly shown in your Excellency's minute of the 10th February last, and the course laid down therein is the only sound one to follow, if we wish any order to remain in Beloochistan.

The chiefs must be made to understand that the Khan is regarded as their sovereign, and to him alone must they look for benefits to be conferred, grievances to be redressed; to feel that their interests and his are identical, and that anything that reduces his power or influence reflects injuriously on them; and to rest assured that acts of rebellion, such as they have hitherto engaged in on such improper and frivolous grounds, cannot and will not receive any countenance whatever from the British Government. They have hitherto been labouring under delusions, but now they should be informed that any repetition of such acts as they have committed will at once, and for ever, forfeit for them the favour of the British Government, as it will assuredly the approbation of all good men.

34. These chiefs are captious and hasty. Being very poor they hoped to be able to gain more by pressing on disturbances. But they are not altogether unreasoning, and some of them having had to endure hardships from exile begin to think rebellion a losing game after all. If, therefore, they are at the same time fully assured that it will ruin their prospects with us, I believe we have some guarantee for the future, and I think this cannot be too clearly or strongly impressed upon them.

35. At the same time the Political Agent will do his best to induce the Khan to follow such a course as will draw his chiefs towards him as much as possible and make them find their best interests are with him. This should be done with great discretion and with the least possible parade. It is unquestionable that there is a steady social change going on in Beloochistan, in Afghanistan the same. The only plan is to assist its progress and be careful in no way to check it. Allow it to grow as peaceably as it will, and in a few years the chiefs will be more satisfied to live quietly on their lands, and as their ambitious ideas pass away some of them might be employed in offices of the State under the orders of the sovereign. At present this would be difficult and probably dangerous. If one or two were selected, and trusted apparently with more power than had been the custom, they would presume on it, and the others be discontented. It was on this very account that in the old customs of the country none of the influential chiefs were ever allowed to hold the post of Wuzeer.

36. The attitude assumed by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul has placed him beyond the pale of mediation. The Sirdars here wrote to him that as he had not ceased to cause disorders they had no longer anything to do with him. I also informed him he had lost my mediation, and his Highness the Khan was at liberty to act against him as he pleased. Correspondence on the subject is appended.*

* Letter relating to Sirdar Noordeen. Appendix A.

37. With regard to the ex-Jam of Beyla, Sirdar Meer Khan, I certainly consider that nothing should be done at present about him. The Sarawan Sirdars made no request in his behalf, and had they, I should have informed them that his many rebellions against the Khan had ended in his being obliged to fly the country. But beyond that his disregard of all rule and orders had been carried by him into the country where a safe asylum had been generously allowed him, and that now he was answering for his disobedience to the British Government. I should not, under any circumstances, have recommended his being permitted to return to his old country, feeling certain that there will be no peace there if he once more enters it, and considering that he has sacrificed all claim to return.

38. His Highness the Khan, on the arrival of his Wuzeer at Khelat, will make arrangements for the proper government of the province of Lus Beyla, the Roonjas and other influential people there having already asked for a Naib to be sent from Khelat. The agitation which has been kept up in behalf of the ex-Jam, Meer Khan, will soon cease when it is found that he is really not to return. This agitation, especially in the local English press, has been kept up by the bunyahs, Hindoo merchants, before mentioned. Directly they see it is useless they will abandon it, and Ali Khan Jamote will fall back into the subordinate and insignificant position he has always occupied until his actions were found useful to others.

39. There is one point that I should beg most strenuously to urge, and that is the absolute necessity of the strictest and most clear instructions being issued that the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, or any of the officers under him, should in no way interfere or communicate with subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat (excepting the Murrees and Boogtees as has been provided for), or in any way engage in the general politics of, or arrangements existing between the British and Khelat State. What has occurred during the past two or three years clearly shows what grievous mischief may be caused by refractory Sirdars in Beloochistan believing and actually finding that they could apply and be listened to by officers serving under a different local government from that with which their ruler was in communication, and thus as it were putting two portions of an Imperial Government one against the other. The Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, Captain Sandeman, was desired by me, as far back as January 1870, to hold no communication with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee. The correspondence since then will show how deliberately he disregarded my request, and how systematically he has taken upon himself to oppose the policy I had, under the orders of your Excellency, ordered to be upheld. The Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan has lately been subordinate to the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Sind in respect to any arrangements that might be made with the Murree and Boogtee tribes, subjects of the Khan of Khelat. Such being the case, I would respectfully suggest that all matters relating to those tribes on which the Deputy Commissioner may desire to report, or any points relating to Khelat affairs in any way, should be submitted by him in the first instance to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind frontier, who would forward them to the Commissioner in Sind, copies being forwarded of course to his own Government of the Punjab. This will make his position more clear, and will at the same time allow of his bringing anything to the notice of the Political Superintendent he may think it necessary or advisable he should show. But he should be bound to abstain from any direct action in any matters not belonging to the specific duties laid down which have reference only to the two tribes of Belooch residing opposite a portion of his border.

40. I regret exceedingly to have to state that the expenditure on account of this arrangement for mediation has been far larger than was either intended or desired by me. This has been caused by two circumstances, first by Colonel Phayre, then Political Superintendent, having without previous reference to me sanctioned more people being brought into Jacobabad by the Sirdars than I should have allowed, but as he had given the orders I did not wish to mar matters by countermanding them; and, secondly, from the great delay which took place on the part of the Sirdars in submitting their statements, for which Colonel Phayre must also be held to be, to some extent, answerable. Before the Sirdars arrived, I strictly enjoined him to be most careful how he let it appear that his sympathies and views were solely with the Sirdars, knowing that on exhibition of such they would be induced to take an exaggerated view of their position and indulge in unnecessary representations. He assured me that he would keep quite aloof from them, only seeing they were properly cared for. I regret to say he failed to act up to this assurance. He closely associated himself with them daily, and the result was as I expected. Finding it utterly impossible to expect obedience to my instructions from him, and feeling certain that no practical or satisfactory results could be expected as long as he was present, I was at last compelled to request your Excellency would cause his removal at once, as, if he remained, I could not be answerable for the results. Your Excellency was pleased to do so, and the effect was most salutary. But I regret I have to add that on the day of his departure he displayed an instance of further disregard of my wishes and of the customary rules on such occasions by making public presents to each of the Sirdars and some of their followers, notwithstanding the object for which they had come here had not been disposed of. The impolicy and disrespect of such a proceeding I need not descant upon, nor need I here further remark upon the impropriety of his whole proceedings here for some time past, as they have already been fully placed before your Excellency.

41. The expenditure, however, will, I trust, not have been thrown away nor prove wanting in good results. Before the departure of the Sirdars I shall point out to them that they have been well and handsomely treated here now, as they were called in, and if they show themselves in future good subjects of their sovereign and desirous of promoting his welfare and that of their country, such consideration will be readily accorded to them. But if they misbehave hereafter such favour will be withheld for ever.

42. The only subject that remains to be noticed is that of carrying into effect the arrangements agreed upon at the conference at Mittunkote and sanctioned last October, in reference to the Murree and Boogtee tribes. Considering all that has passed, and how very recently the Khelat troubles have been arranged, I do not think it advisable to enter immediately on those arrangements. They should be carefully and deliberately carried out after mature consultation between the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan. The delay will not affect that frontier at all, as all arrangements for it were in existence before. The new ones related chiefly, if not entirely, to circumstances connected with this side. And I think it desirable a little pause should be allowed before anything is proposed. The time for taking this up I can safely leave to Lieutenant-Colonel Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, with whom I shall leave full instructions, and who will communicate when necessary with the Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan.

43. I can fully trust in Lieutenant-Colonel Mainwaring, as his local experience of 14 years gives him advantages which no new comer could possess; and I am happy to be able to report that in all questions that have occurred since he assumed charge, and in the manner he has acted towards the Sirdars, he has given me great assistance and shown sound discretion and good judgment with a thorough desire to implicitly follow the instructions of Government. Being in constant and cordial communication with him here I have been able to explain to him thoroughly those instructions, and to show him exactly what is required. I feel, therefore, a just confidence in him.

APPENDIX A.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Letter from Noordeen Mingul to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 14th March 1872.

YOUR letter received, and I was pleased to read its contents. I had been summoned to appear in Jacobabad within 10 or 12 days, for the purpose of arrangements being made for the Brahooees. In reply I beg to state that when Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is in Jacobabad, he is sole master of everything; whatever arrangement the said Sirdar does is acceptable to the whole class of Brahooees. I got your purwanna on the 2nd* Mohurum. Whatever property of the subject people and others may have been pillaged and plundered before that date must be considered as a thing of the past; on and after that date (2nd) I will refrain from any wrong doing or breach of the public peace.

* Corresponds with 13th March 1872.

Enclosure 3 in No. 53.

REPLY of the Commissioner in Sind to Noordeen Mingul, dated 18th March 1872.

I HAVE received your letter.

Before my last letter reached you you had heard that I had consented to mediate for the chiefs of Beloochistan, and that the Sarawan Sirdars had taken advantage of what I had caused to be written in January last to his Highness the Khan's Vakeel, Mahomed Khan, and disbanding their followers had remained quiet.

You disregarded what was offered, continued in arms against his Highness the Khan, and committed acts of violence. By this conduct you have separated yourself from the Sirdars of Sarawan; your must answer yourself for the contrary course you have followed; any further act of violence committed by you will be immediately punished by the officers of his Highness the Khan.

Enclosure 4 in No. 53.

No. 654, dated Jacobabad, 18th March 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind.

I HAVE the honour to forward for your perusal copy of a letter brought to me by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, which he received from Noordeen Mingul yesterday.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed states that as Sirdar Noordeen has not disbanded his men he will write to him to that effect, explaining that since the British Government has taken up this matter he must abide by whatever decision may be come to. The Sirdar also proposes to inform Noordeen that if, after this, he makes any disturbance, he (Sirdar Moolla Mahomed) is separate from him, because such conduct would be contrary to your orders regarding the matters under mediation.

The whole of the Sirdars would like to have an interview with you about this letter and Noordeen's case generally before writing to him.

Enclosure 5 in No. 53.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Letter from Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, Syud Khan, and Bahadoor Khan, to Sirdars Moolla Mahomed Khan, Meer Syud Khan, Sirdar Meer Alladina Summundur Khan, Hajee Moola Mahomed Khan, Sirdar Meer Shadee Khan, Meer Jundo Khan, and Futteh Khan, dated 3rd Mohurrum 1289.

YOU must be aware that we received the Commissioner's letter on the 2nd Mohurrum 1289. It was therein stated that I shall come to Jacobabad for arrangements. We got your letters also on the same date. I have written to the Commissioner in Sind and informed him that you are sole master in respect to the arrangements about the Br - hooees. We write to you also that whatever terms you agree to in regard to the Jam and the tribes of the Brahooees before Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed are acceptable to us all Brahooees. All the property of the subjects and the people that has been plundered before the receipt of your letter and of the Commissioner must be considered a thing of the past. After that date we will not touch the property of the subject people. and will not commit wrong and oppression. It cannot be hidden from you that we will with our whole army go and take repose in Zaidic and Khozdar, and will wait particulars about the arrangements that may be effected; whatever arrangements are made should be communicated to us soon.

Information has been received from Meer Azaad Khan to the effect that he will arrive in Bhagwana in a day or two. The forces of the Minguls numbering 4,000 men and the army of Azaad Khan and Lus Beyla will assemble in one place. Arrange and send money for meeting the expenses of the army that it may be taken from "Jai Misheen" Ghulam Mahomed. We await reply. Do not you have any anxiety about this quarter and keep us informed of what passes.

"Assistant to the Naib" (Deputy).

Enclosure 6 in No. 53.

No. 270, dated Camp Jacobabad, 18th March 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

IN reply to your letter No. 654 of to-day's date, I have the honour to request you will inform Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that I am aware Noordeen Mingul received from the very first the intelligence of the mediatory position accepted by me under the orders of Government, but that he, Noordeen, deliberately continued in arms against his Highness the Khan, and committed acts of violence after he had heard of what was to be done, and what had been accepted by the Sirdars of Sarawan. Noorden Mingul has therefore by his own acts separated himself from the Sirdars of Sarawan; it should be so considered by the latter Sirdars, and I shall be glad to hear that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has at once without further delay written to Noordeen Mingul to that effect.

2. The time when the next interview will be accorded to the Sirdars will be communicated hereafter.

Enclosure 7 in No. 53.

No. 657, dated Jacobabad, 19th March 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

In reply to your letter No. 270, dated yesterday (received this day), I have the honour herewith to forward a letter from the Sirdars to Noordeen Mingul, as required in your letter under reply, which, if approved of by you, will be despatched without delay.

Enclosure 8 in No. 53.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Sirdars Moola Mahomed, Raisanee, Shadee Khan, Jundoo Khan, Alladinna, Syud Khan, Dost Mahomed Khan, Mahomed Shye, and Summunder Khan, to Noordeen.

As the Commissioner in Sind states that you had received reliable and pukka information that arrangements were being made, and you did not refrain from the commission of wrongful deeds and acts of violence, but continued taking a contrary course, you have therefore separated yourself from us and from all the Sarawan Sirdars. In future there will be no sympathy and consultation between us both. This is written for your information.

Enclosure 9 in No. 53.

No. 274, dated Camp Jacobabad, 19th March 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In reply to your letter No. 657 of to-day's date, with accompaniment, herewith returned, I have the honour to request that you will inform the Sirdars that their letter to Noordeen Mingul is approved and should be forwarded without delay.

Enclosure 10 in No. 53.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Noordeen to the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 14th of Mohurum 1289.

I sent two sowars to you, and they came back with a third from you and Moolla Mahomed on the 13th instant. They brought neither letter nor purwanna, and this caused me anxiety. I beg to state that, if inquiry will be made, claims of rightful parties will be established. This will give us some satisfaction. The Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars cannot dispute your decision in the matter under investigation.

Enclosure 11 in No. 53.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from the Commissioner in Sind to the Address of Noordeen, dated the 29th March 1872.

I received your letter. In reply you are informed that the settlement will be made as intimated in my letter dated 7th instant. You have failed to act up to the orders contained therein, and have not refrained from doing injury to the property of the people. It is not necessary now to keep up any correspondence with you.

Enclosure 12 in No. 53.

APPENDIX B.

STATEMENT of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

My claim is that I receive back all grants and allowances vouchsafed to my forefathers and myself by the great Nusseer Khan, Meer Mehrab Khan, and Khodadad Khan. The details are as follows:—

I.—Land, with use of water, in Kutchee and Khorasan,* according to sunnuds which I possess.
II.—Allowances.
III.—Daily allowances.
IV.—Marks of honour.
V.—Rights given by sunnuds by Khodadad Khan in his days of adversity, and now refused in his days of prosperity.

Description of No. II.

Rupees (1,000) one thousand a year.

Description of No. III.

When I went to pay my respects to his Highness the Khan I received a daily allowance of one rupee in cash, four seers of rice, 10 kassas* of wheat, one seer of ghee, 10 kassas of "jow" (barley). This was only for myself; my clansmen received a separate allowance.

* A kassa contains about 13 seers.

Description of No. IV.

His Highness the Khan counselled with me and asked my advice in cases of proclaiming war and management of the affairs of Government, and granted me a khillut (dress of honour).

I also obtained one-seventh of the receipts of his Highness the Khan on account of the kafilahs passing through Dadur in consideration of the Sarawan Sirdarship; as also (10) ten khurwars† of wheat per annum.

† A khurwar contains about 20 maunds.

All the above are for myself, and my ooloos (clansmen) did not share with me.

REPLIES of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to the Statement made by Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, before the Commissioner in Sind, dated 5th Mohurrum 1289.

Moolla Mahomed Raisanee claims to receive back all grants and allowances enjoyed by him from the great Nusseer Khan to Khodadad Khan, and gives details as follows:—

I.—Land with use of water according to sunnuds.
II.—Allowances, Rupees 1,000 per annum.
III.—Daily allowances, four seers of wheat, one seer of ghee, four seers of rice, four kassas of jow (barley), and four kassas of wheat.
IV.—Marks of honour.
V.—One-seventh of the receipts.
VI.—Eighteen khurwars of wheat per annum.

I have to state in reply to the above claims that his Highness Khodadad Khan continued to the Sirdar all the grants of land and allowances made to him and to his forefathers from the days of Nusseer Khan the Great to those of Nusseer Khan the Junior, and were proved from the records of the latter Khan, till such time as the battle which took place between the Khan and Shere Dil Khan. Lands given by sunnuds that were obtained by deception were discontinued because the Sirdar failed to render the services he had covenanted to perform.

* Meaning Khelat.

II.

STATEMENT of Wudera Shadee Khan, given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

My claim is:—

I.—Land according to sunnuds.

II.—Yearly allowance, Rupees 500.

III.—Daily allowance eight annas, two seers of rice, half a seer of ghee, four kassas of wheat, four kassas of "jow" (barley).

IV.—Khillut (dress of honour) for my Sirdarship.

V.—Four khurwars of wheat in Kutchee and four in Khorassan per annum.

VI.—Two mares were allowed to stand in his Highness' the Khan's stables in the days of the junior Nusseer Khan.

VII.—Twelve "bitts" of water in Dadur.

VIII.—One-fourth of the land in Deh Bubber according to the purwana of his Highness the Khan.

IX.—Eight angushts* of water in Deh Nowshera, Talooka Dadur, obtained by purchase.

All the above are for myself, and my ooloos (clansmen) are not included.

REPLY of Shahgassee to the Statement made by Wudera Shadee Khan before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

His claims are:—

I.—Land according to sunnuds.

II.—Yearly allowance, Rupees 500.

III.—Daily allowance eight annas, two seers of rice, half a seer of ghee, four kassas of wheat, four kassas of jow (barley).

IV.—Four khurwars of wheat in Kutchee and four khurwars in Khorassan.

V.—Two mares, &c.

I have to state in reply to the above claims that his Higness Khodadad Khan continued to the Sirdar all the grants and allowances made to him and to his forefathers from the days of Nusseer Khan the Great to those of Nusseer Khan the Junior, and proved from the records of the latter Khan, till such time as the battle which took place between the Khan and Shere Dil Khan.

Lands granted by sunnuds (which were obtained by deception) were withheld because the Sirdar failed to render the services he had covenanted to perform.

As regards the matter of mares, this depends on the wish of the ruler, and is not any right which should be (necessarily) respected.

III.

STATEMENT of Jundo Khan, Shawanee, given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

I make the following statement for myself and for Shirbat Khan, son of Moombarick Khan,* who was killed in battle, as his guardian.

* A chief of the Shawanees.

Two years ago I came to Bagh and was treated with disrespect by Sahoojan, Naib of Bagh. One of my mares was taken by force from me by his Highness the Khan in Moostung. Before this difference his Highness the Khan confiscated all the lands belonging to Moombarick Khan, and it was for this reason that he joined the rebels. I joined them after Moombarick Khan's death, and now ask redress.

This is only for myself, and my "ooloos" are excluded.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to the Statement made by Jundo Khan before the Commissioner in Sind.

He complains of the murder of Moombarick and Shirbat Khan, of being treated with disrespect by Sahoojan, and of one of his mares and lands having been taken by force.

In reply I beg to state that Moombarick Khan and Shirbat Khan were killed in battle on account of their unfaithfulness at Bagh; he, Jundo Khan, interfered in the affairs of

* "Angusht" means the length of a finger.

State, and on being prevented by the Naib attempted to attack him with his sword, which was snatched out of his hands. This was the cause of his being treated with disrespect. What he states about his mare is untrue. What he affirms about his land may be considered partly true, because those who prove rebels are deprived of portions of their lands by the officers of the State.

STATEMENT of the Syud Khan Mahomed Shahee, given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th of March 1872.

When his Highness the Khan was kind to me I was loyal. About three years ago his Highness the Khan came to Moostung and deprived me of my "list* pust," for which I complained to the Shahgassee, who made no arrangements. I felt aggrieved. Besides, in Mosstung there is a Karez† called Khassan. On this stood my Shahbuna‡ and a garden; these were confiscated. Rupees 1,000 were forcibly levied from Lall Khan Mahomed Shahee. Lands that belonged to Alladinna Mahomed Shahee, according to sunnuds granted by Nusseer Khan, were also converted into Government property. He was besides made to pay Rupees 400. His Highness the Khan refuses to give in my possession one-fourth of the land in Deh Bubber that he granted to me by his sunnud. He also refuses to give 12 "bitts" of water in Deh Dadur that he allowed me by his sunnud.

* Lucerne.

‡ A perpetual water-course.

Further, my allowance is Rupees 500 per annum, and eight annas, two seers of rice, half seer of ghee, four kassas of wheat, four kassas of jow per diem, and khilluts, as also four khurwars of wheat in Kutchee and four in Khorassan per annum.

My ooloos are excluded from the above.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to the Statement made by Syud Khan Mahomed Shahee before the Commissioner in Sind, dated 5th Mohurrum 1289.

He (Syud Khan) complains of being deprived of his "list* pust" by his Highness the Khan when he came to Mustoong about three years ago, and of his failing to obtain redress from me, and of a "karez," garden and land belonging to Alladinna. He further states that Rupees 1,000 were forcibly levied from Lall Khan, and Rupees 400 from Alladinna Mahomed Shahee. He also urges his right to the restoration of one-fourth of the land in Deh Bubber, 12 "bitts" of water in Dadur, and of his daily allowance.

* Lucerne.

In reply I beg to state that the "list pust" at Mustoong is all liable to payment of "Zari† Kullung." The person from whom Syud Khan has purchased this had to pay "Zari Kullung," and it was in consequence of this liability that his Highness the Khan took the lucerne. As regards the karez, water and garden which were confiscated, Syud Khan came to me, and on my taking him to his Highness the Khan he was asked to bring the Sunnud under which he held the grant. He failed and, therefore, lost his claim. Lall Khan, from whom Rupees 1,000 were taken, was Naib in the days of Shere Dil Khan, and he was called upon to render accounts of the monies received by him on account of leases and fines from thieves. It was found during inquiry that he had embezzled sums of money, and this was the reason of his having to pay Rupees 1,000. On the land said to have been granted to Alladinna Mahomed Shahee by his Highness Nusseer Khan, "Zari Kullung" of 400 rupees had been fixed, and the 400 rupees stated to have been exacted were recovered on account of Zari Kullung."

† Zari Kullung is a kind of cess.

He did not receive anything less than what was found on the records of Nusseer Khan in respect of daily allowance and "bitts" of water and land in Deh Bubber. The new Sunnuds that are in his possession were obtained by deception, and the grants thereby given were not allowed because he failed to perform the services he had agreed to render.

STATEMENT of Sumundar Khan, Lehree, on behalf of Dost Mahomed,* son of Jehangeer Lehree, given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

* Dost Mahomed i is a minor, and Sumundar Khan his uncle.

My claim is:—

I.—That I had 20 bunnahs† in Deh Bullal town of Shahdad, free from all expenses.

† Bunds.

II.—Half of the Government share in the produce of the town of Shahdad.

III.—Jholees‡ on account of Naibship.

‡ An apronful of grain.

IV.—The town of Shahdad was free from the necessity of supplying labourers.

V.—Land and water in Khelat belonging to my uncle, Ismael Khan, granted by Nusseer Khan, and now taken from me.

VI.—One-fourth of the land in Deh Bubber.

VII.—12 "bitts" of water in Deh Dadur.

VIII.—Rupees 500 per annum.

IX.—Khilluts (dress of honour).

The details of my daily allowance when in attendance upon his Highness the Khan are given below:—

2 seers of rice.
½ seer of ghee.
4 kassas of wheat.
4 kassas of jow (barley).

My Ooloos are not included in the above.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to the Statement made by Sumundar Khan, Lehree, on behalf of Dost Mahomed wd. Jehangeer, before the Commissioner in Sind, dated 5th Mohurrum 1289.

He claims the following:—

Allowance Rupees 500 per annum.
Daily allowance 8 annas.
2 seers of ghee.
½ seer of ghee.
4 kassas of wheat.
4 kassas of jow.
Mark of honour "Khillut."
Half of Government share in ten bunnahs in Deh Bullal Johlee.
Land belonging to Ismael Khan in Khelat.

In reply I have to state that all the grants and allowances given to Mahomed Khan, his father and his uncle from the Great Nusseer Khan to Nusseer Khan the junior were, as found on the records of the latter Khan, continued to the grantees for so long a time as they proved faithful and loyal. The new Sunnuds that are in their possession were obtained by deception, and the grants thereby given were not allowed because they failed to perform the services they had agreed to render.

As regards lands belonging to Ismael Khan, I have to state that if they are his property no one would prevent him from entering on them and enjoying them.

STATEMENT of Alladina Khoord given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th of March 1872.

My claim is:—

I.—One-fourth of the land in Deh Bubber granted to me by Sunnud of his Highness the Khan.

II.—Twelve bitts of water in Deh Dadur.

III.—Yearly allowance of Rupees 500.

IV.—When I presented myself before his Highness the Khan, I used to receive a daily allowance of—

8 annas.
½ seer of ghee.
2 seers of rice.
4 kassas of wheat.
4 kassas of jow (barley).

V.—Four khurwars of wheat in Kutchee and 4 khurwars in Khorassan per annum.

VI.—Duties levied on merchandize passing through the Bolan according to Sunnud.

VII.—Ten angushts of water in Deh Nowshera obtained by purchase.

My Ooloos are excluded from the above.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to the Statement made by Alladina Khoord before the Commissioner in Sind, dated 5th Mohurrum 1289.

He claims land, water allowance, and daily allowance according to Sunnuds, as per following detail:—

8 annas per diem.
½ seer of ghee.
2 seers of rice.
4 kassas of wheat.
4 kassas of jow.
4 khurwars of wheat in Kutchee and four khurwars of wheat in Khorassan per annum.
12 "bitts" of water.
A portion of the duties levied on merchandise passing through the Bolan Water in Nowshera.
¼ of land in Deh Bubber according to Sunnud.

In reply I have to state that he was continued in the possessions proved from the records of Nusseer Khan the junior, and which were found to have been granted from the time of Great Nusseer Khan to that of Nusseer Khan the junior. His possessions were not disturbed until he became rebellious. The new Sunnuds that are in his possession were obtained by deception, and the grants thereby given were not allowed because he failed to perform the services he had agreed to render.

STATEMENT of Futteh Khan Mingul given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

About four years ago his Highness the Khan made the town of Khunuck, near Mustoong, Government property, and beat and ill-treated my relations. He has also deprived me of five angushts of water in Deh Dadur that I purchased from the Shawanees. In Khelat the lands and water in Deh Mulgizzar I had right over have been confiscated, as also the land I possessed in Foolajee in copartnership with Noordeen Mingul, and half of the lands in Deh Kunree.

I beg restoration of the above.

NOTE.—This person is not reckoned a Sirdar. He is properly a Mingul of Jalawan, but has for many years joined himself to the Raisanees and resided with them.

(Signed) W. L. M.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to the Statement made by Futteh Khan before the Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th March 1872.

He states as follows:—

That since four years Khunuck has been confiscated, as also five "angushts" of water in Deh Dadur lands and water in Deh Mulgizzar in Khelat, and half of the lands in Deh Kunree.

In reply I have to state that he was allowed to enjoy all grants and allowances according to the extent of grant from Nusseer Khan the Great to Nusseer Khan the junior for so long a time as he remained faithful and loyal. What he has stated to be his right is more than he is entitled to according to grants, and more than this amount to which he enjoyed at the time of the breaking out of the rebellion.

STATEMENT of Nubbee Buksh, of the Kocha tribe, given before Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 7th of March 1872.

I joined the rebels because a fine of Rs. 400 was levied by his Highness the Khan from Huzzar Khan and Hyat Khan, Kochas.

NOTE.—This person is not a Sirdar either, but a petty head of a small tribe living at Kirta, in the Bolan pass, and who were used by his Highness the Khan to act as police on that road.

(Signed) W. L. M.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to the Statement made by Nubbee Buksh, Kocha, before the Commissioner in Sind.

He claims restitution of the 400 rupees fine imposed on him. In reply I have to state that he was the cultivator of his Highness the Khan, and was made to pay the penalty for his wrong doings, and breach of trust * as regards crops. He was also with Naib Wullee Mahomed in the battle at Dadur, and there proved himself unfaithful by plundering the property of the subjects and joining the Brahooees (rebels).

* Wrong returns.

Enclosure 13 in No. 53.

APPENDIX C.

DEPOSITION of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee.

Question.—In your statement of yesterday you mention that all you ask for is to get back all grants and allowances vouchsafed to your forefathers by the Great Nusseer Khan Mehrab Khan. Why do you go back before the reign previous to the present one. You were well satisfied then?

Answer.—In the time of Nusseer Khan the younger I was in possession of my rights, but I was young then. I, however, am quite willing to fix the time from the commencement of Nusseer Khan the younger's reign; if I am given what I enjoyed then under existing Sunnuds I am satisfied.

Question.—Can you give a statement of the lands you held at the time above mentioned under Sunnuds?

Question.—Of the lands in above list what are in your possession now?

Answer.—None for the last seven years. I have been deprived of all. On one occasion in 1868 I received portion of the produce of one crop in Khorassan through the good offices of the British Officer. I received nothing from Kutchee.

Question.—Why were you deprived of these lands, or how did you come to lose them?

Answer.—I advised the Khan to follow the principles of his ancestors, and that the country would then be impartially and well governed; that the Shahgassee should not be made Wuzeer or disputes would arise.* The Khan replied that he alone would govern the country; for this reason the Shahgassee is no friend of mine.

* The Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed was appointed Wuzeer by his Highness the Khan of Khelat in 1858 at Jacobabad in presence of Sir B. Frere, General Jacob, myself, and Sir Henry Green. The appointment was afterwards solemnly confirmed at Gundava in presence of all the chiefs.

(Signed) W. L. M.

Question.—How long was the Khan on good terms with you?

Answer.—For two years after he assumed sovereignty.

Question.—At what place did you give the above counsel to the Khan, and on what grounds were your lands confiscated?

Answer.—In Khelat and then at Bagh when the Khan resolved upon seizing Taj Mahomed, and had imprisoned my brother at Khunuck. I ran away to Mittree and thence to Candahar; while away my lands, cattle, and other property were confiscated.

Taj Mahomed was not seized until after Moolla Mahomed went from Bagh to Mittree in 1865.

(Signed) W. L. M.

Question.—What was the cause of the last insurrection?

Answer.—The Khan wanted forcibly to marry the sister of Taj Mahomed, but Taj Mahomed Zehree, Sher Dil, and myself and other Sirdars tried to prevent him doing so, on the ground that Taj Mahomed's daughter had married the Khan.

The Khan married Taj Mahomed's sister, widow of the late Khan, against the wish of the Sirdar, but it was in accordance with the customs of the country for the succeeding Khan to marry the widows. The sister was on bad terms with the Sirdars, hence his objection. Arrangements were also in progress for the Khan's marriage with the Sirdar's daughter. The other espousal broke this off for the time and so further offended the Sirdar. Afterwards the sister died and the Khan then married the Sirdar's daughter, who is still with him, the Khan.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Question.—Had you any intention to hurt the Khan, or to remove him from the throne?

Answer.—None; it was by force and by mediation on my part that the Khan was reinstated. He continued on good terms with me for two years. He changed towards me as shown above.

Question.—Were there any other reasons besides those mentioned above by you for flying to Candahar?

Answer.—None.

Moolla Mahomed, Taj Mahomed, and others conspired against the Khan in 1863, and again in 1865; on latter occasion the intention of the two first was to kill and place a (then unborn) son of the Khan by Taj Mahomed's daughter on the throne, when they would have all the power in their own hands.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Question.—Are you aware of Taj Mahomed having intended to do anything against the Khan?

Answer.—No, because I and Taj Mahomed were of one and the same mind, and he had no such intention.

Question.—Was there no other reason why you left your home, country, and lands?

Moolla Mahomed fled from Mittree directly he heard of Taj Mahomed's apprehension.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Answer.—None. I went to Mittree before Taj Mahomed was seized. Troops were sent against me, on which I fled to Candahar.

Question.—When you returned from Candahar, and the English officers were allowed to intercede with the Khan about you, how was it you did not accept the terms offered?

* These Moolla Mahomed had voluntarily resigned at Khelat in 1865.
(Signed) W. L. M.

The blood-money for Taj Mahomed was a most improper and offensive demand.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Hubbeeb Khan was killed in fight when he rose in rebellion in 1867.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Answer.—The Khan agreed to give me all my old rights but not the new ones on his restoration,* the blood-money of Taj Mahomed or the property taken from me at Mittree when I fled to Candahar, also blood-money for Hubbeeb Khan, Raisanee, who was my brother-in-law, and killed in 1867 by the Khan's troops.

Question.—Were there any other reasons why you did not accept the Khan's terms?

The Khan forgave Adam Khan, Bungoolzye, and Alladina Khoord at the same time, 1869, but would have nothing to say to Jam of Beyla or Azaad Khan.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Answer.—I also represented the claims of the other Sirdars, but the Khan rejected them.

Question.—You had a right perhaps to urge the blood-money claim for Hubbeeb Khan; what right had you to do the same for Taj Mahomed?

Subsequent inquiry showed Hubbeeb Khan met his death as above stated, so blood-money for him either was not due.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Moolla Mahomed's object in this claim was to show that the Khan had caused Taj Mahomed's death. Sir Henry Green after careful inquiry gave his decided opinion there was no truth in such a supposition.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Moolla Mahomed did not avail himself of this but fled to Kooruk, foreign territory, belonging to his Highness the Ameer of Cabul.
(Signed) W. L. M.

This is not true. The Jam seized the grain on Kumal Khan's estates which had been decided did not belong to him, and so commenced hostilities.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Answer.—I claimed for Taj Mahomed's blood-money because we are all one, Sarawan and Jalawan. I accepted nothing from the Khan, saying I must refer to the other Sirdars before anything was done. The Sirdars did not agree to the terms, and I went away from Khelat to Kooruk, in Seebee, and proceeded to the Murree Hills; afterwards the Jam's business took place, and I went to Candahar. Captain Harrison said if neither broke truce for three months he would do his best to get matters adjusted. Before that time the Jam's business commenced. The Khan commenced the business with the Jam by sending troops against the latter.

Question.—Why did you commence the late disturbances?

Answer.—I received at Candahar intimation that other Sirdars had been treated by the Khan with tyranny, viz., Moobarik Khan, Shawanee, Syud Khan, Mahomed Shaye, Jehangeer Khan, Lehree, Vynd Khan, Bungulzye; that the Khan had also gone to Abdool Kadir's house at Moostung and desired to force on a settlement of an old business in which one Moobarik Khan Hassil Khanozye had misbehaved with the wife of Abdool Kadir Khan, and that this was a dishonour to the Shawanees, of whom Abdool Kadir was chief. Moobarik Khan Hassil Khanozye was with the Khan. Moobarik Khan Shawanee, cousin of Abdool Kadir Khan, wrote to me of this and said no Khan had ever acted in this way before, and asked me to come and join in a revolution.

The Khan's object was to try and settle this family quarrel amicably.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Mooajib Allowances.

Question.—Did you ever receive the Mooajib you mention in Mahomed Nusseer Khan's time or afterwards?

Answer.—Nusseer Khan was in the habit of giving it every year, sometime Rupees 1,000, sometimes 800, not always the same. I was young then, so don't know particularly. The Khan treated me with the greatest honour. The present Khan used to pay it to me sometimes yearly until I fled to Candahar.

The Khelat Government records can prove the correctness or otherwise of this. (Signed) W. L. M.

Rozina daily allowances when in attendance on the Khan.

I received rozina from Nusseer Khan and from the present Khan regularly whenever I attended them until I fled to Candahar. No Khan formerly ever had regular troops, but depended on the chiefs and their followers. Nusseer Khan first commenced, but only with 100 men with my advice. Now there has been a great increase in numbers, and these troops eat up all the produce which otherwise would go amongst us.

The records will show this. (Signed) W. L. M.

These have become necessary to the Khan in consequence of the defection and opposition of the chiefs. They numbered 400 in Nusseer Khan's time, and were paid from Crown revenues.

Marks of Honour.

Nusseer Khan was in the habit of giving marks of honour to me, as to others, when I waited on him, and was dismissed, or at Eeds if present, and so also did Khodadad up to the time of my going to Candahar. The Khan also was in the habit of consulting me as Sirdar of Sarawan in all matters, first me and then the Sirdars of Jalawan, and sometimes he put questions to other Sirdars. This was in regard to matters of the arrangement of the country with regard to peace or war, appointments or removals of Naibs, and appointment of the Wuzeer even. Nusseer Khan followed this practice; when I was young he used to consult my Vakeel, Mahomed Khan Shawanee.

The Wuzeer states these were always given while the Sirdar was loyal. (Signed) W. L. M.

As long as support was duly given the Khan consulted the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan in reference to matters of national importance, according to custom, but this was closed by Sirdar's defection. Consultation on appointment of Naibs was never the custom. The Khan also selected his own Wuzeer, and his appointment was confirmed in formal Durbar. (Signed) W. L. M.

Question.—When Nusseer Khan was on the throne was your father alive?

Answer.—Yes, Azad Khan, my father, arranged with Mr. Ross* Bell that the country should be given to Nusseer Khan. Khodadad Khan did not at first act rightly from Gungaram being Wuzeer, but afterwards when Wullee Mahomed was made Wuzeer at my recommendation† things went well for a time; he then ceased to act according to custom, and the first disturbances commenced.

Afterwards, on his restoration for a time, he followed the correct course, but then abandoned it, and I went to Candahar.

* Should be Major Outram. (Sd.) W. L. M.

† This differs from former reply. (Sd.) W. L. M.

On Khodadad Khan's restoration Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed arrogated all powers to themselves, causing much discontent. (Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—Is it the custom in Beloochistan for the Wuzeer to be selected, or is it an hereditary post?

The appointment of Wuzeer was hereditary for a great many years in a Dehwar family, who also bore the title of Akhoond or tutor. It nowhere appears that Sirdars were first consulted. (Sd.) W. L. M.

Answer.—Always selected and not hereditary, the Khan first consulting the Sirdars then selecting.

Question.—Was the Wuzeer's discharge governed by the same rule?

Answer.—Yes, with the combined voice of the Sirdars.

Question.—Was Mahomed Hoosein's father selected, or did he inherit?

Answer.—Mahomed Hoosein's father, Abdool Rahman, was selected Wuzeer with the advice of the Sirdars when Mahomed was the Khan. His father Aghali was Wuzeer before Abdool Rahman was murdered in Mehrab Khan's time by Dad Mahomed Ghilzi, who was made Wuzeer with consent of the Sirdars. Dad Mahomed was murdered by Mahomed Hoosein, and the latter became Wuzeer by the advice of my father, Azad Khan, and Rashid Khan, the Jhalawan Sirdar.

Abdool Rahman was a Budozye, a small family residing at Khelat; he was not really Wuzeer but Naib, so also was his father Aghali, and his son Mahomed Hoosein. The latter, however, became real Wuzeer in Nusseer Khan the younger's time, but was removed at General Jacob's recommendation for gross treachery to the Khan. The Sirdars were not re-consulted on any of these occasions. (Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—Had not the Wuzeer the right of appointing Naibs?

Answer.—Yes, but only with consent of the Sirdars‡ except Bagh, which, being really the Naib of the Wuzeer, he appointed a deputy of his own.

‡ Inquiry shows this was never the case. Had it been it would have left the Khan no power at all. (Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—Supposing the advice of the Sirdars and the opinion of the Ruler did not agree, what followed?

Answer.—It would not be right. Result would not be good. If the Khan said right it would be well.

Question.—Would the Khan's wish prevail, or would he give in to the Sirdar?

Answer.—A division must follow, but if the Khan thought one way and both Sirdars the other, and the former persisted, it would be on his own head, they, the Sirdars, would not help him.

This is tantamount to saying the Sirdars ruled and not the Khan, and seems very much to have been what Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed acted on.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—In what points did the Khan Khodadad Khan not consult you before you quarrelled with him?

Answer.—In matters relating to the good of the country, and he committed acts of tyranny over the Sirdars and people. One was that he took transit duty on grain which was never done before. That he took money revenue from people and afterwards demanded from the same in kind as well. Tyranny was performed because the advice of the Sirdars was not followed.

In these assertions the Wuzeer does not agree.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

If this was warrant for rebellion, I am afraid many other countries would see it.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—Was the course you mention in regard to taking advice from the Sirdars and following it adopted in the elder Nusseer Khan's time.

Answer.—Always he acted properly and did what was right. Was it ever heard that he killed any one or took away one's property? He gave much. In matters of importance he consulted the Sirdars.

Nusseer Khan the elder kept all in perfect order by his ability and will. He had one safety valve, viz., that he sent 500 men under a Sirdar to Candahar to do service there, and in this way got rid of restless characters for a time.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—Was it customary to consult the Sirdars in any other appointment besides that of Wuzeer?

Answer.—Yes, it was, and formerly all Naibs were Brahooees, but in Mehrab Khan's time and Nusseer Khan's time there were some slaves, but most were Brahooees.

Question.—Who were Naibs of Quetta in Nusseer Khan's time?

Answer.—Minee Mingul, Rahimdad slave: Noor Mahomed, Raisanee; Alladina Khoord. Nusseer Khan died during Alladina's incumbency. Alladina remained for two years under Khodadad Khan.

Mahomed Khan, Rustumzye, resigned because the people complained of the exactions he was compelled to enforce.

Abdool Azeez, slave.

Abdool Luteef, slave.

Question.—Who were Naibs of Bagh in Nusseer Khan's and Khodadad Khan's time?

Answer.—Mahomed Amees, Bungulzye,
Prusram, Bunniah,
K. Taj Mahomed Shahgassee's brother,
Khodadad Khan. Dad Mahomed, Bungoolzye, Laho Jan.

Naibs of Dadur.

Khalikdad, slave.
Futteh Khan Mingul.
Khair Mahomed Mingul.
Mahomed Khan, Shawanee.

Nusseer Oolla Dehwar remained till the restoration, when the latter was sent away for being a friend of Shere Dil Khan.

By Khodadad Khan. Wullee Mahomed Menejo killed by village rebels.

Moostung Naibs—Nusseer Khan's time.

Jubbur Patan.
Mahomed Khan Shawanee.
Abdool Azeez, slave.
Khodadad Khan. Abdool Rahman Dehwar, who has been Naib for the past three years.

Khozdar Naib in Nusseer Khan's time.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, his representative.
Gholam Mahomed (brother-in-law).

Gundava Naibs.

Nusseer Khan.
Darogah Gool Mahomed, slave.
Khodadad Khan. Attah Mahomed.
Kumber slave.

Ittaba, slave of Kurrum Khan, Allahzye. All these rulers were appointed before I went to Candahar, and were appointed with the consent and approval of Sirdars.

Question.—Who was the Wuzeer in the time of the Great Nusseer?

These were Naibs not Wuzeers. The Wuzeers were then Akhoonds and remained so till Mehrab Khan's time.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

Answer.—Agh Ali Budozye. His son succeeded him because he was a good man, but not as a necessary consequence, making the appointment hereditary.

Question.—You mention in your statement that you got one seventh of the receipts on account of kafilas passing Dadur, how was this?

Answer.—From Nusseer Khan the Great's time I, as Sirdar of the Sarawans, received one rupee per camel or load or four asses. This custom continued during the reign of Mohbeit Khan and Mehrab Khan, Nusseer Khan the less reduced it to annas eight. This continued until treaty by General Jacob, when Nusseer Khan told me I could no longer receive it, but he would give me Rupees 400 or 600. I then found that the Khan received Rupees 50,000 from the British and asked for my share. The Khan Nusseer promised it, but I never received it, because he died after two years. I was to be allowed to levy one seventh of the amount taken by the Khan at Dadur. This was confirmed to me by Khodadad, and I continued to levy it up to the time of my fleeing to Candahar.

Mehrab Khan gave me the ten khurwars of grain per annum as blood-money for the death of my grandfather, which were continued to me by Mehrab Khan, Nusseer Khan, and Khodadad Khan until the rebellion took place.

Question.—What are the real points then briefly you ask for from the Khan?

Answer.—The Khan consented to give me back my old estates but not my new ones in consequence of the assistance rendered in restoring him to the throne. He refused me the claim for blood-money on account of the death of Taj Mahomed or for Hubbeeb Khan, my cousin, who were killed with seven others; restitution of the property taken from the Budozyes at Gurwaf; restitution to the Lehrees of Nurnuck; restitution of the property taken after my flight to Candahar; restitution of the property of Hubbeeb Khan, and compensation for losses. Ditto for injury to Khunuck, and further plunder and injury at Mittree, injuries that I have suffered from being in rebellion.

(Sd.) W. L. M.

This and the following refer to losses said to be sustained by the Sirdar in consequence of his turning rebel.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

Question.—Who commenced the fight on the night of the 24th December last?

Answer.—The Khan's troops were coming against our troops, and our troops attacked them. The Khan's troops came from Bagh to Hajee, and our troops from Mittree to Hajee. They reached Hajee first. The Commander seized the Naib of Hajee, a Shawanee. Information was then conveyed to Mittree, and it was said that the enemy were coming on to attack Mittree. Our troops then marched on Hajee and attacked the others.

Question.—Why did you allow your troops to injure poor traders by plundering the kafilah in the Bolan?

Answer.—It occurred because Mahomed Khan Vakeel behaved badly. The fight ensued at Hajee. We lost men and property and lost name (women ill-used). It was done in retaliation. I heard of the intention afterwards, being at Khunuck, and sent to stop the foray, and was too late.

The Wuzeer distinctly declares no women were injured, and that the Syuds of Mittree are ready to depose to this.

Deposition of Shadee Khan.

Question.—The claims you have mentioned, were they allowed to you by the present Khan on his first coming to the throne, and were you then in the enjoyment of them?

Answer.—Yes, in the time of Meer Nusseer Khan the younger, and also in Khodadad Khan's time; they have been taken from me since 1867, when Hubbeeb Khan was murdered. The reason was the Khan told my cousin Shadad Khan to kill the headman, Adam Khan. On this Adam Khan, Hubbeeb Khan, Alladina Khoord consented together, and as Moolla Mahomed, their Sirdar, was an exile at Candahar, agreed there was nothing for but to fight or appeal to the British, and wrote to Moolla Mahomed accordingly. The disturbances of 1867 then commenced. From that time up to the present, not having received what my father considered his rights, and what I consider mine, I have remained dissatisfied. My father, Adam Khan, Bungulzye, died about four months ago. The meaning of the two mares is that the Bungulzye Sirdar has a right to send two mares into the Khan's stables to be fed free. In the same way my right to eight khurwars of grain is derived from my being a Bungulzye Sirdar. They are not ridden, but the Sirdar can change them for others when he likes.

Adam Khan's lands were restored in 1869; he accepted them first, but then went to Seebee.

This is dependent on the will and pleasure of the Khan. No right.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Bubbur is divided between Shahdee Khan, Bungulzye, Jehangeer, Lehree, Alladina Khoord, and Syud, Khan, Mahomedzye. These grants were given on the Khan's restoration in 1864.

Forfeited by rebellion. First given to these four by Shere Dil.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Deposition of Alladina Khoord.

Question.—For what service do you say you were granted one-fourth of the land in Deh Bubbur?

Answer.—First Shere Dil, the usurper of the throne, when temporarily on the throne, gave it to us four Sirdars.

Mallik Dinna Mahomed Shye,
Adam Khan Bungulzye,
Alladina Khoord,
Jehangeer Lehree.

The Khan verbally gave the share to me at Khunuck on his restoration. It was confirmed by him by Sunnud a year afterwards at Khelat for my services in reference to the restoration.

The Sunnud for the 12 "bitts" of water at Dadur was given by the Khan at Khunuck when the other was verbally given.

Question.—When did you receive the Mooajib of Rupees 500. In Nusseer Khan's time?

Answer.—No, I got then Rupees 200 and some grain occasionally. I was then Naib of Shawlkote and remained so until the present Khan returned from the Murree Hills till 1859, when Mahomed Khan, Rustomzye, was appointed. The reason of my losing the Naibship was an accusation of my having appropriated Rupees 4,000. I denied it. Green Sahib paid the money to the Khan, saying it would be better not to press Alladina for it. The mooajib was given me first by Khodadad Khan the day he was attacked and wounded at Gundava. I did not receive it in Shere Dil's time, because I did not pay my respects to him but went with the Shahgassee. I received it regularly after the present Khan's restoration until I became yaghee (bad friends) at the time that Hubbeeb Khan was killed at Khunuck.

Sir H. Green interceded for Alladina and got the Khan to forego this claim. He paid nothing.
(Signed) W. L. M.

I also regularly received daily allowances when I was not in opposition; and the eight khurwars received at Kutchee and Khorassan of grain such being customary to give to Sirdars.

I was reckoned amongst the Sirdars always during the Great Nusseer Khan's time to the present Khan's.

Question.—For what reason, and how was it you received duties on kafilas passing through the Bolan?

Answer.—I received one rupee per camel for protecting kafilas from Quetta to the water at Siri Bolan; half a rupee was given to the Satukezyes for protection from Siri Bolan to Ahigoom; half a rupee to the Mundranees from Ahigroom to Bibinanee;

Rupees 1-2 to the Khijjuck of Kisti from Bibinanee to Dadur; one rupee to the Raisanee Sirdar at Dadur. The Khan also took Rupees 2 here per camel if it had not been taken at Quettah; half rupee also to the Shawanee Sirdar, altogether Rupees 6-10. This was assigned by the great Nusseer Khan. Mahomed Khan also gave it.

It was stopped in the time of Mehrab Khan after two years, and the arrangement was not re-introduced afterwards, excepting that the Raisanees and Shawanees had their amounts allowed to them, and continued until disturbances occurred between them and the Khan.

Question.—If Mehrab Khan stopped this allowance, why do you claim it from the present Khan?

Answer.—Because we are poor. Nusseer Khan used to give us plenty, but this Khan nothing, so I ask for return to the above. It was stopped in Mehrab Khan's time. I don't exactly know why, as I was young then, but it may have been because the road was not properly protected.

Question.—Why do you adduce this stoppage of the Bolan allowance as a claim against present Khan?

Answer.—I did not mean to do so. I merely meant to show that it was a right I used to hold. It was the present Khan's father who took it away.

Question.—Was the road was Shawlkote to Siri Bolan ever in your charge?

Answer.—No; I was Naib of Shawlkote, and after the kafilas had started had nothing further to do with them.

Question.—How did the ten angushts of water at Nowshera come into your possession?

Answer.—I bought them from Gholam Nubbee and Sultan Mahomed Shawanee in two instalments, first in 1861, and second in 1863.

These were taken from me by the Khan after the disturbances following the death of Hubbeeb Khan in 1867. The Khan gave orders for one fuzzul in 1869, and I then received two khurwars of grain; since then nothing.

Question.—When the English troops were in Kutchee and Quetta, what post had you with regard to Bolan?

Answer.—I received various sums at different times, Rupees 300, sometimes Rupees 400, for protecting sahibs going through the pass, to whom I gave 40 or 50 men, horse and foot, who accompanied them to Shawlkote, I going myself, and on reaching the top of the pass I let others go and went on to Shawlkote with the sahibs, taking only five sowars.

I was also ordered to make a well at the top of the Bolan at the edge of the Dusht, where there was no water. I did this, and derived great benefit from the well afterwards. The well has now fallen in. I consider that was a good piece of duty.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a letter from Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee; Wudera Shadee Khan, Bungulzye; Jundo Khan, Shahwanee; Syed Khan, Alladina Khoord, and Sumlundar Khan, Lehree, to the Address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 9th March 1872.

WE beg to lay before you and the British Government all the particulars connected with our case.

1st.—If any of our Rulers oppressed us and our "raj" (clansmen) and refused to follow our advice and counsel, we went and complained to Ahmed Shah, who made full inquiry from either party. If the Ruler was proved to have acted wrongly and treated us with a high hand, he was at once deposed, and another Ruler was ordered to be placed in his stead. We Sirdars with one accord selected Meer Ahmed as our Khan of Khelat, but he having acted against our will, was in his turn and on our complaint dethroned by Ahmed Shahee* and Meer Abdoolla Khan, Ahmedzye, appointed to take his place. He, by the will of God, died, and we having consulted each other's wishes made Mohbut Khan our Ruler. He proved to be an oppressive and self-willed "Hakim" † and had, therefore, to vacate his post, which was filled up by the Great Nusseer Khan. We accepted his authority, and it was by our advice and counsel that he was placed over us. He spent many years amongst us, all of which were marked by good rule and good treatment. On his career in this world being at an end he was succeeded by Meer Mahmood Khan, his son, who gave us and the Raj no cause for complaint, except in one instance, when he caused a Sirdar of the Bezonjao tribe and several other Bezonjaos to be killed. On hearing of this deed, we (Sirdars Jalawan and Sarawan) went to him in a body, and after paying him the usual homage gave him good advice. All the Bezonjaos became disobedient, and we told Meer Mahomed Khan that as long as the Bezonjaos remained disaffected, and were not satisfied by payment of blood-money, disorder would reign. Our counsel was listened to, and a grant of four towns in Kutchee was made to the Bezonjaos as blood-money. This grant is still enjoyed by the descendants of the original grantees. By the will of the Almighty, Meer Mahomed Khan bade adieu to this world, and we appointed Mehrab Khan as our Khan. He behaved well with us and our Raj (clansmen) for some years, but afterwards began to be oppressive and exacting. He caused Sirdar Mehuroolla, Raisanee, and some other Sirdars to be butchered, and, Sirdars Hussud Khan and Mahomed Khan, Shawanee, and another therefore proceeded to Candahar and laid their grievances before Ahmed Shahee. Sirdar Meer Abdool Kurreem, Raisanee, younger brother of Sirdar Hussud Khan, and younger uncle of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee together with all the Sarawan Sirdars went and overran the whole of Kutchee. Mehrab Khan at this time sent his mother, Beebee Sahitee, to Candahar to mediate between him and the Sirdars, agreeing to pay Rupees 100,000 and two or three towns in Kutchee as blood-money which was due. Meer Mehrab Khan fell in the battle which took place between his Highness the Khan and the British Government, and Meer Abdool Kurreem, uncle of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, also lost his life. The English Government then gave the Khanate to Shahnawaz Khan, whose administration and behaviour towards us were not marked by justice and kindness. He did not also follow our counsel. Meer Nusseer Khan the less, who was in Kharan, arrived in Moostung* with his army, and we, having strengthened his forces, marched with him to Khelat. Mr. Ross Bell summoned Sirdar Azaad Khan and other Sirdars into his presence and asked them to acknowledge Meer Shahnawaz Khan as their sovereign. We all replied that Nusseer Khan the less was our Ruler, and we would not pay our allegiance to Shahnawaz Khan. The aforesaid gentleman complied with our wishes, and we informed him that the prevailing custom in our country was, that if any Ruler treated our "Raj" with cruelty and oppression, and set our counsel at nought, we at once threw off his yoke.† We then, with Mr. Bell's consent, sent a Sowar to Nusseer Khan, and before he arrived among us the English officer breathed his last at Sealkote, and was succeeded by Major Outram, who accompanied us to Khelat, where, with the assent of all of us, Sirdar Nusseer Khan was proclaimed as our Khan.‡ As long as Nusseer Khan was alive and presided over us as Ruler, he gave us no reason to be dissatisfied with him. He also by the decrees of Heaven passed away. Now that Meer Khodadad Khan has been our Ruler, whatever good he has conferred on us Sirdars and on our Raj is not hidden from the British Government, and needs no detail from us.

This was only done on one occasion mentioned below, and then the Khan Mohbut Khan was deposed by the Ruler of Candahar, to whom the Khans of Khelat then paid allegiance.

This is very differently decided by the Wuzeer.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

* Meer Nusseer Khan was brought forward in autumn of 1840 by the Darogah Gool Mahomed, Beebee Gunja, and certain of the Sarawan Sirdars, but the Jalawan Sirdars were mainly with Shahnawaz. Nusseer Khan's forces being defeated at Dadur in November 1840, he again became a fugitive until he was brought to Khelat in July 1841 by Colonel Stacey.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

† This is here announced as a sort of vindication for their recent proceedings.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

‡ This is very incorrect as the British records show. Major Outram, on behalf of the British Government, arranged for Meer Nusseer Khan being placed on the throne of his father as an act of justice, and Colonel Stacey proceeded to where Nusseer Khan was in refuge and brought him to Khelat.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

2*ndly*.—When Sirdar Mehur Oollah was murdered and we went to Ahmed Shahee, the ruler of Candahar told Mehrab Khan that if he had not been so unjust and cruel towards the Sirdars, he would not have been reduced to that plight, and that therefore we should be allowed to enjoy all the property obtained by us by plunder in Kutchee.§ His Highness the Khan used to receive one lakh of rupees from Ahmed Shah and distribute half of it among us Sirdars.

We have placed all our circumstances before you. Dated 9th March 1872.

P.S.—Forty or fifty persons, brothers and nephews of each Sirdar, used to be taken for service by the Khan, and no other exaction made.

§ This is mentioned to try and give a precedent for the writers retaining what they had recently plundered while in rebellion, but is manifestly untrue.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Letter from Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, dated 5th Mohurrum 1289.

I make the following remarks on the petition of the Sarawan Sirdars, dated 9th March 1872, presented to the Commissioner in Sind.

They state that they seated Meer Ahmed on the throne of Khelat and complained to Ahmed Shahee whenever they were oppressed by their rulers, whom they got deposed. All that is advanced by them is contrary to the real facts, and is for the promotion of their own ends. I give below the full particulars:—

The five Khans who preceded Meer Ahmed have been omitted to be mentioned by the Sirdars. The number of Ahmedzye rulers is 22, who have all sat on the throne of Khelat. Mahomed Ghaznavi was ruler of Afghanistan when the Ahmedzyes brought Kohistan under their sway: The kings of Delhi and Candahar were then of the Ghoree tribe, and the Ahmedzyes acknowledged the authority of the King of Delhi. As the King of Candahar was dependent on that of Delhi for aid, the Ahmedzyes commenced to have connexion with the former. When the Ghilzies fought with the Ghorees for the sovereignty of Candahar, Meer Kurreem Shah, Ahmedzye, brother of Meer Abdullah, fell in battle, and the Ghilzies became the rulers of Candahar. From the first the Ghilzies were on bad terms with the Ahmedzyes, and on many occasions quarrels and struggles between the two had taken place. The Ahmedzyes never made themselves dependents of the Ghilzies. Then Nadir Shah became the sovereign of Candahar, Herat, and Persia, and on his death was succeeded by Ahmed Shah. When, in the days of Sooltan Mahomed Ghaznavi, Ahmedzyes obtained possession of Kohistan, the ancestors of these Sirdars did not live in Kohistan. They came afterwards one by one, and perhaps this is their 10th generation. They took service and classed themselves as khizmutgars* of Ahmedzye family. In proportion to their service they were allowed to enter the Brahooee clan. The above will show that it is impossible that the Ahmedzyes could have obtained sovereignty through these Sirdars. As a Persian poet has said:—

* Servants.

"When he himself has lost his way and gone astray how can he be a guide to others."

They declared that they were instrumental in putting Meer Ahmed on the throne of Khelat, and that when he commenced to be oppressive he was, on a complaint being made by them to the Ahmedzye, deposed, and Meer Abdullah Khan placed in this stead. This is wholly false. The facts are that the rulers continued their rule till Meer Ahmed ascended the throne by his birthright. In his time the Ghilzies were the rulers of Candahar. The reasons of ill-feeling between the Ghilzies and Meers Ahmed and Abdullah were the following:—

1*st*. The death of Meer Kurrum Shah.

2*nd*. The Ahmedzyes had from generations past subjected themselves to the authority of the King of Delhi. There was always fighting between the two (Ghilzies and Ahmedzyes). Meer Abdullah became the ruler in this wise, viz., when Meer Ahmed was the ruler, Meer Abdullah was residing in Shawlkote. The two brothers did not agree, and there were continual fights between them. At length a reconciliation was brought about, and both came to Khelat. After some days Meer Ahmed was laid up with sickness, and Meer Abdullah, taking advantage of this opportunity, imprisoned his brother and proclaimed himself ruler. He did not, however, kill his brother on account of their near relationship, and when Meer Ahmed recovered from his illness the brothers came to terms, and it was resolved that Meer Ahmed should receive the receipts from Beyla and Mushkah, heretofore enjoyed by Boorfat Sirdars, and that Meer Abdullah should be the ruler at Khelat. The former lived on the revenue allowed to him, and at last, in obedience to the will of God, entrusted his soul into the hands of the Almighty. His tomb still stands at Beyla. Meer Abdullah conducted the affairs of the State very well, and took care of the subjects. At this time Nadir Shah Erani,* having resolved to conquer Herat and Candahar, wrote to Meer Abdullah Khan for his aid, who replied in the affirmative, and commenced to collect an army. Nadir Shah, having won the fort of Herat, was proceeding to make an attack on Candahar when Meer Abdullah left Khelat to join him, and encamped at a place called Moostung. While here he received a petition with a deputation of some respectable Beloochees from Kutchee, asking to be relieved from the injuries sustained by them at the hands of Mean Noor Mahomed Kalhora, ruler of Sind. According to this request Meer Abdullah Khan started for Kutchee, at the same time informing Nadir Shah by writing of what had compelled him to return to his territory, and that he would join him at Candahar as soon as the urgent business that had called him was completed. He at once proceeded to Kutchee and encamped at a place called Khanpoor. Mean Noor Mahomed, on receiving information of his arrival, appointed Shah Bahara to oppose him. An engagement took place between the two forces at Jandrihar. It lasted long, and both parties lost a great number of men. Meer Abdullah also fell as a martyr. At this juncture, and when the affairs of Khelat were in this state, Nadir Shah obtained a victory and ascended the throne of Candahar and Cabul. He brought Candahar, Herat, and Cabul under his sway, and made Sind his dependency. He also placed Kutchee in the hands of Meer Eltyaz Khan, Meer Mohbut Khan, and Meer Nusseer Khan, sons of Meer Abdullah Khan, as compensation for their father's death, sending at the same time Mean Noor Mahomed to Meer Mohbut Khan to be killed or disposed of in any way he liked. Mean Noor Mahomed was not severely dealt with, but set at liberty, and Meer Mohbut Khan was raised to the rulership of Kutchee and Kohistan.

Meer Mohbut Khan commenced to carry on the duties of the State, while Meer Eltyaz Khan and Meer Nusseer Khan were taken by Nadir Shah with him to Candahar and shown great kindness. The king always kept as hostages one Sirdar with 500 men at his court, to ensure the peace and comfort of the inhabitants of Kutchee and Kohistan. Every year these were transferred and new ones sent instead. This rule continued till his death, and prosperity and peace were daily on the increase. Meer Nusseer Khan also received new favours at the King's hands every day. By the will of the Almighty Nadir Shah was killed, and Ahmed Shah sat on the throne of Candahar. No rupture took place between Meer Mohbut Khan and his people owing to this change of government in Candahar, but as Meer Mohbut Khan was fond of ease and pleasure, the roads by which the subjects of the king and other people passed became dangerous and devoid of safety. As the king had great love and affection for Nusseer Khan, and as the roads and passages became infested with thieves and robbers, Ahmed Shah sent for Meer Mohbut Khan with his ooloos (clansmen) to Candahar, and there it was settled that Meer Nusseer Khan should be the ruler of Kutchee and Kohistan, and that Meer Mohbut Khan should remain in Candahar.

3. Meer Nusseer Khan proved to be a good ruler and gave satisfaction to all great and small. He made good arrangements for the government of the country. He used to send every year one Sirdar with 500 men as hostages to Candahar, as was the custom during the reign of Nadir Shah, although these Sarawan Sirdars have stated that Meer Nusseer Khan spent his days well with them, still they, owing to their bad character, were guilty of wrong-doing, detail of which is given below.

Meer Mohbut Khan died in Candahar; his son also, Meer Hajee Khan, expired there, and his grandson, Meer Behram Khan, was with the King at Candahar. As by the command of God all the sons that were born to Nusseer Khan died, he asked the King to let him have Meer Behram Khan, whom he brought to Khelat, and there gave to him his daughter in marriage. After the expiration of some days a disturbance was set afoot by Sarawans of the Shawanee tribe. They made Meer Behram Khan their tool and girded their loins to assist him. They caused an engagement to take place between Meer Nusseer Khan and Meer Behram Khan at a place called Iskalka. The end of the fight was disastrous to the rebels. They had several of their number killed, and received the punishment which they deserved for their base deeds. Meer Behram was imprisoned, and peace was restored to the country. Meer Nusseer Khan soon bade adieu to this world and hasted to heaven. It may be considered how far the appointment of a ruler in Khelat was dependent on the will of the Sirdars when they themselves have all along received due punishment for their deeds.

4. Meer Nusseer Khan was succeeded by Meer Mahomed Khan, who conducted the affairs of the Khanate with justice and humanity, and thus secured the happiness of his subjects. Whatever the Sarawans state in regard to the murder of Fakeer Mahomed Bezonjao and other Bezonjaos, and the Khan giving four towns in Kutchee upon their advice as blood-money, is untrue, and one in which self-interest is sought. The facts are these. In the days of the rulership of Meer Mahomed Khan, Meer Fakeer Mahomed Bezonjao pillaged a kafila of the King of Candahar, who sent Nowrung Khan Duranee with 200 Sowars to Khelat to obtain restitution of the plundered property. According to these orders of the King, Meer Mahomed Khan, accompanied by Nowrung, Khan, Duranee, went to Kozdar, and there, summoning Fakeer Mahomed, recovered the stolen property and handed it over to the kafila people and Afghans who, however, stated that property stolen from them was more than what was given back. While Fakeer Mahomed declared that all that belonged to them had been restored. While Fakeer Mahomed and Nowrung Khan, Duranee, were engaged in disputing this point, the former out-stepped the rules of courtesy and lost his life, as well as some of his men; his son, Kheyra, who was with him, was taken into custody. He was, however, soon released and appointed to his father's post by Meer Mahomed Khan. Kheyra showed great faithfulness and self-sacrifice in the discharge of the functions of his new office, and after the lapse of some days preferred a request that as the Bezonjaos had fallen on the kafila of the King through poverty and hunger, and as he was a loyal subject of the Ahmedzye family a piece of land should be granted to his family in Kutchee to aid in their maintenance and support. At this entreaty his Highness the Khan took compassion and gave Meer Kheyra the lands "Bukshis," which are still in the possession of his descendants. This grant was not made at the recommendation of the Sarawans and Bezonjaos, nor was it given as blood-money for the death of Fakeer Mahomed. Meer Mahomed Khan was held in great esteem by, and received high honours from, the King, and ever received from him the same aid and favours as were shown to Meer Nusseer Khan. During the rule of Meer Mahomed Khan, who when he ascended the throne was young in years, the Brahooees, as was their wont and behaviour, did not give up rebellion, and rendered every assistance to Meer Behram Khan to create disturbances. The Sudozyes were then the rulers at Candahar, and Mudad Khan with his forces was sent by the King to help the Khan. The combined forces meted out due punishment to the insurgents and slaughtered many. Meer Behram Khan saved his life by flight to Dera, where ended the latter days of his life. The Raj and subjects are like children to the Ruler, and whereas the former turned rebellious and misbehaved themselves, the latter chastised them for the purpose of ensuring peace in the country. There is an apt verse by a Persian poet:—"Obedience and due respect to superiors or a crown. If a son is obstinate, for an obstinate dog the remedy is in a clod" (meaning chastisement). How then could the rulers have obtained sovereignty through these Sirdars? Meer Mahomed Khan, by the wish of the Almighty, placed his seal in his hands and disappeared from this world.

5. Meer Mehrab Khan was the next ruler at the time of the death of Meer Mahomed Khan at Gundava. Munsur Khan, Duranee, was present on behalf of the King, and none of these Sarawans were seen that day. With due promises from the King, Meer Mehrab Khan took his seat on the throne. After this the kingdom of Candahar got into disorder and the rulership of Candahar, Cabul, and Herat came into the hands of the Barukzye Sirdars. Between these Sirdars and the Khan friendship existed, and the bonds of amity were the same as before. The Khan was not, however, a dependent of them as he was of the King. Every one was the owner and ruler of his own dominions. One did not take aid from another. The Sirdar and 500 men that were taken by the Kings of Candahar as hostages for the safety of the country of Kohistan were not now sent and remained in their respective places. As the Sarawans found that they had nothing to fear from the side of Candahar, they commenced their old practice of causing disturbances to the peace of the country. Mehur Oolla Khan Raisanee made rebellion his profession. Disturbances having been commenced, and their intentions appearing to be base, the Khan Sahib was under the necessity of putting the ringleader and his two men to the sword. The others of the Raj and family remained loyal. Some men however, with certain disaffected and rebellious Sirdars, hastened to Candahar, and the authorities of that place, in consequence of their liberal spirit, despatched an ambassador to his Highness the Khan, as a matter of friendship and good will, with the message that the Sirdars of Kohistan, who were his "Ooloos," had come to them and fallen before them, and that, in consideration of the friendship that existed between the two Governments, it was desirable that the fugitive Sirdars should be sent for with such honour as was suitable to the dignity of the ruler of Candahar. The Khan, on hearing this message, and looking to the terms of amity between himself and the ruler of Candahar and to his own fame, sent Beebee Sahib and Moolla Dost Mahomed Wuzeer to summon them. They arrived and paid their respects to his Highness the Khan. As Mehur Oolla Khan, Raisanee, had no son or brother as heir, his near relations of the Brahimzai Raisanee tribe were his heirs, and they petitioned the Khan for the right of Sirdarship. As the Khan had seen no fidelity in Mehur Oolla, he refused to confer the Sirdarship on the Brahimzaies. Some of the lands belonging to the Sirdarship of Raisanee were handed over to Sirdar Azad Khan, father of Sirda Moolla Mahomed. Not wishing, however, to keep back from the Brahimzaies the food obtainable from Sirdarship, and seeing the loyalty of Meer Azad Khan, he gave a portion of the lands to them. In consequence of the depredations committed by Allyar Lehree, Sirdar of the Lehrees on certain crops, that chief was dismissed, and Sirdar Mahomed Khan Lehree appointed in his place. Mehrab Khan arrested people according to their misdeeds and thus restored peace and tranquillity to the country. By the order of God Meer Mehrab Khan was removed as a martyr to his eternal abode in Heaven. The Sarawans affirm that the several Ahmedzyes have owed their sovereignty to them but, as I have shown above, that the rulership has from the time of the Sultan Mahomed Ghaznavi descended to lawful heirs (and this is the 22nd ruler) and these Sarawans settled in the country afterwards (this being their tenth generation) and took service under the Ahmedzyes, it is proved that the rulers have not been appointed at the will of these Sirdars. The Ahmedzyes showed firmness in their obedience to the authority of the King of Candahar, received from him favours and aids and gave them in return. What the Sirdars say about a lakh of rupees having been given as blood-money for the death of Mehur Oolla and two men is wholly untrue and mendacious. Meer Abdul Karim Raisanee and some other Sirdars that were present in battle also fell with his Highness the Khan at the time of the latter's death.

6. After the death of Meer Mehrab Khan the English Government placed the country of Moostung, Khelat, and Khozdar in the hands of Meer Shahnawaz Ahmedzye, but this continued for only about a few months. During this short period not a single act of oppression was committed by the said ruler towards the Raj and "Ooloos," who had proved staunch to Meer Shahnawaz from the days of Meer Mehrab. Many a time disturbances broke out at the instigation of rebels, who were discomfited and defeated everywhere, and had to flee. The truth or otherwise of what they allege in respect to their getting Meer Nusseer Khan the rulership by requesting the British Government, and declaring that they would not acknowledge the authority of Meer Shahnawaz Khan, is not hidden from the English Sircar, and needs no explanation from me. The British officials know the full particulars from first to last. The country of Kutchee and Kohistan was by his birth the rightful property of Meer Nusseer Khan, and the British Government, respecting the old customs and the institutions, appointed him to the rulership. His administration of the affairs of the Khanate was marked by justice and liberality. He never allowed any oppressive act to be committed and gave satisfaction. This testimony is borne by the Sirdars in their petition. These Sarawans were also guilty of carrying on a disturbance once in the time of this Khan. Its particulars are these:—Bijar Dhoombkee carried away by theft the property of the subject people in Kutchee and Sind, and by the wishes of the British Government Meer Nusseer Khan came with his forces to Chuttun and Phoolajee to arrest the offender, Bijar, who fled and concealed himself in the hills. The Sarawans without permission committed outrages on the town of Chuttun, and plundered the property of the people. In consequence of the disloyalty of the Sarawans, and in consideration of friendship, General Jacob arrived in the town of Hajee to punish the offenders, and to apprehend Mahomed Khan, Shawanee. The said Sirdar fled to Candahar and sought protection from the rulers there, who told him plainly that they would not interfere, the Khan being on terms of peace with the British Government. He was, therefore, compelled to return and ask refuge and pardon from the Khan in the name of God. Free pardon was given him. The Commissioner in Sind knows full well of the particulars of the other Sirdars, and that none had power to do or say anything at his will during the rulership of his Highness the late Khan. All are aware that, although every one was afraid of him and in awe, none of the subject people and Raj were oppressed or dealt with severely, and they were all treated and taken care of as a father takes care of his children. He was just to the end of his life.

Mehrab Khan lost his life through the treachery of Akhoond Mahomed Sadick, Naib Moollah Mahomed Hoossein and others.
Placing his son on the throne was a simple act of justice which had unfortunately been too long delayed.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

7. His successor to the Khanate is the present Khodadad Khan. The particulars of his administration are as follows:—He continued all grants and allowances found to have been made from the time of the Great Nusseer Khan and that of Nusseer Khan the less. He conferred additional honours on each day by day. After the death of Nusseer Khan the less the Sirdars again created disturbances at Khelat in the days of the present Khan, when his Highness, with all the Sirdars, was sent for to Jacobabad by the British Government. He arrived and arrangements were entered into, which were soon broken by the Sirdars. This led to the rebellion headed by Shere Dil Khan and to the wounds received by His Highness Khodadad Khan. The disturbances have continued up to this day, and the Sirdars have not yet known their duty. They fled to Candahar and Khorassan, and have kept the country in alarm. I beg full inquiry be made into their misdeeds, and justice be done by the British Government.

I turn now to the assertion made by the Sarawans of the Khan receiving Rupees 1,00,000 from Ahmedzye, and paying them one-half of that sum. This is an untruth, and the truth is this, that Ahmedzye once paid Rupees 2,00,000 (two lakhs) to his Highness the Khan for rendering him military service with his forces in times of emergency. The whole of this sum was spent by his Highness the Khan in his own expenses and in the equipment of troops, and nothing was ever given to any of his relations, or the Sarawans, or any other.

The Sarawans state that the Sirdars of Candahar informed his Highness Mehrab Khan that if he had not proceeded in the manner he had done the result would not have been such as had been, and further that no notice should be taken by him of the acts of plunder committed by the Sirdars. I must say that this statement also is not true and is fabricated. The British Government, the Commissioner in Sind, and others are fully cognizant of the fact that Mehrab Khan was not a dependent of the authorities in Candahar after the extinction of the Ahmedzye government. Friendship only existed, and now can any property plundered in the territory of one prince be allowed to remain in the possession of the plunderer by another prince? On the contrary, Mehrab Khan, in order to show his indignation for such acts, deprived the rightful heirs of Mehur Oollah of their Sirdarship and gave it to Azad Khan, father of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee. He also took away the friendship from Alyar Khan, Lehree, and granted it to Mahomed Khan, Lehree. The facts in regard to the statement of the insurgents, that their 40 or 50 relations obtained service under the Khan, are, that their cousins by the mother side are still servants of his Highness the Khan. If any of the insurgents became disloyal he was dismissed and his relation appointed in his place. For instance, Sirdar Meer Mahomed Mingul was appointed in place of Noordeen Mingul; Shahdad Khan Bungoolzye after Khan Khoord. Nawab Khan Dinarzye, Shirbut Khan Syudzye, and other notables of each tribe, who have proved loyal, are yet in the service. The ruler only has power to appoint servants, and those who appear faithful are appointed. This is the rule of public service among us.

His Highness the Khan considers the British Government in the light of kings of past ages, and I may say more than that. The Sarawans are in every respect in the wrong. It is hoped that the best arrangements will be made by the English Sircar; there is no difference between the two Governments. The Commissioner in Sind is fully acquainted with all the affairs, and knows that the evil results of the disturbances caused by the Sarawans have shown themselves on the people, and affected their safety and the peace of the country.

PETITION of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, Chief of Sarawan, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 15th March 1872.

You are aware of my rights and those of my clansmen, as they were mentioned to you personally by me. The Sirdars and Ooloos* have experienced troubles and harassments during the reign of the present Khan only. The following will give the details. About ten years ago the Khan married the daughter of a Jalawan Sirdar, Taj Mahomed Khan. All the Sirdars of Kohistan were present at the time at Gundava; all the Sirdars, young and old, hoped that this marriage would result in the good management of the country for the future.

* Clansmen.

Afterwards the Khan, contrary to the doctrines of the Mahomedan religion, and without the consent of the Sirdars, had this marriage dissolved and married Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan's sister. This gave rise to our troubles, inasmuch as about two or three years after Shere Dil Khan created a disturbance and ejected the present Khan from his throne. His Highness Khodadad Khan sat again on the throne of Khelat after one year's interval, and having been advised by me took back to his bed Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan's daughter, from whom he had been separated for a time. This, however, happened after the death of the same Sirdar's sister. I hoped that this would establish peace in the country and among the clansmen, but the Khan's enmity towards me and Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan by this time became so great as to make him take the following steps:—(1) viz., to cause the latter to be imprisoned and to try to apprehend me. Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan died while in the custody of the Khan's regiment, and the general belief was that he was foully murdered, for he went to his bed the previous night quite healthy, and was found dead the next morning; and, secondly, that the man who always attended on him was that night sent to Meer Hybut Khan, who was imprisoned in a separate place. The Khan took possession of the whole of this Sirdar's state, leaving some portion of land in the hands of the deceased's mother. The Khan called the Sirdar's mother to Khelat at first, but did not take care of her afterwards. She was again called by him to Khelat (where she still is) on the occasion of the fight at Khunuck. About one or two years ago the Khan appointed his son (who since died) to be Sirdar of Jalawan. This was contrary to the old usage.

There was nothing contrary to custom in the Khan marrying his brother's widow, the sister of Taj Mahomed, nether was the Sirdars' consent necessary. The marriage with the daughter had not taken place, therefore had not to be dissolved. The betrothal had, and breaking this off was an affront, but purely a personal one. The Khan did marry the daughter afterwards in 1864 after the death of the sister.

Taj Mahomed was imprisoned for twice conspiring to take the Khan's life. No steps were taken to apprehend Moolla Mahomed. He fled.

This suspicion was shown at the time by Sir H. Green to be incorrect, and is now distinctly denied by the Shahgassee.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

The whole was given to the deceased's mother, who has them still, and is well esteemed by the Khan.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

Reasons for this given by the Wuzeer.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

I was at Mittree when Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan was apprehended and could not, therefore, help leaving for Candahar, having heard that a force was also sent by the Khan for my arrest. On this occasion the Khan confiscated all my states situated in Shawl, Moostung, Khunuck, and Mungachur, and apprehended my brother, Hybut Khan, who managed the estate. Great was the oppression and force that commenced to be practised on Hubbeeb Khan and Mahomed Khan, who were at this time in Khunuck, and also on the people and clansmen in the country. Intelligence of this state of affairs was sent by Hubbeeb Khan to Wudera Adam Khan, Bungulzye, Sirdar Alladina Khood, Mahomed Khan, Lehree, and Sirdar Jehangeer Khan, Lehree, in order that they may all jointly desert the country and proceed to the British authorities for obtaining redress of their grievances. It was arranged that I should come from Candahar and join them in their proposal. To carry out this intention the above-named assembled at Khunuck, but the Khan's force arrived that day and made an attack on them, killed Hubbeeb Khan and seven others. I then joined the Sirdars at Nunuck, and about one month thereafter the Shahgassee with his force met us at Tahkaree in the Bolan, attacked us, but was defeated.* At this time we ran short of our supply of ammunition, and, therefore, retired to the Murree Hills, but the Shahgassee's force on their way came to a place called Toonum Khoond Budozer, and carried away by plunder 200 camels, 4,000 sheep, 80 bullocks and cows, and all ornaments. On his arrival at Kirmab the Shahgassee called before him on urgent request Meer Khan, Lehree, and Jahnee Khan Khoord, on the understanding of concluding terms of peace with them and myself, but afterwards when they went to him he made them all prisoners. The Shahgassee then sent Jehangeer Khan, Lehree, and Janee Khan Khoord, together with five men in custody to Khelat, detained Meer Mahomed Khan, Lehree, with him for awhile, sending him afterwards to me at Mundai for terms of peace; this I refused on the ground that the Shahgassee had previously acted fraudulently in apprehending the above-named persons. Meer Mahomed Khan then returned to the Shahgassee, and was again put in prison by him, where he died about three months after. I then petitioned Colonel Green in 1868, when he sent for us in Jacobabad, but, without effecting any arrangement, ordered me to reside in Seebee. Colonel Green was afterwards succeeded by Colonel Phayre. In 1869 we all, including Jam Sirdar Noordeen, Sirdar Azaad Khan, and other Sirdars proceeded to Khelat, presented ourselves before Major Harrison in Baghwana, and related to him the whole circumstances of our case. At this interview I mentioned to Major Harrison the details of my property that had been confiscated on Taj Mahomed Khan's arrest to be as follows:—Mares, 100; camels and she camels, 600; and cows, 100. I also claimed the rents and profits of my estate, which were collected by the Khan for three years, as also blood-money for Sirdars Taj Mahomed Khan and Meer Hubbeeb Khan's deaths. Major Harrison desired us to dismiss our forces, to which we replied that we had not come for war, but to get arrangements made for the restoration of our rights, and we would naturally risk our lives by dispensing with the force we had; we then marched to Kupota, and afterwards, under instructions from Major Harrison, went to Khelat; the following day we obtained an interview with the Shahgassee in the Sahib's tent. We refused having any conversation with the Shahgassee, but Major Harrison wished us to speak to him before seeing the Khan. We all then went to the Khan and related to him all that had passed, beginning it from the time of Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan's death. We also craved that he should treat us as was done by his father, Meer Mehrab Khan. His Highness the Khan declined giving us the produce of our estates for the past three years, as also our new landed property, but consented to give us back all our ancestral estates, as well as our property. In our old estates a great deal of land is lying waste, and we depended for our maintenance mostly on new lands. I then proposed to the Khan to restore the confiscated estates of all the Sarawan Sirdars, the Jam's, and Sirdar Noordeen's lands in Baghwana, Azaad Khan's land in Punjgoor and Muskah, and Mahomed Hussainee's land in Bhach. These the Khan refused, and I then returned to Kupota to meet the rest of the Sirdars ; of course no terms were made with the Khan. Major Harrison then came to Kupota and advised us to return to our homes, promising that he would use his efforts soon to arrange matters and desiring us to wait for three months. All the Sirdars returned to their homes accordingly. I was, however, desirous of seeing the Political Superintendent, but being refused an interview I went to Seebee. At the time of the late Jam's case I was in the Murree Hills, and after that at Candahar. It is now about seven years since my ancestral lands had been attached by the Khan. I have four sons and a large family, and for this reason our maintenance is in a precarious state. Likewise my "Ooloos" and "Raj" are also very hard up. Some of the people of my "Ooloos" and Raj have gone to Candahar to earn their livelihood, others to Seebee, and a few to Sind and Bombay. I have already furnished you with details of my property, estate, and other hereditary possessions in Kutchee and Khorasan, and these have been confined to what was enjoyed by our ancestors and are widely and generally known to be so enjoyed. I have no sunnud of these estates, &c., as they have been held by my ancestors from Ahmedzye's time.

Colonel Phayre was instructed to act on Colonel Green's promise of mediation on behalf of Moolla Mahomed, and the latter was told to accompany or follow Captain Harrison, Political Agent, to Khelat, where intercession would be made with the Khan. But Moolla Mahomed disobeyed these instructions, went off to Beyla, and then advanced on Khelat, with the Jam and others, at the head of a large force. This was not the proper guise of a suppliant for restoration to favour.

Moolla Mahomed in rejecting the Khan's offer said he would go off to Colonel Phayre. That officer, however, had been ordered by me not to receive him after his disobedience in going to Beyla.

I have submitted this petition in my own behalf and in that of my whole "Ooloos" and "Raj." I leave to you to pass any decision you like, and the redress is in your hands. This 15th day of March 1872.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to Petition from Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, to the Commissioner in Sind.

IN reply to statement No. 1, I beg to state that the petitioner has not represented the truth, but has kept the promotion of his own ends in view. The facts are briefly told. When Meer Mahomed Nusseer Khan (on whom be mercy, &c.) bade adieu to this world, and Meer Khodadad Khan ascended the throne of Khelat, the wife of the former, and sister of Sirdar Taj Mahomed, became a widow. The Mahomedan religion and the custom prevailing in countries following the Islam faith permit a marriage with a deceased brother's wife (or sister-in-law) if parties agree. In those times Beebee Gunja of her own accord, and without the permission of his Highness previously obtained, entered into arrangements for his Highness being married to the daughter of Sirdar Taj Mahomed, and when she mentioned the subject to his Highness he gave a flat refusal, and said plainly that as it was impossible the widow of his predecessor would take herself any other husband, and as she was willing that he should marry her, the consent to the new match could not be given. The "nikah" (marriage) with the sister of Sirdar Taj Mahomed then took place according to the rites and ceremonies of the Mussulman religion, and when she died his Highness showed no inclination or wish to marry the daughter of the said Sirdar. Soon after disturbances and rebellion were created and set on foot by Shere Dil through the connivance of the Sarawans, who have always shown a turbulent disposition and been refractory. These were quelled, and after the death of Shere Dil, his Highness again sat on the throne of Khelat, and contracted a marriage with the daughter of Sirdar Taj Mahomed in accordance with the principles of Islam.

From the beginning of the sovereignty of his Highness to the present moment, no act of oppression or harassment has been permitted or sanctioned towards Moolla Mahomed, his brothers, and the Raj ; every one remained in the enjoyment of his possessions and hereditary estates as from years past. Owing to their rebellious habits, and a strong conviction that opposition to lawful authority did them good and was advantageous to them, they, in concert with each other, and in conjunction with Shere Khan, commander of the forces, who was their accomplice from the days of Shere Dil Khan, they resolved to put an end to the life of the present Khan, as they acted towards his predecessor (Shere Dil), and to raise his son to the throne. As they had obtained a large booty by the murder of Shere Dil Khan, they through avarice wanted to do the same towards their present sovereign to get possession of his property. They afterwards, with their well-matured designs of causing injury to his Highness, came with Shere Khan in the presence of the Khan, but I fortunately obtaining timely information, put his Highness on his guard, and as by the grace of the Almighty the Khan's forces were near at hand, the opponents failed to take advantage of our position and to put their base intentions into execution. They tried the same once or twice again, but met with discomfiture. Shere Khan was also refused assistance by the troops, who gave full information to the Khan, and reported that Shere Khan was in league with Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed. His Highness was, therefore, obliged to order the expatriation of Shere Khan, and allowed Moolla Mahomed to depart without receiving the slightest injury. Taj Mahomed remained behind with the object, perhaps, of accomplishing his end, and secretly sent persons to Jam Meer Khan and Noordeen with the message that if they joined him he would, on the pretext of visiting, enter his daughter's apartments and assassinate the Khan. Meer Khan and Noordeen were both at that time in prison and the person who visited them was seen by the guard. Although the latter was bribed (Rupees 60) to keep silence, report was made to Shukkur Khan* then, and the whole matter was laid before the Khan the following morning. When Meer Khan and Noordeen came to know that their secret was out, they also, in order to free themselves from blame, reported to the Khan that Taj Mahomed wanted to bring them into trouble. I then at daybreak, at the order of his Highness the Khan, told Sirdar Taj Mahomed to let me know whether he wished to fight or to become a prisoner. Finding himself unable to wage war, he chose the other alternative and begged quarter. He was imprisoned, and remained in confinement for about one and a half or two years. He fell sick frequently, and doctored himself; on the last occasion he was ill for 12 days, and at last expired at Khelat. Moolla Mahomed states in his petition that, after the death of Taj Mahomed, his Highness gave a portion of his estates to his mother and kept the remainder to himself. In reply, I beg to explain that all the property of the Sirdar was handed over to his mother, inasmuch as the Khuleefa Mirza, who acted as manager during the lifetime of Taj Mahomed, was allowed to have possession of the estate. His Highness the Khan did not touch his hereditary lands. When Mirza fell by the hands of the Zurukzyes and Mayee Hur Beebee, Taj Mahomed's mother was greatly harassed, his Highness sent for the latter to Khelat and took measures to ensure her happiness. The lady being fond of her daughter, the wife of his Highness, stops of her own free will at Khelat, and at times goes to her native place. She is now with the Khan.

* A Commandant in his Highness's army. (Signed) W. L. M.

The petitioner affirms that his Highness the Khan gave the Jalawan Sirdarship to his son, Sir. Khan Sahib is the master and ruler of his dominions, and the Prince cares very little for the Sirdarship. The particulars are that Taj Mahomed had neither a son, brother, or other near relative worthy of the honour, and, therefore, his Highness intended to place the turban of Sirdarship on the head of Kaisar Khan Raisanee, whose ancestors held the title. It afterwards descended to the Iltarzyes, who, when they rebelled, were deprived of it by the great Nusseer Khan, and it was granted to the forefathers of Taj Mahomed, who were loyal and well-wishers of the government. Three generations must have passed. As the last holder of the title, Taj Mahomed, left no heir, and the Sirkar wished to confer the same on Meer Kaisur Khan. His mother, Mayee Hur Beebee, interfered and entreated that, as with the title she would lose all the hereditary lands and other rights which the Sirdarship conferred, the turban of the title be granted to her son-in-law, the Khan's son, and the affairs of the "Ooloos" and hereditary estates be allowed to remain in her hands. These were complied with, and the lady presented khillut† to the young Khan, kept the estate in her hands, and managed the affairs of the "Ooloos" herself. By the decrees of Heaven the Prince died, and the lady still manages everything. She appointed Meer Abdool Kureem as her Khuleefa,‡ who was with the "Ooloos" present in battle to do service to his Highness under Moolla Mahomed Khan Vukeel. He is with me here at Jacobabad, and has always proved himself ready to render service.

‡ Manager.

In reply to complaint No. 2, I have to state that Taj Mahomed, through his base deeds and following the advice of Moolla Mahomed and his other companions, was imprisoned. His Highness knew full well what character Moolla Mahomed bore, for he figured in the rebellion set on foot by Shere Dil Khan at his, Taj Mahomed's, and his other companions' instigation, and which ended in his Highness' receiving wounds and being deprived of all his property, which was seized by these insurgents and converted to their own use. Moolla Mahomed then caused Meer Shere Dil Khan to be murdered and created fresh disturbances, especially the one above referred to in which he had Taj Mahomed, Shere Khan, and others as helpers. He still strains every nerve to raise rebellions and disturb the peace of the country. When Taj Mahomed was put in confinement, Moolla Mahomed fled from Mittree to Candahar; when he arrived at Moostung, his brother Meer Hybut was secured, and released as a matter of favour. The Sarawans had met with no ill treatment and had not been oppressed. All was at Moolla Mahomed's instigation, and a fresh rebellion having taken place, he was called from Candahar to take part in it. By the favour of the Almighty the insurgents, Moolla Mahomed, Mahomed Khan Wudera, and Jehangeer were defeated in all the battles and contests that took place. They had to flee, Moolla Mahomed and his companions to the hill Mundaie, and Mahomed Khan Jehangeer, and son of Alladina Khoord, to where their families had taken their abode, full particulars of which are laid before you in my replies to petitions from Dost Mahomed and Jehangeer Lehree. That when I was pursuing them, and two stages had only remained, they sent their females to intercede for them, when I informed them that in honour of the name of God I would grant protection to their families, and would not seize their property, provided they submitted and consented to be taken as prisoners to his Highness the Khan, and that if those terms were not agreed to I was ready to fight with them. I stopped two days at that stage, and, finding that they did not, make their appearance, proceed with my army to their place of retreat. I was one night at Kirmab and the next day near their abodes. The insurgents then seeing that they were quite unable to come to a combat with me, surrendered themselves as prisoners of war and besought protection. I then refrained from touching their families and their property. I beg reference to the details given by me in my replies to petitions from the Lehrees. These men, whose ancestors had been appointed noblemen, have made lying and prevarication their habit, and feel no shame at telling a tale misrepresenting matters. They show no improvement although they are in the presence and in the territory of such world-winning monarchs where nothing but the truth should be spoken. I have placed before you all the particulars about Sarawan in my replies. Now I come to the statement of the petitioner about his complaining to Colonel Green. When Colonel Green called both parties to Jacobabad I gave my unqualified consent to all the terms proposed by that officer through justice and welfare of either party, while the petitioner through doublemindedness disagreed and returned to Seebee. The petitioner next represents that he, in company with Meer Khan, and Noordeen, Azaad Khan, and others came to Bhagwana, and thence left for Kupota by order of Colonel Phayre and Major Harrison. When Moolla Mahomed with 5,000 men presented himself before his Highness, his Highness, at the wish of Major Harrison, sanctioned the restoration to him of all the estates he and his companions were in possession of from the time of the Great Nusseer Khan to that of Nusseer Khan the less, but Moolla Mahomed refused such offers and returned with his accomplices to Kupota. At this time also, his Highness, at the request of Major Harrison, abstained from opposing them, although the forces were very near and ready to fight at a distance of two miles. The British officer (Major Harrison) then permitted a truce for three months which was broken by Meer Khan, and Noordeen sending letters respecting fights and the assemblage of an army to Chakurjutak. These letters were, however, intercepted and sent to Major Harrison who had his camp then at Shawl or Moostung. Copies of these are still to be found on the records of his Highness. After this breach of the terms of the truce, I fought a battle with Meer Khan and Noordeen at Wudh and hills of Beyla, and, defeating them, put them to flight. This victory placed Beyla and Wudh in the possession of his Highness, and I need not enter into full details because you know all from beginning to end.

Were submitted to Government at the time, 1869.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

The petitioner next brings forward his complaint about horses, camels, and other property having been seized. Now, sir, you hold the scales of justice, and I would leave it to you to pass any judgment after any inquiry into this matter which you may deem necessary. All the arrangements are entrusted to you, and you have full authority to act. I would, therefore, beg you to be good enough to cause restitution to us of all the cattle, grain, and other property of the poor subjects that have been seized by these insurgents. The petitioner petitions about his hereditary and inam lands; all these lands that had been granted to his forefathers by the Ahmedzyes, and of which details are given in my first letter, have not been withheld from him. This is the 22nd Khan of the dynasty of the Ahmedzyes, while the present generation of these Sirdars must be the 10th or thereabouts. Their forefathers received grants from the Ahmedzye for their loyalty, and not that they had any lawful right. The province of Kutchee then came into possession of the Khans, Meer Mohbut, and Nusseer Khan the Great as blood-money for the murder of Meer Abdoollah Khan. These men, who have not a spark of truth in them, have misrepresented facts and made such statements as tend to promote their ends only.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Petition from Wudera Shadee Khan, Bungulzye, to the Address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated 16th March 1872.

You are well aware that we are the residents of Shawl, Moostung, Aspaljee, Kutchee, Bagh, and Mull. About five years ago Wudera Adam Khan, Bungulzye, went to Khelat to his Highness the Khan to make four representations.

1st.—That his Highness the Khan had imposed a fine of Rupees 14,000 on the Muzeranee Murrees, who were then the followers of the Wudera.

2nd.—That we had not received the yearly allowanee of Rupees 500.

3rd.—That the servants of his Highness the Khan had taken by force "ust pust" (lucerne grass) belonging to the Wudera.

4th.—That all the camels of the Bungulzye, who lived on the receipts of their hire, were being used by his Highness the Khan without a pie being received as hire.

These requests were duly made to his Highness the Khan, and they were not taken notice of. Wudera returned home, and all the Sirdars, after consultation, resolved to lay their case before the British Government. For this purpose the Sirdars started for Khunuck to get Hubbeeb Khan removed. They were, however, attacked by his Highness the Khan's troops, and Hubbeeb Khan was killed. This happened five years ago. We, Sirdars, viz., Sirdars Alladina Khoord, Jehangeer Khan, and others came to Narmack, and sent for Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, who was then at Candahar. Removing from thence we arrived at Nakas, and took up our abode on the borders of the hills towards Kutchee. The Shahgassee reached the Bolan viâ Narmack, and as we heard he was coming with his army to fight, we also prepared ourselves to meet him. He arrived from Beebee Nanee Kadir Buksh, Budozye, and Aral Khan and Bijarzye were carrying provisions for the Khan's troops from Dadur, and these we forcibly took and appropriated to our own use.

Naib Moolla Mahomed, who was Naib at Dadur, compelled them to pay a fine of Rupees 1,000. Last year when his Highness the Khan encamped at Moostung he permitted his animals (horses and camels) to feed on the lucerne crops raised on two "Karez Moorghee," belonging to Purdal Khan and Shere Mahomed, and two-half shubanahs of land purchased of a Hindoo. His Highness the Khan levied a camel-load of lucerne on each Shabanah a week, and in case of default Rupees 5 in cash. If any one failed to give the lucerne, or was unable to pay the money, he was used ill and beaten, and thus compelled to make payment. We had already paid to the servants of his Highness the Khan a tax of Rupees 140 a year on the above "Karez" for three years, and when his Highness arrived at Moostung last year he recovered the same tax again (or Rupees 420), thus making a double levy. We had a share in the water of Aspaljee, and we went to Shahdad Bungulzye to receive payment of our share, who complained to his Highness the Khan, and caused a sum of Rupees 500 to be exacted from us as fine through the Naib Abdool Rahman at Moostung. Our camels went to graze in our field, and the Naib inflicted on us a fine of Rupees 20. For those camels that we sent to Kurrachee, Kutchee, and Khelat on hire, we were required to pay Rupees $1\frac{1}{4}$ each in addition to the ordinary tax. During this battle the Khan's force took by force two mares, 12 camels, eight loads of tobacco, and one khurwar of wheat in Moostung. Last year 12 camels, of which two were loaded, one maund of munjeet* and Rupees 250 were imposed as fine, on the ground that I had enjoyed a daily allowance in the days of Shere Dil Khan. A few days before the battle Naib Shahajun recovered in Naree Rupees 100 on camels exclusive of the ordinary cess. We have not experienced such oppressive exactions, nor paid such exorbitant rates before. After the battle the forces of his Highness the Khan carried away as prize Rupees 4,000 in gold, leathern bags of the value of Rupees 500, 10 maunds of wool, four loads of almonds, and other personal property belonging to Syud Khan, Syudzye, in Moostung. Naib Abdool Rahman, of Moostung, deprived us of a mare and a horse of the value of Rupees 200. In Baigh Naib Shahajan despoiled us of nine camels and a quantity of wheat. The Khan's forces seized one mare, one horse of Shah Ali, Budozye, and the property of 20 houses, as also the property of Budo, Budozye, and the contents of five houses in Moostung. Last year, when his Highness the Khan was going from Khorassan to Kutchee, camels were forcibly taken by his Highness the Khan's servants for baggage without payment of hire or compensation for those killed. On their dismissal, strange to say, we had to give Rupees 50 as a fine. Lands belonging to Ahmed Khan and Moombarik Khan, Gumbranee, in Deh Moostung, were resumed by Naib Rahman Khan, and a fine of Rupees 500 levied, although the ordinary assessment had been paid regularly and without intermission about three years ago. Naib Abdool Rahman Khan levied a fine of Rupees 200 on water which was allowed for two watches in Karez belonging to Hajee, and in the same year a mare was taken from Sahib Khan, Gumbranee, without any payment. Yar Mahomed had a free grant of ten bunds of land in Deh Bukshee; these were resumed by his Highness two years ago, although the grant had been enjoyed from a long time. Yar Mahomed's niece, the wife of Moombarik Khan, Shawanee, was in the enjoyment of five "angushts*" of water, which were stopped by his Highness six years ago. The lady is with me, and Moombarik Khan with his Highness the Khan. About five years ago his Highness confiscated the village of Hubbeeb Khan, the town of Mittree, and Chundres, village in Norree, as also five bunds in the town of Mittree, which were obtained by me and Shukkur Khan as a free grant. The hereditary land of Aval Khan in Janoos, village in Deh Lehree, and 14 bunds were also resumed by his Highness, although Sunnuds for its free grant were produced and shown to him. About four years ago his Highness the Khan confiscated "Inam" 46 bunds in Deh Janoo belonging to Kadur Buksh, Budozye, and "Inam" land on Khanwah, belonging to Hizrat Khan, Shoraizye. Last year, when his Highness arrived in Moostung, he was given a baggage camel by Kadur Buksh, Budozye, which was returned, and a fine of Rupees 300 levied. Himat Khan, Budozye, was grazing his camel in Lehree, and was made to pay to the "Jai Nisheen†" of Lehree a fine of Rupees 120. In Moostung, Naib Abdool Rahman sent for camels to carry the baggage of his Highness the Khan, but as the camels were not near at hand a fine of Rupees 30 was imposed. Himat Khan had a Karez in Deh Moostung, which is well known in Pringabad as a hereditary grant, and although the assessment had been regularly paid, a fine of Rupees 100 was levied last year by Abdool Rahman Naib on the ground that he was living in Mull and cultivating the land of the Duranis. In the battle fought at Hajee, the following property of the Budozyes was plundered by the army of his Highness:—176 good camels, house furniture, 7 flocks of goats, horses, mares, and 24 khurwars of wheat. Kadur Chan, Denarzye, a servant of the Khan, who always remained in his service, purchased some waste land from Gholam Mahomed Shawanee in Deh Dadur, which he brought under cultivation and enjoyed. He possesses documents in regard to it. Three years ago Naib Wullee Mahomed commenced to appropriate the produce. He (Kadur Khan) had also purchased waste land from Futteh Ali Khan, and the produce of this land last year was carried away by the same Naib. The right to five "shabanahs" of water purchased in Deh Dadur, for which documents are forthcoming, were unlawfully resumed by his Highness last year. I had five shabanahs in Karez known by the name of "Haft Dohi," in Khanak Doori, in Khorassan. These had been in my possession from former times and were confiscated last year.

* The length of a finger.

† Assistant to Deputy.

In this battle 250 camels and 100 khurwars of wheat, 60 bullocks with their loads, 40 donkeys and other personal property were pillaged by his Highness the Khan's forces. I crave justice from the British Government; when such oppressive acts commenced to be perpetrated, and our Raj and ourselves were harassed, we had no alternative left but to wage war and turn rebels.

Whatever the particulars were have been detailed above, and we leave everything in the hands of the English Sircar.

TRANSLATION of a Reply from the Shahgassee to the Petition from Wudera Shadee Khan, Bungulzye, dated the 13th Mohurrum 1289.

Reply to complaint No. 1 about the petitioner's father going to his Highness the Khan with the following four requests, viz:—

1*st*.—That the Muzeranee Murrees who reside in the Nakas Hills were made to pay Rupees 14,000 as fine. You are a just and impartial officer as also of sound judgment, and I would beg you to be good enough to weigh well whether this statement could be true. If it be proved that it is not correct then it will be for consideration how far the other representations can be believed or relied on. The facts connected with this complaint are that there were blood-feuds between those Muzeranee Murrees and the Afghans, which were settled by Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Atta Mahomed Darogah. I am not aware how the settlement was made, nor what compensation was awarded. The assertion about the Rupees 14,000 is altogether incorrect, not a single "gaz" (pie) has been recovered by his Highness. These Muzeranees are not here, but if the petitioners are unable to produce them, I request I may obtain permission to do so, that the truth or falsehood of their representations may be fully established.

In regard to the second complaint, about the non-receipt of their allowances, I have to state that all the allowances enjoyed by them and their forefathers were continued to them while they remained loyal, but were discontinued when they became rebels. They affirm that they obtained an annual allowance of Rupees 500 during the sovereignty of his Highness Nusseer Khan the less, and were in receipt of the same for 15 or 16 years. The records of that Khan still exist, and if from them it can be established that they have drawn this amount of Rupees 500 for a single year, what they have advanced must then be taken to be true, but if the contrary is shown, their statements must be received with great caution. Whatever has been found on record in the Khan's Duftur has invariably been allowed to them.

In regard to the third complaint I have to state that nothing in excess of the "Zari Kulung" cess, and the established rates paid by the zemindars of Dehs, has been levied by the Khan.

In reference to the fourth complaint, I have to assert that what is stated has never occurred. Hire for camels used for baggage has always been, and is still, given as explained by me before; even if a person has been found guilty of an offence, he has not for that reason been deprived of his hire.

I come now to the statement of Kadur Buksh Budozye having been fined. The real circumstances are as follows: Disturbance and rebellion existed in the country and Kadur Buksh engaged with Naib Wullee Mahomed to carry all baggage and to be responsible for all damage that might be done while it remained in his charge. The Naib handed over some goods to him, and he, on the advice of these rebels, delivered over the same to them at the Bolan; hence he was made to make good the loss as he was bound to do by his engagement. The Naib must know the exact sum which was taken from him. I cannot say whether it was Rupees 1,000, as set forth by the petitioner.

As regards "Karez," I state that the levy of this cess is no more than that which was levied in olden times, and that is recovered through the chiefs and Wuderas of the Deh.

I have given full details of the battles which were fought, and the engagements that took place, in my replies to petitioners from other Sirdars. You know that it is needless for me to go over the same ground and give the same particulars over and over again if the same matters are brought forward by petitioners. For what is plain requires no detail. You are fully aware of what the truth is.

Reference is made by the petitioner to the fine recovered from him on complaint of Shahdad Bungulzye by the Naib Abdul Rahman. My explanation is that when Shahdad Syudzye, who is not connected with the Bungulzyes in their rebellious practices, made his complaint, he probably had his rights restored to him.

It is stated that fines were levied on the grazing of camels. In reply I beg to explain that these animals had trespassed into the fields of other persons, and the landowners required compensation for the damage to their crops, as is the rule everywhere.

I have already afforded explanation in respect to the alleged levy of Rupee 1-4 on each camel in my reply to petitions from the Lehrees, Khoords, and Mahomed Shahees. Briefly, no such fee has been authorised, but it is possible that some payment may have been made to jemadars for obtaining release of camels. The allegations in this respect are unfounded.

The petitioners complain of the plunder of their camels, horses, and other property. My answer is, that when they fled after the fight they took all their property and their families on their camels, and left only what they could not carry off, such as mills, woollen carpets, and things of small value, and these were seized by the Khan's troops.

The petitioners are wrong in affirming that the daily allowances granted by Shere Dil Khan were withheld by the present Khan, and that a fine was recovered in addition. No one has been harassed or laid under any exaction without fault.

I turn now to the assertion of the seizure of specie, guns, muskets, almonds, and wool belonging to Syud Khan Syudzye. I beg to state that Syud Khan was an accomplice of the rebels in the fight; how can he then have kept money in his house. I am not aware that the Syud possessed any such property, but this much I can say, that it was never seen by the Khan's troops, nor seized by them as booty. At the time of plunder some tobacco, wool, and almonds were discovered in his house, and these were seized by the troops. All about the money is false and nothing but exaggeration, as is the custom with these men, who convert "a fowl into an elephant." It is true that the horses and mares came into the possession of his Highness the Khan's servants.

Or, as they say, a toad into a cow.

Mention is made about the seizure of 19 camels at Bagh. Some animals came into the hands of the Naib after the battle, and were given to the merchants, whose property they were proved to be. I cannot state with certainty what the number was.

The next thing referred to is the plunder of articles and camels at the fight which took place at Hajee. The personal property of a Brahooee is generally a "guidan" (a large bag), which contains miscellaneous articles, woollen "nawads" (carpets), &c., and if such fell into the hands of the forces full information will be obtained from Nawab Mahomed Khan Vakeel and Shukkur Khan.

What is stated about the non-receipt of hire of camels, the death of the same, and levy of a fine, is all false.

The cess on lucerne cultivation has not been increased, and nothing in excess of the established tax has been levied.

The petitioners are incorrect in declaring that mares were forcibly taken by Naib Abdul Rahman without payment. A complaint was never made to his Highness the Khan on this head, but if it had been full inquiry would have been made. As the petitioners have never made a complaint they are not right in what they have affirmed.

No estate or "Inam" land has been unjustly confiscated. Whatever they had received from the time of his Highness Nusseer Khan the Great to that of his Highness Nusseer Khan the Less was continued to the petitioners until they turned rebellious and left the path of faithfulness.

The facts connected with the water allowed to the wife of Moombarik Khan are that the mother-in-law of the latter came to Dadur and complained to his Highness the Khan; that as her son-in-law had granted to her daughter the receipts on account of water tax hitherto enjoyed by him, the cultivators on demand refused to pay the usual sum. His Highness summoned the parties concerned, and during investigation it was elicited that Moombarik Khan had not made such a transfer in favour of his wife, who had, without the permission of her husband, gone to reside with her relations. His Highness the Khan, however, after taking further evidence, ordered water to be given her.

As regards the "Inam" lands of Hubbeeb and Janoo Abro in the town of Lehree, and of Shadee Khan and other Bungulzyes, those of the latter were converted into Government property because they refused all allegiance to the Khan, while the lands of the former were never touched, except in so far as it was proved that encroachments had been made on the lands of others.

The petitioners are incorrect in stating that the land and water fees belonging to Kadur Khan, Dinarzye, were confiscated by Naib Wullee Mahomed.

The facts relative to the complaint of fine imposed on Futteh Ali on account of cultivating lands belonging to the Dinarree Pathans are that Futteh Ali had by fraud contrived to include some lands of his Highness the Khan with those of the Afghans, and when this was exposed and proved he had doubtless to pay penalty.

The old rules and usages have not been set aside in respect to "Karez" and "Shabanah," and no cess has been levied but what was sanctioned by ancient rules.

The lands of Ali Khan, which were stated to have been seized by the Raisanees, were after taking evidence allowed to remain in his possession.

The complaints regarding the plunder of camels, horses, and bullocks are also wrong; some property may have been plundered, but most of the statements are false.

Petition of Jundoo Khan and Ten others to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 14th March 1872.

You are well aware that we are residents of Khorassan, Shawlkote, Moostung, Sorab, Kutchee, and the town of Hajee. By profession we are merchants, and deal in horses and mares for breeding purposes; we also keep camels for letting them on hire and carry on agricultural pursuit. We beg to state as follows in regard to the oppression which we have met with at the hands of the Khan:—That in our country, within the limits of Shawlkote and in Deh Sorah, 14 "Karez" and "Chukul" belong to us by inheritance, and they have always been in our hands. We also possess there seven "Karez" which we purchased from Kasee Zemindar, who, however, is answerable himself for the assessment payable on them. Last year Meer Khodadad Khan came to Shawlkote and forcibly caused all the lucerne grown on our "Karezes" to be given as fodder to his horses and camels without paying us a single pie for it. By this we suffered a great loss. He afterwards required us to show him our sunnuds, which we delivered to him accordingly. He refused to return these documents unless we paid him a fee of Rupees 22 and two domestic sheep for each "Karez." We had no alternative but to comply with his demand. The Khan declined to recognize the deed for one of the above "Karez," which we purchased and forcibly levied from Nusseeroo (one of the petitioners) Rupees 600 as the value thereof, giving him a new Sunnud and cancelling the previous sale. He likewise cancelled the Sunnud of Sattak Shawanee for his share in the same "Karez," and having recovered from him an additional sum of Rupees 300 gave him also a fresh Sunnud. One day some altercation about family affairs took place between Syud Khan and Abdool Wahak Shawanee, and the Khan who was at the time in Shawl sent for them both and fined each Rupees 60, unjustly and for no fault. Last year three donkeys, the property of some merchants, were stolen in Dadur; the Khan fined Azeem Khan Rupees 60 without any valid reason. The donkeys were eventually found with the Murrees, and brought before the Khan, and on this we demanded refund of our money, but were refused, while the Khan fined the Muzeranee Murrees, the real offenders, in whose possession the donkeys were found, a further sum of Rupees 50. On our return to Shawl the Naib of that place recovered from us an additional sum of Rupees 12 each for the same theft, without paying any attention to our explanation of the previous payment. Meer Karm Khan, nephew of his Highness the Khan, took away by force a horse belonging to Sirdar Jundoo Khan (a petitioner), and did not pay its value. When the Khan visited Moostung and Pirangabad he caused all the lucerne grown on our hereditary and purchased lands, which was ready to be reaped, to be unjustly and forcibly removed and given to his horses and cattle: no payment was made on this account. On his visit to Khadwaree, he levied by force and without any just cause a sum of Rupees 400 from th Shawanee inhabitants of the place. The Khan has deprived us since four years of hundred bunds and cochas* situated in the same Deh, which we inherited from our ancestors, and their produce is enjoyed by him. peated requests were made to the Khan by the late Moombarik Khan, who was k at the fight which took place at Moostung for the restoration of these, but they not acceded to. We enjoyed the right of levying a fee of annas eight on each camel- of merchandise that arrived at the Bolan, and this was collected through Sirdar A Kadur's own people. This fee was subsequently converted into a lump sun Rupees 800 a year to be defrayed by the Khan and reduced again to Rupees 400 a but last year it was brought down to the sum of Rupees 200 only, and notwithstan repeated applications by Moombarik Khan, Shawanee, no attention to our grievanc been paid by the Khan. Besides this the grandfather of Jundoo Khan (one of the tioners) had the privilege by Sunnud granted by the Great Khan (Nusseer K of recovering a fee of four annas for each camel-load, which was disallowed by Mehrab Khan and has not since been re-granted. We still hold the Sunnuds. I customary before that when conveyance was required by the Khan for his use or of his forces, to obtain camels from the Mugzee tribe in Kutchee. We were never in Khorassan to supply camels as we and our "Raj" let camels on hire to merc and thus sustained life. Now, however, the present Khan forcibly takes away our c without paying us any hire, and recovers a fine of Rupees 3½ from any person ref to give his camels. This year on the occasion of the Khan's returning to Khelat Moostung a sepoy of the Khan's force killed with the stock of a gun Fazyl Shawanee, who was with his camels for refusing to allow them to be taken away. blow at first fractured two of his ribs and eventually caused his death. On each hired from us by traders for carrying bales of wool a tax of Rupee 1-4 is lev addition to that recovered from the merchants themselves. During our journe Khorassan to Kutchee we carry with us a supply of grain for consumption, a required to pay a duty of Rupee 1 per camel—a thing which was never known time of the previous Khans, and a grievance which we never before had to complai

Moombarik Khan, Shawanee, Hasul Khanzye, having rendered himself li punishment for having illicit intercourse with the wife of Sirdar Abdul Kadur escaped to Sind, and all his estates were taken possession of by Moombarik K but they were seized by the present Khan when he ascended the throne, and he allowance to Moombarik Khan on his making appearance before him. Several were made to the Khan to surrender the offending party, as such a course was ju both by religion and the right of "Ooloos," but they were replied to in the nega On the contrary, the Khan received a bribe of Rupees 2,000 from the miscreant and went himself to the house of Abdul Kadur, and extorted forgiveness from him. Last year, about ten days before the engagement at Moostung, the Khan personally received a sum of Rupees 200 as an invitation fee from Sirdar Abdul Kadur Khan's wife, which act on his part brought shame on all the Shawanees Montaburs (respectables), and is such as was never committed by any of the Khan's predecessors. Such being the state of affairs, apart from the degradation and tyranny, disturbances commenced, and we became insurgents and took to fight. All our property and estates in Khorassan or in Kutchee have been plundered by the Khan's forces, and we are unable to describe them. We look to you for redress.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of the Reply of the Shahgassee to a Petition from Jundoo Khan, and other Shawanees, to the Commissioner in Sind.

The petitioners who have signed this petition for the Raj of the Shawanees are neither the chief men nor Sirdars of the Shawanees, as they represent themselves to be, and their statements are contrary to the truth. The chief Sirdar of this tribe is Abdul Kadur, who has proved himself to be loyal and faithful to the Khan. He is the true representative of "Ooloos" and "Raj," and is with his clan living with the Khan, who shows him great kindness and favour. What have these rebels to do with the interests of the Raj? This I have already mentioned to you at my personal interview. As regards the petitioners and their personal servants I can state that none of their estates or other property has been confiscated by his Highness the Khan, nor had they to suffer any loss.

In respect to their complaint about a horse I beg to explain that Meer Karm Khan, Ittarzye, nephew to his Highness the Khan, received this animal as a present from the Shawanees in consequence of the relationship and friendship he bore towards them. If they have received any other horse in return, Meer Karm Khan must know.

13th Mohurrum 1289.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Petition from Syud Khan Mahomed Shahee to the Address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated 12th March 1872.

I BEG to lay down before you the injuries I have received at the hands of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I have large possessions (land, water, "karez," and garden) in Dehs Moostung, Shawl, and Khanah, Mittree, and Mungachur. I have property in Kutchee also; some of these possessions have descended to me and been enjoyed in my family for seven generations past. Others have either been obtained by free grants from his Highness the Khan or by purchase. We Mahomedshahees have been from three or four generations dealers in horses, as well as breeders of these animals; we purchase horses in Herat and take them to Bombay, Bangalore, Madras, Nagpoor, and other countries for sale: our sole profession is to deal in horses as merchants. We cultivated only in our hereditary lands. We sometimes breed camels and hire them out for taking wool to Kurrachee and bringing dates from Punjgoor. The business of a merchant is thus carried on by us.

My first complaint is that some of my hereditary property has been unlawfully confiscated.

2. That as our land is purchased property, a tax is contrary to custom levied on "ust pust," (lucerne). Nothing remains for us, and we get no profit.

3. That we breed horses, and when they are ready for us they are taken by his Highness the Khan at less than half their price.

4. That a new rule has been enforced, requiring a cess of three rupees and eight annas to be paid every year for all baggage camels given on hire or kept at home. If a camel is sick no exemption is allowed.

5. That if his Highness the Khan hires one of our camels, he pays half or even less than the usual rate of hire.

6. That if any delay or default is made in the payment of the cess, the officers of his Highness ill-treat and beat us. This state of things was unknown until three years ago, and was the cause of disaffection among the people and among all of my "Ooloos" (clansmen.)

In regard No. 1.—The lands belonging to me that are confiscated are: (1) Shahwah Khassam; (2) A garden in Deh Moostung. The word Shahwah means the right of water for irrigational purposes for one day and night. I had come into the possession of this Shahwah by a free grant made by the Great Nusseer Khan and have been unlawfully deprived of it by his Highness Khodadad Khan. One month before this disturbance took place a "Cocha" (preserve), situate between Mungachur and Gordeal, known by the name of Khandai Dusht, and which was my hereditary property for seven generations past, was converted into Government property. I had besides a fourth share in Deh Bubbur, which I got by free grant. This too has been taken from me since four or five years. I had also a right to 12 "bitts" of water, which have been similarly confiscated. Mungachur is my hereditary property, and a portion of it belongs to the Raisanees; a tax was never before imposed by Government on this land, but now his Highness the Khan has forcibly appropriated lucerne and crops for the use of his camels.

Lall Khan Mahomed Shahee is a merchant and a resident of Moostung. This year, when his Highness the Khan arrived in Moostung, one of his servants came to Lall Khan, and told him that as he was very wealthy he should pay Rupees 1,000 to his Highness the Khan. Lall Khan was compelled to hand over Rupees 374, and it was soon after that these disturbances happened.

Alladinna Mahomed Shahee, resident of Moostung, is a merchant. He has a Shahanah in "Karez Notewallah," obtained by purchase, and has a Sunnud of Nusseer Khan. Rupees 400 were exacted from him by his Highness the Khan, and the reason assigned for this exaction was that he had enjoyed all the produce for several years without making any payment. The Sunnud was cancelled and the "Karez" resumed some 12 months ago.

Buddul Khan Mahomed Shahee was without lawful reason obliged to pay Rupees 73 [illegible] horse. Two camel-loads of wool have also been taken from a Hindoo.

In regard to complaint No. 2.—From the first the "Zari Kulung" cess fixed on the cultivation of lucerne in a Shahanah was Rupee 1-4-0 per annum as "Zari," and $1\frac{1}{2}$ maunds of barley as "Kulung" A proportionate decrease maunds of wheat, and [illegible]rding to the water received. Since three years his Highness was made in the tax acco[illegible]levy lucerne in addition to the "Zari" cess of Rupee 1-4-0. the Khan has commenced to [illegible]ted for six months. The crop of each "Shahwah" is In each year the lucerne is cultiva reaped once a month. His Highness takes a camel-load of lucerne every month on each Shahanah. If any default is made herein the officers and collectors of his Highness recover by force Rupees 5 instead. If any delay is found to have been made in the payment, force is used and hurt caused. The former Khans kept cattle (horses and camels, &c.) in proportion to their use and necessity, while the present keeps herds of them for breeding purposes, and to be fattened on the hard-earned lucerne of the cultivators. Whatever lucerne remains fails to suffice for our animals; we have to suffer great loss by such exactions. The Kulung cess is rightly levied. The following is a list of the lands on which lucerne cess is recovered in excess of what was done before:—

10	Shahanahs of Behramshahee in Moostung, obtained by purchase.
$\frac{1}{2}$	Shahanah Khassam, obtained by purchase.

When such acts of violence as shown above were committed and such a pressure was put on me, I was obliged to class myself among the disaffected. In the battle that was fought, 130 horses in Deh Mungachur and Moostung were seized, and the property carried away and taken by the servants of his Highness the Khan. I cannot enter into details of all the property thus sacked. 300 khurwars of grain, 120 sheep, and 10 flocks were forcibly taken possession of in Bagh; 20 mares were lost in the battle. The village was wholly ruined. Houses were thrown down, and the timber even was not left. If such violence had not been used, all this loss would not have been sustained by us.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to Petition made by Syud Khan Mahomed Shahee, dated 9th Mohurrum 1289.

Reply to complaint No. 1.—His Highness has never acted unlawfully towards them, nor has he confiscated a piece even of their hereditary land. Whatever the petitioner has stated shows that he has had only the promotion of his ends in view.

Reply to No. 2.—He is not right in stating that his Highness the Khan recovers a large quantity of lucerne as tax on lands, the possession of which he, the petitioner, obtained by purchase. The facts are that these lands have been tax-paying for many years, and when they were transferred to Syud Khan, the right of assessment, which existed before the assignment, was continued, and Syud Khan was asked to pay only what was due and not a farthing more.

Reply to No. 3.—His Highness the Khan very seldom purchased horses from these men. If by chance any purchase was made the seller must have received the price fixed by an arbitrator. For instance his Highness the Khan bought horses from the son of Mars Sing, and paid more than the amount settled by a third party.

Reply to No. 4.—The real circumstances about the levy of a fee of Rupees 3-4-0 on each camel given on hire complained of by the petitioner are as follows:—If any person takes to the profession of letting out camels on hire, he is obliged to place some of his camels at the disposal of his Highness for the carriage of his Highness' baggage on payment of the usual rate of hire, and the rest he can dispose of as he likes to private merchants. It is probable that some money may have been given to the Jemadar for the release of camels, but no such order as mentioned has ever been issued by his Highness the Khan; all that is urged is untrue.

Reply to No. 5.—According to former custom all camels that are made use of by his Highness the Khan are paid for at the usual rate.

Reply to No. 6.—The recovery of the cess of Zari Kulung* bearing "Karez" is made through the Zemindar of the Deh, and through him is credited to Government. How then could the servants of the Khan beat and illtreat the cultivators. The servants of his Highness have, in never a single instance, caused annoyance and vexation to the cultivators; such being the case none of the Raj and Ooloos† are discontented. except these persons who have become disaffected through their misdeeds, Syud Khan states that his Shahanah of water in Moostung and one-fourth share in Kurriah Babbairwallah have been converted into Government property. The truth is that he was possessed of none in Dadur, and therefore he was dispossessed of that which did not belong to him. This has already been explained in reply to his statement to you.

* Name of cess.

His Highness the Khan did not resume as stated 12 bitts of water in Dadur. They did not belong to the petitioner. I mentioned this when replying to his former statement to you.

Lands in Mungachur are cultivated by cultivators of the tribe, Lanku, subjects of his Highness the Khan. A tax has been fixed on their lands from years past. If this man purchased these lands, he made himself responsible for that for which the Lankus were responsible. The servants of his Highness the Khan may have levied some grass according to custom.

In regard to Lall Khan Mahomedshahee, and Alladinna Mahomedshahee, I have already laid before you the facts in reply to his statement and by reference to them.

Some of the rebels had horses in partnership with Dadul Khan. One of these horses so shared was sold, and his Highness the Khan took some of the purchase money on account of the co-sharer who was in rebellion; a mare and a foal also remained, which were jointly shared; the mare is with Badal Khan, and the foal was taken by his Highness the Khan. Whatever the petitioner states about two loads of wool is contrary to real facts.

The cess of Zari Kulung levied on "Karez" of Moostung, Saire, and Shawlkote, &c., remains the same as before, no increase having been made in it.

The petitioner affirms that his Highness the Khan has a large number of camels, horses, and other animals, and that the quantity of "list pust," dried lucerne, expended on their feed is very large, and if any delay or failure is brought home to any person he is maltreated by the servants of his Highness. In explanation I beg to state that the former Ahmedzyes also kept a large number of animals. Sometimes the number of animals is greater and sometimes less. Lucerne on "Karez" is levied according to former custom through the Zemindar of the Deh, who recovers from the cultivators, and the servants of his Highness the Khan do not interfere. This is the duty of the Zemindar or headman of the Deh, who recovers according to long-established usage. The petitioner adds that the "Kulung" cess is properly recovered, but that the "Karez" mentioned by him have unjustly to pay list pust* in addition. The latter statement is completely wrong. When Kulung is rightly levied, ust pust† is also recovered as settled in olden time. His Highness the Khan has not taken from a single Zemindar anything in excess of ancient custom.

* Lucerne.
† Do.

The petitioner declares that when he turned rebel all his property, cattle, and other movables were plundered. My reply to this is, that when the petitioner and others became disloyal, they carried away all the property they could, leaving only unoccupied houses and huts, containing heavy things of trifling value, such as charpoys, timber, &c. As they renounced allegiance to his Highness the Khan, and classed themselves with the rebels, the property they left, which they could not carry off, was taken possession of by the forces of his Highness the Khan.

The petitioner complains of grain and flocks of sheep having been carried away by the forces of his Highness, and of 20 mares having been lost in the flight. This is met by the following. These rebels who know nothing but breach of promises and agreements and injury to the public entered into an agreement with the Vakeel of the Khan, Nawab Mahomed Khan, in "Kurriah Shere Khan," and at the same time directed their followers at night to continue acts of violence and disturb the peace of the country. In two or three days they caused much annoyance to the people of Kutchee. Then by order of the Vakeel some of the sheep and camels that had been carried away by the rebels were taken back by the army of his Highness the Khan; the exact number is known to the Nawab Moolla Mahomed Khan and Shukkur Khan.

The petitioner's next complaint is about 20 mares. These were not forcibly taken away by any one from his house. The facts are that as the Sarawans were defeated in the battle fought at Kunbi they took to flight, and 18 or 20 of their mares came into the hands of his Highness the Khan's troops.

Lastly, in regard to the statement of 12 bitts of water in Dadur, I beg to state that these Mahomedshahees have not had any grant of land or water in Dadur from ages past up to the present time, excepting those of water that they obtained by deception lately, and of which particulars have been given by me in my reply to their statement made before you.

TRANSLATION of a Petition from Sirdar Dost Mahomed, Lehree, to the Address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated 13th March 1872.

You are aware that the tribe Lehree live in Narmack, which is at a distance of 40 miles from Moostung. It is customary with us to go to Kutchee to graze our cattle on "Nar" (stubble) in the cold season. This "Nar" was given to all Brahooees for the above purpose in Mohbut Khan's time. Five years ago we went to Kutchee to graze our cattle in the cold season, when my father, Sirdar Jehangeer Khan, was in the service of the Khan of Khelat. At that time Abdool Rahman was the Naib at Bagh. He said that he would charge us grazing fees and would not allow us free grazing, as was the practice before. My grandfather Meer Mahomed Khan then told him that we had been using the "Nar" since the possession of Kutchee, and had never paid any fees. On this my grandfather wrote all the particulars to my father, Jehangeer Khan, who informed him in reply that he had applied to the Khan, but to no purpose, and we were obliged to pay him for grazing our cattle. After the expiration of ten days ten persons of Abdool Rahman came and killed twenty sheep and carried them away. The Lehrees who grazed the cattle told them that they had to pay double tax, viz., sheep as well as grazing fees. The Sowars of the Naib plundered the two houses of the Lehrees that stood near Nusseerabad, on which occasion the owners gave a good beating to the Sowars with their clubs and killed one of their horses. When we went to Narmack my father, Jehangeer Khan, was there. He said that he was at Khelat for six months and was not paid regularly his daily allowances by the Khan. Having assembled together we all went to Wudera Adam Khan, Bungulzye, with the object of going in company with him to represent our circumstances to his Highness the Khan. At that time there was some dispute between Alladinna and Aftar Khan, who had come to Wudera Adam Khan. Afterwards Wudera Adam Khan, Hubbeeb Khan, Raisanee, Dost Mahomed Wullud, Sirdar Alladina Khoord, and Ariff Khan, my uncle, went to make petition to the Khan who did not comply with Ariff Khan's request. Ariff Khan then came home and proposed to remove to Sind and apply to the English Government. For the purpose of enabling Hubbeeb Khan to remove to Sind all the Sirdars went to Khunuck, when the Khan's men made an attack on them and killed Hubbeeb Khan. Afterwards the Sirdars came to us at Narmack and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, after five days came from Candahar. After consultation we sent to the officers of the English Government with our messenger an application which was intercepted by the Khan's men at the town of Soombee, and the messenger returned to us. We had done nothing beyond emigrating to the Hill Nakoo. At that time the Shahgassee came to Narmack with his troops and set fire to our town. Several thousands of khurwars of grain, which we had deposited in the ground, were taken by them and also all the things in our houses. After this a fight took place between us, which resulted in the death of three or four men on both sides. Having left that place we came to Kaftari, where anothe fight took place, when on our side two Lehrees were killed and eight were wounded, and many of the Khan's troops were killed: all the Sirdars then went to the Murree Hills. My father and grandfather, who were at the village of Nakas, came. The next day, Shahgassee with his army went and plundered a village of the Rahilas and another of Jan Mahomed Lehree, who dealt in merchandize. Jan Mahomed Lehree was also killed. Wool, ghee, and other merchandize were plundered, together with ten flocks of sheep and a drove of camels. In another village 50 houses of the Budozyes were sacked. At that time Mahomed Khan Naib was at Bagh, where he forcibly seized 700 sheep belonging to the Lehrees. In this manner the Khan's troops carried away all that belonged to the Lehrees, which they could lay their hands on. The forces of the Shahgassee came then to Narain, and he abjured Meer Mahomed Khan, by the Koran to hasten into his presence, that he might arrange for all the Sirdars. Meer Mahomed Khan, my father, Jehangeer Khan, and Jami Khan wullud, Alladina Khan Khoord went and saluted him. They were immediately imprisoned and carried to Bagh. The Shahgassee came to Dadur, where he imprisoned Jehangeer Khan, Jami Khan, and others, and sent them to Khelat. The Shahgassee then sent my grandfather Meer Mahomed Khan to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who as well as others said that he would believe in none but the English Government. My grandfather, Mahomed Khan, then went back to the Shahgassee and acquainted him with this, on which he was again imprisoned. When they arrived at Bagh, my grandfather, Mahomed Khan, died. It is not known how or what he died of; his corpse was sent to Sunnie, and the Shahgassee ordered that the funeral ceremony should last for only three days. My uncle Muzar Khan was afterwards called to Bagh and told by the Shahgassee that he was going to Khelat to apply to the Khan to get him released, and that he (my uncle) should send for Summunder Khan, who was at Seebee, and let him remain in Narmack. My uncle Summunder Khan, who was with Moolla Mahomed at Khunuck, came to Narmack. When the Shahgassee reached Khelat he called my father Jehangeer Khan and informed him that his release by the Khan was contingent on his handing over to him the gun, sword, and camel that were given to Summunder Khan by Shere Dil Khan. These conditions were soon fulfilled by sending one of the Shahgassee's men and a Lehree to Summunder Khan at Narmack and getting the above-mentioned things. Notwithstanding this, my father, Jehangeer Khan, was not set at liberty. My uncle, Summunder Khan, sent Shere Dil on behalf of Mahomed Khan Lehree to the Shahgassee, with a message that his father, Meer Mahomed Khan, was dead, and that if his brother, Sirdar Jehangeer Khan who had been now one year in prison, was not released, we would all remove to the hills and fight. On this the Shahgassee evinced great liberality, and obtained the consent of the Khan to the release of Jehangeer Khan and to make over to us all our lands. Having enjoyed the possession of our lands and remained in the Khan's service for two years, we were again deprived of all our lands in Kutchee, when the Khan came to Gundava last year. On this my father, Jehangeer Khan, went to the Khan and asked him the reason of our being deprived of lands. But the Khan gave no reason, and said that he would not restore our lands. Jehangeer Khan then returned home. Gholam Mahomed Lehree had purchased some tracts of land at Shoran in the early days of the reign of Meer Nusseer Khan the Less. Last year the Khan ordered a sum of Rupees 1,345 to be exacted from Gholam Mahomed. His lands were also confiscated. On this, my uncle, Moorad Khan Lehree, went to petition the Shahgassee in the matter, but the Khan refused his petition. Meer Syud Khan Iltazye had obtained the town of Machee, on the borders of Shorejee, as a grant, and this he mortgaged with Hayar Khan for Rupees 2,300 and Rupees 1,000 cash received. When the Khan came to Gundava he ordered Hayat Khan to bring his Sunnuds and clear his account with Meer Karam Khan wullud Meer Syud Khan. He did so and went to Gundava, where the Khan ordered him to proceed to Khotrah, there to adjust accounts with Meer Karam Khan and Beebee Fatiha Khatoon. Accordingly Hayat Khan went to Khotrah and kept his bag containing his Sunnuds in Dawai Hindoo's shop. Soon after Ittbar Khan, servant of the Beebee, came to the shop, and during the absence of Hayat Khan, who was busy eating his dinner, took by force the Sunnuds from the bag and gave them to the Beebee. The son of the shopkeeper thereupon intimated to Hayat Khan what had happened, who proceeded to Ittbar Khan's house, but found the door closed. This compelled Hayat Khan to call in the aid of a Lehree Commander of the Artillery at Gundava to accompany him to Ittbar Khan and to ask for the Sunnuds. A demand was made but in vain. Hayat Khan then came to my father, Jehangeer Khan, and acquainted him with all that occurred at Sunnie. When the Khan arrived at Bagh, my father, Jehangeer Khan, in company with Hayat Khan, went and complained to him, but received no favourable answer. Hayat Khan is in a sad plight, deprived of Sunnuds, deprived of lands which were in his possession, and without any profession and unable to obtain justice. After this last year, when the Khan came to Dadur, Balach Khan Lehree, whose land had been purchased by Moombarik Khan Shawanee from Hassool Khan, and which had been confiscated by the Khan, applied to the Khan for its restoration but in vain. Balach Khan had a good mare, which the Khan demanded from him, and which he did not part with, and the result of this refusal was that Balach Khan was arrested and imprisoned for three months, but was released before the fight took place at Moostung on paying Rupees 500 in cash, and five camels. Balach Khan was wounded in that fight and proceeded to Peringabad, and when he was better the Khan ordered him to be blown away from a gun, and took a foal belonginig to him and plundered the property of five or six houses belonging to the Lehree at that place.

The particulars of Bahadoor Khan, Lehree, are as follows :—In the reign of Shere Dil Khan there was a fight between the Pundranees and the Lehrees, in which two men of the Lehrees were killed. In the time of Meer Khodadad Khan (the present Khan), a man of the Lehree tribe was murdered, a man of the Pundranees was a servant to the Khan, and Bahar Khan, Lehree, being then also in the service of the Khan, requested that as the Pundranees had killed three of the Lehrees, inquiries should be made into the matter, and justice done to the parties concerned, but without avail. The Pundarees after that took leave of the Khan and went to Tombo. His Highness was then at Bagh, near a place called Mahlianee; a dispute occurred between one of the Pundranees and Bahar Khan, where the former abused and insulted the latter, and asked why a complaint had been made to the Khan, and said that if they had any manliness they should fight it out. This incensed Bahar Khan, who aimed a blow with his sword at the Pundranee, and the latter, leaving his camel, a sword, and two pistols, threw himself into the water. Thereupon Bahar Khan took these things and made them over to the Naib of Tombo, telling him at the same time how he had come in possession of them. The Pundrance went and complained to the Khan, while Bahar Khan proceeded to Sind. My father, Jehangeer Khan, told the Khan that Bahar Khan, who had been abused by the Pundrance without cause, was not in fault, and that on a former occasion three Lehrees had met with death at the hands of the Pundranees. That Bahar Khan was in Sind, and when he returned he would be brought to the Khan; on this the Khan pardoned him. Afterwards, my father, Jehangeer Khan, called Bahar Khan from Sind, and told him of his having been forgiven by the Khan. Bahar Khan then removed to Narmack, and the Khan sent six men to my father, Jehangeer Khan, at Shawl, and told him that he might set his mind at rest and send Bahar Khan to his presence. In conformity with these orders Bahar Khan was sent to the Khan, who was at Khunuck. The Mustee Khan, Chobdar, after having abused him, took away by force his sword. Bahar Khan remonstrated with him and told him that as he had been forgiven he ought not to be treated in that manner. Bahar Khan was then informed by one of his intimate friends that he was to be killed by the Khan, whereupon snatching Mustee Khan's sword he wounded him and three others, the consequence of which was that he was blown from mouth of a gun by order of the Khan.

One or two years ago when the Khan was at Khelat, Kharam Khan, Lehrce, finding Khan Mahomed Khan, Lehree, having illicit intercourse with his wife, gave both a fatal blow with his sword according to the dictates of the Mahomedan religion. The murderer was immediately arrested. Sirdar Jehangeer Khan besought the Khan to pardon Kharam Khan on the ground that he had done the deed to save himself from shame, but the Khan refused, but afterwards released him on payment of a fine of Rupees 500. At that time the Naib Shahajan, who was at Bagh, took from Chundram, Lehree, a camel and Rupees 120 because he suspected him having stolen a merchant's camel. After eight or ten days the missing camel was found in some other quarter, and on this Chundram asked the Naib for his money and his camel on the ground of the merchant's camel having been found with another person, but in vain.

Last year, when the Khan was at Shawl, he ordered all the lands belonging to the Lehrees to be confiscated, and with them the "Inam" land, which was purchased by Kootab Khan, Lehree, from Syud Mahomed Ameen, the yearly produce of which was Rupees 1,000. On this Kaiser Khan wullud Kootab Khan requested the Khan to give him back the land, saying that the same had been purchased from Syud Mahomed Ameen, but the Khan told them to go and recover the purchase money from Syud Mahomed Ameen, inhabitant of Karanee. Afterwards Kaiser Khan brought Suyd Mahomed Ameen to the Khan, who did not give a favourable reply to either of them. When Nawab Khan, Lehree, inhabitant of Shawlkote, who is not present here, comes, I shall make a written application in his case. After this the Khan arrived in Moostung in August 1871, but prior to that Abdool Rahman, Dehwar, the Naib of Moostung, had taken Rupees 300 from Kadur Buksh wullud Chundram, in consequence of there being a quarrel between them. When the Khan arrived at Moostung he confiscated the "Karez" of Safur Khan, Lehree, which had been given to him as a reward by Meer Nusseer Khan the Less, the Sunnud for which is in possession of Shahbaz Khan wullud Safar Khan. A "Karez" in Peringabad, belonging to Kaisur Khan, Lehree, which was given to him as a free grant by Meer Nusseer Khan the Less, had presented to Ali Lehree, a Shahanah as a reward for his services, the Sunnud for which is in his hands. This was also confiscated by the Khan, and a fine of Rupees 60 levied in addition.

Khumber wullud Rehmut had some land and water on a "Karez" called Kuncher. Rehmut Khan had obtained possession of this land by purchase from Jooma Dehwar, but the land originally was a free grant. The Naib of Moostung, Abdool Rahman, after confiscation of the property, recovered a fine of Rupees 300. A fight took place afterwards, in which Abd Ali Khan was killed.

Abd Ali, Lehree, is an uncle of Kasser Khan. He received 15 years ago by mortgage land and five "angusht" (the length of a finger) of a water belonging to Gholam Nubbee, Shawanee, for which he had to pay Rupees 1,600 to him. When the Khan arrived at Moostung he called on him to produce his Sunnuds, telling him at the same time that he would inquire into his case. This order was obeyed, and by command of the Khan Gholam Nubbee wullud Sooltan Mahomed destroyed all the Sunnuds belonging to Abd Ali, and cast them into water. Sooltan Mahomed, according to the instruction received from the Khan, also exacted a fine of Rupees 300.

Sooltan Mahomed has large possessions. Last year he went and took service under the Khan. His father, Gholam Nubbee, had mortgaged a great deal of his land in Khorassan and Kutchee, and his son, Gholam Nubbee, tries to obtain redemption through the influence of the Khan. He (Sooltan Mahomed) holds no high rank among the "Ooloos" and has no followers.

Toork Ali, Lehree, states that he was a servant to Shere Dil Khan, who was the Ruler at that time. Last year Abdool Rhaman, the Naib of Moostung, asked Toork Ali the reason of his taking service under Shere Dil Khan, and ordered him to pay Rupees 60 in return for enjoying the daily allowances which had been given to him.

The Lehree inhabitants of Moostung who act as carriers of wool and other articles of merchandise to Kurrachee and other places, represent that last year, when the Khan was at Moostung, they were informed that they would have to pay Rupee 1-4 for each camel going on hire to Kutchee and other places. This fee is quite new. It had no existence for seven generations past, and it is in addition to the road fee usually levied. This fee is fixed on camels belonging to Lehrees only. In this way oppression and annoyance have prevailed throughout the whole of Kutchee. When the Khan arrived at Khelat the whole of the people resolved to endeavour to put a stop to these oppressive practices. My father, Jehangeer Khan, was at Narmack, and learnt that the whole town of Moostung had been taken possession of, and that the "Jainisheen" (Assistant to Deputy) had run away to the house of Syud Rustom Shah. My uncle, Summunder Khan, was sent to Moostung. Information was received that the troops of the Khan were approaching. The Brahooees at once left, and making an attack on the Khan's troops at Khui Grooh put them to flight. The next day the Shahgassee came with his troops to Khud, which is at a distance of six miles from Moostung. Here my father, Jehangeer Khan, also arrived. The Khan's troops then went to "Karez Amanoolah," which place the Brahooees also reached. The two coming together an engagement took place at mid-day and lasted for four hours. My uncle, Summunder Khan, got close to the Shahgassee in company with 10 or 11 persons. Aftar Khan Khoord and Shurbut Khan, Syudzye, and others were present there. The Shahgassee received wounds at the hands of my father, and when my father was asked by Summunder Khan why he had not put an end to the Shahgassee's life, he said that the Shahgassee had asked for his life, and therefore he had not killed him. My uncle, Summunder Khan, told the Shahgassee that he considered him in the light of a father and offered him his horse to ride on, to which he received a reply that he (the Shahgassee) was not such as would ride his horse, and the Shahgassee told him to take back his troops. I accordingly did so. Afterwards there were with Shahgassee Shurbut Khan, Syudzye, Nawab Khan, Aftar Khan Khoord, and others, and 10 or 12 footmen. My father, Jehangeer Khan, was on horseback, with four or five men, with whom he was talking. As they approached the gun, they found that the Khan's troops had to all appearance stopped fighting and kept their arms on the ground. In obedience to the instructions of some one the gun was fired, which caused my father's horse to fall down on the ground. On this the footmen charged and my father was killed. Thereupon Abdool Rahman, the Naib, plundered all that was possessed by the Lehrees, and their houses were levelled to the ground and the timber taken away. Having stated all the circumstances to you I crave justice.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of the Reply of the Shahgassee to the Petition from Dost Mahomed, Lehree.

Reply to first complaint.—In regard to their taking cattle to graze on "Nur"* in the summer in Kutchee, and in the winter in Khorassan, the particulars are these. The said "Nur" is the property of the ryots. When the season of cultivation is over, and the cultivators obtain release, then, if rain falls, no one either of the ryots or the Brahooees is allowed to touch the "Nur" for fear he may cause damage, but if there is no fall of rain, permission to graze on the "Nur" is granted for 20 days. During the time that such permission is granted, the "Jainisheen"† levies a cess either in sheep or cash according to old established rules, and after the expiration of 20 days grazing on the "Nur" is stopped.

* Stubble.

† Assistant to Deputy.

The facts connected with the alleged plunder and slaughter of sheep, belonging to the Lehrees, by the sowars of Abdool Rahman at Bagh are these. The Lehrees had caused injury and damage to the crops of the cultivators, who came and lodged a complaint with the Naibs. Sowars were despatched to the Lehrees to stop these annoyances to the Khan's subjects, and to prevent wrong-doers from inflicting further wrongs on the poor cultivators. The sowars went and made known their mission; no attention was paid to their orders, and they were on the contrary attacked. In this attack two men and one horse of the Sowars were wounded, and the aggressors fled. The insurgents lost no property, and the Sowars returned. Jehangeer then came into the presence of his Highness the Khan and implored pardon for the offenders; his Highness ordered that the parties be produced before him, that full inquiry might be instituted. I was present on that occasion, and Jehangeer stated that the evil-doers had fled and would be brought into his presence on their return. This is the truth, while the petitioner has concealed the real facts.

Reply to complaint No. 2.—All that the petitioner states in regard to his father, Jehangeer Khan, receiving no daily allowance and batta when he was at the court of his Highness for six months is wholly false. During the whole time that Jehangeer Khan was at Khelat he was given all the allowances, both daily and other, that were usual, entry for which is still on the records of his Highness the Khan. He was also granted woollens and "posteen" on account of cold. He then took leave at his pleasure and went home. The petitioner further asserts that when Jehangeer Khan came home a consultation took place, and that all the Sarawans going to Wudera Adam Khan, it was there resolved that they should present themselves before his Highness the Khan and represent the state of affairs. This is also contrary to the real facts. The truth is that when Jehangeer reached his place of residence, the Sarawans, such as Mahomed Khan, Lehree, Alladina Khoord, and others (the Shawanees and Mahomedshahees are excepted), proceeded to the house of Wudera Adam Khan and determined to be rebellious and to create disturbances. On this their resolution coming to the ears of his Highness, Meer Nawab Khan, Dinarzye was sent to give them good advice, and to bring them to his Highness. Nawab Khan went and counselled the Wudera, Mahomed Khan, Hubbeeb Khan, Jehangeer Khan, and Alladina and their confederates. He then brought with him the said Wudera, Ariff, son of Mahomed Khan, the son of Alladina Khoord, and Hubbeeb Khan, and presented them to his Highness. The said Nawab is here with me, and knows full well of their seditious conversation. When they paid homage to his Highness they were told that information had been received of their rebellious resolves, which, if true, would go against them; that as their offences and acts of disloyalty in the days of Shere Dil Khan had been pardoned, they should go home and live in peace on their hereditary estates. Wudera then, taking an oath seven times on the Koran, declared his determination to abstain from acts of unfaithfulness, and his companions did the same. Hubbeeb Khan was given to understand that as he was a good man he should keep aloof from Mahomed Khan, and prove himself faithful in order to better his condition. Hubbeeb Khan promised improvement, and all were permitted to go home. As soon as they returned they commenced their old practices of rebellion and violence, as was their wont, and, making up their minds to plunder Moostung, collected an army at Espanjir, and were preparing to go to Moostung, when the Naibs and officers of his Highness the Khan's gave them battle, which resulted in the death of Hubbeeb Khan and his companions. This was the commencement of the disturbances, otherwise it had not originally been the intention of his Highness the Khan to thus ruin their family. After this Mahomed Khan, Wudera, and Alladina with their companions, assembling their followers at Narmack, declared their intention of making war. They had before the engagement, in which Hubbeeb Khan was killed, summoned from Candahar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, and they had thus, as stated in the petition, invited him during the days that peace reigned in the country, with no other object but of laying waste the country of Kutchee. Moolla Mahomed joined them five days after the above-mentioned fight. I would leave you to consider whether these rebels would have sent for Moolla Mahomed from Candahar had they not fostered base and evil designs in their bosoms long before the battle was fought. Most of their statements are false and contradictory. What may I write about them when everything is clear before you? As it happened, I was appointed by his Highness to take an army to oppose them. I obeyed the orders and fought the insurgents at the Narmack Hill, and defeated them. They fled, and, taking their families and relations, concealed them in the midst of the Hill Nakao, while they themselves took possession of Durro Cahandalum by the Bolan. I encamped at Narmack with my forces. There was grain at these places, perhaps a number of "khurwars," not in granaries, but according to the custom prevailing in Beloochistan, buried in the ground, which process of storing is called "Khuram." From some of these "Khurams" grain was taken by my troops and appropriated for food. Grass was also taken for cattle. I went in pursuit of the insurgents viâ the Bolan, and, reaching Durro Cahandalum, met the rebels in battle and was victorious. Moolla Mahomed, Adam Khan, Jehangeer, Alladina, and some Sarawans saved themselves by flight. Moolla Mahomed Khan

Khan and other Sarawans, by the aid of their swift horses, went and hid themselves in Koh Mundaie, while Mahomed Khan and Jehangeer were compelled to flee to their families in Koh Nahas. I did not give up pursuing the latter. At one stage some property of Jan Mahomed, Lehree, and of some of the Budozyes came into the hands of my troops. There were still two stages intervening when Mahomed Khan sent the females of his family to intercede for him. They came and implored pardon in the name of the all-glorious Almighty, at the same time stating that Mahomed and Jehangeer avowed loyalty and gave salutations. At this entreaty I replied that I would take Mahomed Khan and Jehangeer Khan as prisoners of war, but would allow their families and relations to go anywhere they liked without molesting them or seizing their property, adding also that I was ready to fight if they wished. The ladies returned, and I waited for two days. Seeing that they did not make their appearance I mounted my horse, and accompanied by my forces went to punish them in the place they had posted themselves. As soon as I arrived Mahomed Khan and Jehangeer, surrendering themselves, asked protection. I made them prisoners, and abstained from touching either their families or their property. After this I proceeded to Bagh, and started, vid Dadur, in pursuit of Moolla Mahomed and all his companions, Mahomed Khan and Jehangeer being all this time with me as prisoners. When I entered Mittree Mahomed Khan fell ill, for which reason I set him at liberty and permitted him to go where he liked. After some time Mahomed Khan visited me, and admitted his having been the cause of sedition and disturbance, and declared his intention of making up for past offences by causing Moolla Mahomed and the Sarawans to surrender. I gave him leave, and permitted him to go mounted on horseback. He failed to bring Moolla Mahomed and the Raisanees, and returned. As it was brought to my notice that he was engaged in giving money to my troops and sowing the seeds of sedition, I informed him that as he was employed in creating disturbances, and wherever he went he caused men to rebel, he should be imprisoned. He was again made a prisoner, and I then left in pursuit of Moolla Mahomed for the Mundaie Hills. I marched with my forces night after night, and arrived at Mundaie at sunrise, and there I found that Moolla Mahomed, having obtained intelligence of my movements from the Barozyes, had fled. At that time I sent from Dadur Jehangeer and Janee, the son of Alladina, to his Highness the Khan, while I brought Mahomed Khan with me to Bagh, and he there fell sick while he was in prison, and died a natural death by the will of God. When he was seriously ill and at the point of death, he made a will to the following effect:—1*st*, that his corpse should be carried to the town of Sunnee; 2*nd*, that his sons were to be taken care of; and 3*rd*, that his sons were to be told not to be disloyal. Accordingly, in conformity to his last words, his corpse was sent by me with all due honours, according to the Islam faith, to Sunnee; secondly, having requested his Highness, I caused Jehangeer Khan to be enlarged, and his Highness the Khan of his own kindness and pleasure, granted to him all the hereditary lands possessed by his father; and, thirdly, I informed Jehangeer of his father's wishes, viz., that he should follow the path of loyalty and faithfulness. He was dismissed with due honours. The sword and riding camel (originally Government property) that were with Summunder Khan from the days of Shere Dil were, on the return of Jehangeer to his abode, taken by him from Summunder and forwarded to the Khan. The flocks that had been carried away by order of Moolla Mahomed Khan, Vukeel, were returned to their owners at the request of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee. In addition to these some camels and things of small value may have been taken away by my troops, but all that the petitioners affirm is exaggeration. They allege that last year their inam lands in Kutchee were confiscated by his Highness without any just cause or valid reason. In reply I beg to state that when during the past year his Highness encamped at Gundava, the officers of the "Sirkar" reported that Jehangeer had, in addition to the 20 bunds and half produce of Shahdadwah that he possessed, taken possession of the remaining half share to * belonged to Government. On this Jehangeer Khan was summoned, and given to understand that he should hold possession of his 20 bunds and half produce according to Sunnuds, and Naib Sahibdad and other ministerial servants, respectable zemindars of those parts, were sent with him to give him land in Shahdad, in accordance with the terms of the grants. When the whole party reached the place Jehangeer refused to take land in accordance with his Sunnuds. There was no cultivation in those lands, and the matter rested for a while.

* Sic. in orig.

The petitioners have referred to the lands of Gholam Mahomed, Lehree, that had been purchased in Sorab. Their statements are incorrect, and the facts are that these lands were the property of Maie Tajee and the Rinds had purchased a portion of them. Gholam Mahomed obtained possession of them by violence and enjoyed the receipts for several years. Maie Tajee came and complained to his Highness of her hereditary lands having been violently seized, on which his Highness summoned both parties, in order that the case might be decided according to law and the rights restored to their owners. Gholam Mahomed, when he heard of this, went and concealed himself and forwarded Moorad Khan, son of Mahomed Khan, Lehree, to Wudera Imam Buksh, Rind, to mediate for him and screen him, on which Wudera sent Raza Mahomed and Dutto Rinds to his Highness the Khan, with a message that as he was the head of the Rinds he would get the rights of Maie Tajee restored to her, but that compensation for the intermediate profits could not be granted her. His Highness entrusted this business to Wudera Imam Buksh, and ordered that the rightful owners should receive their rights. After this Raza Mahomed and Dutto Rinds, and Moorah Khan, Lehree, were sent by the Wudera and they paid into the Government Treasury Rupees 1,000, although the produce enjoyed by Gholam Mahomed had been a great deal more.

Mention is made of the dealings with Hayat Khan, Lehree. The facts are that "Inam" lands of Meers Khuram Khan and Gowar Khan. Iltarzye, had been given into his charge, and he appointed a Naib. On examination of accounts it was found that he had misappropriated several sums of money. This breach of trust was brought home to him, but he was hard-pressed and denied the claims made against him, and left the question still open. He is wrong in accusing Ittbar Khan of making away with his Sunnuds. Reference is made by the petitioners to the confiscation of the lands of Balack, Lehree, and the circumstances connected with it are the following: The said Balack stole some camels at Khelat belonging to merchants from Candahar, and the offence of theft was, after some time, proved against him. He was on that account imprisoned by the Naib of Dadur, and the stolen property recovered from him, as also a fine. That which is stated about the mares is false. He was present in the battle at Moostung and, receiving wounds when on the side of the rebels, fled and concealed himself in a cultivator's house. He was, however, discovered, and having been arrested by the Naib of Moostung was, by order, put to death in consequence of his rebellious proceedings.

In regard to Bahar Khan, Lehree, I have to state that, in former days, the Lehrees and the Pundranees had feuds, and much blood was shed. The latter then removed to British territory and settled there. The servants of his Highness the Khan issued strict orders to the Lehrees to refrain from further bloodshed, because the murderers of their race were in Sind. Bahar Khan however, in defiance of such instructions, attacked some Pundranees at Kurriah Somba, and wanted to put his evil intentions of murdering his enemies into execution, when he was assailed by the servants of his Highness and took to flight. The Pundranees then came and complained to his Highness, who issued a mandate to Jehangeer Khan to search for Bahar Khan and send him into his presence to answer the charges preferred by the Pundranees. Bahar Khan was not at first caught, having fled into Sind, but when his Highness the Khan was in Khorassan he repeated his orders to Jehangeer Khan, who forwarded Bahar Khan in the custody of Chobdars. On the way the accused, finding the guard careless, seized the opportunity and, drawing from its sheath the sword of Masti Khan Chobdar, who was asleep, inflicted such wounds on his person as to make him almost lifeless. He wounded three more men (two of these are here) and was himself slaughtered by the Hakim * in consequence.

* Ruler.

In regard to the statement about Karam Khan, my reply is that they are not right in saying that Karam Khan killed Khan Mahomed for adultery with his wife. It is a well-established rule in Beloochistan that the person who kills another for having illicit intercourse with the females of his family goes unpunished. This man must have shed innocent blood and thereby has made himself liable to penalty.

In regard to Chundram, Lehree, I have to explain that three or four times the camels and camel-loads of Afghan merchants were stolen in Naree. As the persons mentioned by the petitioner were found to be the offenders, the stolen property was recovered from them (Chundram and grains) and handed over to Colonel Green for delivery to the merchants. Receipts of the merchants are in the possession of Mahomed Khan, Vakeel.

I come now to their complaint of the seizure of the lands of Kutib Khan, Lehree. The truth is that the brother of the late Syud was a debtor to his Highness and to others (such as Alyar, &c.) When the Syud died, the said Lehree took possession of his lands from his brothers on the ground of debts due to him. The creditors having preferred a complaint to his Highness, all the parties were called and, according to the provisions of Mahomedan law, the lands were taken possession of by the Sirkar and ordered to be handed over to the creditor, who would pay in all the debts.

The petitioners are right in declaring that Naib Abdool Rahman levied a fine from Kadir Buksh, Lehree, son of Chundram, for being guilty of criminal force, &c. This is sanctioned by long usage, that he who unlawfully causes a breach of the public peace should pay a fine in proportion to his offence.

I turn now to the complaint that the "Karez" of Shahbaz Khan has been made Government property. If this "Karez" has been confiscated, the order for its confiscation must have been passed in consequence of some offence having been committed. It would not have been detached without just grounds.

As regards the attachment of "Karez Kaissab Khan," granted by a Sunnud from Beebee Gunga, I will make inquiries from the servants of the Beebee. I am sure that there must be a valid reason for such an action.

In respect to the Shahanas of Ali, Lehree, and in Karez at Moostung, I have to state that the Karez and Shahanah pay "Zari Kullung," and when Ali was in the service of Meer Mahomed Nusseer Khan, he received the cess in lieu of service allowances. Now that he is no longer in service he is obliged to pay the "Zari Kullung" cess.

I now reply to the complaint of "Karez Kumber Lehree." The Karez in these lands have the cess Zari Kullung fixed on them. Whoever purchases land and Karez there has to be answerable for the Government tax, which is recovered from him. It may be that Kumber relinquished his possessions in consequence of his inability to pay the tax. No one has forcibly taken lands away from him. The sums of money referred to must have been levied on account of "Zari Kullung."

In respect to Abdullah, Lehree, it is stated that the Lehrees had purchased black-water* from Sultan Mahomed, Shawanee, and his Highness the Khan forcibly deprived them of it. Sultan Mahomed is a little man, and is not the sort of person to have a large number of followers. It may be that the Lehrees seized the property of Sultan Mahomed, who, having complained to his Highness the Khan, had his rights restored to him. No force has been used, and no one has illegally kept possession of his land and water.

* In the original "Panee Karro."

The statement that Turk Ali had to pay a fine for being in the service of Shere Dil requires confirmation. Many of the Brahooees held appointments, under Shere Dil, and not a single one was harassed for that reason.

Only those who gave up the path of faithfulness afterwards were punished and fined.

The facts connected with the levy of Rupee 1-4 on each camel are that persons who let camels on hire have to place some of their camels at the disposal of his Highness for the carriage of his baggage, for which they receive payment, and they can carry merchandize for merchants to Kutchee and other countries. It may be that those camel-men may have paid some thing to jemadars to free their camels, but the order for the levy of Rupee 1-4 on each camel has not been issued.

All these disturbances that have been created are due to the disloyalty of the petitioners. When they affirm that they have rebelled and took Moostung, they state an untruth. The circumstances connected with this are well known. If the rebels proved victorious, why did Moostung go out of their hands? And why did they flee from their native places?

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Petition from Sirdar Alladina Khoord to the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 12th March 1872.

You are well aware that when the British forces arrived in the Bolan Pass I was living at Mero on my lands on the Surro* Bolan. My age at that time was 20 years. I have now seven sons. Major Outram employed me at first for protecting the officers and their baggage from Dadur to Shawlkote by way of the Bolan. Those who were with me in this service received from Government Rupees 12 each. I used to receive sometimes Rupees 360, at other times Rupees 400, in proportion to the services rendered by me. Once when I brought Rahimtoolla Barkurdar Kakur and Durria Khan Murree to make their saláam to the British officials, I obtained a reward of Rupees 1,000 in consideration of my services. I got money from Government for digging and sinking wells and making arrangements for supplying water in Bayaree, in Surro Bolan, for the convenience of the troops and travellers. I executed this work properly. As long as the British officials and the forces remained I served them well. Major Outram at the time of his departure granted me a "than" of brocade, one loongee, and Rupees 500 in cash. I also received a certificate, which is lost. Afterwards there was no proper arrangement for the safety of persons travelling by the Bolan. When his Highness Meer Nusseer Khan, the Khan of Khelat, came to Jacobabad to pay a visit to General Jacob, plans were devised for making the Bolan free from danger, and it was arranged that the Naibs of Dadur and Shawlkote should see to the safe passage of the kafilas from the Bolan, and this was carried out. Rahmdad Khanazad was then the Naib of Shawlkote. Jam Sahtakzye Khoord was kept at the Bolan with 200 men to arrange for the coming and going of the kafilas in safety; since then a large caravan arrived at Beebee Naree, and was attacked by 700 Murrees, who took away the whole property in plunder. Jam Khoord and his 12 men lost their lives. It was not until Sirdar Taj Mahomed, Zehree, was imprisoned that the Brahooees failed to do all the necessary service at the Bolan. This work was then entrusted to Shere Dil Khan and Mobut Khan Muzeranee Murrees. Before that the Muzeranees used to graze their cattle in our lands and the lands of the Bungoolzyes without permission. The rule was that they gave one goat for each flock that grazed. When the army of his Highness the Khan attacked the town of Khunuck and Hubbeeb Khan Rustumzye was killed, we Sirdars were present. His Highness the Khan directed the Muzeranees to graze their cattle wherever they liked and not to pay anything to us Sirdars, and that in whatever place they resided they should be independent of the Sirdars. This led to a breach between us and the Muzeranees.

2. When the British Army proceeded to Sind, Moolla Rahmdad was Naib of Shawl. After him Noor Mahomed was appointed, and he remained in office for two years. I succeeded the latter in the Naibship, and performed the duties for five years. One day I received a letter by a sowar of Rahmdad, the late Naib, which I found on perusal bore the seal of his Highness the Khan, and contained an order appointing Rahmdad as Naib, and dispensing with my services. His Highness the Khan was at that time at Gundava. I made my way with all speed to Dadur, and Moolla Rahmdad entered on his new office the following day. When I reached Dadur I sent an application to his Highness the Khan, asking to be favoured with grounds for my dismissal from the Naibship. I received a reply, in which his Highness the Khan informed me that I had not been dismissed, but had been deceived by some one, and should at once proceed to resume charge of my appointment. In obedience to this order I went to Shawl with 700 men and sent a message to Rahmdad, asking him to leave Shawl, to which he gave no heed. A fight ensued, which lasted for ten days, and ended in the flight at night of Rahmdad to Umber Kambranee. Ten days afterwards Syud Kumbranee and his men went in a body as intercessors to his Highness the Khan, who pardoned Moolla Rahmdad. Dewan Gungaram was then the Wuzeer of his Highness the Khan. I carried on the work of Naib for six or seven months afterwards, and then received an order to accompany his Highness the Khan against the Murrees. I obeyed the call, and collecting my men and Raj to the number of 500, joined his Highness the Khan and went with him to the Murree Hills. I left my son, Yar Mahomed, to do duty at Shawl. When we came out of the hills I returned to the Naibship of Shawl. A few days after his Highness the Khan appointed Meer Mahomed, Rustomzye, as Naib and dismissed me. Moolla Abdool Azeez, who was then Naib of Moostung, and was a relation of Moolla Rahmdad, examined my accounts, and reported to his Highness the Khan that I had embezzled about Rupees 4,000. I explained that the money had been spent during the struggle between me and Moolla Rahmdad; I was unable to repay it. Colonel Sir H. Green was then in Moostung, and after calling me and investigating the whole matter promised to make arrangements in consultation with his Highness the Khan. That officer at the same time gave me a rifle, and with his advice I departed for Dadur. I very soon was in receipt of a letter with the seal of his Highness the Khan, a copy of which is given below.

"To Meer Alladina Khoord.—You were indebted to me in the sum of Rupees 4,000 in consequence of defalcations in the accounts of Shawl, but as the said sum has been received from Major Green on your behalf you need not entertain any anxiety about it."

3. I have been from the first a faithful servant of his Highness the Khan and have not failed in my duty. About five years ago his Highness the Khan unlawfully took possession of the land of my nephew, Aftar Khan, in Merv, and I sent my son, Yar Mahomed, and my brother, Kadur Dinno, to his Highness at Khelat to solicit restoration. On this an order was issued by the Khan, directing us to go to the Naib of Moostung, Abdool Azeez, and get the case decided according to law by the Kazee who is there. We did so and exhibited our Sunnuds and other documents to the Kazee and the Naib. After trial a decree was passed, rejecting Aftar Khan's claim. He (Aftar Khan) refused to abide by this decision, and removing from my habitation proceeded to the Bungoolzyes, servants of his Highness the Khan, and lived with them. He is still enjoying the produce of the disputed land by force. I reported his departure to the Naib, Abdool Aneez, who paid no attention. This gave rise to an ill-feeling among the men of my clan. I then sent my son, Dost Mahomed, to his Highness the Khan for redress of my grievances, but obtained no relief. His Highness the Khan ordered Aftar Khan to fight with me, and caused a fort to be built for Aftar Khan and Nawab Bungoolzye; when I found that the Ruler thus assisted and aided my enemy I was compelled to separate myself from my relation. I applied for justice but did not obtain it. When the other disaffected Sirdars heard of this they came to me, and advised me to remove to British territory, and lay my complaints before the English Government. Hajee Mahomed Khan, Raisanee, then came to me and declared that he would also endeavour to free himself from such injustice. We, Sirdars, marched to Khunuck, and on the following morning his Highness' force arrived to oppose us. A fight took place. We lost Hubbeeb Khan, nephew of Hajee Mahomed Khan, and five others. His Highness the Khan's army then left for Moostung, and we started for Narmack. We sent a Sowar to Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, who had arrived from Candahar. He met us at Narmack. We, Sirdars, then all came together to the Bolan, where the Shahgassee also arrived through the pass. Below the Kartah, on the hills above Cahandalu, a battle took place. The Khan's army had many of their number killed. We left the field the following day owing to our stock of powder and shot having been exhausted. There were about 20 houses of the Khoords near the spot where the fight took place, and these were all plundered by his Highness the Khan's forces. The property thus taken possession of consisted of cattle, sheep, goat, &c., and ornaments. We, Sirdars, then all proceeded to the hills (Cahun) and our followers stayed in Seebee. Here a purwanna was received from Colonel Sir (then Major) Henry Green, Political Superintendent on the Frontier, to the address of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, to the effect that we should at once leave for Jacobabad, where the necessary arrangements would be made, as the Shahgassee had also been sent for. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, obeying the order marched to Jacobabad and reached that place, where the Shahgassee had also arrived. We did not come to terms, and the matter came abruptly to a close. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, returned to his place in Seebee, and the Shahgassee also went away. The hot days of summer were over and the winter set in. His Highness the Khan then confiscated the possessions of the Jam Saheb and Noordeen in Baghwana and Khozdar, and this gave rise to a battle between the forces of the Jam and Noordeen on the one side and of his Highness the Khan on the other, at a place called Baghwana. I was sent by Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, from Seebee with a message to the Jam to refrain from war and to look to the British Government for a reconciliation. I delivered the message to the Jam Saheb and Noordeen, who replied that their lands had been forcibly taken possession of, but if they were restored they would cease from warfare. His Highness the Khan did not listen, and war was, therefore, continued. It lasted for two days, and then his Highness the Khan sent his mother, Beebee Gunja, to intercede for him with the Jam and Noordeen. The Beebee came and stated that the Khan had declared that the Jalawan and Sarawan possessions would be allowed to remain in the hands of their rightful owners, and that she was surety for the performance of this engagement. The Jam Saheb and Noordeen consented to the cessation of war, which then came to an end, and all returned to their houses. Every one kept guard over his possessions. A letter was afterwards received by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, from the Jam and Noordeen, stating that his Highness the Khan had broken his word and placed his own men over all parts of the country. When our men were dismissed, and the matter was brought to the notice of Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, he sent me to the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad, and asked me to request that officer to allow him (Moolla Mahomed) to come in his presence to lay his circumstances before him. I came and made the necessary request, which was complied with. We, Sirdars, afterwards all went to the Jam Sahib and Noordeen to pay them a visit. At nightfall a murderer killed one of my sons, and wounded me and two other sons. We seized him and inquired of him who he was. He replied that he was the executioner,* and as he promised so he had done. We proceeded into the presence of Major Harrison, and made him acquainted with all that had passed.

* In the original head cutter.

4. His Highness the Khan inflicted and recovered a fine of Rupees 70 from Zardad Khoord. Aftar Khan carried away two camels of Hajee Khan in Bagh.

Wullee Mahomed Naib exacted the sum of Rupeees 180 and 14 khurwars of wheat as penalty from Nubbee Buksh. Naib Wullee Mahomed caused to be carried away the produce of three crops of indigo, cotton, and jowaree.

Aftar Khan took away 60 khurwars of wheat belonging to me.

Aftar Khan seized wheat, as also the produce of the crops in Merv Dusht, and the produce of a crop belonging to Nubbee Buksh. He also took away the realizations of one "Karez."

Naib Wullee Mahomed recovered by force Rupees 40 from Hajee; Naib Wullee Mahomed extorted Rupees 20 from Hajee Borat.

REPLY of the Shahgassee to Petition from Alladina Khoord, dated 9th Mohurrum 1289.

The petitioners consider that whatever situations they may get from his Highness become their hereditary property, and they set themselves up as hereditary officers. As the petitioner was on several occasions appointed by English Officers to do service in "Surra Bolan," he nows expects the same appointment, and has so stated in his petition. The arrangements in regard to kafilas have been by order of his Highness the Khan placed in the hands of the Naibs of Shawl and Dadur. His Highness can appoint any one to this duty, and is not bound to entrust the work to the petitioner.

The petitioner states that Shere Dil and Mohbut Khan, Muzeranees, grazed their flocks in the Cochar* and paid him grazing fees, viz., one head of sheep for each flock.

* Preserves.

These Muzeranees are separate from the disloyal Murrees that are subjects of his Highness the Khan. They may have given a sheep for each flock that grazed, but his Highness never issued any orders to this effect as the petitioner alleges, As he became rebellious, his Highness directed the Muzeranees to keep aloof from him. He writes about his Naibship such appointments are in the gift of his Highness the Khan. He has sufficient authority to nominate any transfer any one at pleasure. When Alladina was formerly Naib of Shawl, his Highness was in Gundava, and Moolla Gholam Ali, Khanazad, who was in Shawl, came and gave information that Rahmdad Khanazad had brought a letter of appointment to the Naibship of Shawl, and that Alladina had given over charge to him. On this his Highness said that he (Rahmdad) had not been appointed and should be relieved. Alladina with 50 or 60 men returned to Shawl, and Rahmdad was confined in the fort of Shawl for two days. Alladina communicated his letter of appointment to the people, and with their assistance removed Rahmdad and got charge of the Naibship again. You know full well the courage and boldness of the people of Shawl. After some time the Khan transferred Alladina, and when the accounts of the Naib were examined, defalcation to the extent of about Rupees 4,000 were found in his accounts. The Sirkar thereupon, according to the rule which requires the accounts of a Naib to be examined on his transfer, and any sums found deficient to be recovered from him, directed the above amount to be paid by Alladina, who brought forward the excuse that he had spent the money in the fight he had with Rahmdad. Alladina then went and applied to Colonel Green, at whose wish the Khan forewent the money, which was not again demanded.

In respect to Alladina's statement, that he remained loyal to his Highness the Khan and was guilty of no fault, I beg to state that as long as he did not swerve from faithfulness he was considered faithful by his Highness, notwithstanding that he was one of the rebels in Shere Dil Khan's days.

He mentions his case in connexion with Aftar Khan. He sent his son to his Highness the Khan, who ordered both parties to appear before the Naib at Moostung, Moolla Abdool Azeez, that the matter might be decided according to law. Both parties appeared before the Naib, and as Aftar Khan had evidence which established his right, Alladina lost his claim. The brothers of Aftar Khan are present here, and inquiry may be made from them, if necessary, or I may be directed to do so. Alladina states an untruth when he declares that it was this circumstance which compelled him to go with Mahomed Khan, Rustomzye to the British Government to complain. The facts are that Mahomed Khan had gone on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and on his return was accompanied by Fakeer Mahomed, Bezonjas, when Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, entreated the permission of his Highness the Khan to go and put Mahomed Khan to the sword. His Highness, however, did not accord permission, and refused to pass such an order. Meantime Sirdar Taj Mahomed, Zehree, obtaining information told Moolla Mahomed that Mahomed Khan was returning in company with Sirdar Fakeer Mahomed, Bezonjas, and if he (Moolla Mahomed) made an attempt on Mahomed Khan's life he would find opposition from Fakeer Mahomed. This made him change his intention for a time, but afterwards, removing his followers in company with Darogah Moola Atta Mahomed, he overran Mahomed Khan's village, broke into his fort, made him prisoner, and brought him before the Khan. Mahomed Khan made an urgent request to his Highness the Khan for justice and release, having been guilty of no offence, and being so treated by his enemies. His Highness complied with his appeal and set him at liberty.

When Taj Mahomed, Zehree, was arrested, and Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, fled, all these Sirdars, Mahomed Khan, Rustomzye. Alladina Khoord, the Shawanees Mahomedshahees and Lehrees and Bungulzyes, were with his Highness the Khan, when the latter asked permission of his Highness to go to Khorassan. Naib Abdool Luteef was with them. Their second request was to be allowed to storm the fort of Moolla Mahomed, and to bring his brother as prisoner for being disloyal. This was granted, and they did as they wished. His Highness the Khan afterwards released the brother of Moolla Mahomed. Hubbeeb Khan and Mahomed Khan then begged that as Moolla Mahomed had proved himself disloyal his Sirdarship should be taken from him and given to Futteh Khan, Raisanee, who had a right to it on account of his being a Brahimzye. His Highness did not consent and stated that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed might yet repent and implore pardon of his misdeeds. This refusal made them turn rebels, and after summoning Moolla Mahomed, they collected an army at Espang and arrived at Khunuck. His Highness the Khan's troops which were in Moostung, on receiving information, came to the same place and gave battle to the insurgents, which ended in the death of Hubbeeb Khan and the flight of the others to Narmack. They are wrong in affirming that they sent for Moolla Mahomed after this fight. He arrived five days after the battle; how then could he come all that distance from Candahar in five days? That which is the truth I have related. All of them collected afterwards at Narmack, and I was directed by his Highness the Khan to go and punish them. I met them in battle at Narmack and Cahandulan, and defeating them put them to flight. Mahomed Khan, Lehree, who stopped in his village was pursued, but he sent females with a Koran to intercede for him. I informed them that if he came and paid his respects I would carry him and his sons as prisoners to his Highness, but if he would not come, then I would fight with him in his place of concealment to-morrow. I then left and attacked their village. Mahomed Khan Chungez and the son of Alladina came out and submitted. I made them prisoners and started for Bagh, and from thence went to Mittree. Here I obtained news from Barozye that the families of these rebels had arrived at his place and that he wanted orders as to their disposal. I sent word that they were not to be molested, and it was optional with them to go anywhere they liked, but that the males should remain apart from them. When I reached Dadur, I heard that Moolla Mahomed and the others were with the Murree Guzzun at Mundaie. I left for Mundaie, and on my arrival there they fled. When I returned to Bagh I received an order from his Highness the Khan to go to Jacobabad to Colonel Green. I did so, and the other parties also appeared. Some words were exchanged, and Colonel Green directed that I should not follow up the rebels till arrangements were made by him with his Highness the Khan. I obeyed and returned to Khelat, whereupon another disturbance was created by these insurgents in company with the Jam. The particulars are as follows:—The Jam collected an army and went with Noordeen to fight with Fakeer Mahomed, Bezonjao, but by the direction of his Highness was presented from engaging in any fight by Shahgassee Moolla Gholam Mahomed and Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. A second time news reached his Highness that the Jam and Noordeen had arrived at Sarhay with their forces. I was directed to meet them, a battle was fought, in which the Jam and Noordeen were taken prisoners. They were for one year kept prisoners, when the sister of his Highness the Khan and wife of the Jam interceded for them, and they were set at liberty and sent with due honours to Beyla. A second time they brought an army to fight at Bhagwana and Khozdar. His Highness the Khan was informed of this and came out of Khelat to oppose them. At Bhagwana Khozdar both parties met and negotiations lasted for two or three days. Alladina was present when I engaged in conversation with the rebels. Beebee Gunja was with the Jam, and had accompanied him in this campaign. One day the Beebee visited the Khan with her daughter and was asked the reason of the rebellious conduct of the Jam: she replied that the lands of Kumal Khan, Ittarzye, were the cause, and the Jam, being the son of Kumal Khan's sister wanted his share. His Highness rejoined that he (the Khan) had nothing to do with the property of the Ittarzye, his heirs being the Ittarzye, and that the heirs of Kumal Khan were Meer Karm Khan and Gowar Khan, Ittarzye, who are his sister's sons; Kamal Khan is the son of the maternal uncle of the latter. I then had an interview with the Jam and told him in conversation that they (the Jam and others) were not in the habit of giving their daughters any share in the inheritance. If he agreed to this well and good, if not, a fight would take place. A battle was fought in which two or three divisions of the Jam's army submitted to the forces of his Highness the Khan. Beebee Sahib again interfered, and it was arranged that the Jam should leave one of his servants to take care of the share in Kumal Khan's estate. The Jam again with 50 or 60 men came to Khelat for the settlement of the question of this estate. His Highness on this third occasion, on the urgent request of the Beebee, kept silence, and the Jam returned to Beyla. It was then that Major Harrison came to Khelat for the settlement of affairs, and the Jam again came to Kupota with his army. An interchange of communication took place, and what followed then is fully known to you and Major Harrison. At that time the whole of the Khan's troops were marched out to fight, but through the mediation of the British officers the Jam was again permitted to go scot-free. That which is asserted about the murder of men I know nothing about. If the rebels have been wronged they must attribute it to their base deeds.

Now I come to the allegation about the sums of money said to have been taken as fines from Zardad, Hajee Barat, and Nubbee Buksh. These men have not yet washed their hands of theft and misappropriation of property, and it is probable that this levy was owing to some fault or offence committed by them. The statement that Aftar Khan carried away grain from Alladina and Hajee, and appropriated it to his own use, is explained thus :—When the complainants took it into their heads to become rebels, the land was granted by his Highness the Khan to Aftar Khan, and Cocha Mery was also given in his charge. He has, therefore merely enjoyed the allowance of his Sirdarship.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Letter from Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, Wuzeer to his Highness the Khan, dated the 14th Mohurrum 1289, to Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat.

Whatever petitions and statements that were received by me from the Commissioner in Sind through you were replied to by me, and the answers were sent for the Commissioner's information. My letters will have shown how disturbances were created and rebellions raised, and who took the initiative. I hope that the Commissioner in Sind will, taking into consideration all the facts laid before him, and weighing well the several points raised, pass such a decision as will have the effect of establishing his Highness the Khan's Government on a sound basis, and giving the subject people a lasting peace and tranquillity. I now enter into a little detail of the injury done by the insurgents to the country and to the people.

Alladina Khoord stands foremost among the Sarawan Sirdars, and Noordeen among the Jalawans. Although his Highness the Khan showered favours on them, and will continue to treat them with kindness, still they did not, and will not, prove loyal and show allegiance, as a subject should do towards his ruler. They are turbulent and refractory and will not show improvements, as a well-known poet has said—

"The colour of a negro cannot be changed from black into white if he is washed as many times as it is wished."

They tempt other people and entice them to their ways. The wish of his Highness the Khan is that he be on peaceful terms with nobles, montaburs,* Ooloos, Raj, and others, and thus secure happiness to all by his rule. There is unity between his Highness and the English Sirkar, and his Highness hopes that the Commissioner in Sind will make such arrangements as will prevent any possibility of further disturbances being caused, and the peace of the country being endangered. Besides, I beg to give details of the damage caused to and loss sustained by his Highness the Khan, his subjects, and the town of Bagh and other villages. By his Highness at the time of Shere Dil Khan at Khelat, 4,00,000 of rupees cash; property of the value of Rupees 4,00,000, property plundered by Noordeen at Baghwana and Khozdar, value Rupees 1,00,000; property seized by Azaad Khan at Sohrab and Punjgoor, value over Rupees 1,00,000, besides murders caused by him; property seized at Dadur and Moostung several times; cash, Rupees 2,00,000; and grain and property and 200 mares and horses; plundered from granaries of the crops at Kutchee; Government share during the current year, value Rupees 4,00,000; property (cattle, grain, &c.) of the subjects plundered at Bagh and other places in Naree, value over Rupees 4,00,000 after the truce.

* Respectable.

Besides these, the kafilas were sacked and the poor Afghan merchants deprived of their property.

After the overthrow of Shere Dil Khan, the Sarawan Sirdars and Noordeen took an oath of allegiance to his Highness the Khan, and received Rupees 7,500 and pistols, but they soon broke that oath and created fresh disturbances.

No. 2510, dated Bombay Castle, 27th April 1872.

From C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay; to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of the papers forwarded with my letter of the 20th instant, No. 2343, I am directed to enclose, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a further letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 367, dated the 11th idem, connected with the settlement of the claims of the Sirdars of Beloochistan.

Enclosure in No. 54.

No. 367, dated Kurrachee, 11th April 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind; to his Excellency Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. FitzGerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

In continuation of my Report, No. 340, dated 5th instant, I have the honour now to state that on receipt of telegram dated the 6th, I immediately caused arrangements to be made for the departure of his Highness' Wuzeer and the Sirdars from Jacobabad.

2. At a public Durbar held on Friday, the 5th, the Wuzeer and all the Sirdars were dismissed, and to those who were so entitled the customary presents were given. The six Sarawan Sirdars were included among the recipients. Though they had been pronounced by me to have been decidedly in the wrong, pardon for their acts had been extended to them in the name of his Highness the Khan, and as is usual on such occasions, suitable khilluts were bestowed on them also as a mark of their being re-admitted to favour, and I trust such recognition of their restored position may have the desired effect of bringing them more closely for the future in their allegiance to their Sovereign.

3. I took the opportunity of impressing most strongly upon them the folly and want of patriotism displayed in their former proceedings, and that the favour and countenance of the British Government would assuredly be withheld from any who hereafter may show themselves so unmindful of their duty to their Khan, and of the welfare of their country as to regard only their own personal views and on fancied grievances to enter on disturbances which checked prosperity and caused grievous injury to the poorer and peaceably disposed portion of the community.

4. I again repeated to them that the sole desire of Government was to see a strong and well organized Government established in Beloochistan, and that such could never exist unless the nobles of the land cordially gave their assistance in maintaining order and sustaining those principles of administration which were suitable to the country and to the interests of all. That Government looked to his Highness the Khan that he should duly observe such principles and rule with justice and fair consideration, and as long as he continued to do so, he would assuredly command the friendship and countenance of the British Government. This was to be clearly understood by the Sirdars, and that there was no wish whatever on the part of Government to interfere between his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars in matters which only affected themselves, and which should be decided according to the customs and rules in force in the country. At the same time the Sirdars must also bear in mind that any renewal of factions and unreasonable conduct on their part against their ruler would at once and for ever forfeit for them the favour which Government would otherwise be most willing to show to them on all fitting opportunities.

5. The Sirdars were most earnest in their protestations that they would follow a new course for the future, and looking to his Highness the Khan for just recognition of what they were rightfully entitled to, they would do their best to prevent any recurrence of those differences which had existed and would give such aid as they were capable of in the maintenance of the ruling power.

6. I do not wish to appear over sanguine in anticipating certain good results from these procedings. No one acquainted with the capricious nature of the Brahooees and the social changes which are now taking place in their country would be so rash as to pin his faith on any thing of the sort. But I think it may be fairly reckoned that matters now bear a more favourable aspect than they have done for some time past, and as long as those Sirdars who have up to the present time engaged in rebellion, whenever it suited their purpose, can have it kept in their minds that such conduct is and will be regarded with entire disapproval, that it will meet with the marked displeasure of the British Government, and that it is their best interest to act peacefully and loyally, we may expect that the effect of what has recently passed will prove good, and lead to satisfactory and permanent results.

Self interest is the only as well as the best bond for their future good behaviour. The greatest care therefore will have to be taken that there should be no renewal to them of the ill suited expectations they had been led to form of their former unreasonable and disloyal demands receiving attention or support. A careful adherence to the orders of the Government of India issued in October last will ensure this.

7. I had afterwards a long conversation with the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and he assured me it was his master's most earnest desire to act only in strict conformity with the wishes of Her Majesty's Government, and appealed to me to confirm him from my own knowledge of all that has passed in the statement that from the time when his Highness had ascended the throne he had never once failed to act strictly up to that desire. I can most fully do so and confidently assert that whatever faults his Highness may have, want of loyal friendship to the British Government is certainly not one of them.

8. He also desired to explain that the Khan had done his best to keep his Sirdars bound to him, but that there were a certain few amongst them, who had for some time past endeavoured to strip him of all power and leave him utterly helpless to govern for the good of the country. Of these the chief are three, the Ex-Jam of Beyla, Sirdar Meer Khan, his (the Khan's) relative Azaad Khan, quasi independent ruler of Kharan, but formerly holding lands in Beloochistan which he forfeited through rebellion and unprovoked attacks on other parts of the Khan's dominions, and Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. These had always taken advantage of any petty discontent that might arise, and done their utmost to turn it into rebellion.

9. The first had rebelled many times again the Khan, though the Khan had not only never interfered with his proper possessions, but had pardoned him as often as he had misbehaved. On the last occasion of rebellion Sirdar Meer Khan fled into British territory where he had been generously afforded safe asylum, but there even he had continued his evil habits of intrigue to promote disturbances in his old country. His Highness was most grateful to Government for having removed Sirdar Meer Khan to a greater distance from Beloochistan, and trusts he may be kept where he now is, as his return to his old country or its neighbourhood would most certainly be followed by a renewal of disturbances and fresh disorders in the land.

10. Azaad Khan would be harmless if sedition did not occur in Beloochistan, but whenever it does he immediately offers to join and encourage the malcontents as much as he can, his object being to obtain the throne for himself. He sometimes pays allegiance to Persia, sometimes to Afghanistan, at present the latter, and a little time back he appealed to his Highness the Ameer to assist him by calling on his Highness the Khan to restore to him, Azaad Khan, the lands he formerly held in Beloochistan. The Khan replied suitably to the Ameer, and nothing more has been heard of it. But as Azaad Khan so lately acknowledged his Highness the Ameer's power, I lately suggested by telegram that the latter might be moved to order Azaad Khan to abstain from interfering with Khelat affairs and Khelat subjects.

11. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee is certainly the best of the three, but though not aspiring to the Khanate, he is ambitious of power, and being somewhat weak, is easily led away by designing people who make use of his high position to promote their objects. At the instigation of Meer Khan and Azaad Khan he foolishly rejected the liberal terms given him by the Khan in 1869, and recently he has acted a good deal on the instigation of Allad Dina, the chief of the Khoords, a restless, reckless, person, and one or two others, The Wuzeer, however, hoped that after what had been said here to Moolla Mahomed and the others, as well as the consideration that had been extended to him, that he would separate himself from bad advisers, and that they also would cease to work upon him.

12. The Wuzeer said that immediately after his return to Khelat, if not on his way up the Moolla Pass, he would proceed against Noordeen, the Mingul chief, who had not taken advantage of the amnesty granted but continued in open hostility to the Khan, and he will probably either surrender or fly the country. If the former, it will remain with his Highness the Khan how to dispose of him, whether to punish or pardon him. I should be disposed myself to certainly follow the former course, but the Khan has ever shown a tendency to leniency more than severity, and will probably forgive. I informed the Shahgassee that I would say nothing in behalf of Noordeen, on the contrary that I considered him deserving of severe punishment.

13. The Sirdars who came into Jacobabad will accompany the Wuzeer to Khelat, and there pay their respects to his Highness the Khan. The Wuzeer again pressed on me the great difficulty his master was in on account of want of funds, and that he would now especially greatly need money when the Sirdars and others were all assembled at Khelat. I then privately informed him of the orders of Government in this respect and of the handsome present Government had been pleased to make to the Khan. The Wuzeer expressed himself extremely grateful, and said the amount would be of the greatest possible assistance to the Khan. I accordingly arranged that the one lakh granted in addition should be sent up with the usual annual subsidy so that it may seem to the uninformed outside people that merely the subsidy was being despatched. His Highness the Khan will be, and his Wuzeers was, quite aware that the extra lakh was for only this occasion alone, and was not to be repeated.

14. I trust the above will meet with your Excellency's approval.

P.S.—The Wuzeer was not to leave Jacobabad till Monday, the 8th. Major Harrison would accompany him to Gundava, and then follow him up the Moolla Pass to Khelat.

No. 616, dated Lahore, the 10th May 1872.

From E. W. Trotter, Esq., Assistant Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM desired to forward, for the information of the Supreme Government, copies of news reports and letters received from Captain Sandeman.

Enclosure 1 in No. 55.

NEWS REPORT.

EXTRACT from a Private Letter from Syeds Meer Ourung Shah, Chirag Shah, and Bahar Shah, of the village of Dadur at the foot of the Bolan Pass, to the Address of Syed Sooltan Shah, inhabitant of Jampore, in the Dehra Ghazee Khan District. (The two parties belong to the same family, and are nearly related.)

The news is as follows:

THE Sarawan Sirdars, by order of the British Government, went to meet the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed in presence of the Commissioner at Jacobabad. They had much conversation over matters, and the two sides made injam (peace).

The English gentlemen desired that Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, who is now the chief representative of the Jalawans, should with some headmen of tribe attend at Jacobabad, in order that before the English gentlemen a good settlement might be come to between the Jalawans and Sarawans on the one side, and the Khan on the other.

According to these directions, the principal chiefs of Sarawan joined Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in writing to Noordeen Mingul to come to Jacobabad. The English gentlemen sent a perwannah also, and the Shahgassee wrote himself to Sirdar Noordeen.

These papers were all taken by four sowars of the Shahgassee to Sirdar Noordeen, but he refused to come to Jacobabad, saying that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed could act for him. This reply of Noordeen's the sowars took back to Jacobabad.

When the gentlemen heard this, they then said that they would only come to a settlement with the Sarawan Sirdars, and that the Jalawans must act for themselves, and that the former must separate from the latter. The Sarawan chiefs then wrote a promise, to the effect that they separated themselves from the Jalawans, and they set their seals to it. It was then arranged by the English gentlemen that the plunder of the kafilas and of Kutchee should be made good by the Brahooees, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed became responsible. All the jagirs that the Sirdars of Sarawan possessed, when Nusseer Khan was on the Khelat throne, were to be returned to them. The case was thus settled, and the Sirdars left. The Sirdars went to Seebee, and four days afterwards Captain Harrison and the Shahgassee went to Gundava. Since then, to-day (17th April), with the exception of Sirdar Alladina Koord, all the Sirdars of Sarawan have gone to Gundava to Captain Harrison and the Shahgassee with the intention of going to the Khan of Khelat.

The news about the Jalawans is as follows:

Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, with the heads of the tribe and an army of about 2,500 men, arrived at Kozdar. In the fort was Khanazad Abdool Azeez and the troops. Firing with the guns from a distance was daily going on. The Khan's troops were in the Fort, and the Jalawan forces were outside. Now the Shahgassee and the chiefs of Sarawan with Captian Harrison have started for Khelat. We will see what is in the future. The kafila route through the Bolan Pass is not now closed. The chief of the Muzeranee Murrees, Shere Dil, has been placed in charge of the Pass by the Khan, and furnishes guards for the kafilas. The Doomar (Kakar) Pathans are quiet, and do not plunder. The families of the Sarawans will shortly leave Seebee for Khorassan by route of the Bolan.

The kossids who pass through the Bolan from Moonshee Unwar (Government Moonshee) report that Pollock Sahib had arrived in Seistan, and that the King of Persia had on Pollock Sahib's representation agreed to give up the country to Ameer Shere Ali.

Syed Noor Mahomed Shah, the Ameer's Wuzeer, who had gone with Pollock Sahib, had written to Candahar about a proper person being sent to rule over the country.

MEMORANDUM by Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner.

THIS news is fairly reliable, and shows that the chief of Muzeranee Murrees, Shere Dil, has again accepted service under the Khan of Khelat, while the apparent fact of Alladina Koord not having gone with the other Sirdars of Sarawan to meet Captain Harrison at Gundava, admits of the inference that the settlement come to at Jacobabad by Sir William Merewether has not included all, or settled the grievances of the Koords, Kakurs, and Murrees with regard to the Bolan Pass arrangements.

This affects very seriously the arrangement for the Punjab with the Murree clan, who occupy such a very important position on its immediate Frontier.

The Koords and Doomur Pathans are the rightful owners of the lands about the Bolan Pass, and to bring the Muzeranee Murrees there, is contrary to all my ideas of right and justice, for the Murree clan itself has nothing whatever to do with the Bolan Pass.

This is evidently the idea of Sirdar Alladina Koord himself, which accounts for his not going with the other Sirdars to Khelat.

As reported in a former letter, the Muzeranee Murrees are a section of the Murree clan. They formerly belonged to the Khetran tribe, but becoming discontented, joined about 100 years ago the Murree clan, and are bound by all the customs of the tribe.

I have no doubt this arrangement for the Bolan Pass is a very good one, as far as it goes, for the Khan of Khelat, as the Murrees will probably escort the kafilas far less than the Koords; but I doubt very much if the arrangement will, in the long run, work, but fear it will result, as it has hitherto done, in failure and disaster, for the clans of Murrees and Kakurs as a body will sympathise with the ousted Koords, and will be sure to aid them on the very first opportunity that offers of their righting themselves.

Such an arrangement is contrary to tribal custom, and will, in all probability, again arouse the jealousy of the entire Murree clan and prevent their settling.

They will never agree to arrangements being made with the chief of a section of a tribe without the Tomundar and other chiefs having been in any way consulted.

This I know they have not been (sic) from the Murree chiefs themselves who are now here, for they never heard of the arrangements until I told them of it.

They left the Hills fifteen days ago, and are waiting the surrender of the clan of the leader of the party who murdered a Gurchani in December last.

They have one and all expressed great dissatisfaction with it.

Enclosure 2 in No. 55.

TRANSLATION of a News Letter from Surab Khan, Tomundar of the Dhoombkees in Kutchee, to Eman Buksh Khan, Sirdar of the Muzaries.

THE Brahooees and the Wuzeer have settled their case before the Commissioner and departed.

They had arrived at Gundava when they were informed that Sirdar Noordeen, Mingulzai, with the Jalawanees, and Sirdar Azaad Khan, of Kharan, had carried off the crops of Kozdar and Bhagwana lands—the city forts had not been attacked.

When the Jalawanee army heard of the Wazir's arrival at Gundava, Noordeen fled to his own home. Azaad Khan also went home. Previously to this, the Wuzeer and Brahooee Ameers had left Gundava, but whether en route for Khelat or in pursuit, I cannot say.

Enclosure 3 in No. 55.

TRANSLATION of a News Letter from Meer Sher Mahomed Khan, Muzarie, to Sirdar Eman Buksh Khan, Muzarie.

SAHIB KHAN has arrived at Rohjan. I heard from him all about Khelat and the Brahooees. He inquired from his friends and found that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Khan, Raisanee, the Brahooees, Shawanees, and the Wuzeer of the Khan had settled their case before the Commissioner on the following conditions, i.e., that the villages given to the Brahooees in the time of Nusseer Khan remain with them; that grants of land made in the time of Shere Dil Khan and Khodadad Khan be resumed. The Brahooees and Shawanees agreed to these terms before the Commissioner.

Moolla Mahomed said he would be responsible for the Pathan kafila robbed by the Brahooees. That he would see that that the Brahooees gave up their plunder. The Commissioner thereupon gave the Wuzeer the following presents:

An Arab horse, worth Rupees 1,000.
A saddle (silver-mounted.)
Ten chogas.
Six loongees.

Besides this he gave him several costly things for the Khan.

He also presented Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, with a khillut or robe of honour, consisting of—Eight chogas.

Six loongees.

The Commissioner then left for Kurrachee. Captain Harrison, the Wuzeer, Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, and other chiefs went to Gundava. At the time of starting, the Wuzeer was informed that Noordeen Mingulazi with an army had sacked Khozdar and Bhagwana, but had not penetrated inside the fort; that he had also devastated the surrounding country.

The Wuzeer at once wished to pursue Noordeen, declaring that some time or another, he would certainly take him. Moolla Mahomed declared himself ready to go with him.

Nothing more is yet known.

No. 56.

No. 2977, dated Bombay Castle, the 20th May 1872.

From C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay in the Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

REFERRING to recent correspondence regarding the Khelat State, and to the papers submitted last year in the case of the ex-Jam of Lus Beyla, I am directed to transmit herewith, for the information of the Right Honourable the Viceroy and Governor General of India in Council, copy of a Memorandum dated 9th instant, on the present state of affairs in relation to the Khelat State, drawn up by Sir William Merewether (who is now in Bombay), for submission to his Excellency the Governor.

2. With reference to the case of the ex-Jam of Beyla, I am to state that, since the arrival of his Excellency the Governor in Bombay he has had an interview with the ex-Jam, and has been in communication with Sir William Merewether on the subject of the affairs of Khelat. At the interview the Jam took the opportunity of protesting very earnestly against his present detention in our territory, and still more against his being confined at Nuggur, which he asserted to be very injurious to his health. He desired to return Sind. It was pointed out to him that he had fled for his life into British territory, and, after he had found an asylum there, had been discovered to be carrying on intrigues of a nature hotsile to the Khan of Khelat, with whom this Government was on very friendly terms; that a necessary consequence was his removal to a distance from the frontier, and his being placed under closer surveillance; that this Government was not prepared to assign him a different place of residence, and that he must be prepared to return at once to Nuggur. A day or two after, when required to proceed accordingly, he became exceedingly indignant, declared he would only move by force, and that we might put him to death. The medical officer in charge of him was consequently required to report, and as he stated that he was suffering from diarrhœa, fever, and a bad sore, and, therefore, unable to bear a journey by road, it was directed that, for the present, he should proceed to Poona, and that his future place of residence should be determined hereafter.

Note.—The ex-Jam was sent to Ahmednuggur in December last.

3. It will be noted from the Memorandum submitted that Sir William Merewether thinks it desirable that the belief in the probability of the return of this chief to Khelat Territory should be decidedly discouraged, and that he should be distinctly informed that his return will not be permitted, except at the request of the Khan.

4. The Government of India will also observe that Sir William Merewether recommends that a gift should be made to his Highness the Khan of Khelat of 2,000 old percussion muskets, now in store at Hydrabad, in Scinde. I am to state that upon both these points this Government is desirous of learning the wishes of the Government of India.

Enclosure in No. 56.

MEMORANDUM by Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the present state of Affairs in relation to the Khelat State, dated Bombay, the 9th May 1872.

No one acquainted with the history of Beloochistan and the people of that country would be rash enough to expect, or even suppose, that the arrangements recently made at Jacobabad will be lasting, or be held binding by the Sirdars, previously in rebellion, one instant longer than it suit them to abide by the terms granted, or that there does not appear what would seem to them a fair opportunity for further attempts to grasp power and force concessions from the Khan of Khelat.

All that can be safely asserted as having been conclusively done is, that a most unfortunate misapprehension of the position of the Sirdars towards the Khan, and of the course we should take in reference to the Sirdars, has been checked, and I hope completely removed, and the great evils arrested, which the ill-advised support accorded by the Political Superintendent on the frontier to the Sirdars was creating, and which could only bring about the utter subversion of all rule in the country.

The power of any of the Khans of Khelat over the turbulent chiefs of that country has always been of a very uncertain nature, much like that of the Plantagenet Kings over the Barons of England. But unquestionably that of the present Khan has been more sorely tried than any, owing to the fixed determination of the Sirdars, from the very first commencement of his reign, to do their utmost to deprive him of everything but the mere forms of sovereignity, to make him a mere puppet, while the power remained with them. Some even aspired to rule themselves, such as the late Jam of Beyla, Sirdar Meer Khan, and Azaad Khan, the Ruler of Kharan, who was once a feudatory of Khelat, holding lands therein, which he forfeited in consequence of rebellion, but of late independent, and acknowledging only the sovereignty of the Amir of Cabul. He is related to the Khan of Khelat by marriage—the late Khan having married his daughter, and, according to Brahooee custom, the present Khan has taken his brother's widow to wife.

The chief refractory Sindars have been—

Sirdar Meer Khan, formerly Jam of Beyla, now at Ahmednuggur; Sirdar Azaad Khan, Ruler of Kharan;
Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, the most influential chief in Sarawan, or northern part of Beloochistan; Sirdar Taj Mahomed Zehree, chief of Jalawan, died in prison in 1867; and Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, a relation of Meer Khan, and a restless spirit.

Of these, none scarcely can be said to have any real grievances, unless having their ambition and unpatriotic efforts thwarted, and being continually pardoned for repeated acts of rebellion, may be called such.

Meer Khan of Beyla has rebelled seven times, and been as often pardoned. On two of these occasions he and Noordeen were confined in prison, but afterwards released by the Khan and allowed to resume their hereditary estates.

Meer Khan had never been molested by the Khan, but he aspired to be Khan himself, and never failed to use any opportunity that seemed to offer. His efforts, however, were generally futile, owing to his own personal cowardice, which is extreme and notorious in the country, so that it is wonderful he ever gained a following.

Azaad Khan has joined in every disturbance that has taken place during the past 15 years in hopes of gaining the khanate for himself.

Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed, I think, only wanted increased powers and possessions for themselves and adherents, but did not aspire to the sovereignty.

If there is to be peace and order in the country next to the frontier of Sind, there must be a fixed Government and responsible ruler there. This would be impossible if the Sirdars are encouraged, as they lately were, in their resistance to their legitimate sovereign, and in their selfish endeavours to better only themselves. I maintain, therefore, that it is our true and the only reasonable policy to do all we can to strengthen the possession of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and to show marked disapproval of the attempts of the Sirdars to subvert his authority. This being thoroughly understood by the latter, they would find it their best interests to rally to the Khan, and endeavour to secure his favour in hopes of having ours also.

The lakh of rupees lately presented to the Khan will be of very great use to him, and help him to recover himself after his late heavy expenses. But much of its value to him was lost by reason of its being desired that the gift should not be made public. The more widely it was known amongst his own and adjacent people, the more it would have helped to show them his position, and to convey assurance to the Sirdars and others that the Government of India, recognising him as the de jure and de facto ruler of the country, was ready to give him such support as was suitable, and wished that his authority and a firm fixed government should be maintained in the country, while any movement intended to disturb those would certainly be in no way countenanced.

Small help judiciously given to the Khan on proper occasions will be of most material benefit to him as ruler, and, while not costing us much, should enable him to gradually assume the strong position in his country, I hold it is our best policy he should have, so that we may stave off, as long as possible, the necessity for direct interference with affairs beyond our present line of frontier. The Khan is very poor owing to the best lands in his country being in the possession of the chiefs, who ought to be steady supporters of his authority and government, but on whom he can no longer rely in consequence of the changes which are taking place in the habits and ideas of these chiefs, so well described in his Excellency the Governor's Minute of 10th February 1871.

Though the chiefs, in virtue of their tenure of the lands they have, should give support to the ruler, his power has hitherto been so small that he cannot enforce their doing so, or venture to deprive them of the lands for non-performance of their duty. He has, therefore, to fall back on mercenaries to maintain his power, and these have to be paid out of original small revenues, no new returns coming in at present. Very much the same process is going on in Afghanistan, and the Government of India has there found it necessary to assist his Highness the Amir indirectly, or that potentate's attempt to establish systematic and firm government would fail.

The matter for consideration is, what can best be done at least expense to improve the Khan's position, and to make the results which should follow the late arrangements at Jacobabad and the gift of a lakh of rupees as complete as possible. The Khan must for the future rely on his mercenary troops more than on his capricious Barons, if not entirely on the former, and a present of some of the arms now lying useless in our arsenals would be of immense importance to him. It would not only strengthen him very much, but it would show the chief's legitimate authority was required and would be supported. The Khan would be able to promptly suppress any attempts at rebellion, and, quiet being enforced, the country would improve, and Crown revenues, as well as general prosperity, would be largely increased.

I would, therefore, recommend that two thousand stand of percussion muskets of the old pattern be presented to the Khan at once, and that sanction may be accorded for their issue from the arsenal at Hydrabad.

I can confidently assure Government on two points regarding which objection to this course might be raised,—

1st. That there is not the slightest danger in giving these weapons that they will be ever used against us;

2nd. That the idea that the Khan desires to crush the chiefs merely for crushing' sake, that he would use these arms for that purpose, and that we should be helping to prop up an undeserving ruler against the wishes of the mass of the ruled, is a grievous mistake and a totally wrong view of the case.

As regards the first, these mercenaries would never act against us, or, if they did, their discipline and array would never be so complete as to give any trouble to a much smaller body of our troops, though they would be very powerful against the rabble following of any chief who attempted to show his teeth.

As to the second, the Khan is not a bit worse ruler than other Native sovereigns; indeed, he is far better than a great many. He is somewhat hasty and capricious, as all Native princes, over whose actions there is little check, ever will be; but, instead of persistent vindictiveness, as he has been acccused of he has erred rather in the other way by being too lenient and pardoning over and over again those who richly deserved the most severe punishment for their disloyal and ungrateful conduct.

The mass of the chiefs and people of Beloochistan are well satisfied with the present Khan, and all would soon be equally so if it was clearly understood that we, to whom they all look, were determined that there should be no light or unnecessary change of rule. There is a fixed feeling in Beloochistan that their ruler must be an Ahmudzai,* neither Azaad Khan nor Sirdar Meer Khan of Beyla are of that family, only related by marriage, and both Brahooees and Belooch would have none of them; indeed, Meer Khan, being a Sindee by parentage, would be particularly distasteful to the Brahooee and Belooch, as they look down on all Sindees, styling them mere cultivators.

* The Brahooee family, from which the Khans have been given for many generations.

If the present Khan were ousted, there is no grown-up member of his family to succeed him, and anarchy and confusion must prevail. His eldest son, a very young boy, would probably be set up as a puppet for the ambitious Sirdars to use, and there would be a continued struggle for power among them.

I would recommend that the policy laid down in his Excellency the Governor of Bombay's minute of 10th February 1871, and which has been approved of by the Government of India, should be strictly followed. The Political Agent at Khelat, while freely assisting the Khan with good advice and moral support, should abstain, in every possible way, from direct interference in the affairs of the State

Sirdar Meer Khan, the ex-Jam of Beyla, now a fugitive in British territory, should be kept away from his old possessions, so that he may not be tempted to engage in intrigues connected with Khelat affairs, and he will never abstain if he is anywhere within reach. He should also be distinctly told, once for all, that any petitions regarding return to his old country and position, can neither be listened to nor received; that he was granted a safe asylum in British territory, protecting him from the just resentment of his sovereign, solely under conditions that he should abstain from any communication with his old country, and his deliberate breach of those stipulations has been a grave offence against the Government (that so generously gave him shelter) for which he must be made to answer, by being more strictly looked after than he was at first, or otherwise would have been. I would recommend that, on my return to Sind now, I may be authorised to make a communication to the above effect to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and further that, excepting at the special request of his Highness the Khan, Sirdar Meer Khan will never be allowed to return to the country, where his presence formerly only produced rebellion and disorder, and by flight from which he had abandoned the position he used to hold. The Khan should be authorised to make such use of this communication as he considers best in the way of promulgating it throughout the country. Such would settle the Province of Lus Beyla, which is now kept much disturbed by false reports set about by the ex-Jam and his adherents of the probability of his immediate return, and, until the people are fully assured there that he will not return, they will believe it possible and only half accept new arrangements. The merchants, too, who have hitherto been supplying him with funds in hopes of getting back by his return some of the money they formerly advanced to him, will continue their help, unless they see all chance of return is gone.

With the clear intimation that Meer Khan is not to go back (the Khan will assuredly not ask for him to be allowed to do so) Noordeen Mingul will at once give up his opposition to the Khan and either fly the country or surrender, and Azaad Khan will have to abandon his designs of troubling the khanate.

The above being approved and allowed to be carried out, there will be a fair chance of the errors of the frontier management of the past three years being remedied, and the Khan of Khelat given opportunity of establishing peace and order in his country.

IN continuation of my letter No. 2626, dated the 4th instant, I am directed to forward, for submission to the Government of India, copy of the Diary of the Political Agent at Khelat for the week ending the 20th April 1872, received under the endorsement of the Commissioner in Sind, No. 451, dated the 14th May 1872.

Dated Gundava, the 20th April 1872.

Diary No. 9 by the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 20th April 1872.

INFORMATION regarding Sirdar Noordeen's movements have been received by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed from the Janeeshee of Khozdar, viz., that the above chief had made a second attempt to take the fort of Khozdar, and fired 42 shells during three days and nights, of which number 25 had fallen into the fort without causing injury to any one. Ordinary shot had been freely fired with the same result. On the 2nd Suffer (11th April) Noordeen made over one of his guns to Sirdar Azaad Khan, and on the 15th retired towards Wudd, but was pursued by the Langa's levy, who made six prisoners and captured baggage animals.

Azaad Khan has been joined by Gohur Khan Zuruckzai. News regarding the former is derived from Darogah Atta Mahomed's letter to his Highness the Khan, forwarded for my perusal. Azaad Khan was then at Shahdadzai, and, having a long standing blood feud against these Mahomed Hussanees, demanded 4 camels, 11 bullocks, 100 sheep, besides compensation for the murder above named. He also plundered 11 loads of grain, and one of dates, that were being sent by a Gredur Bunniah to Gerisha. Darogah Atta Mahomed writes that Azaad Khan is waiting to see what Noordeen will do, and that, if he (Atta Mahomed) can attack Azaad Khan without endangering Sohrab and Khelat, he will do so.

Atta Mahomed writes regarding affairs in Mekran: Sirdar Ghazee Khan and Ibrahim Khan, son of Kadur Baksh, Nowsheerwanee, and first cousin once removed to Sirdar Azaad Khan, have made anjam or treaty together, Ghazee Khan having given Ibrahim

Khan the fort of Khudabadan, on condition that he would assist him in taking the fort of Thool from the Shahbegs, or Moolazais. Atta Mahomed further writes that though these disturbances are of a minor nature, yet that, if the Nowsheerwans are not checked, matters will become very serious.

Sirdar Ibrahim Khan, Sunjranee, of Chakansur, has written a friendly note to his Highness the Khan, stating that he had only just heard of the disturbances in his country, and was disappointed that he had not been asked to assist him in some way or another.

A letter was also sent, addresssed to the English Sahib, which was sent to me. It gives the following information regarding Generals Goldsmid and Pollock, viz.: General Goldsmid arrived in Seistan a few days before General Pollock, who came by the Gurm Seil route with Syed Noor Mahomed Khan, the latter arrived at Killa Futteh. I went with Sirdars Ahmed Khan, Murdan Khan, and other people of rank, to pay a visit of ceremony. I did good service for them. When they reached Jam, the Governor of the place said he would consider over what the Sahibs had said, and give them an answer at some future day. The Sahibs being annoyed went with Syed Noor Mahomed to the town of Okat. I sent my son Khan Jehan to join them there; from thence they proceeded to Lash, and, having remained there two days, marched towards Herat en route to Meshed. My son went with them, the first march from Okat. I received a post for the Sahibs, which came viâ Killa Ghrish, and sent it on by two sowars.

Lieutenant Maitland joined me with the cavalry part of my escort on the 18th instant.

No. 1214 P., dated Simla, the 30th May 1872.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C. S. I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department.

The important papers forwarded with your letters marginally noted having been fully considered by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, I am now instructed to request that the cordial thanks of the Government of India may be conveyed to Sir W. Merewether for the patience and good judgment displayed by him in the conduct of the difficult negotiations which preceded his settlement of the claims of the lately insurgent Sirdars of Khelat. The conditions imposed by him on the Sirdars, as a necessary preliminary to reconciliation between them and their chief, are considered entirely just and reasonable, and the terms of his closing address to the Sirdars, as stated in paragraph 23 of his report, are regarded by his Excellency in Council as exceedingly well chosen.

No. 2343, dated 20th April.

2. To complete the good effect which that address is calculated to produce, the Sirdars should be given distinctly to understand that his Excellency in Council wishes to see the Khan's authority firmly established throughout the length and breadth of his dominions; that the British Government will encourage him by their advice and countenance in all lawful endeavours towards this end; that they will favour with no countenance or support whatever, but, on the contrary, will regard with strong displeasure any of his subjects, whether Sirdars or ryots, who rebel against or endeavour to subvert his legitimate authority; and that the Sirdars will best consult their own interests and the interests of their ryots, and will most surely secure the favour of the British Government by assisting heartily in the establishment of peace and good order, in protecting traders and putting down robbery and violence.

3. At the same time the Khan should be informed that he will not be countenanced in any high-handed interference with the rights of his nobles and subjects; that if by any such proceedings they are driven into rebellion, he must not look to the British Government to save him from the results of his own misgovernment, although he may rely on receiving such assistance as the British Government may find it possible to give him with the view of maintaining his lawful authority; and that the best security for the stability of his throne is for him to treat his nobles and subjects in a kind and conciliatory way, respect their ancient privileges, honours and rights, and gain a hold on their affections.

4. As to the advisability of the Commissioner's procedure in abstaining from further endeavours to bring Noordeen Mingul within the compass of the reconciliation effected between the other Sirdars and the Khan, his Excellency in Council is disposed to believe that it would be better even yet to hold out to him a direct offer of an amicable settlement, unless, indeed, Sir William Merewether feels sure of the Khan's ability to coerce him. Until the disorders consequent on the Sirdar's continuance in arms are put a stop to, the suppression of the insurrection cannot be considered as complete. Intelligence of the steps taken with this end, and of the measure of success by which they are attended, will, therefore, be anxiously awaited by the Government of India.

5. In conclusion, I am to request that Colonel Phayre may be desired to explain his act in making presents to the late insurgent Sirdars on the day of his departure.

6. With respect to Captain Sandeman's position, the orders issued in my letter of 18th March appear sufficient to prevent misunderstandings in future.

No. 482, dated Kurrachee, the 23rd May 1872.

NEWS REPORT from the 8th to the 15th and the 22nd May 1872.

Syud Thoweynee, the Wuzeer of his Highness Syud Toorkee, Sultan of Muscat, took possession of Gwadur without opposition. The Wuzeer was accompanied by 300 Arab soldiers, and the change of rule was favourably received by the inhabitants. The Wuzeer proposes remaining at Gwadur until the next Gulf steamer passes about the 29th instant.

2. Fever and small-pox have disappeared from the town.

3. On the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed reaching Kozdar, Noordeen Mingul endeavoured to open negotiation. The Shahgassee caused him to be informed that if he surrendered, giving up all the property plundered from kafilas, the guns, &c., obtained by him at Beyla, his life should be guaranteed, but not the chieftainship of the tribe. These terms were offered by the Shahgassee to save the necessity of marching a force into Wudd against Noordeen, which would injure and distress the poorer classes, who had been compelled by circumstances more than inclination to share in the late disturbances. Noordeen has accepted the terms and surrendered to the Shahgassee on the 10th instant, at Kozdar, stating he was prepared to undergo any punishment his Highness the Khan chose to inflict upon him.

4. The Sarawan Sirdars are with the Shahgassee on their way to pay their respects to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

2. With especial reference to the first of these letters, I am to state that Captain Sandeman will be instructed to submit any future remarks which he may have to make about the Murree tribe direct to the Commissioner in Sind, through the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind, Frontier, (to whom quâ the tribe in question he is subordinate,) sending copies of his communications to the Punjab Government for information.

3. I am also to take this opportunity, in reply to your letter No. 2977, dated the 30th May 1872, of conveying approval of the recommendation contained in Colonel Sir William Merewether's memorandum of the 9th idem, to the effect that the Jam of Lus Beyla should be told distinctly that his return to Khelat will not be permitted, except at the request of the Khan.

4. As regards the Commissioner's further suggestion, that the Khan should be presented with two thousand stands of percussion muskets of the old pattern, I am to inform you that this matter will be referred to the Government of India in the Military Department, for consideration. A further communication will be addressed to you on the subject, as soon as the views of that Department thereon have been ascertained.

No. 11 of 1872.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 4th May 1872, dated Kozdar, the 4th May 1872.

Arrived at Kozdar on the 4th instant, and were received about a mile from our camp by Sirdar Meah Mahomed Mingul, Naib Abdul Azeez, Janesheen Goolam Mahomed, and a following of 200 people.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed forwarded several letters from Mekran for my perusal.

Sirdar Meah Bhai Khan has written in a friendly spirit to his Highness the Khan, and reports everything quiet in the neighbourhood of Kedj.

Dad Karreem, Karreem Beg Dandos residing in the district of Kedj, and Meer Morad Bolehdee, bring to his Highness's notice that, owing to their loyalty to him, they have incurred the ill-will of those who were in rebellion.

Mahomed Hoossein, Sooliman, and Moolah Rahmat, of "Kolanch Dusht," write—"We warned Darogah Attah Mahomed that the policy he followed would end disastrously, but he paid no attention to the advice given." The above also report that Naib Ali Jan acted unjustly towards them, but had behaved better since receiving his Highness' instructions.

Shah Oomer, Gitchkee, states that, though the majority of the people in Mekran had been disaffected, he had remained true and loyal, but was obliged to disguise his real sentiments to save himself. Shah Oomer also writes that Nubbee Buksh, Sooliman, and Meer Koonur, of Kolanch, joined in the rebellion, owing to Darogah Attah Mahomed's bad treatment; but that if his Highness would write them a complimentary letter, and tell them to have confidence in him, "Shah Oomer," matters could be satisfactorily arranged.

Meer Esan Gitchkee and Yar Mahomed Soongar bring to his Highness' notice the assistance they afforded to Darogah Attah Mahomed on his leaving Mekran.

Naib Ali Jan writes to his Highness that with only six sowars he is not in a position to collect revenue from people indisposed to pay the same.

Sakur Sajdee, of Mushka, has written to his Highness for assistance against Sirdar Azaad Khan, who is plundering his country.

During the past week Sirdar Noordeen has twice communicated with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, once by letter, and on the last occasion "a verbal message."

The letter was written on the 23rd April addressed to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and the Sarawan chiefs, as follows: (After salaams)—I received your verbal message through Jungee Khan, Raisanee, viz., that you were about to start for Kozdar with Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. He also delivered your other messages. I have dismissed my force and gone to Wud, and Azaad Khan has returned to Kharan now that you have left. I authorize you to treat for me, the Jam, and others concerned, and hope that you will inform me what has been agreed upon.

Jungee Khan tells me that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has made arrangements for himself, but I do not credit this; for it seems extraordinary that he should make terms for himself and forget me. I am greatly concerned about this, for I distinctly authorised Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to act on my behalf. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed ought to have acted as if Wud and Beylah belonged to him. Don't be careless on this point: "now is the time." I have also heard that Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed is coming up the Moolah with a force. Let me know what his intentions are.

The message received on Saturday was to find out what measures were likely to be taken against Sirdar Noordeen and his adherents. On both occasions Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed asked my advice.

I therefore told them that I had no authority to interfere between his Highness the Khan and his chiefs; that the Commissioner in Sind had been deputed by my Government to bring about a friendly settlement, but that as Sirdar Noordeen had declined his good offices, ignored his Highness' proclamation, as also the authority he had given to Sirdar Moolla to act on his behalf, it rested with his Highness the Khan to deal with Sirdar Mahomed Noordeen in such manner as he might deem advisable.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed authorised Sirdar Meah Mahomed to tell the Minguls that if they gave up property plundered from the kafilas, his Highness' guns and mortar, and surrendered Noordeen, they would be forgiven for having taken part in the late disturbances. No reply having as yet been received, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed marches on Ferozeabad, a Mingul village a few miles from this, and has arranged with Shukur Khan, the commandant, that the standing crops are not to be injured and property respected.

The Shahgassee proposes writing to Noordeen, informing him that if he surrenders and gives up the property plundered from kafilas, his Highness' guns, &c., he will guarantee his life, but not the chieftainship of the tribe. These terms are offered by the Shahgassee not out of consideration for Noordeen, but that having to march a force into Wud would ruin and distress the poorer classes, who have been compelled by circumstances to take a share in the late disturbance.

Noor Ali, the son of Sirdar Shere Ali Khan, has written to Sirdar Noordeen regarding the kafila he plundered on the 1st Mohurrum. This letter was entrusted to two Afghans, who passed through Kozdar a few days ago en route to Wud. They informed the Janesheen that Noordeen had been called upon to restore the property, and that if he did not do so he would be punished. Noor Ali also wrote to his Highness the Khan as follows:—

"You are aware that your subjects are annoying kafilas whilst passing through your country, and that they plundered 700 camels laden with wool whilst passing through the Bolan Pass, and that 20 of the merchants were killed and others wounded. I have also heard that Sirdar Noordeen intended to plunder another kafila en route to Khelat, and that they took shelter in the fort of Kozdar, which was then attacked by the above chief. Taking these circumstances into consideration, it was necessary to write to you. These people are evidently beyond your control, and consequently you may not be able to protect the kafilas. The closing of the kafila route causes you loss, reflects unfavourably on you as ruler of the country, and injures the subjects of his Highness the Ameer; the whole world knows of the friendship existing between his Highness the Ameer and yourself, it is apparent as the light of the sun. I am, therefore, hopeful that you will make some arrangements regarding kafilas, so that merchants may traverse your country without danger to life and property. This will be to our mutual advantage. If you are quite incapable of making these arrangements, write and tell me, and I will report the same to his Highness the Ameer, and he will make suitable arrangements for the protection of his subjects."

Copies of letters on this subject are attached.

His Highness has written to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed regarding the raid on the Muzuranee Murrees by the Sumalanees, and Shere Dil's attack on the kafila, stating that the former action was at the instigation of the Sarawan chiefs, hoping to get charge of all kafilas passing through the Bolan, and that the latter, in a reckless frame of mind, attacked the kafila; that he, the Khan, had written to his Naibs at Mustoong and Quetta to recover Shere Dil's property by force, if necessary, and had also written to Shere Dil to keep quiet, explaining that measures had been taken to recover what had been plundered from him. Letters from Attah Mahomed, Naib of Kedj, and the Sumalanees support his Highness' view of this question. The former writes * on the 9th Sufur: I heard that the Minguls and other Brahooees of Mustoong and Kunuk had assembled for the purpose of attacking Shere Dil, Murree. Considering that, as the said Murrees had charge of the Bolan, an attack on them would be injurious to kafilas passing through, I at once started with some sepoys. I met the Brahooees on the Dusht with property plundered from the Murrees. I sent some people to look after a kafila that was coming up. On the Brahooees making a demonstration against me, I sent some Shawanees of rank amongst them, and when they ascertained who I was they abstained from all violent measures. The leading Brahooees were brought to me by the Shawanees. I told them that I should take them and their plunder to Quetta, as they had created a disturbance in the country, and that your Highness would so punish them as to be a warning to others not to act in the same way. Rawut Khan and Kurreem Khan then told me that what they had done had been at the instigation of other people, but declined to give up the names of their advisers."

* Persian letter attached. (Sd.) C. H. H.

The rest of the letter alludes to Shere Dil's attack on the kafila reported in last week's diary.

Naib Abdool Rahman, of Mustoong, writes † to his Highness on this subject—"Your Highness,—On being aware of the disturbance created by Kurreem Khan, Rawut Khan, and Dad Shah, "Sumalanees," I sent Jemadar Afzal Khan to forbid them attacking Shere Dil, and to inform them that they had no right to create any disturbance, so long as Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed was engaged in treaty arrangements at Jacobabad. These evil-disposed people had plundered Shere Dil before the Jemadar arrived. He at once upbraided them for their conduct. In reply they stated that what they had done had been by the advice of all the Sarawanees. The Jemadar took possession of 1,385 goats and sheep and 34 donkeys and handed them over to me. I enclose a paper showing the parties concerned. Kootub Khan, Satukzai, a servant of yours, killed one man, recovered 1,500 sheep and 25 donkeys, and handed them over to the Murrees."

Deposition ‡ by the plundering Sumalanees.

‡ Attached.—(Sd.) C. H. H.

We, the undersigned, of our free will, in the presence of Sooltan Mahomed Shawanee, Syed Roostum Shah, Sheik Mahomed Jaro, "Sahibzada," state that this raid was organized and carried out by the whole of the Sarawanees, and that we would not heed what his Highness' Naibs advised.

The 19th Sufur 1289. (Signed) KURREEM KHAN, RAWUT KHAN, DAD SHAH, and NOOR MAHOMED, } "Sumalanees."

Second paper by Kurreem Khan, Rawut Khan, Kheir Buksh, Dad Shah, and Jaro Mahomed, Sumalanee Minguls, giving the names of those who participated in the plunder, viz. :—

Yusuf Khan Budoozai Khan.
Mahomed " Mahomed Shai."
Morad Buksh " Aba Bukee."
Zureef Khan Peer Khanee.
Zuruk, Johanee } " Sahukzai Koords."
Moobaruk Shawanee " Sooreezai."
Guddo " Dinarzai."
Subz Ali " Keahzai."
Hotewan " Mahomed Hussunee."
Ala Buksh " Sassoolee."
Hajee Khan " Rodenee."
Bursham " Jaddee."
Shere Ali " Lehree."
Beg Mahomed " Gooroog Naree."
Hybut and Rehein Khan, sons of Butteh Bahadoor " Shoranzai."

We further state that this raid was effected before Jemadar Afzul Khan arrived. On his ordering us to give up the plunder, most of the Brahooees refused; some of it, however, was returned in presence of Subedar Mahomed Yar, " Moonshee Mahomed Sudeek," " Dad Kurreem " Arhab, Beig Mahomed Khwajee Khail Mustee Khan, Shaik Futteh Khan, Johanee Koodoo Nijao, and others.

" Kurreem Khan, Rawut Khan, and Dad Shah also write * to his Highness the Khan:

* Copy attached.—(Sd.) C. H. H.

" (After salaams)—Your Highness will know ere this that the raid we have committed was with the full approval of all the Sarawan people, and that we have furnished a list showing amongst whom it was distributed.

" Kootub Khan, Sutukzao, killed one of our party and recovered 1,200 sheep. We are quite willing to suffer any punishment you may order. The rest of the Sarawans are as guilty as we are."

Sirdar Abdool Kardar, the imbecile chief of the Shawanees, died a few days ago, and has been succeeded by his eldest son.

Sirdar Meah Kaira, son of the Bezonjao chief, Faqueer Mahomed, Sirdar Pahar Khan, Sassoolee, Hyat Khan, son of Sakur Sajdeo, and other minor chiefs, have visited me.

Darogah Attah Mahomed, though reinforced by a detachment from Khelat, never attempted to prevent Sirdar Azaad Khan raiding, and allowed him to pass by Geedur, eight miles from Sohrab, where his camp was pitched. His Highness some time ago ordered Attah Mahomed to support the garrison at Kozdar, but he avoided marching on various pretences, though he received most urgent letters from Naib Abdool Azeez and Janesheen Gootano Mahomed.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has written very strongly to the Darogah about not proceeding to Kozdar, reported his conduct to his Highness the Khan, and suggested that, as the Darogah appeared disinclined to move, some one else ought to be sent to relieve him.

Sirdar Noordeen, when at Kozdar, sent Goolam Mahomed, Shahzai, to Ali Khan, Jamote, stating that he had surrounded the fort, expected to take it in a day or two, and wanted rice, flour, ghee, &c., for his people. Ali Khan, hearing that Noordeen had failed in his attempt on Kozdar, ordered Goolam Mahomed to be turned out of Beylah, telling him at the same time that he had nothing to do with Noordeen or the Minguls.

It is currently reported that the Roonjas and Jamotes have quarrelled amongst themselves and that a serious fight is likely to ensue.

Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copies submitted to Government for information. A subsequent telegram reports that Noordeen Mingul had accepted the terms offered by the Shahgassee.

The Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, has been instructed to obtain further report on the subject of the raid made by the Sumalanee Minguls, and what orders his Highnees the Khan finally issued in the matter. It is expected that on the Shahgassee rejoining his Highness the Khan at Khelat, these and other questions will be disposed of.

Enclosure in No. 63.

Dated Khozdar, the 11th May 1872.

Diary No. 12 of 1872 by the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 11th May 1872.

His Highness, writing to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, states "that the Sarawans "who participated in the plunder of the Muzuranee Murrees, are trying to evade "restoring the same."

In last week's diary it was stated that Sirdar Noordeen, Mingul, had been offered terms by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed being unsupported by his tribe. He surrendered himself to the Shahgassee on the 10th instant, stating that his object in creating this last disturbance was on the ex-Jam's account, having failed in his object. His Highness was at liberty to imprison him, take his life, or act in any way he might deem advisable. Sirdar Noordeen has also undertaken to restore the kafila property and his Highness' guns, &c.

The Kafila Bashi of the kafila plundered by Noordeen has visited me several times, stating that he considered the English Government responsible to him for his property, or value of the same. I explained that no such responsibility existed, but that I would exert my influence with his Highness and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to recover the same.

A large kafila was just arrived from Kurrachee.

Darogah Atta Mahomed has arrived with his detachment at Bhagwana, but will probably return to Khelat, now that no further disturbances are apprehended in this part of the country.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed intends sending letters to the principal chiefs in Beyla, calling upon them to come to Khelat, after which arrangements will be made for the government of that district.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed proceeded to Ferozabad as intended, and hopes to march on Bhagwana on the 13th instant. I also propose proceeding towards Khelat about the same date.

Enclosure in No. 65.

Diary No. 13, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 18th May 1872.

ANOTHER Pathan kafila has been plundered at the Musjid between Much and Siri Bolan. The merchants twice repulsed the marauders, though they were over one thousand strong; eventually they were overpowered, and their property taken from them. It is currently reported that these plunderers were from different Murree tribes; it has also been stated that Alladdina Koord and his people were within a few yards of where the attack occurred, and they appropriated some of the plunder. "This requires confirmation."

His Highness in writing to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed informed him that Abdool Rahman had taken Balkh, and that his Highness the Ameer had ordered twenty-five guns and the troops at Candahar to form part of the force ordered to proceed to Balkh.

Abdool Luteef, the Naib of Quettah, writes to his Highness that the property plundered from Shere Dil Murree has been distributed amongst the people in Mustung, Kunuk, Ispilmeji, and Murao, and that force will be required to recover the same.

Before leaving Kutchee Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed ordered the Naibs to send all kafilas by the Moolah Pass. At Gundegao, two marches from Khelat, we met five hundred camels laden with piece-goods; and the merchants reported that this only composed half of their kafila, and that the rest of the camels were only a march or two behind.

Had the Naib of Dadur followed the Shahgassee's instructions, the catastrophe in the Bolan would have been avoided.

No. 34 S., dated Simla, 18th June 1872.

From Officiating Secretary to the Government of Punjab to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, with Governor General.

I AM directed to forward correspondence submitted by Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, relating to the treatment of the Murree tribe, together with a copy of a telegram despatched this day to the Commissioner of the Derajat Division.

2. In the opinion of his Honour, whilst it is absolutely necessary that Captain Sandeman should act in subordination to Sir W. Merewether in his treatment of the Murree tribe, yet, taking into consideration how much exposed the frontier is to their depredations, it is equally desirable that the grievances alleged by them against the Khan of Khelat should be investigated by the Commissioner in Sind without delay and satisfactorily adjusted, otherwise it is to be feared that, without any cessation of the outrages in the Bolan Pass, the disturbances on the Dehra Ghazee Khan frontier will be renewed, and the conciliatory measures which have put a stop to them for some years past will become nugatory.

Telegram, dated 10th June 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether to Captain Sandeman.

AFTER the way the Murrees have behaved lately in plundering kafilas in the Bolan I neither can nor will have anything to say to them until the plundered property is given up. I consider it therefore very unadvisable that the Murrees should be treated with as if nothing had happened, or that kafilas should be allowed to enter their country from ours. The Moolla is quite safe and open to the kafilas, and so would the Bolan be but for the misconduct of these Murrees.

Telegram, dated 10th June 1872.

From Captain Sandeman to Commissioner in Sind.

I HAVE sent instructions to send kafila to Jacobabad. I will attend willingly to any instructions you send. My demi-official of 4th explains the necessity of moving troops to Hurrund, if I break off relations with Murrees. By unity of action I believe it is quite possible to coerce Murrees into surrendering plundered kafila property.

Telegram, dated 10th June 1872.

From Captain Sandeman to Officer Commanding, Rajunpoor.

SEND for the Tehsildar and direct him to send an express to the Muzari chief, Imam Buksh Khan, not to allow the Usterana kafila to go viâ the Murree Hills, but send it to Jacobabad to go viâ the Moolla Pass. The matter is urgent.

Enclosure 7 in No. 66.

Translation of a Letter from Tomundar Ghuzzun Khan, chief of the Murree clan, to Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, dated Kahun, 19th May 1872.

I HAVE understood the state of affairs from my brothers Mehroolla and from Shahan Khan. I am greatly pleased. I sent Hajee, the brother of Shahan, to Seebee about affairs there, as you directed. I send papers from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Buktear Khan, Barakzai. I received your order that I was to come direct to you, when sent for, and that I would get the order direct and not through any of the Ghazi chiefs. I will attend to this and to any orders I receive, and am very much pleased with the order that you will send for me direct. When you do direct my attendance, please send a very reliable sowar for me, for my enemies are many.

Shere Dil, Muzzerani, collected his people, and in the Bolan Pass attacked and looted a kafila; 40 Pathans and three Murrees were killed. The Murrees looted 120 camels, 500 donkeys, 40 horses, and a very large amount of property.

Kukkul, Bijarani Murree (a chief of this section of the tribe), who was wounded, is dead.

No letter came with this from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, The letter itself went astray and has only turned up to-day, but I send it to show how willingly these men will work with us if they find it is in their interests to do so, and they have confidence and faith in the way they will be treated. When Ghuzzun Khan first undertook my service he told me plainly that he could not be responsible for the Muzzerani or Bijarani Murrees with regard to their looting in Khelat, as they had grievances which required redress at the hands of the Khan of Khelat. That he (Ghuzzun Khan) had been turned out of his lands in Kutchee, and until he was righted he would not engage to serve the Khan and protect Kutchee from the tribe. I remember well saying to him,—"But the Khan "is your Sirdar, you ought to serve him." He never hesitated in his reply, but said quickly—"Sahib, if the Khan would right me and my tribe I would take service with "the Khan at Rupees 10 a month for each sowar, and do it as well as I do for you at "Rupees 20 for each sowar," or words to that effect, i.e., he meant that what he would do for me for Rupees 20 he would do for the Khan for Rupees 10. I felt convinced of his truth and that he had no disloyal feelings towards the Khan, and I have seen no reason to change my opinion. The above is what actually passed, and when I wrote Sir Henry Green that my arrangements with the Murrees were only in connexion with the Punjab border, and that Ghuzzun Khan could not engage on account of the service I gave him to protect the Khelat roads from marauders, he said—"I was quite "at liberty to make any arrangements that I liked, and then he would look after the "Khan's affairs, and for me not to bother myself about them," or words to that effect.

The state of affairs between the Muzzerani chief Sher Dil and Kenchi Khan and the Tomundar of the tribe, Ghuzzun Khan, I do not quite know.

The Muzzeranis against the desire of the tribe took service with the Khan for the protection of the Bolan Pass, and used to escort the kafilas from Shawl Kote to Dadur. From other sources of information I learn that the reason why the Muzzeranis looted the kafila named in Ghuzzun's letter was because a body of Minguls (Brahooees) had first attacked Sher Dil and killed two of his men. He lost a son it is said and appealed to the Khan for aid, but got no redress.

In retaliation he attacked and looted the kafila as described by Ghuzzun Khan.

In my telegrams to Sir William Merewether above recorded, I say that I believe the Murrees can be coerced into the surrender of the plunder, which by all accounts is great. I say coerced because I do not believe any other measures would enable the chiefs. even if they were willing to aid in the recovery of the plunder, to get hold of it now that it has been divided by the marauders. Fear of the consequences of retaining it alone would compel its surrender.

The Murree tribe is a very unruly one, but there are elements of great good in it, which, if utilized, might produce a lasting benefit to all connected with it. I feel fully persuaded, and I do not talk without considerable experience of the tribe and its ways, that no peaceful solution of the Khelat question will ever be arrived at, nor will quiet and progress on the Punjab border be ensured till our arrangements embrace the settlement of the whole clan in their own country. To do this I know to be perfectly feasible, but we must begin by having right on our side. I believe this at present we have not, and that it was a political mistake the leaving of the grievances of this clan to be taken up at any time as suited our convenience. They knew and understood all that was passing around them, and I know as a certainty that Colonel Phayre, if not Sir Henry Green, also promised that some day their grievances would be redressed, and I myself understood that the intention was that they should ultimately get back the service they formerly enjoyed for the protection of Kutchee and the Bolan Pass prior to the reduction of the Khan's allowance from a lakh to half a lakh. I fully understood that all that was required to enable us to settle with the Murrees was the additional allowance lately granted by the Government of India. The present complications with this powerful tribe are the result of not doing so, and they seem to me of a very grave nature.

Since I left Jacobabad I was told by the Murree chief's confidential agent that Ghuzzun Khan was greatly mortified at not being summoned with the other Khelat Sirdars to the meeting at Jacobabad, as he counts himself one of the chiefs of the Khanate of Khelat. I have heard it openly talked of that when Sir Henry Green, at the head of the Brahooee army, marched against the Murrees to punish them on account of their conduct during 1856–57, that the other Khelat Sirdars, who were with the force, told the Murree Sirdar to give in his submission as he was a Sirdar, and they had come all to demand it. They said that they would put it all right with the Shahgassee and the Khan. The Murree tribe then submitted, and the Khelat army returned home; but no arrangements for the future were come to, and no inquiry as to the causes which led to Murree raids was made; the consequences are that we have these raids to the present day, and the tribe is day by day getting more unruly and unmanageable.

The very fact of the Muzaranis and Khan Murrees respectively taking service with the Khan of Khelat and the Punjab Government for (on the one hand) the protection of the Bolan trade, and (on the other) that of the Punjab borders, by fair inference proves that the entire clan, if properly managed, are capable of doing good service to both the Khan of Khelat and the British Government, which would by degrees change from being a band of unruly robbers and plunderers to a fairly conducted people.

I believe inquiry would show that the Murree Tomundar, like the other Sirdars, is entitled to a position in the Khanate of Khelat, and that his being ousted from this, as he considers such loss of honour, is his principal grievance.

P.S.—The Murrees, if admitted to form part of the Khanate of Khelat, could, as I am prepared to show, be held easily in hand, when raids could not be committed, as at present, with impunity, that is to say, if the Khanate itself was only fairly governed. I have not sent a copy of this to Sir W. Merewether as it did not seem necessary to do so.

Enclosure 8 in No. 66.

Telegram, dated 13th June 1872.

From Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee, to Captain Sandeman, Dera Ghazee Khan.

I certainly consider it most desirable that Murree chief should be made to understand that late conduct of tribe in regard to kafilas in Bolan cannot be put up with, and pressure should be brought to bear on them to give up plundered property. I certainly will not enter into any arrangements with Murree chiefs until the property is given up, and you are authorised so to inform the head. Under these circumstances it would, I think, be better that you should put off your interview with chief if your work can wait, giving above also as reason.

Enclosure 9 in No. 66.

Telegram, dated 13th June 1872.

From Captain Sandeman, Dera Ghazee Khan, to Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

I will at once attend to your instructions. If you determine that tribe must restore property, I suggest that very decisive coercive measures should be taken from Punjab, Sind, and Khelat. The Murree country is quite open and accessible from Hurrund. I know every road leading to it, and believe strict military blockade would result in the surrender of plunder. Shall I submit my views for approval? I will cordially co-operate in any measures you decide upon taking, but these ought not to be delayed if you are to recover the property, which under any circumstances must be matter of difficulty. Murree chiefs are now assembled at Kahun in council, probably to consider how to dispose of plunder.

Telegram, dated 12th June 1872.

From Captain Sandeman, Dera Ghazee Khan, to Sir William Merewether, Kurrachee.

I had fixed to go to Hurrund in a few days to have a friendly interview with Murree Tomundar about my own border affairs. Your telegram about kafila seems to render this undesirable now. What course shall I pursue?

Enclosure 11 in No. 66.

From Lieutenant-Governor, Simla, to Commissioner, Derajat.

Captain Sandeman demi-officially states that to enforce Sir W. Merewether's measures against the Murrees, it is necessary to bring the posts up to their full strength and blockade the tribe. As the peace of the Dera Ghazee Khan frontier is brought in question, you must keep yourself informed of all Captain Sandeman's doings and control them, and if necessary, go to Dera Ghazee for the purpose.

I am desired to forward copy of a letter addressed by Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 18th June 1872, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy. I am to observe that the Lieutenant-Governor considers this letter proper and reasonable, In the views therein expressed by Captain Sandeman his Honour fully concurs, and would urge their early enforcement.

Enclosure in No. 68.

Dated 18th June 1872.

From Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazee Khan, to Commissioner in Sind.

On receipt of your telegram regarding sending the Usterana kafila viâ the Moolla Pass, I at once sent orders to Rajhan, directing that your instructions should be complied with, and to-day I have received notice from Rajhan that it has been sent on to Jacobabad in charge of trustworthy men.

I propose carrying out your instructions with regard to the Murrees in the following way:—

I have sent for the Murree Vakeel, who is a relation of Ghuzzun's, and I will inform him that there are no hopes of their ever being reconciled to the Khan, or of their being taken into favour, unless they surrender the kafila property looted by the tribe in the Bolan Pass. I will also tell him that you have directed that the friendly intercourse that has hitherto existed between myself and the tribe cannot be allowed to continue unless they do as you have directed, and that therefore I must decline to receive Ghuzzun for the present to settle the Gurchani case. If you desire me to communicate anything further to the chiefs, on receiving your instructions I will do as you desire.

I think it is only right now to place before you, for favourable consideration, the position that I have held with regard to the Murrees, and the very serious trouble it may give to us here should I break with them entirely. As recommended in one of my telegrams, as far as I am concerned, it would be a very great blessing if you determined to coerce the tribe into the surrender of the looted property, to do so by blockading it from Sind, the Punjab, and Khelat. If we do not adopt decided measures, I fear the revival of the old blood feuds between the tribe and our subjects, and which have only after great trouble been healed. I set about healing the feud between the Murrees, Drishuks, Muzaris, and Gurchanis under the following circumstances:—

Towards the close of the year 1866 the Murrees and Boogtees led by the noted robber chieftain, Gholam Hussain, made a raid on a large scale on Hurrund. We were prepared for them, and the raiders were beaten off with the loss of 250 killed and their leader, Gholam Hussain; on our side we lost some seven or eight men killed, amongst the latter one of our chiefs, and had 60 men wounded, besides several hamlets were burnt, the damage done amounting to some thousands of rupees.

With the consent of the Commissioner of the Derajat I addressed Sir Henry Green on the subject, asking him if he could not, under the terms of the treaty with Khelat, afford our subjects compensation for their losses. To this application Sir H. Green replied in the following words:—

"I have to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 10th instant (10th December 1866) "regarding a Murree raid and other frontier matters. With regard to the raid, the "Murrees being Belooch are certainly subjects of the Khan of Khelat, and are held by "him under about the same control as the Afreedees of the hills surrounding the Peshawur "Valley are by the Ruler of Cabul, and any complaint of their conduct to the Khan "would be of as much use as the Commissioner of Peshawur bringing to the notice of the "Ameer the conduct of the said Afreedees. The Murrees now and then try a raid on "my frontier, and I trust to the alertness and activity of my frontier posts for their defeat "and nothing to the influence of the Khan; if they succeed in carrying off my cattle, my "Native officers suffer, but I would certainly not complain to the Khan on account of "the want of activity of my own people. I allow no cattle to proceed beyond the line of "my posts, &c. &c." Sir Henry concludes his letter by saying that the Khan himself from Murree "depredations" at present suffers "very much more than we do."

Since the letter quoted above was written 5½ years have passed. Finding I could not get aid from Khelat through the Political Superintendent, I set about doing what I could for myself. I got in the Murree chiefs, formed an alliance with them and gave them service, and since then not one of our people inside our border line has been touched by them. The Gurchani, who was killed in January last, met his fate inside Khelat territory, for the Khelat line runs just outside our border from the hill called Gaindair in front of the Muzari country to Hurrund. I have visited Kahun escorted by the Murrees themselves, sent kafilas through their country, and I have increased our salt trade many thousands of rupees yearly. When I first came here we used to get Rupees 300 yearly for the contract, or Rupees 900 for three years. Nearly three years ago I sold it for Rupees 21,500, and very soon again I will be in a position to resell it; and unless our trade is put a stop to, I expect to get from Rupees 30,000 to 35,000 for the contract. How accessible the Murree Hills had become and how friendly the chiefs are is surely proved from the fact that even Sher Dil, the Muzerani chief, who has caused all the present trouble, came on my summons, and was ready and willing to give his people to act as an escort for General Pollock's mission en route to Candahar until he reached the Kakurs. I again, however, repeat that all these considerations will not prevent my most hearty co-operation in requiring the Murrees, by coercive measures if necessary, to surrender the stolen property. All that I would entreat of you is to put the question fairly to them, as to surrender or no surrender, and that if the reply was the latter, that we should be in a position to put the question to the issue; for in a trial of strength we must in the long run succeed, when our little quarrel, for such only it would be, would make us stronger with them than ever. What I do dread is drifting into a petty war of reprisals, which results by doing more harm to our subjects than to the hill people, and creates in the minds of the latter that bitterness of feeling which a blood feud alone can engender against our name and rule.

A feeling which did exist, but which by patience and perseverence in my dealings with these very hill chiefs I have succeeded (which I trust results have proved) in removing to a very great extent.

I have written you at length, as such is the desire of the Government, and with the earnest hope of convincing you that, although I believe in my own way of dealing with these hill tribes, I am perfectly prepared to do all I can to aid in the success of any schemes you may consider it necessary to adopt for the recovery of the stolen property. Sir H. Green's letter quoted above shows that I was led to believe that Khelat requirements would not interfere with those of the Punjab. This the Murrees knew, otherwise they would not have taken service, and this I over and over again explained to Sir Henry Green. I understood both him and Colonel Phayre to agree that some day the entire question would be fairly considered, and that if the Murree chiefs had real grievances against the Khelat State they would be redressed. I trust that, after perusing this letter, that in whatever way you may consider it necessary to deal with the Murree chiefs on account of their relations with me, and the circumstances under which they were brought about, my plan for the recovery of the stolen property may meet with due consideration.

SIR, Dated 26th June 1872.

I AM desired to forward, for the information of the Government of India, copy of Captain Sandeman's report and annexures on Khelat and border affairs, and to state that copy of the sketch map to which he refers will be forwarded hereafter.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1 in No. 69.

No. 229, dated Dera Ghazí Khan, 10th April 1872.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazí Khan, to the Officiating Secretary to Government, Punjab.

I HAVE the honour to forward copy of the report that I was directed to submit to the Commissioner in Sind on the subject of present state of Khelat affairs, and the effect they have had or may have hereafter on the British border.

2. Since writing my report I have received, for my information, copy of a diary kept by Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent on the Frontier, from the 28th of February last to the 20th of March, the date on which he left for England. The Political Superintendent has given me permission to make any use of it that I choose, and, as I consider it of value, I have made it an annexure to this letter.

3. The Political Superintendent, at the same time that he sent me his diary, also sent for my information copies of petitions in the vernacular, presented by the Khelat Sirdars of Sarawan to the Commissioner in Sind. These so fully illustrate many of the statements contained in my report to the Commissioner in Sind that I also forward them translated into English, with vernacular copies of the originals attached.

4. To illustrate my portion of the Khelat subject, I have had prepared as carefully as circumstances would permit the sketch map enclosed, showing the position of the Sind and Lower Derajat borders. I have had carefully traced on it the routes from Sakki Sarwar, the Chachar Pass, and Rojhan to Kandahar, by which a large trade at one time with British India and the countries beyond was successfully carried on not long prior to British rule.

5. By referring to the sketch map, if you include the Hurrund Dajal Illaqua as well as the Murree and Boogtee hills as a part of the Khelat State, as shown in green on the map, it will readily be understood why it is that Khelat matters generally are of such vital importance to the prosperity and progress of this portion of the Punjab.

6. The State of Khelat itself, before we interfered in her affairs, extended in the north to Shaulkot, or, as called by us, Quetta; to the sea on the coast of Mekran; from the frontier of Persia beyond Kharan and Punjgur on the west; to Sind and the Punjab on the east.

7. When our officers in 1838 first became acquainted with this State, the Government of the country was a confederacy of Khan and nobles, and the Murrees, Boogtees, and Gurchanís were subjects of the Khanate; and it was not until our troops attacked the Khan and took his country that Ranjít Singh, taking advantage of the turn affairs had taken, seized Hurrund Dajal and annexed that portion of the Khan's territory to the Punjab.

8. Our treatment of the Khanate then and since, I respectfully submit, has led to the present disorganized state of the country, as I will now endeavour to show, and to much loss of life.

'9. Shortly after Ranjít Singh's death, no one having been found able to fill the place of that astute ruler, the whole of this part of the country fell into a state of anarchy. The Khelat Sirdars, at the desire of the Khelat Government it is said, raided into the country in retaliation for the conduct of the Sikh Government and in the endeavour to recover the stolen province, and all became anarchy and confusion; but it was not until about four years prior to annexation that the once flourishing trade that found its way through the Murree country from above the Bolan Pass, by the routes shown in the map, entirely ceased. The Murrees at that time, partly the results of the Cabul war, got quite unruly, and it was not until then that they threw off all the restraints of good government and took to plundering and to predatory life, making thieving their pursuits and robbery a means of livelihood.

10. In the days of Mehrab Khan the feudal army of the Khanate when called into the field was composed of the two great families of Sarawan and Jalawan, with the hereditary chiefs at their head; a regular organisation hardly to be believed in the present day, but the memory of which is still dearly cherished by the chiefs, existed; and it thus happened that the State of Khelat held a position in the country that enabled her to hold her own against all comers with the exception of the British.

11. The Murree, Boogtee, and Gurchani clans, in the days of which I write, were included in the Sarawans, and they not only rendered feudal service to the State, but paid tribute to the Khan of Khelat.

12. Were the Khanate of Khelat properly settled under her Khan, and the nobles of the country happy and contented, and in the possession of their rights, the Murree clan would be perfectly helpless to do evil. In short, with the Sarawan tribe once again properly organised under their hereditary chief, the Murree clan, as a natural result, would take the place in the country which it occupied until, by our attack upon Khelat itself, we afforded the opportunity to Ranjít Singh to annex Hurrund Dajal and separate this province of Khelat from the Khanate.

13. But, to make matters worse, at the annexation of the Punjab we did not fix our border according to the possessions of our new subjects. We made an arbitrary border line, leaving the principal and most valuable lands of the Gurchani clan outside our territory, and nominally included in that of Khelat. It thus happens that a portion of the Gurchani clan are subjects of the British Government and a portion of the Khelat State. Only one result has accrued from this unhappy arrangement, viz., very great confusion and anarchy, as well as injustice to all concerned.

14. But this has been conspicuously the result to the doubly unfortunate Gurchani clan, which was divided into two portions. As long as the British portion remained within our arbitrary boundary, we told them that they should enjoy British protection, but that if they went into Khelat they must share the fortunes of Khelat subjects.

15. In the hot months it is an absolute necessity that the flocks and herds of the Gurchani clan graze on their Khelat lands, and, as the doing so causes them to lose British protection, and none is afforded by the Khelat Government, they at once fall a prey to the depredations of their fellow subjects, the Murree robbers.

16. The result of this is that we keep up and cherish by our own bad arrangements a state of things that is as much a misfortune, if not more so, to the British Government than it is to that of Khelat. We have the power, if we would only exercise the will, with a very little trouble, to afford protection to the entire Gurchani clan. Since I have held charge of this district, in consequence of the arrangements above described, over 800 lives have been sacrificed and much property lost, thereby causing much sorrow and great privation to many a poor family.

17. But, although this is greatly to be deplored, it is not the worst feature in the case. On account of the Gurchani and Murree clans having at one time been under a fairly conducted government, their respective countries are well defined and perfectly known, and in consequence no boundary dispute has ever existed. But on account of the way the two tribes have been situated towards each other and their respective Governments, and because of the geographical position of their countries, which join on to each other for many miles in front of Hurrund, plundering each other's cattle, and taking each other's lives, has been a matter of daily occurrence; and the doing so was at one time, indeed has been so until very lately, treated as a matter of course.

18. To the Gurchani clan especially, split up, as described, into two portions, the result has been most disastrous. The best culturable portion of their country, parts of which consist of valuable lands irrigated by perennial streams, is lying waste and empty, which has rendered the clan as a body poor and often nearly desperate, forcing them, as the annals of my office fully show, to become robbers by trade in British territory. Until I was able to make some arrangements with the Murree clan for their better protection their position was nearly hopeless; and it was only the attachment to their country and lands, so conspicuous in Belooch character, that made them hold life rather than abandon them entirely as not worth having.

19. Although it forms an important portion of my subject, I will not enter more fully than I have done in my report to the Commissioner in Sind on the family ties that exist between the Mazari and Drishuk clans and the subjects of Khelat; suffice it to say that the two Drishuk chiefs are married to Murree ladies. The Mazari chief's family and his tribe are intermarried with the Murrees, Boogtees, and Koords. The latter clan inhabit the Bolan Pass and the Dusht and Murrow plain about Shaul, and are also in turn intermarried with the Dúmers, a section of the Kahar Pathans. Alladina, the Sirdar of the Koords, whose petition to the Commissioner in Sind is attached, is cousin to Ghuzzi Khan, the headman of Shahwali.* Their grandfathers were the same. Surely, then, when we have the clans on this border so intimately connected by old family ties, to treat them, as we have done since their connexion with us, as two distinct peoples, must result, as has hitherto been the case, in confusion and disaster.

See map.

* In the Punjab, a village near Kurrum.

20. It is far from my desire to lower or in any way interfere with the position of his Highness the Khan of Khelat. In fact my object is to see his Government as strong as a healthy treaty with our Government can make it, and that, instead of the undignified and helpless position it has lately held, its strength may be felt up to the Punjab border in the same way as British power and influence is felt up to the Khelat border; but this can never be hoped for or expected until the Government of the Khanate of Khelat, with the aid of British officers, undertakes to protect her entire territory and Punjab subjects as well as her own from violence and robbery.

21. This can only be done, in my opinion, by our future arrangements admitting of the Punjab and Sind officers acting together in concert in the common interests of the British Government and that of the Khelat State. Late events ought surely to have convinced our Government of this, and that the sooner we recognise the necessity for this the better it will be for all concerned, whether they are connected with the Punjab, Sind, or Khelat.

22. To keep up any distinction is suicidal to our interests, and as unjust to our subjects as to those of Khelat, preventing as it does all progress. I feel convinced that further persistence in the old system will assuredly again result in more bloodshed, more especially on the Hurrund frontier, where the Gurchani, Mazari, and Drishuk tribes have nothing to fall back on, should the present arrangements with the Murree and Boogtee tribes be at any time broken off.

Enclosure 2 in No. 69.

Dated Camp, Jacobabad, 6th March 1872.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, on Special Duty, Jacobabad, to the Commissioner in Sind.

I HAVE the honour to submit the following remarks and observations on the present position of affairs in the Khelat State:—

2. On the 18th December 1871 I arrived at Jacobabad, and held a long consultation with the Political Superintendent, Colonel Phayre, on the then position of affairs on the two borders; we were of opinion that on account of the insurrection they were critical.

3. I had only recently traversed the Murree and Boogtee Hills. Both clans were very excited, and the chiefs informed me that it was with the greatest difficulty they prevented their people joining the Brahooee Sirdars in the plundering of Kutchee.

4. The Murree chiefs, Meeroola and Shere Muhammad, with whom I had a personal interview, were most anxious as to what might happen. They told me that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had arrived from Kandahar, and had placed himself at the head of the Sarawans. They also said, which I knew before, that there was a private understanding between him and their Sirdar, Ghuzzun.

5. At Boogtee, Duyra, the young chief of the Boogtees, seemed to think that it was very hard indeed that his tribe could not join in the disturbances. I told him plainly that what the Murrees might do was quite a different matter from their attempting a similar course. I assured him that on my knowing that one Boogtee had joined the insurrection, if he was not at once apprehended and made over to me, that, as far as I was concerned, the result would certainly be the loss of British friendship and protection hitherto enjoyed.

6. Colonel Phayre told me that similar excitement existed in the minds of the Beloochis on the Sind border, and altogether we naturally felt anxious as to the turn events might take. I have for years exerted myself in the interests of peace with the Murree tribe. My anxiety was, therefore, considerable as to the consequences that might result from a prolongation of the disturbances.

7. This we hoped might be avoided, for it was known that a truce for the time being had been made between the insurgent Sirdars and the Khan's agent in Kutchee, Nawab Muhammad Khan. The position of affairs at that time in Khelat itself was briefly as follows:—

8. The rebel Sirdars had attacked the Khan's troops at Mustung; a victory was claimed by both sides. The result actually was that the Shahgassee and Prime Minister, who commanded the troops, lost a good number of men and was himself severely wounded. On the side of the rebels, Jehangeer their leader was killed, and with him several men of respectability.

9. The rebels, after summoning the exiled Sirdars, Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen, from Kandahar, overran the province of Kutchee, captured Bagh, Gundava, Dadur, and Shaul. These places were all plundered, and several of the Khan's officials were put to death.

10. The Khan's army, after these events, had, after considerable delay, been put in motion, and marched viâ the Moolla Pass to Gundava. The agent of the Khan, on getting there, found the rebel forces in position at Mittree and Haji-ka-Shere.

11. But, instead of attacking the insurgents, after consideration, he found that even "one victory," as I heard him afterwards myself express it to Colonel Phayre, "was doubtful, while defeat would be utter ruin." He said he had not the means to conquer a whole people. In plain terms I heard him tell Colonel Phayre that the whole Brahooee nation was in arms against the Khan.

12. In addition to the state of affairs in Kutchee, on my way to Jacobabad I heard that Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and Ali Khan Jamote had taken Lus Beyla, the Khan's troops having fled without firing a shot.

13. Just before I arrived at Jacobabad the terms of peace offered to the Sirdars by the Khan's agent were accepted conditionally on their being ratified before Colonel Phayre, the Political Superintendent. The Sirdars and the agent of the Khan were on their way to Jacobabad for the purpose.

14. By order of Sir William Merewether the Sirdars were refused permission to enter Jacobabad, and were directed to remain at a village on the border.

15. The agent of the Khan, Nawab Muhammad Khan, alone was allowed to come to Jacobabad. On his arrival, the Commissioner inquired of him if he had made terms by permission of the Khan with the insurgents; he said he had made the treaty without having first obtained the Khan's consent.

16. After consulting with the Political Superintendent, Colonel Phayre, who sent for me to tell me that the Commissioner considered that until the Khan's consent was obtained he could not interfere, I asked and obtained an interview with Sir William Merewether.

17. I told the Commissioner in Sind my view of affairs, expressing an opinion that I hoped peace could be maintained. I further said that I thought that the telegram of the Viceroy, No. 42 A. C. P., dated 22nd November 1871, to the Governor of Bombay —a copy of which I had, and which I showed him—permitted mediation.

18. The Commissioner thought differently; he said he had the interests of all to consider; that they had been specially entrusted to him; that the proposed peace was derogatory to the Khan; therefore without his consent he could not permit its ratification.

19. Thus the hopes of peace being for the time ended, the Sirdars returned to their people, and the agent went to take command of the Khan's forces and prepare for war.

20. What actually happened after this is doubtful. The Khan's commander declares that he was attacked by the insurgents; the latter declare they were attacked before the Sirdars rejoined them. Be that as it may, it is certain that a fight did take place, and that 30 to 40 Brahooees were killed.

21. In retaliation for this, two kafilas passing through the Bolan Pass were attacked by the Sirdars, and property plundered to the value of nearly a lakh of rupees. Twelve of the kafila people were killed and 19 wounded, amongst them a woman, who afterwards died of her wounds at Jacobabad.

22. Shortly after this an insurrection was reported to have broken out in Mekran. Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, was said to threaten Major Harrison's camp at Kozdar. The Jamotes talked of destroying the Indo-European telegraph line. An attack on the Sirdars by the Khan's troops had failed, and the latter had fallen back to Dadur. The Murree clan were known to have openly joined in the fight. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was reported to have met the Murree chiefs at a conference at Moondaie, at which they decided to carry on the war on a large scale, directly it got a little warmer, into Kutchi and Khorasan.

23. Their intentions were said to be to first attack the Khan's troops with a view to expelling them from Kutchi; afterwards the Sirdars were to be met at Kozdar by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, at the head of the Jalawans, when they intended to possess themselves of the whole country, eventually taking Khelat itself.

24. That this was a certain result had the war been continued there cannot be a doubt.

25. There was clear and satisfactory intelligence that the Sirdars, according to their old traditional policy, had become firm confederates. Their councils were guided by Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen, who were in perfect accord as to their future designs and movements. They had been together too long in exile not to know that the time for action, if they were ever to take it, had come.

26. To those who are aware of the nature of my connexion with the Murree clan it will at once be admitted that my information as to what their intentions really were was beyond a question. I was informed that the Khan's agent, Nawab Mahomed Khan, had been intriguing with the Bijarani Murrees, and it was said that, after he had paid to them in the hope of securing their services a considerable sum of money, they had given him a flat refusal to join him.

27. The murder in front of Hurrund by Murrees, though doubtless done in revenge on account of an old blood feud, was still perpetrated, I believe, on account of the tribe's intention to join Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and with the object of getting rid of my alliance.

28. I consider that a review of the state of matters at the time of which I write will show that the entire Khelat State, including the hill tribes, was in active insurrection against the Khan. The Murrees joining showed that the insurrectionary spirit was spreading to the Belooch; some chiefs were still passively loyal to the Khan; but they could not, had the war continued, have hoped to remain so.

29. The question then arises as to what led to such a deplorable state of affairs. In my opinion it was because the Government have tried to introduce a policy the effects of which would be to alter the constitution of the Khelat State, and this too without our having adopted the means necessary to secure its success.

30. We found the Khelat Khanate, a confederacy of the Khan and his nobles, bound together by hereditary rights and customs, to which the traditions of generations had given the force of law. Khan, nobles, and people reverenced them and were bound by them.

31. In the year 1837, on account of circumstances which arose out of the occupation of Cabul, we attacked Khelat, stormed and took it. The Khan himself, Mehrab Khan, and several of his chiefs were killed.

32. The British Government then placed a scion of the family—a prince by name Shah Nawaz—on the throne of the Khanate; but from various causes their doing so did not turn out well. Our Political Agent at his court was murdered and the Brahooee tribes rose in rebellion.

33. The chiefs of Khelat declared for their late Khan's son, Nusseer Khan. After a little time he was recognised by the British Government and formally placed on the throne by General (then Major) Outram on the 26th September 1841. From that day to this we have taken much interest in Khelat affairs, and in fact they have been under the direction, to a great extent, of the British Government.

34. I now come to that part of my subject which, for obvious reasons, I feel much delicacy in touching upon; still, under present circumstances, it seems necessary to plainly state my views for any consideration those in authority may consider them worthy; I allude to recording my opinion as to the actual causes which I consider have thrown Khelat, at different times and periods, into insurrection, and rendered it so difficult of management.

35. I believe every political officer who has been associated with the chiefs and people of Beloochistan has found them most tractable and easy of management, and at the same time a warlike and fine people.

36. I have conversed with several chiefs not in any way personally connected with Khelat, though of course interested in her welfare and acquainted with her history, who distinctly affirm that our interference between the Khan and his Sirdars has led to these constant insurrections.

37. On going fully into what they meant by our interference, I found that they alluded to the treaty which was concluded between the Khan and the British Government, and which has been actually, as far as I can discover, from the first day it was signed until now, in practice, of little real value.

38. I will not take up any space by demonstrating this. I, however, do not think that there is any evidence on record to show that the treaty made with the Khan by General Outram was practically of any real benefit; nor can I find from any facts that I can discover that the new one made by General Jacob has been worked a bit more successfully, or that there are any results to support a contrary view.

39. I think the reason for this is that we have, for the sake of our own objects, which I will not enter upon, treated the Khan as a despotic prince, while all the time he was by ancient usage a constitutional one, having with his position inherited certain responsibilities towards his Sirdars, which, if he desired to retain his own position at the head of the State, he was bound by custom and expediency to observe.

40. I consider that the present state of affairs in Khelat proves the soundness of this view. I will now record what this position is.

41. In pursuance of our policy at the time the last treaty was entered upon, we bestowed upon the Khan for stipulated services a subsidy of Rs. 50,000 a year, but we did not stipulate as to the way this money was to be employed; the money was apparently used for the maintenance of a small standing army.

42. Prior to this, as far as I have been able to discover, neither Mehrab Khan nor his son, Nusseer Khan, had any troops at all worthy of the name. They had a few armed retainers, but that was all.

43. The stability of the throne was dependent on the "Ooloos" of the country, with their Sirdars and chiefs at their head. Our own experience tells us they did not fail their Khan in time of need. Such a state of matters established a connexion between the Khan and his Sirdars which our subsidy destroyed. Nothing else was introduced to supply its place.

44. I find that the Khan's aim evidently was to, by degrees, get rid of his principal Sirdars and possess himself of their estates, and, with the aid of his mercenary troops, to establish in his own person an absolute despotism of the very worst kind.

45. The Jalawan Sirdar, Taj Mahomed, died in prison; it is commonly reported he was poisoned. The chief Sirdars of the State, Moolla Mahomed and others, were driven into exile. There are also other chiefs I could name who have been imprisoned and got rid of.

46. I consider it unnecessary to say more as to the nature of our late policy. Suffice it to say that it supported the Khan in his ambitious views to be recognised as a despotic ruler. All our intercourse was directed to be carried on with him through his officials, and we were enjoined to have nothing directly to do with the complaints and grievances of his chiefs and people.

47. In January last this policy was entirely altered by order of the Government of India. Our Government consented to mediate, with the Khan's cordial consent, between him and his insurgent chiefs, on the basis of a fair consideration of their reasonable grievances, which would be inquired into and redressed.

48. This proposal was accepted by both sides, and I trust the grievances of all the Sirdars without distinction will be inquired into and redressed.

49. First on the list I consider are those of the ex-Jam of Beyla. I have heard much talk of his case even at Derah Gházi Khan, and I think the statements of the chiefs regarding him, as to anything they may have to urge in his favour, ought to be fully recorded and submitted for the consideration of Government.

50. I consider the country of Lus Beyla will not settle or the Khan hold it without the aid of regular troops. I think a fair settlement with the Jam, if possible, would be, under present circumstances, a wise and politic measure.

51. The provisions of the treaty with the Khan, as well as the promise of fair mediation given to the Sirdars, ought to embrace the grievances of all the Khelat chiefs.

52. I believe for the future we shall not only consult our own interests but those of the whole of Beloochistan if we insist on the treaty being one not only in name, but in reality; we ought to see that its provisions are acted up to, and their benefit felt throughout the country.

53. I think we may fairly inquire if we have not ourselves, by our neglect of the obligations the treaty bound us to, failed in our duty to the chiefs and people of Beloochistan. We have to confess that, although the Khan by treaty with us is bound to follow our advice, anarchy and confusion under our acknowledged responsibilities have reigned for some time past triumphant in Beloochistan.

54. But, although a careful observance of the treaty and the careful fulfilment of the obligations imposed on us by the promise of fair mediation, made in January to the Khan and his Sirdars, on which basis peace was agreed to, may eventually do much for the Sind border and the Khelat State, no lasting peace or progress on the Punjab border can accrue so long as our arrangements with the now only really troublesome tribe on the frontier, viz., the Murrees, are not comprehensive, and do not embrace the settlement of the entire clan. They are acknowledged to be a regular scourge in the country, and are the dread of their neighbours.

55. Their country (proper) extends from the immediate neighbourhood of the Bolan Pass on the west, to the Khetran, Boogtee and Goorchani country (Punjab), a distance of 150 miles, on the east. To the south they extend to a hill called Surtoff, and as far as Afghan territory on the north.

56. During the last few years the Khan of Khelat's officials, without the consent of the rest of the tribe, have employed the Muzerani section of the clan in protecting kafilahs passing to and fro through the Bolan Pass. This has been bitterly resented by the Khoords and Kakurs, for good and sufficient reasons unnecessary to enter upon here, who in consequence not only fight with the Murrees, but when a chance offers attack and plunder kafilas.

57. But the Murree clan also, with good reason, are most indignant at the arrangement; for the employment of this section of the clan alone by the Khan weakens the entire little commonwealth, and they have in consequence, in order to get the Muzeranis to return to their allegiance, several times attacked them. One of the Muzerani chief's (Sheredil) sons was slain, also another man of note. Altogether the arrangement has proved most mischievous, as it has infused a bitter feeling against the Khan into Khoords, Murrees, and Kakars.

58. Recent events have clearly shown the intimate relations from a political point of view which exist between the people of Khelat and the people of the Punjab.

59. The Murree clan by the geographical position of their country connect Khelat itself and the Bolan Pass with the Punjab by direct, easy, and open routes, which have only been closed since annexation. Their country joins the Punjab in front of Hurrund, which (Punjab) was formerly itself a part of the Khelat State.

60. The Khoords of the Bolan Pass and the Murree clan are intimately connected with, and both clans are related to, our own Muzarí clan, which occupies such an important position on the Punjab border.

61. I am of opinion, and I have held it for long, that nothing can be so detrimental to the administration of this portion of the British border than insisting on a distinction being kept up between these people in our mode of dealing with them. They are really one race, inhabiting one and the same tract of country, and, were it not for our system, would have free and easy intercourse with each other. This would positively have the effect for all useful purposes of joining Kandahar to the Punjab border.

62. By the late resolution of the Government of India, No. 4248 P., dated 19th October

1871, the Deputy Commissioner of Derah Ghazi Khan, as far as the Murrees are concerned, is under the Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

63. The same resolution sanctions tentatively Rs. 32,000 being paid in the name of the Khan of Khelat by the Political Superintendent to the chiefs of this tribe for the objesct named therein.

64. From my personal acquaintance with this tribe, and from knowing the desires of the chiefs, I feel that the sanction of this money gives a grand opportunity which I earnestly entreat may not be lost, of settling the entire clan and securing their chiefs in our interests. The benefit to the Punjab alone would be enormous; for, as already stated, it would establish the means of easy intercourse between it and Kandahar.

65. I feel confident that if we take into our pay one or two sections of the tribe only, as I believe has been proposed, with a view to the protection of the Bolan route to Jacobabad, hatred and envy will be the feeling engendered in the hearts of the principal chiefs.

66. The members of this clan are very poor. They live by the fruits of predatory expeditions—in fact, their chief livelihood is gained by stealing from their neighbours. The good or evil that might be done by giving regular service with or without due care is so clear as to require no demonstration.

67. We cannot wean them from their predatory habits in a day, but we can do it by degrees; for they have a fine country, capable, if cultivated, of supporting the tribe in comfort and happiness. In making the attempt let us make a right beginning, and not by half-and-half arrangements irritate the principal chiefs, and thus court failure at the outset.

68. The late conduct of the clan during the insurrection has, for the time being, caused their relations with me to cease. This has afforded a favourable opportunity for the entire Murree question to be settled, not with a view to the benefit to be afforded to one particular part of the country with which a certain section of the clan may be connected, but with the object of settling the entire tribe and weaning them from their present predatory life.

69. I am of opinion that this should be done by the Political Superintendent on the frontier, in the name of and for the Khan of Khelat, who, as provided in the treaty, is responsible for the safety not of the Bolan route merely, but also for that of the Punjab and Sind borders.

70. I intended to have brought this matter fully before the Commissioner in Sind at the conference, at which I was directed to attend by order from the Foreign Secretary conveyed by telegram. I submitted the telegram at Jacobabad to Sir William Merewether in a demi-official note. I got a reply, telling me that he had referred the matter to the Bombay Government.

71. A second telegram came from the Government of India, which I also submitted to the Commissioner in Sind. I received, in reply, an official letter, dated 18th January, calling on me for a report on the state of Khelat generally; but no conference took place.

72. This report I had taken in hand, when I got a demi-official letter from Colonel Phayre, saying that, in answer to certain matters I had reported to Colonel Phayre prior to the 18th, and which appeared to us both to be connected with the duty for which I came to Jacobabad, Sir William Merewether considered I had exceeded my duty, and desired me for the future to confine myself to matters connected with the Murrees and Boogtees.

73. I therefore, to prevent further mistakes, and as I knew of no immediate hurry for the report, and further as Colonel Phayre's order of the 24th January nullified to a great extent my power of inquiry, so essentially necessary to enable me to report fully, as I desired to do, thought it better, all things considered, especially as no conference had been held, not to report until I was fully assured of my position and the duty I was then on at Jacobabad.

74. In the necessity for referring this question to the Government of India, the Political Superintendent, Colonel Phayre, fully concurred, and I did so through him. The correspondence on the subject has, I believe, been submitted to the Bombay Government by the Commissioner in Sind.

75. Last Sunday evening I received a telegram from the Foreign Secretary, directing me to submit a report as to my view of Khelat affairs at the present time. I therefore submit this in compliance with that order, also in reply to the Commissioner in Sind's letter of the 18th January 1872.

76. The telegram said the report was to be submitted in three days. This is the third day. I have not got time therefore to take a copy (the original is so altered by erasures that I doubt if I could copy from it again). I trust, therefore, that the Commissioner in Sind will favour me with a copy of this report for record.

I instructed Colonel Mainwaring to send a strong guard, full company of rifles, with it, to strengthen Major Harrison's escort. I do not, however, anticipate for a moment that the Khan would dare venture on any open act of hostility against the British camp. There was a report that such a thing was contemplated, but that the Khan's mother had used her influence to stop it. This, however, wants confirmation. The movement of the party up to Khelat, and its presence there with Major Harrison, will add to the influence of his position, and have a good effect in encouraging the best affected. The general feeling of all, excepting the few bad men about the Khan, is unquestionably in our favour, and Major Harrison may be sure of getting early intimation of anything that may be intended, and should extreme measures be madly thought of, there will at once appear a strong party in his favour. He has with him a complete troop of Sind Horse, 80 good sabres, and 50 of Jacob's Rifles, so he is well able to protect himself from any petty attack such as might perchance occur at Khelat.

27. At the same time, in the hope of recalling his Highness the Khan to a sense of what is due from him to the British Government under treaty engagements and long friendship, I have addressed to him and forwarded to Khelat a strong letter of remonstrance which I hope may have effect, and save this ruler from the utter ruin he seems rushing into. Copy of my letter is appended, and I trust will meet with your Excellency's approval.

28. Should Major Harrison have been obliged to leave Khelat before the letter reaches, he will cause it to be delivered to his Highness, and should the latter reject the warning it contains, Major Harrison should then, I consider, be withdrawn into British territory, leaving the Khan to his own devices.

29. Major Harrison has shown great prudence and firmness, as he always has done, and I feel confident his conduct at a most critical time will meet with your Excellency's approval. He has no other course left him but to afford the Wuzeer the protection asked for; and I have told him, that in the event of his leaving Khelat, the Wuzeer should be allowed to accompany his camp.

From Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

I HAVE the honour to submit for your information the accompanying correspondence as per margin in the vernacular, with translations in English, received from Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, relative to the attack by the Murrees on certain Pathan kafilas en route through the Bolan.

1. From Abdool Wahud, Naib of Dadur, to his Highness the Khan.
2. From a private correspondent in Kutchee to his Highness the Khan.
3. Letter from Sher Dil, Muzaranee, to the Naib of Dadur.

Enclosure 3 in No. 75.

No. 73, dated Sohrab, the 17th May 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind, Jacobabad.

IT is with regret that I have to inform you of the plundering of another kafila in the Bolan Pass. From the Naib of Dadur's report, attached, it would appear that prior to the receipt of his Highness' instructions not to allow kafilas to proceed by thi route, he has entered into correspondence with Sher Dil regarding the safe transit of the kafila, and received a favourable reply from the latter. The men, however, deputed by Sher Dil for this duty having declined the responsibility, the Naib made the best arrangements he could, and gave them an escort of 70 horse and footmen, who conveyed them to Mir Nusseer Khan's musjid in safety, "between Mach and Siri-Bolan." There they were attacked by a large body of Murrees, "about one thousand," and after having twice repulsed them, were overwhelmed by numbers. The property was carried off by the Murrees, except (30) thirty loads, which the merchants retained.

2. Regarding the postscript to the Naib's letter, I would respectfully point out that Captain Sandeman's persisted endeavours to interfere in this country have given rise to this rumour and others of a similar nature, and led both his Highness the Khan and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to openly express their conviction of Captain Sandeman's hostility to the Khelat Government. Feeling convinced that disorder and ill feeling would prevail so long as this interference continued, I respectfully solicited the protection of Government against interference with duties entrusted to me, vide letter No. 42 of 1870, paragraphs 3 and 18. I can only now reiterate that should it continue I cannot be held responsible for what may occur.

Enclosure 4 in No. 75.

Translation of a Letter from Abdool Wahud, Naib of Dadur, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

AFTER SALUTATIONS.—A donkey kafila arrival from Shikarpore. The owners informed me that their intention was to proceed with the Brahooees to Khorasan. I told them that if they did, they must absolve me from all responsibility, and give me a written certificate that they undertook all losses that might occur. They refused, and did not accompany the Brahooee Toman. Shortly after this a Pathan kafila of camels arrived, and asked me for an escort to go through the Bolan. I wrote to Sher Dil, and he sent me a reply written by a bunniah, which I enclose. My Janesheen, Selah Mahomed Jutoee, with 37 sowars and 30 footmen, were told off as an escort under two Badrak Murrees, connexions of Ali Shere and Jungoo—total 71. They arrived in safety at Mach. On the following day, when they reached Meer Mahomed Nusseer Khan's tomb, they were attacked by a Murree force, who had concealed themselves in the hills. A fight ensued. The merchants, aided by their escort, twice repulsed the Murrees. The third onset was with sword in hand, and as the Murrees were in overpowering numbers, they defeated the merchants. Saleh Mahomed Jutoee and his nephew were killed, as also Deen Mahomed Shawanee, Burkhooda Khoord, and 20 merchants. Hyat Khan Janesheen and Pailwun, Lehree, were wounded. The Murrees carried off nearly all the property; 30 loads, more or less, were left on the ground, and subsequently taken possession of by the surviving merchants. Four of the escort were afterwards found dead in a cave. One of the escort only returned to me and gave the information now reported. I delayed two days before submitting this report, in hopes that the rest of the escort would confirm what had been reported. No one having returned, I am helpless, and cannot delay further in reporting what has been stated to me. I will write again as soon as I can get further information. Sher Dil sent six of his men with letter above alluded to. The substance of the letter was that he was the well-wisher of all kafilas, and regretted having attacked one; that in future they would go in safety, but should keep either in advance or rear of the Brahooee tribes going up the pass, as he intended to revenge himself on them. I then directed two of Sher Dil's men to remain at Dadur, and four to go with this kafila, but they refused. I, therefore, sent the 70 people above alluded to, so that the kafili should not be delayed. Your letter ordering me not to allow kafilas to pass through the Bolan reached me five days after the above kafila had left. Had it reached me in time, I would not have allowed to go by this route.

P.S.—A man of mine has just returned from Seebee. He tells me that whilst there three letters had arrived from the Punjab Sahib, "Captain Sandeman," and that he had seen the same—1, for the Barukzai Chief; 2, for Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's son; 3, for the Kujak Chief. This man also informed me that the people of Seebee had told him that Captain Sandeman had also written to Shér Dil. Your Highness, I am perfectly convinced that Captain Sandeman has caused all these disturbances in the Bolan, in hopes that he may ultimately get charge of this country.

Enclosure 5 in No. 75.

Translation of a Letter from a Private Correspondent in Kutchee to his Highness the Khan.

Extract letters have arrived at Seebee from Captain Sandeman of Dera Ghazee Khan to the following people:

1. Bukhtawar Khan, Barukzai.
2. Azad Khan, son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed.
3. To the Kujak chief.

The contents of these letters have not transpired as yet. If I can ascertain I will let you know.

Enclosure 6 in No. 75.

Translation of Letter from Sher Dil, Muzaranee to the Naib of Dadur and Janesheen Hyat Khan, dated the 30th April 1872.

AFTER SALUTATIONS,—I have received the letter you sent by kossid, and am aware of its contents. I was formerly in Government employ. The Brahooees attacked me with a force, killed 10 or 12 of my people. I consider that it was done because I was in his Highness' service; being helpless I went to Badra. The Murrees have always received the badruki, and the Brahooees had no claim to these transit dues. If Government take me into service, I want the transit management. Neither you nor the Brahooees have any claim to the transit dues. When a kafila is ready, I will go with them, and receive my money from you at Dadur. I will not guarantee kafilas from attacks by Brahooees, but will be responsible for Murrees and other marauders.

C. H. HARRISON, Major,
Political Agent at Khelat.

Enclosure 7 in No. 75.

No. 1475, dated Jacobabad, the 12th June 1872.

From Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Sind, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

In accordance with instructions conveyed in your Memorandum No. 493 of 1872, I addressed the Political Agent, Khelat, on the subject of kafilas plundered in the Bolan, and requested him to call the serious attention of his Highness the Khan to the matter.

2. I have now the honour to forward, for your information, the correspondence that has passed between the Political Agent and myself.

3. The determination arrived at and expressed to Major Harrison by his Highness is so opposed to the terms of the treaty entered into by him with the British Government, and is so calculated to defeat the very object of such treaty, that I am at a loss to understand what measures can be taken to establish the Bolan route on a firm and safe footing for the passage of merchandise.

4. Apart from the fact that many of the Pattan merchants are entirely ruined by the plundering to which they are subjected in the territories of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, the great loss of life that has lately occurred in the Bolan is worthy of the most serious consideration, though his Highness would appear to make very light of it.

5. I would, under the circumstances, respectively suggest that a communication, from yourself direct to his Highness might have a beneficial effect, since he seems to make so light of the representations of Major Harrison and myself.

Awaiting further instructions.

Enclosure 8 in No. 75.

No. 1246, dated Jacobabad, the 20th May 1872.

From Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind to Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat.

UNDER instructions received from the Commissioner in Sind, I have the honour to request you will invite the attention of his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the very serious political complications that will assuredly arise, unless his Highness takes immediate and severe measures for the safe passage of kafilas through the Bolan Pass. From the Cabul diary which you will receive with this, you will observe that the subject or kafilas plundered in the Bolan is attracting the notice of the Ameer, who very reasonably looks to the British Government to use its influence with his Highness the Khan for the prevention of such lawless proceedings in his dominions.

The terms of the treaty originally concluded with his Highness by the late General Jacob, on behalf of the British Government, very clearly lay down the undertaking on both sides; and as the British Government has hitherto never failed, now delayed to carry out its share of the arrangement, it is but reasonable to expect that his Highness should make some effort for the protection of commerce through his territories.

With due deference to his Highness, I would beg to point out that there are but two ways of protecting kafilas in the Bolan,—they are, subsidy or force. The former would doubtless in the end be the least expensive, but if the Bolan Murrees cannot be subsidised, they should and must be coerced.

It will I am sure be evident to you that if Pattan merchants from and to Candahar are encouraged by promises of safety to themselves and merchandise to travel through the territories of his Highness the Khan, they must, if plundered, be reimbursed.

The question then arises, if the plunderers cannot be made to give up their spoil, who is to reimburse the plundered? I venture to think the question is easily answered, but I am very sure the Commissioner in Sind would be most loth to exact the letter of the treaty concluded with his Highness.

Under these circumstances I leave the matter with every confidence in your hands, feeling assured that you will represent the case with delicacy, but at the same time you will give his Highness to understand that immediate and firm action is imperative.

Enclosure 9 in No. 75.

No. 81, dated Khelat, the 31st May 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

In acknowledging receipt of your letter No. 1246 of the 20th instant, I have the honour to report that, since my arrival at Khelat, I have incessantly urged his Highness to secure the safety of kafilas passing through his country, as also either to exert himself in recovering the merchants' property, or to compensate them for the same.

On receipt of letter under reply, I wrote to his Highness, thinking it might influence him more than verbal communication. Copy of the same is attached, and has, I hope, expressed the views you entertain as to his Highness' responsibility.

Yesterday his Highness the Khan visited, and seemed much astonished that his Highness the Ameer should expect compensation for the property lost by merchants, as he must be well aware that, in the late disturbances, the whole country had been devastated and plundered, and that he, the Khan, was the chief sufferer. His Highness distinctly informed me he would not compensate the merchants but would try and recover their property or its value from those who had plundered it, "provided they were not Murrees" as he did not consider himself in any way responsible for the acts of this tribe on this or any other occasion, and was not prepared to coerce them under present circumstances.

I have not only dissented on this point with his Highness, but pointed out that he had no right to take transit dues and money for safe passage, if he was not prepared to guarantee the same. His Highness is also under a mistaken impression that his responsibilities cease when a tribe is rebellious.

Enclosure 10 in No. 75.

Dated Khelat, the 31st May 1872

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

After salutations—You, my friend, are aware that since my arrival I have urged you in the strongest manner to make suitable arrangements for the protection of kafilas passing through your country and to take measures, either to recover the property plundered, or to compensate the merchants for the losses sustained.

Within the last six months four kafilas have been plundered. Full inquiry as to the first was made by the Commissioner in Sind, and the Sarawan chiefs undertook the responsibility of recovering what had been plundered by them, or giving compensation for the same. With the assistance you are affording these chiefs, I earnestly trust that this case may be brought to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion.

The second kafila was plundered by Sirdar Noordeen, and has this chief's life was only guaranteed by your Shahgassee on condition that he would restore your guns and the merchants' property, I don't anticipate any difficulty in recovering the same, if Sirdar Noordeen is reminded on what terms he is under surveillance.

The members of the third kafila by their bravery saved the greater part of their property; Shere Dil, Muzaranee, appropriated from ten to thirty loads; and it now rests with your Highness to exert yourself in recovering the same, or exacting full compensation from the Murrees who plundered the kafila.

The circumstances under which the last kafila was plundered have caused me the greatest concern, as the merchants insist that they hold written guarantees from your Naib at Dadur stating all losses in the Bolan would be made good to them. Feeling convinced that these repeated raids on the subjects and property of his Highness the Ameer would be brought to your notice by my Government, I urged you to make full inquiry into each person's loss, to give such claimant pecuniary assistance as an advance, and to assure them that you would do your utmost to recover the balance for them; it was, therefore, with the greatest regret I heard from you that you would not acknowledge your responsibility by any such act, and that you would not give the barest maintenance to these starving merchants.

To show that some action of the sort was necessary, I have now the honour to inform you that his Highness the Ameer has appealed to the British Government in the following terms: "To call upon you to adopt suitable measures for the security of the Khelat "route, and then either to restore the plundered property of traders, or to pay compen- "sation for it through the British authorities: otherwise, considering the prosperity or "misforture of the Cabul and British Governments identical, the British Government "should permit me to make arrangements in this matter myself suitably with the Khan "of Khelat."

This information has been submitted to me through Colonel Mainwaring, Political Superintendent, and that officer clearly points out that the responsibility of safe transit through Khelat territory rests on you as king of the country as guaranteed by you in your treaty with the British Government. Colonel Mainwaring also points out that as the English Government have without fail performed their obligations to you, they look upon you to carry out yours, viz., to ensure safe transit to merchants. Colonel Mainwaring also points out that one of two policies must be adopted to ensure this, coercing or subsidising, and that the present state of affairs will, unless immediately rectified, lead to serious political complications.

The supposition that you are in no way responsible for depredations committed by the Murree tribe is not provided for in your treaty.

Having been $3\frac{1}{2}$ years the accredited Political Agent at your Court, you can judge whether my councils have been to your advantage and that of your country; it is therefore with the greatest pain that I have had to write so strongly to you on the present occasion, knowing as I do how the late disturbances have harassed you, and what losses you have sustained. The safe transit of merchants through your country, however, is of the greatest consideration to the British and Cabul Governments; it is, therefore, imperative on me to write as I have done, and I feel sure that you will accept what has been said in a friendly manner, knowing the interest I feel in all that concerns you and your country.

Enclosure 11 in No. 75.

No. 1581, dated Jacobabad, the 25th June 1872.

From Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent Frontier Upper Sind, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith true copies of letters received from the Political Agent, Khelat, yesterday. I will take this opportunity of informing you that I have received your reply to my telegram of yesterday, and that in accordance with your instructions, a strong company of rifles, under the command of Captain Humfrey, will march on Khelat in charge of treasure so soon as carriage can be provided.

Enclosure 12 in No. 75.

No. 84, dated Khelat, the 12th June 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your memorandum No. 1376 of 31st May, with accompaniments, and regret that reports on the subject noted in my diary No. 11 have been so contradictory as to render it impossible to decide why, and through whom this raid originated; no definite decision can be arrived at until his Highness has fully inquired into this case, and as it may take time I beg to submit the following information.

2. The Muzaranee Murrees have lived in the Boheer Hills since Abdoolla Khan's reign, and being considered quiet peaceable people, during the past three or four years they have had charge of kafilas going through the pass, and conducted the duties devolving on them in a satisfactory manner. At the end of the cold season this year they settled with their flocks, families, and property on the Dusht near Sirial, Sher Dil, their chief, receiving pay from his Highness for the safe transit of kafilas. On or about (date not known) the Sumalanees, a Mingul tribe, and other Brahooees collected about 600 men and made a sudden raid on the Muzaranees, compelled the latter to retreat into the hills, and robbed them of every thing, Sher Dil's son and other Muzaranees being killed whilst defending their property.

3. On the 18th April, Sher Dil, with about 200 of his tribe, attacked a kafila at Abgoom, but was defeated, losing 30 men, and carrying off about 15 loads of merchandise. Directly this was reported to me I at once advised Shahgassee Wulli Mahomed to write to his Highness and recommend that Sher Dil's property should be at once restored, and a letter sent to him stating that justice would be done if he returned the kafila property and caused no further obstruction in the Bolan.

4. The information submitted in diary No. 11* infers that the attack on Sher Dil was at the instigation of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. A later statement, which will be alluded to hereafter, would, if true, throw the onus of this raid either on his Highness or his Naibs at Mustoong and Quetta.

* Already submitted to Government. W. L. M.

5. Before reaching Khelat I heard that about 1,000 Murrees of different clans had plundered a kafila at Siri-Bolan, killed 60 merchants, and carried off nearly all their property. A Patten merchant, by name Abdool Youssaf, who lost eight loads of tea, appeared to think that this attack on them was to avenge the losses sustained by the Murrees at Abgoom.

6. One of the first people I met on arrival at Khelat was a Pesheen Syud who for the past 25 years has resided at Quetta and supplied remounts to the Committee at Bangalore. This man, who was in a very excited state, consequent on his having been robbed of 7,500 rupees, insisted that Sher Dil, Murree, was not to blame for the disturbances in the Bolan, as the attack on him and the Muzaranees had been at his Highness' instigation, in consequence of Sher Dil's having accepted money and presents from Captain Sandeman. This horse dealer, also by name Sher Dil, further stated that the Naibs of Quetta and Mustoong had received one-fifth of the spoil taken from the Murrees.

7. On the earliest occasion I informed his Highness of the above statements; he positively denied the horse dealer's assertion regarding himself, stating that in any case where an English officer was concerned, he should first consult me, and, with reference to Sher Dil, stated that he had been at Khelat a few days before the raid regarding kafila arrangements, which had been concluded in a friendly spirit; further, that during Sher Dil's stay at Khelat, the Nooshky Minguls had carried off 2,000 of his sheep, and he, the Khan, at once wrote to his Naib to try and recover the same.

8. Since Sher Dil's raid on the kafila, his Highness has twice written to him to take possession of four or five thousand sheep that had been recovered, but he declined unless his Highness agreed to the following terms:

1st. That his incapacity to return the kafila property should be admitted.
2nd. That his Highness would undertake to chastise the Sumalanees and people who raided him.

9. Regarding the second allegation by Sher Dil, horse dealer, his Highness promised to thoroughly investigate the matter, and punish whoever was to blame; at the same time he informed me that as far as he could learn, this raid was the independent act of the Minguls and other Brahooees who had been raiding in Kutchee. I remarked to his Highness that if the Naibs had acted as some people supposed, it would be scarcely credited that they had done so without authority.

2ndly. That 600 men could not assemble close to Mustoong, without his Naib knowing what was going on. To this his Highness replied: Being on friendly terms with Sher Dil, I have done nothing directly or indirectly to injure him. My Naib was cognizant of these Brahooees collecting, but as it was supposed they were going against the Budrak Murrees, he did not interfere with them. The Naib of Dadur's statement, as reported in diary No. 16, was received a few days after the above conversation had taken place.

10. His Highness having for some time past allowed me to understand that an investigation would take place regarding the raid on Sher Dil, I asked him yesterday to commence the inquiry without further delay; also to inform me what arrangements he contemplates making for the protection of kafilas passing through the Bolan. His Highness at once agreed to send for Basheer and Kuchee, relatives of Sher Dil, as also to write to the latter that the Sumalanees and others concerned in the raid against him had been imprisoned, and were about to be tried for the offence. His Highness is of opinion that until this dispute is settled, it would be of no use to make arrangements with the Muzaranees, and therefore proposes as a temporary measure that detachments of infantry at Dadur and Quetta should give escorts to kafilas proceeding through the Bolan.

11. The various conflicting statements now reported will, I trust, show how difficult it is to form an opinion regarding this raid, and that before doing so, it may be advisable to await and see what is elucidated by his Highness' investigation.

Enclosure 13 in No. 75.

No. 86, dated Khelat, the 12th June 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge Memorandum by Commissioner in Sind, forwarded under your endorsement No. 1,414, and to state that his Highness called upon Sher Dil to return what had been plundered, and received an answer that it was beyond his power to do so.

Naib Abdool Azeez left for Mustoong on the 7th instant to assist the Sarawan chief in collecting the property they are responsible for, and received instructions to make particular inquiries regarding the kafila plundered at Siri-Bolan. As many of the merchants had stated that the Murrees were aided by Sirdar Alla Dina Koord and his tribe, at present his Highness does not appear to know what portion of the property was appropriated by the Murrees, how much was saved, and what part Sirdar Alla Dina Koord took in this raid. Up to the present no steps have been taken to coerce the Murrees into restoring what they have plundered. Moreover, his Highness has expressed his inability to do so under present circumstances. Letters were again despatched yesterday to Sher Dil from his Highness the Khan, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and myself, stating that if he would exert himself in recovering this property, those who had injured him would be punished and made to give up what they had plundered.

On the 5th instant I received a letter from Sirdar Alla Dina Koord, stating that he had forwarded 30 to 40 loads of goods and wounded merchants to Quetta. As the merchants state that this is false, I have asked his Highness to ascertain from the Naib of that place if there is any truth in the Sirdar's statement.

On Tuesday the 11th instant, his Highness agreed to make arrangements for kafilas passing through Bolan, as reported in my letter No. 84.

No. 87, dated Khelat, the 12th June 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In acknowledging the correspondence forwarded under your endorsement No. 1403, I have the honour to refer to my letter No. 84, from which it will be seen that Captain Sandeman was misinformed regarding the place where the Muzaranees were attacked, also that the statement of his Highness the Khan having refused redress to Sher Dil is equally incorrect.

Enclosure 15 in No. 75.

No. 89, dated Khelat, the 15th June 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I have the honour to report, for the information of Government, that Shahgassee Wulli Mahomed came to my tent at 5.30 a.m. yesterday morning, stating that it was his Highness the Khan's intention to make him a prisoner for the part he had taken at the Jacobabad Conference, and begged me to save him from this insult, as also to get a written guarantee from his Highness that he would not injure him in any way.

2. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed at the same time stated that no reliance could be placed on his Highness' word, and though what was contemplated was publicly known, his Highness would positively deny he had any such intention. The Shahgassee further stated that the attack in his opinion on Sher Dil, the plundering of kafilas, the panic at Mustoong, and his intended arrest, were with the object of evading what had been guaranteed in his Highness's name at Jacobabad. I was also informed that no advice I gave would be of any good, as his Highness was guided solely by what his mother, sister, two moonshees, Darogah Atta Mahomed, and Shukkur Khan advised, and that under these circumstances it might be as well for me to withdraw from his Highness' court, as it was impossible to state what might occur.

3. I was asked by the Shahgassee to escort him to English territory if his Highness would not guarantee him honourable treatment, and, pending reference, the Shahgassee declined to leave my camp.

4. According to the custom of the country, I sent my moonshee to inquire after his Highness' health, as he was suffering from fever, and directed him to give the following message, viz., that I was much concerned at his Wuzeer having to seek safety in my camp, and begged him not to listen to evil advisers until we could talk over the matter, and that if his health would not permit of his paying the usual weekly visit in the afternoon, I would do myself the honour of calling upon him. His Highness took a solemn oath that he had never contemplated the Shahgassee's arrest, and begged to be excused visiting me as he was still suffering from fever.

5. At 4.30 p.m., I called upon his Highness and pointed out to him how disastrous a misunderstanding with his Wuzeer would be at the present crisis, and that I felt sure it would bring about a general rebellion, far worse than the one quelled. I reminded him of the old Wuzeer's services, and that he was too brave a man to act as he had done, unless he had received the information regarding his intended arrest from some person that he thought reliable. I tendered my services as a friend to bring about a reconciliation, but his Highness disregarded everything that was said, and declined to consider the subject, unless the Shahgassee gave up his informant's name and proved the charge he had made.

6. Feeling what serious consequences may result, I wrote to his Highness the Khan this morning, and annex copy of my letter.

7. For two or three days prior to this there was a rumour that his Highness intended to arrest the Shahgassee, and Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen. I mentioned what I had heard, but his Highness laughed at the idea of such a thing being done after his agreement at Jacobabad. On Friday morning, it was currently reported in the town that an attempt was to have been made to assassinate the Shahgassee, but was postponed as some of the sepoys warned to parade at 12 p.m. were not present. Information from an authentic source was given to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and he came over at once to my tent.

8. I regret to be obliged to record my opinion that the above statement is more worthy of belief than his Highness' denial. At the interview yesterday, his Highness said a few words regarding the conference at Jacobabad, which evidently showed that he was displeased with the Shahgassee in connexion with what occurred there. I referred to this part of our conversation in annexed letter, and pointed out that my Government would feel angry if any injury were inflicted on Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed for the assistance he gave to the Commissioner in Sind on that occasion. His Highness on reading my letter, denied having said anything of the kind.

9. In my letter No. 84, I reserved giving an opinion regarding the raid on Sher Dil, Muzaranee Murree. After what has occurred, I am inclined to think that it was at his Highness' instigation, and that he has no intention of performing what was guaranteed in his name by the Commissioner in Sind, and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, also that the lives of these Sirdars and the Shahgassee are in imminent danger. Until quite lately I thought I had sufficient influence with his Highness to see that no injury befell them.

10. The Sirdars are naturally alarmed, and consider themselves entitled to the protection of Government, so long as they are honestly carrying out their engagements. The Shahgassee also claims protection, as he has committed no other fault than having done his best to reconcile the Khan to his chiefs; he also states that as he was put into the appointment of Wuzeer by the English Government, he hopes they will interfere on his behalf.

11. From various sources, I learn that the Shahgassee's statement regarding the ruling clique at Khelat is reliable, with the exception of Atta Mahomed's name, his Highness has also taken a relative of Gungaram's, "Pir Bhow," into his pay and favour, though he promised not to employ him. I also hear that Mungaram* and other members of this family are en route to Khelat. His Highness has so often been told how much the English Government disapprove of his employing any member of this family, that his doing so speaks for itself.

* Lately Khan's Moonshee at Beyla, and the chief cause from his vexatious exactions of the Khan's rule being disliked there.
W. L. M.

12. In conclusion, I would advocate a very strong remonstrance being sent by Government, insisting upon fair and honourable treatment for the Shahgassee and chiefs, and that his Highness will assuredly lose their support, should any outrage be committed.

Enclosure 16 in No. 75.

Translation of a Letter from Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

AFTER SALUTATIONS.—It was necessary for me to visit you last night regarding Shahgassee Wulli Mahomed, in hopes that I might be able to adjust the differences that had arisen between you, as a speedy understanding was advisable. When all members of a Government are of one opinion, matters are carried on in a satisfactory manner. Peace and quiet is especially necessary for your country, as rebellions have been of constant occurrence. My hope is that what has happened has happened, and that you and your Wuzeer will in future conduct the affairs of government in a friendly spirit, and that as sovereign you will give him your fullest support. Such conduct would be worthy of you. I have told your Wuzeer what was said in your durbar, and he replied that he would return to you under what terms your Highness deemed advisable. If you will kindly allow him an interview I should esteem it a favour. My Government is well aware of your Wuzeer's high abilities. I understood from your conversation yesterday that your cause of annoyance with the Shahgassee is the part he took at the Jacobabad Conference; if on this account he is disgraced, or otherwise injured, you may be assured that my Government will be angry and annoyed with you. I intend reporting all that has gone on to my Government, and you will probably receive a letter, or hear through me what their opinion, &c. is. If you will send a person of influence to conduct the Shahgassee to your durbar, I shall esteem it a favour.

Major, Political Agent at Khelat.

Enclosure 17 in No. 75.

No. 90, dated Khelat, the 17th June 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

In continuation of my letter No. 89, I have the honour to inform you that his Highness the Khan agreed to give a written guarantee to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and the latter, though doubtful of his Highness' good faith, had determined to return to duty.

2. An influential person has, however, sent secretly to let the Shahgassee know that there is no safety for his life or liberty, in spite of all written agreements, and advised him on no account to leave my camp.

3. I am naturally unwilling to give an antagonistic view to my actions, but as his Highness is deliberately breaking faith with the English Government regarding the treaty made at Jacobabad, I hope Government will support me in giving protection to the Shahgassee and those chiefs who accompanied me to Khelat.

4. His Highness the Khan is entirely in the hands of three or four low unprincipled people, and most decided measures will have to be taken, as he is perfectly indifferent to anything I may suggest.

Enclosure 18 in No. 75.

No. 623, dated Kurrachee, the 29th June 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 12th and 25th instant, with their accompaniments. The intelligence conveyed in the latter is of a most serious nature, and of so extraordinary a character, that it would lead to doubts in regard to the sanity of the Khan of Khelat. Hitherto he has always accepted and attended to the advice of the Political Agent, and when it has only depended on himself, acted upon it; while, if others were concerned, he has done what was in his power to get measures carried out.

He has also invariably trusted in and leaned upon the Wuzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, always looking to him for help, so that this sudden change is the more unaccountable caprice of which the Khan has always been considered to have a large share, would not be sufficient cause for so complete an abandonment of previous habits and custom. Irritation of the difficulties he has lately experienced from the plunder of kafilas passing through his country may have had something to do with it, but is not sufficient. I am convinced, therefore, there is something more behind, of which we know nothing at present, and of which it is most desirable we should obtain accurate information. I request, therefore, you will be good enough to spare no trouble or expense in finding out what are the real motives and reasons for the Khan's present strange action.

2. In the meantime it is most necessary that the Khan should have plainly set before him that his present line of conduct is in direct opposition to the treaty existing between him and the British Government; it is most ungrateful considering all that has been done for him, and will infallibly lead to his disgrace and destruction unless he stops in time. I have, therefore, addressed a letter to his Highness, which is forwarded herewith for your perusal and transmission to Major Harrison at Khelat, who should also read it and then deliver it to, or cause it to be delivered (as he finds best) to his Highness the Khan.

3. If the Khan should still persist in ignoring the treaty engagements and their obligations, Major Harrison should at once leave Khelat and proceed with his escort to Bhagwana or Kozdar, whichever he considers most suitable, and there await further instructions. It is not improbable that his withdrawal from the capital will bring his Highness the Khan to his senses, and it will then have to be considered by Government how the Khan's conduct should be viewed, and what steps should be taken to prevent a recurrence of such dangerous and unseemly procedure. My telegram conveyed instructions to this effect, and is left to Major Harrison's judgment, in which I have complete confidence.

4. The report of intended attack on Major Harrison's camp needs confirmation, and I can scarcely conceive the Khan could for a moment contemplate such a measure, whatever other people may have proposed. But should Major Harrison, on finding it necessary to withdraw, see any inclination to display violence, or offers molestation to him in every way, he should tell his Highness from me, that he, the Khan, is strictly responsible, and will be held rigidly so, that no annoyance or injury in the slightest degree should happen to Her Majesty's Political Agent, or his party, as long as he is within the Khan's dominions; and that should the Khan unfortunately elect to reject the advice now offered to him, that it is required of him to see that Major Harrison leaves his country with all freedom, honour, and consideration. The Wuzeer having sought protection in the British camp will of course accompany Major Harrison when he leaves the country, and be accorded honourable treatment in British territory becoming his position and worth.

5. You will also have learnt that I quite approve of the proposal to take advantage of the need of treasure with Major Harrison's escort, to increase the strength of the latter by an additional body of riflemen. These should remain with that officer until further orders.

6. I would impress upon you the necessity of obtaining early and trustworthy intelligence of all that is passing in Beloochistan, in case communication may be for a time cut off by Major Harrison's posts being intercepted. At the same time the most direct and rapid line should be adopted and maintained for postal despatch between Jacobabad and Major Harrison's camp.

Enclosure 19 in No. 75.

Translation of a Letter from Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated the 29th June 1872.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS.—It is with extreme regret I have learned that Colonel Mainwaring, Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind, and from Major Harrison, the Political Agent at your Court, that on two occasions lately peaceful merchants passing through your Highness' country have been plundered of their goods, and that your Highness has failed to cause restitution of their property to be made to them, or to punish the evil-doers, Muzaranee Murrees. Further, it is stated that these deeds of violence were brought about by most unjustifiable acts of certain of your Highness' subjects residing near Mustoong, who attacked the Murrees when they were quietly living near the head of the Bolan Pass; and that these acts were perpetrated, if not under the authority of, certainly with the cognizance of your Highness' officers, placed at Mustoong to preserve order, and that the Murrees waylaid the kafilas in reprisal for the injury that had been done them. Major Harrison most properly brought to your Highness' notice that the first thing to be done was that a thorough investigation of the charge brought against the Mustoong people should take place, and that should the outrage be proved those engaged in it should be severely punished, and restitution of, or compensation for, what they had lost should be assigned to the Murrees, after which the question of their proceedings could be taken up.

Your Highness at first concurred in this, and promised to do all that was necessary; but in spite of your Highness' protestations, I now learn that nothing has been done, and that this outrage remains so far unnoticed and unanswered for. Such being the case, the inference is inevitable, either that your Highness is utterly indifferent as to what passes in your country, or that the act, if not actually authorised by you, meets with your approval. As regards the merchants I must point out to your Highness that leaving their wrongs unredressed not only reflects most seriously on the honour and credit of your Highness, and the manner in which you administer the government of of your country, but it is directly opposed to the terms of the treaty existing between your Highness and the British Government. Those terms cannot be evaded by either side, and I must now distinctly and emphatically call upon your Highness to adopt immediate measures for a full and faithful compliance with them, or it will be my duty to report to my Government that your Highness is determined to wholly disregard these, and to be faithless in the most solemn obligations a sovereign can enter into.

It will also be necessary then for me to ask for instructions from my Government to recall the British officer who has hitherto been residing at your court, and so withdraw from you that countenance and assistance which has hitherto, since your Highness' accession to the throne, been so cordially and unreservedly given to you.

There are, however, other circumstances of the gravest nature reported to which I must now allude, and which have occasioned me the deepest concern.

I am now informed that your Highness, listening to evil-doers who only seek your ruin, has ceased to treat the Political Agent at your Court with that confidence he is entitled to, and to attend to the counsel and advice which it is his duty to offer, and which has always been fittingly proffered to the advantage of yourself, and to the good of your country. Also that you have been led to turn from you one of the most faithful and true servants a sovereign ever had, your Wuzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. Your Highness is well aware, having had more than sufficient proofs, that my sole object has been ever to promote your welfare, and to assist in every possible way in getting carried into effect what is the just desire of the British Government—the establishment of a firm and just government in your dominions. Recently, at your request, and by desire of my Government, I engaged in the endeavour to mediate between, and reconcile your Highness and certain of your chiefs then in opposition to your authority. In that task the Wuzeer afforded me the most valuable assistance, and evinced an unswerving regard for your Highness' best interests, and for the good of your government, and all that he did or said met with my unqualified approval. Arrangements were then made which received the full approval of the Government of India, whose appreciation of the frank manner in which your Highness then acted was markedly shown as communicated to you.

As your Highness delegated to me full power to act in your behalf, and in your name it would be a breach of faith did your Highness go back from any one particular that was then acceded to and accepted by me. Your Highness has been yet shown that such had a place in your conduct, and I cannot but hope that what has occurred has arisen from some hasty misunderstanding on your part; and that on receipt of this letter, if you have not already done so on reconsideration of the advice tendered by Major Harrison, you will remedy what has occurred, restoring the Wuzeer to that place and share in your confidence which he so thoroughly deserves, and on which the prosperity of your country so largely depends.

The Wuzeer has sought protection with Major Harrison in the British camp, and there it will continue to be afforded to him as long as necessary; but I trust to your Highness' sense of what is right and of justice that the necessity shall be of the shortest.

In conclusion I would solemnly urge your Highness to pause before it is too late, and to listen to the advice of your oldest and best friend, and hold back from the reckless and unreasonable course you are now entering upon, a course so widely different to what you have hitherto followed, and which can only result in your ruin and destruction. Dismiss from your side and councils the ill-disposed people who have led you to adopt such disastrous views, and to act in so ungrateful and unbecoming a manner. Rest only upon those who, by long and truthful service have proved their attachment to you, and their fidelity to your Government. Look to the British officer who is accredited to you and who has often shown such sound judgment and thought in your behalf; and cordially accept from him the advice he will be ever ready to give. By following this course you will continue to enjoy the friendship and support of the British Government, and, with God's blessing, peace and prosperity will be restored to your country.

But should your Highness be led to neglect this advice and to persist in the course you have so unhappily chosen, as reported, I must intimate to you in distinct terms that such will involve the forfeiture of the friendship of the British Government, and the immediate withdrawal of the British officer at your court, leaving you to the fate you provoke.

This letter will be handed to you by Major Harrison, who is in possession of its contents, and has instructions to act upon the above at once, should such a step be unfortunately forced upon him by your Highness. But I trust your Highness will accept warning in time, and avoid the abyss now yawning before you, so that I may continue to subscribe myself as your sincere friend.

No. 91, dated Khelat, the 21st June 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Mainwaring, Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to report for your information that the Naib of Dadur states he tried to induce the merchants plundered at Siri-Bolan to proceed by the Mullah Pass, and on the camelmen refusing to go by that route, he drew up an agreement, copy and translation of which are attached.

Enclosure in No. 76.

Translation of an Agreement.

NAIB ABDOOL WAHID, of Dadur, states that the following is the agreement he made with the merchants who were plundered at Siri-Bolan:

At this time I have given Abdool Rahman, kafila-bashee, (70) seventy sowars and footmen for their protection in the Bolan on the following understanding: That if the Murrees attack the kafila, and loss occurs from the escort not fighting, such losses are to be made good; if, on the other hand, they fight, and the kafila is plundered, no account will be taken of the losses incurred, the lives of the escort being a set-off for the same. This agreement has been given to the merchants.

2. From the letter forwarded by the Naib of Dadur, it would appear that the people of the kafila persisted in following the Bolan route, contrary to the desire of the Naib. This being the case, the chief blame rests on themselves, though it does not absolve his Highness the Khan of Khelat from the blame of the risk of such disorders and disasters in his own country. In forwarding the accompanying copy and translation of a letter purporting to be written by the Sumalanees who plundered Sher Dil, I am still of opinion that the raid on the latter was at his Highness' instigation, and that the Sumalanees have been made to sign the accompanying document and relieve his Highness' Government of the onus attached to such a proceeding.

Enclosure in No. 77.

Translation of a Letter from Karim Khan, Rawat Khan, and Dad Shah, Sumalanee Minguls, to his Highness the Khan.

AFTER SALUTATIONS,—We have been guilty of the following disrespect: That without any order we committed a raid on Sher Dil, Murree, and now throw ourselves on your Highness' mercy. The Murrees have constantly plundered our property and killed members of our tribe. According to Belooch custom we retaliated upon them. These Murrees being enemies of Brahooees, we never imagined your Highness would have been angry with us. Your order has been received to return the Murree's property. We agree to this, and will give it back when they come to fetch it.

Naib Abdool Rahman is very hard on us, and insists that we must make good what was plundered from the last kafila, as it was through our instrumentality that the Murrees made the attack. Your Highness, we are unable to do what he orders, not even if we were to sell our wives and children. We have only retaliated on the Murrees, as they have frequently plundered us and killed many of our tribe. Any loss of lives the Murrees have sustained is the khoon or blood we were entitled to, and if they felt aggrieved, they ought to have retaliated on us, not on the kafilas. Their having done so is no fault of ours. Kindly write to Abdool Rahman not to exact compensation for the kafilas property from us. Should you insist upon it, we agree. Consider us your faithful servants.

2. Even supposing the statement of the Sumalanee Minguls to be true, and that Major Harrison's supposition is not correct, what occurred shows clearly that these subjects of the Khan have most unjustifiably disturbed the peace of the country, making the trade routes unsafe, and were quite beyond his control. The necessity, therefore, must be most strongly urged upon him of making better arrangements for good government in his country.

Translation of a Letter from Abdool Wahud, Naib of Dadur, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

AFTER SALUTATIONS,—I have just heard that two sowars arrived at Seebee with a khillut and letters from Captain Sandeman for Bukhtawar Khan. One of the letters was for Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's son. The substance of the letter was as follows: "Detain "my sowars eight days, and inquire why the kafila was plundered, and what arrange- "ments are being made. At the end of eight days send the sowars back with reliable "information." It is Captain Sandeman's intention to take a tour through the Murree, Seebee, and Dadur Hills. I will report what occurs. Captain Sandeman also requested to be informed how your Highness and the chiefs are getting on, and what arrangements have been made for the Bolan.

Enclosure 2 in No. 78.

Translation of a Letter from Syed Aurung Shah, of Dadur, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

AFTER SALUTATIONS,—A few days back a sowar came from Captain Sandeman of Dera Ghazee Khan to Bukhtawar Khan of Seebee. This I reported at the time. A second sowar brought a letter from the above sahib on 1st Rabi-ul-Sani, 7th June, for Bukhtawar Khan, and remained at Sibi three days. The following communication has been received from the letter and what the sowar said, viz., Bukhtawar Khan was asked to give him information regarding your Highness, the Jalawan and Sarawan chiefs, also about the Bolan, the Muzarani Murrees, the Dumars, as also what was the state of affairs in Kutchee and Korasan, what your Highness and the Sirdars had done, and were about to do, and what arrangements had been made for the Bolan. I don't know what Bukhtawar Khan has replied. The sowar who brought the letter gave the following information: That Captain Sandeman intended to make small *stations through the Boogtee, Murree, and Khetran country to Dadur; also that the sahib has a great many other intentions, and had told Bukhtawar Khan to report to the Punjab Government what was going on in your frontier. It is also stated that Captain Sandeman proposes coming to Kutchee about Shawal, September.

* The word in vernacular letter is Commissioner.

Captain Sandeman is now at Koh-Murree. He formerly had a house there, but is building another. I have told you what I have heard. God knows whether it is correct or not. Any further news will be reported to you. I am your well-wisher.

After salutations,—I was formerly in your service, and though the whole of the Sarawans were in rebellion against you, I remained faithful to you night and day, and protected kafilas going through the Bolan. As soon as your treaty with the Sarawans was near completion, your naibs assembled the Sumulanis, attacked me, plundered our property, killed my son, two cousins, and three other men, and carried off 30,000 sheep, 400 flocks of goats, and property contained in 60 houses. One fifth of the spoil your naibs took. Ask Kechi if what I state is true. I do not accept your terms and will not come. After salutations,—By direction of Captain Sandeman I proceeded with Bijur to Khanghar. The English were very kind to me. I was happy, agreed to take service with them, and returned to my place. His Highness the Khan and the Brahooes became my enemies on account of my having become a servant of the English Government, and the Sumalani Minguls assembled a force which attacked and plundered me. My son, two cousins, and three other men were killed, 30,000 sheep, 400 flocks of goats, and 60 houses were plundered. I now write that, if you are prepared to be kind, I am entitled to the lives of the following men: 1, Rawat, 2, Mairan, 3, Karam Khan, 4, Hotman, 5, Sabz Ali Taimar, as also the property that was plundered from us. If this is done I shall consider myself a servant of the British Government, and refrain from causing any injury in the Bolan, and will guarantee not to cause any one the loss of a pie, or personal injury. If you cannot do this, do not be angry. The Belooch are thieves, and I shall go on thieving.

NEWS REPORT.

Information received from Shehan Khan, Vakeel of Ghuzzun Khan, Murree Tomundar.

" ABOUT two or three months ago the Brahooees (Minguls) took an army (lushkur) against Muzzerani Murrees, who were grazing their cattle at a place called Murron and killed the son of Shere Dil Muzzerani, Mokuddum, and eleven of the clan, and carried off about 6,000 sheep and goats and 250 donkeys, and looted three (3) hamlets. The cause of the outrage was apparently that the Minguls were jealous of the Muzzeranis having charge of the Bolan kafila route, which they considered their right. Kenchi, head Mokuddum of the Muzzeranis, went to seek redress from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, but the Khan refused to grant him redress, saying that he must look after himself."

See my report on Khelat affairs.
(Sd.) R. G. S.

On receiving this reply Shere Dil and his people, being left without hope, left Kirtuk and joined the other Murrees at Kott Mundahi. As they were on their way they met a kafila going to Candahar and attacked it, but the kafila was well guarded, and after a severe fight, in which the Afghans lost four men killed, and the Muzzerani Murrees six killed, the latter only succeeded in carrying off six camel-loads of goods. After this Shere Dil went with 700 Murrees and attacked another kafila from Sind proceeding through the Bolan, and killed 30 of the kafilabashis, and carried off the whole of the property, consisting of about 500 laden camels, 600 laden donkeys, 50 horses, and three mules. Murrees lost three men killed and 25 wounded. As they were returning with their spoil an army (lushkar) of the Brahooees came to meet them at Shuken. As the Murrees were outnumbered by the Brahooees, they at first thought of leaving the property, but the Brahooees said they did not want to fight, but demanded a share of the property, which the Murrees divided with them, the Brahooees receiving something less than half, and the Murrees keeping the remainder. It was afterwards reported that Ameer Shere Ali Khan either wrote or sent a Vakeel to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, demanding that full restoration should be made to Shere Dil for the loss he had sustained at the hands of Brahooees, as he was at the time looked to as responsible for the safety of Bolan kafilas, and had committed no fault, and also that all the property of the plundered Candahar kafilas should be restored by the Khan of Khelat. On this the Khan sent for Kenchi Muzerani and gave him a khillut, and sent him with 200 sowars to the Minguls to get back the property; he has not heard with what result. With regard to the property plundered by the Brahooees from the first kafila it is rumoured that one third of the value is to be made up by the Commissioner in Sind, one third by his Highness the Khan, and one third by the Brahooee Sirdars. With regard to the one third for which the Brahooee Sirdars are responsible, it is said that Moolla Mahomed has imposed a fine of Rupees 2 on each house in his toman to make it up and has sent to get the money collected. Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen are still at Khelat. There is a report current in the hills that Ameer Shere Ali has sent 5,000 men and four guns to Candahar, some say to enforce the restitution of the property plundered from the kafilas, others to collect the Ameer's revenues in his territories of Seebee and Kajrick. A force of about 1,300 Murrees and Boogtees have gone against the Luni Pathans to avenge the death of Kukkul, the Bijarani Mokuddum.

Enclosure 2 in No. 82.

Report of Ghuzzun Khan, Murree, Tomandar, to Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan.

I HAVE received your perwannah by the Bungul Lishari (Gurchani), in which you state the Sirkar and the Sind authorities are angry with Shere Dil Muzzerani Murree, on account of plundering the kafila in the Bolan. The circumstances attending that affair are as follows:—The Khan Sahib Wullee, Khelat has no hold over, or rule in, his country. Some time since, when the Sahibs of Sind and the Punjab met at Jacobabad, we all were greatly pleased in the expectation that the affairs of the country would be satisfactorily settled, but no result of the kind took place, for which we are sorrowful. Although Shere Dil is in truth a Murree, still from the time of his grandfathers, his wanderings and livelihood and that of his followers have been connected with the Brahooees, and the responsibilities of kafilas traversing the Bolan Pass had been entrusted to them. The Minguls (Brahooees) without any just reason or provocation attacked the Muzzeranis and killed Shere Dil's son with 12 of his men, and plundered all their property. On this Shere Dil joined the other Murrees, where he collected a force (lushkur) and attacked the kafila, but a great part of the property was carried off by the Brahooees, Shere Dil getting the credit of having taken all. It will be evident to you that there being no ruler (Wullee) in the country, I am powerless in an affair of this kind. If there was only a responsible ruler in the country matters would be brought right in a short time (ek lahza men). I do not deserve, therefore, the censure you have written to me, as the "Wulli Mulk" is not able to rule, and the Hakims at Khelat make us "intazam," and I am only a Belooch living in a corner of the hills.

This is in reply to my letter, telling him how grieved and vexed I was at the conduct of Shere Dil.

No news has been received here as to what steps are being taken to recover the stolen kafila property further than these reports contain.

2. Copy of the diary (No. 15) for the week ending 1st ultimo, is also enclosed.

Enclosure 1 in No. 84.

Dated Khelat, the 25th May 1872.

Diary No. 14 for the week ending 25th May 1872.

Arrived at Khelat on the 20th. After the usual visits of ceremony, I went with the Sarawan Sirdars on the 22nd to call on his Highness, and explained to him "that the "English Government felt greatly concerned at the disorder that prevailed of late "through the misunderstanding existing between him and these Sirdars;" and that as they had expressed their sorrow for the past, and a desire to give him their full support in future, I was in hopes he would overlook all past faults, and grant them the same privileges they had enjoyed in his late brother's reign.

Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, in consequence of his father's death, is to be officially acknowledged as the Bungulzai Sirdar. Most of the chiefs are to start on Tuesday next with Naib Abdool Azeez to collect property plundered from the first kafila. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Semmedi, Lehree, remain at Khelat with me.

Sirdar Noordeen were present at his Highness' durbar on the 22nd, and he subsequently informed Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed that his people had collected two-thirds of the property plundered, and the remaining one-third had been so cut up and distributed as to be of no use. On the day this statement was made, I received a letter from the merchants at Kozdar, stating that up to the date of writing they had not received a single article. This letter I forwarded to the Shahgassee, and he informed the Sirdar that his statement was false, and he would be only allowed eight days more to complete his agreement regarding the kafila property.

Members of the kafila lately plundered between Muclo and Siri-Bolan have constantly visited me during the week; from them I learn that sixty of their number were killed, and most of their escort fled on the first alarm. They assure me that the Naib or Dadur gave them a written paper, stating he would guarantee any loss occurring in the pass. One of their number states most positively that Alla Dina Koord joined in the attack and appropriated six loads of tea belonging to him. A horse-dealer, by name Sher Dil, was plundered of Rupees 7,500 he was bringing up to fulfil a contract he had with the remount committee at Bangalore. He is so incensed at his loss that he has brought most serious accusation against his Highness, "being scarcely in a frame of mind to be responsible for what he said." I refrain from recording the same until convinced of their accuracy. I tried to induce his Highness to give the merchants some pecuniary assistance, to inquire fully into their losses, and assure them that he would do all in his power to redress their wrongs. My advice has not been followed as yet, so most of the merchants have proceeded to Cabul to lay their complaints before his Highness the Ameer.

I have also told his Highness that if the merchants hold the certificate above alluded to, he is responsible for their losses. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed takes the same view of the case as I do, and is doing his utmost to induce the Khan to immediate action in this matter.

Enclosure 2 in No. 84.

Dated Khelat, the 1st June 1872.

Diary No. 15 for the week ending 1st June 1872.

ON Sunday afternoon his Highness held a durbar at which the Sarawan chiefs and the merchants who are interested in their proceedings were present, and it was agreed that they should proceed on the following day to their respective tribes, collect property, and send it to Mustoong, at which place Naib Abdool Azeez would be present to give them assistance if requisite. Hajee Mahomed Khan Rustoomzai, a connexion of Sirdir Moolla Mahomed, was appointed by the latter to exercise a general supervision over the other chiefs, and report progress. In the course of a week or ten days they have undertaken to state whether they are able to collect the property, or whether force will be required.

Sirdar Noordeen has as yet only returned a very trifling portion of the property he plundered.

The members of the last kafila plundered have visited me daily, and insisted that as their Ameer was a friend and ally of the English Government, I was bound to make his Highness the Khan compensate them for their losses. Having explained that I could take no direct action in the matter, but would use my influence with his Highness the Khan to redress their grievances, they expressed themselves dissatisfied, and have for the most part proceeded to Cabul to lay their complaints before his Highness the Ameer. His Highness the Khan has positively declined giving compensation, but has undertaken to try and recover the property, or get compensation from the people who plundered it, except from the Murrees, whom he disowns and professes to be unable to coerce.

Sirdar Azaad Khan, of Kharan, wrote me a long letter; the purport of it was that as a general treaty had been agreed upon, he hoped his Highness would restore him to the Naibship of Punchgoor.

This morning it was reported to me that great discontent prevailed in his Highness' small force from his having appointed a Brahooee to command one of his cavalry regiments, and having dismissed an Hindoostanee Native officer. On the Hindoostanees and Pathans objecting to serve under the above Brahooee, 47 were summarily discharged. Many people have asked his Highness to reconsider this decision as one calculated to bring about serious complications; he declines all advice on this matter, saying that he is the best judge of his own interests.

Enclosure in No. 85.

Dated Khelat, the 8th June 1872.

Diary No. 16 for the week ending 8th June 1872.

ABDOOL WAHUD, Naib of Dadur, writes that Sher Dil, Murree, is in the hills, and that he and all the Murrees state that the raid on Hin by the Sumalanees was at the instigation of the Naibs of Mustoong and Quetta, who received one-fifth of the plunder, and that, in consequence of this treatment, he had plundered the kafilas, and hoped his Highness would punish his naibs for their conduct towards him.

Naib Abdool Wahud enclosed a memorandum showing that in the last kafila plundered there were 63 camels and 205 donkeys laden with merchandise, for which they paid Rupees 110-13-9 for badurkee, or safe transit.

No news has yet been received from the Sarawan chiefs engaged in collecting the property of the first kafila.

Sirdar Noordeen, up to the present time, has only recovered a very trifling amount of what he plundered.

Afghan merchants of this place have received letters stating that one hundred Toorkomen had arrived at Candahar and were en route to Cabul to visit his Highness the Ameer, with what object was not known.

A kafila arrived from Kurrachee en route to Candahar. Amongst the merchants was a European boy, who went by the name of Deen Mahomed. I sent for him, and, on inquiry, found that his name was John Rogers, son of John Rogers, formerly a private in Her Majesty's 82nd, who exchanged into the 37th when the former regiment left Aden for England. Deen Mahomed alias John Rogers, junior, is about sixteen years of age, strong and intelligent. Having quarrelled with his father he went to Lahore, and worked with a boiler-maker; from thence he proceeded to Kurrachee, and was employed on the railway; owing to reductions he was thrown out of employment, and then decided upon turning Mahomedan and proceeding to Candahar. I tried to dissuade him from going on, and pointed out that with his education there ought to be no difficulty in getting employment in English territory. He said he was travelling for amusement, and was so kindly treated by the merchants that he had no wish to leave them; consequently I did not consider myself authorised to interfere with his movements.

Sirdar Abdool Rahmen, of Nooshkee, has written a friendly letter, but gives no news of importance.

Sirdar Sorab Khan, Dhoombkee, has also written to me describing a Murree raid on the village of Jam, and that he had followed them up to Murree, recovered all the cattle plundered, "about 400 head," as also the horses, arms, and accoutrements of 29 Murrees. Three Dhoombkees were wounded and seven Murrees killed.

Enclosure 1 in No. 86.

Dated Khelat, the 16th June 1872.

Diary No. 17 for the week ending Sunday, the 16th June 1872.

Syed Ahmed, who was plundered at Kozdar, has arrived at Khelat with about 80 camels and a quantity of piece goods. Some portion of the latter had been cut into such small pieces as to be of little or no use. A committee of merchants are valuing these remnants, and Noordeen has agreed to give any money compensation that may be requisite to settle accounts with the Syed.

The Sarawan Sirdars were doing their best to carry out what they had undertaken, when some person reported that instructions had been received by the Naib of Mustoong to attack the Brahooees. Upon this Mahomed Khan, Rustomzai, and Tundee, Shawanee, fled and have not since been heard of. Shadee Khan, Bungoolzai, Alla Dina's son, Yar Mahomed, and Syed Khan Mahomed, Shaee, remained. On Monday Sirdar Moolla Mahomed received a letter on the subject; and as it appeared to me that an invidious attempt was being made to thwart the arrangements made at Jacobabad, I at once wrote to his Highness on the subject. A copy of the letter is annexed.

Yesterday morning, Friday, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed came to my tent at half-past five, and stated that his Highness the Khan had decided upon making him a prisoner, and that the only cause he could assign for this treatment was the share he had taken in the Conference at Jacobabad, and his efforts to carry out the agreement then entered into. The Shahgassee also informed me that he is of opinion that the raid on Sher Dil, the plundering of the kafilas, and the reports which led to the late panic at Mustoong, were all instigated by his Highness, whose object is to evade the promises made in his name to the Sarawan chiefs. He (the Shahgassee) considered that he was entitled to a certain amount of protection, not from death, but from dishonourable treatment, and refused to leave my tent.

I immediately communicated with the Khan, and though his Highness' intentions with regard to the Shahgassee are universally spoken of, yet he professed perfect ignorance, stating that he had never harboured injurious designs towards his Wuzeer, and I regret to say he would not see the necessity of an immediate reconciliation.

This morning, Sunday, I called upon his Highness, and was accompanied by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. After a long interview his Highness agreed to give the latter a written guarantee that his life and person would be respected if he returned to his duties. He is inclined to do so, but I fear the reconciliation will be only temporary.

Late last night Shukkur Khan, commandant of one his Highness' regiments, and leader of the party opposed to the Shahgassee, sent to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and advised him to leave the neighbourhood of my camp, and not to trust to the English Government or the Shahgassee, promising to make arrangements for him if he would come over to his side.

It would appear that Mahomed Khan, Rustomzai, had fled into the hills and collected a force, but on being assured there was no danger he returned, and is now assisting in collecting kafila property.

Enclosure 2 in No. 86.

Translation of a Letter from Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

By a post just received I am called upon to report when, where, and why Shere Dil was plundered by the Sumulanees. I informed you verbally what the merchants stated, as also that it was the current report that your Naibs at Mustoong and Quetta had an understanding with the Sumalanees and received one fifth of the spoil. As a friend I invite your fullest confidence on this subject, it being desirable to know who were the instigators of this outrage.

The duty of a friend is to give advice, and I therefore venture to suggest that the Naib at Mustoong is ruining your reputation and interests. A case just reported to me is calculated to create another disturbance in this country. The Sarawan chiefs went to collect the property of the kafilas before time had elapsed. To enable them to do so your Naib allowed it to be understood that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was a prisoner at Khelat, and that an attack was about to be made on the Brahooees in Mustoong. This information has resulted in the chief's seeking safety in the hills, and will retard or prevent the carrying out of their engagements.

My Government have but one object in trying to restore peace and order in your country; but if the late efforts of the Commissioner in Sind are to be tacitly thwarted by your subordinates, and no advice attended to, I cannot see how you can expect a continuance of the friendship and support that has always been shown to you. I shall be obliged by your replying to this letter at your earliest convenience.

Enclosure 3 in No. 86.

Translation of a Letter from Syed Khan, Mahomed Shaee, Kadur Buksh, and Mahomed Azim, to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed.

We are at Mustoong, and have sent people in every direction to collect the kafila property. On the 1st Rubee-ool-Akir (corresponding to the 8th June 1872) people came to us and said that ammunition had been served out by the Naib to his garrison, and that the object was to attack us; also that you and Sirdar Noordeen had been imprisoned. Fearing for our lives we collected together. On the following morning Naib Abdool Rahman said this report was false. We then sent Feroze Khan to the Naib, and he had a conversation with him, and the Naib again stated that the report was untrue. Before day-break on the 9th Soolan Mahomed, Shawanee, arrived with a levy, and told every one he met en route that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen had been imprisoned, and that any Brahooees who wished to save themselves had better make terms with the Naib. Hearing this most of the Brahooees fled into the hills. Confiding in the English Government and his Highness the Khan, we have remained. Write a comforting letter and inform us of the true state of affairs.

Enclosure 4 in No. 86.

Translation of a Letter from Naib Abdool Rahnan, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

After salutations,—On the 1st Rubee-ool-Akir (corresponding to the 8th June) Afzul, Lehree, who was amongst his people, reported to me that all the Brahooees had collected together about midnight. On asking why they had done so they informed him that an order had come to the Naib from Khelat to attack them. Moorad Khan, in your Highness' service, confirmed this report, and stated that the Brahooees were leaving for the hills. I told Afzul, Lehree, and Moorad Khan, to stop them, and to let it be known that I had no evil intention towards them. Faiz Mahomed returned and informed me that Hajee Mahomed Khan and Junda, Shawanee, had fled, and that the Mahomed Shaees were in a great state of alarm. I sent to look for Mahomed Khan, Rustoomzai, but he could not be found. I then sent to Syed Khan, Mahomed Shaee, and told him that I had done him no harm, and no intention of doing any. Hearing this all the Mahomed Shaees came to see me, and I reassured them. Asking for the name of the person who had circulated this report, they replied the Brahooees had stated I had received an order to attack them. I replied that this was false, and asked them to hand over their informant. They agreed to do so, but have not done so as yet. I sent for Shadee Khan, Bungoolzai, and Alla Dina's son, Yar Mahomed; they confirmed what Syed Khan had said, viz. that the news had been circulated by Brahooees. I reassured them, and sent other people amongst the Brahooees to restore confidence. The people here start reports which I am unable to account for. The Brahooees have agreed to give up their informant, and I will punish him in such a way as you may seem fit. I have also informed them that the treaty with the English Government will be respected, and that I have no authority to act against it, and that they might remain where they were without fear. I have visited all the people, and told them they have nothing to be alarmed at.

WITH reference to paragraph 4 of the letter from this office to your address, No. 1250 P. dated the 4th of June last, I am now directed to convey to you the views of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council in regard to Sir William Merewether's recommendation that the Khan of Khelat should be granted a present of two thousand stand of percussion muskets of the old pattern.

2. His Excellency in Council is of opinion that in the existing condition of Khelat affairs it would be unadvisable to grant the Khan a gift of arms. In the event, however, of a satisfactory state of affairs being hereafter established in Khelat, his Excellency in Council will be prepared to reconsider the proposal should his Excellency the Governor in Council deem it desirable to re-submit it for that purpose.

No. 88.

No. 4346, dated Bombay Castle, 22nd July 1872.

From Secretary to the Government of Bombay to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, with the Governor General.

I AM directed to forward herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of a memorandum from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 690, dated 15th instant, submitting copy of a letter from the Political Agent, Khelat, No. 96, dated 29th ultimo, reporting the particulars connected with the attack on the kafila near Siri Bolan by certain of the Murree tribes.

Enclosure 1 in No. 88.

No. 96, dated Khelat, 29th June 1872.

From Political Agent, Khelat, to Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

IN acknowledging receipt of memorandum by the Commissioner in Sind, forwarded under your endorsement No. 1439, of the 8th instant, I have the honour to report that the raid on the kafila near Siri Bolan about 6th May was committed by different branches of the Murree tribes. No information has yet been received in support of the merchant's accusations against Sirdar Alla Dina Koord and his tribe.

2. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has from the first stated that, as Sirdar Alla Dina had accepted the terms offered him by the Commissioner in Sind, it was scarcely possible to believe he would ruin his prospects by taking any part in this raid. Yar Mahommed, the Sirdar's son, has been at Khelat for the last two or three days, and assured me that so far from having behaved as stated by the merchants, the Koords acted against the Murrees, killing three of the latter, and gave what assistance they could in forwarding wounded merchants and property to Quetta.

3. Yar Mahomed states that this raid was committed by the following Murrees :—

Muzzeranees.

1. Shere Dil.
2. Busheer.
3. Yaru.
4. Nawab, brother of Kutab Khan.
5. Nubbee Buksh.

Tinganis residing at Gwet.

1. Kanik, son of Masa.
2. Buktiar.

Langanis of Badra.

1. Duro.
2. Jungul.
3. Hingul.

The Bijaranis also took part in this raid, but no person of any rank or influence was present.

4. Shere Dil, Muzzeranee, has been written to on three or four occasions, stating that if he would return the kafila property justice would be done him. The Dinarzye Sirdar, who has been the medium of communication, writes to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed that he had sent Ketshi Murree with his Highness' letter, and one from myself, and that the only condition on which Shere Dil would come was, "that he should not be held responsible for the kafila property," as it had been carried off by the Hill Murrees; if restitution was insisted upon, the Samalanis were responsible. Copy and translation of letter annexed.

5. I regret to state that the Muzzeranees and Murrees so far from wishing this business amicably settled have commenced raiding. "Last week" I mentioned their attack on the Lehris, and in this week's diary an uncalled for raid on Busheer Murree is reported.

6. In conclusion, I would respectfully bring to your notice that I last year pointed out to his Highness the advisability of directing his officials not only to date their letters, but to give the dates on which any event of importance occurred. Disregard of these important points by his Highness' officials has caused the omission brought to my notice. As far as can be ascertained, the last two raids in the Bolan by the Murrees occurred on the 18th April and 6th May.

Enclosure 2 in No. 88.

From Sirdar Nawab Khan Dinarzye, to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

I RECEIVED letters from his Highness the Sahib and yourself for Shere Dil through Naib Abdool Rehman, and forwarded the same by Kutchee. Shere Dil has no wish to present himself before his Highness, fearing that he may be held responsible for the kafila property.

I now want your instructions if no attempt will be made against Shere Dil for the kafila property. I will do my best to induce him to visit his Highness.

Shere Dil states he has taken none of the plunder, but that it was carried off by the Hill Murrees, and that his Highness ought to exact compensation from the Minguls. If this is done, he will make his salaam.

Abdool Rehman, the Naib, always sends letters to Shere Dil for me to deliver, is it your wish that I should do so? Whatever you direct I will do with pleasure.

I AM directed to transmit herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of the diary No. 20, of the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 29th ultimo, received through the Commissioner in Sind under indorsement No. 693. dated the 16th instant.

Enclosure in No. 89.

Diary No. 20 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 29th June 1872.

SHERE DIL, Muzzeranee, was some time ago informed that 15,000 of his sheep had been collected, and would be made over to him if he would send for them. On his refusing, they were placed in charge of his relative Busheer, hoping that he (Sher Dil) would be induced to attend the inquiry his Highness had undertaken. On the 19th June Shere Dil attacked Busheer close to Mustung, wounded him, and not only carried off the 15,000 sheep above named, " but all Busheer's flocks."

Naib Abdul Aziz writes—" Great alarm exists at Mastung owing to Murree depre- " dations. The roads by Khand, Mustung, and Lak Shawe are so far closed that no " solitary traveller can pass. For safety, people are obliged to go in small parties from 10 to 12. At the latter place, Lak Shawe, some Brahooees were murdered.

Abdul Latif, the Naib of Quetta, reported to his Highness that the Lehris were inclined to create disturbances on the slightest provocation. Some of the latter tribe had quarrelled with Jafar Khan Jattack, an artillery sepoy, and on the Naib apprehending two Lehris the latter tribe went off and attacked the Jattacks wounding Jafar Khan and two or three of his relatives. On hearing this, I pointed out to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that disturbances of this kind would retard the efforts that were being made to restore peace and quiet in his district, and asked him to insist upon better behaviour on the part of this tribe.

The above Naib also reports a dispute between Ali Jan and Mahomed Said Khan Bamuzais, residents of Hunnah, and that on the former complaining to him he sent Hybat Khan, Sumalani, a servant of his Highness, to try and settle their differences. Said Khan, however, was very abusive, and shots were fired on both sides without doing any injury.

Several of the Sarawans have written to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed pointing out that the Naibs are not content with the amount of lucerne taken in Nassir Khan's reign, but are most oppressive in their exactions. Another cause of dissatisfaction is, that when the Sarawan Chiefs had to leave their country his Highness benefited by the standing crops, and now that they have been forgiven they think they ought to benefit by the crops. The Naibs, however, deny their right to the same, saying the grain has been raised from his Highness' seed.

As the Sarawans were carrying out their engagements with the kafila merchants in a very dilatory and unsatisfactory manner, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed sent for the Kafila Bashi, and has been busy with him and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed for the last two or three days. The present arrangements are that all property in possession of the Brahooees seven-ninths of the whole is to be given up, and that Naib Abdul Aziz has full power to coerce those who will not do so. He can also call upon the Naibs of Quetta and Dada to give any assistance that may be required. On the Sarawans stating that all recoverable property has been restored, a committee is to assemble and assess what is due on missing donkeys, camels, and other property; two-ninths of the property was given to the Murrees, this the Brahooees say cannot be recovered.

Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord acknowledges to having received two-ninths of the plunder, but up to the present has evaded restoring any portion of it. I spoke very strongly to this chief's son, Yar Mahomed, at Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's request, and pointed out that it would have been more creditable if his father had set a good example by at once restoring the plunder in his possession, instead of procrastinating and "trying to evade" returning the same.

Excitement at Khelat has subsided. Many people have expressed their opinion very plainly regarding the mischievous intrigues of his Highness' two Moonshees and Abdul Ajan, a Pathan merchant. Yesterday Darogah Attah Mahomed said that no one's character was safe so long as his Highness listened to the insidious counsels of the Moonshees, and that their conduct on the present occasion had been such that they ought not only to be removed but most severely punished.

Enclosure in No. 90.

Diary, No. 21, of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 6th July 1872

Ali Jan, Naib of Kedj, writes to his Highness the Khan that Sirdar Fakir Mahomed had written to people of rank and influence to withhold their revenue, "as paying it "would reflect injuriously on his administration of affairs in Mekran, and by not paying "the same," he, Fakir Mahomed, would be reinstated. Ali Jan points out the difficult position he is placed in, and requests his Highness to send 100 infantry, one gun, one mortar, and six artillerymen, stating that complying with this suggestion would be acceptable to the majority of the people in Mekran, as they had promised him, Ali Jan, their support on arrival of the said detachment, and were quite willing that a new Sirdar should be elected, if Meah Bhai Khan assumed an hostile attitude towards his Highness' Government. The Mullas who were driven out of Turbut by Sirdar Fakir Mahomed have returned and offered Rs. (5,000) five thousand per annum for permission to occupy the fort. Ali Jan recommends his Highness' acceptance of this proposal, as Sirdar Meah Bhai Khan had offered to give them possession of the same for an annual consideration of Rs. (2,500) two thousand five hundred. This offer the Mullas refused, preferring that their possession of the said fort should be guaranteed by his Highness.

Mir Kunur, Mulla Suliman, Mulla Rehmat, Mulla Mubarak, Nubbee Buksh Koda, and other Belooch have informed Ali Jan that the revenue will not be paid unless people see that he is in a position to insist upon their doing so, and have recommended him to apply for the detachment above named.

The people who have given this advice to Ali Jan state that they are ashamed of having joined in the disturbance against Darogah Atta Mahomed, and that they have great cause for thankfulness when comparing their position with those Belooch under Persian rule. Ali Jan further reports "that Captain Miles had sent for him to Gwadur, "as it was supposed a kafila had been plundered between Punchgoor and Kedj, but that "he had been unable to ascertain whether anything of the kind had occurred. Vernacular "letter attached, no date."

By the post that brought Ali Jan's report complimentary letters were received by his Highness from the following people, stating that they were willing and ready to pay their revenue to Naib Ali Jan, and to perform any other service that may be required of them:—Sirdar Bhai Khan, Meah Murad, Meah Esaw, Meah Mahomed Hussein, Gitchkis, Meah Kunur, Saugar, Mulla Rehmat, Zehri, Mulla Rehmat, Bolehda, Nubbee Buksh and Abdulla, Kodahs, Mulla Suliman, Deshte, Meah Yar Mahomed, Meah Dad Karim, Mulla Karim Beg, and Futteh Mahomed.

Haji Mahomed Khan, Rustamzai, writes to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that the Brahooes are quiet and well disposed, but as the Zemindars urged on by Moonshee Faiz Mahomed Shaikh were most anxious to create a disturbance, he had spoken to Naib Abdool Rahman, and held himself responsible for the conduct of the Brahooees. Note.—The Moonshee above-named is a connexion of the Moonshees who have caused so much trouble at Khelat.

Haji Mahomed Khan also mentioned that the merchants had received a letter from Safdar Ali's nephew, stating that his Highness the Ameer was in correspondence with the Commissioner of Peshawur regarding their losses, &c.

Naib Abdool Rahman writes on the 19th Rab-us-sani, 26th June 1872, that Shere Dil, Murree, had carried off four flocks of sheep about half a mile from the fort, and had taken the shepherds with him as far as Kirta in the Bolan. The Naib requests his Highness' instructions whether he shall attack Shere Dil who has taken up a position at Kajuri in the Bolan.

The Naib reports that the Brahooees refuse to feed 30 camels, as they used to do in the late Khan's reign, and that he has not coerced them. Consequently the supply of grass only suffices for present consumption, and renders it impossible for him to stock any for the cold season.

The above Naib further reports that the Brahooees are sending their families and property into the hills, with what object he has been unable to ascertain. He, the Naib, had heard that Haji Mahomed Khan, Rustamzai, and Janda Shawani had received letters from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed telling them "the Brahooees" were not to create any disturbance or give offence to your Highness' officials, but to do their best to collect kafila property, &c., &c.

Abdul Latif, Naib of Quetta, writes that the Brahooees in his district are sending away their property and families into the hills, but he has been unable to ascertain whether they intend to create a disturbance or are afraid of being attacked. Syud Ali Mahomed had returned to Kirani.

Sirdar Azaad Khan having heard of the present state of affairs of Khelat has written to Shahgasee Wullee Mahomed as follows:—I have heard that you and his Highness distrust each other. This is the way of the Ahmedzais; they would murder their most devoted servant for 5 Rs. I and all my people served the Ahmedzais well, you must recollect how Ibrahim Khan, Nowsherwani, and twelve of my relatives, besides Rakshanis died in their service. The Ahmedzais seized my country, killed some of my people and made slaves of others. I myself served the present Khan to the best of my ability, but from first to last derived no benefit; on the contrary, he killed my nephew and deprived me of my lands. I held in my own right "or what had been given to me" by Meah Mehrab Khan, Nusseer Khan, and the Gitchkis. No one can trust or believe an Ahmedzai. If you can make any arrangement for me through the English Government or Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, I will get his Highness the Ameer's permission to visit Khelat. I have right on my side and Sunnuds to show; Musa Khan of Sohrab interferes with my people; please prevent this. Shahgasee Wullee Mahomed sent this letter to his Highness the Khan for perusal, and in replying to the same has been most careful not to encourage Azaad Khan or give offence to his Highness.

Sirdar Mahomed Syud Khan, Bamuzai, has written to me stating that the plundering of the last two kafilas was brought about by the Samalani Mingul's attack on Shere Dil. The Murrees had gone to Sang and the big hills, and asked permission to settle in the Durrani country, but no answer had been given, as he, "Sirdar Mahomed Syud Khan," would like to know the wishes of my Government in this matter.

The above Sirdar says that he has received no pension since the Mohurrum.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed also received a letter from Sirdar Mahomed Syud Khan, in which he states that, although Shere Dil, Murree, had conducted transit duties in the Bolan Pass in a satisfactory manner, the attack on him by the Samalanis was at his Highness' instigation. Sirdar Mahomed Syud Khan also states that he has incurred his Highness' displeasure from having assisted Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in sending his family from Mittree to Seebee, and that the Naib of Quetta hopes by acts of oppression to drive him out of Hannah.

Sirdar Ali Jan and Sirdar Mahomed Khan, "Buranis," have been on bad terms with each other for some time past, and it appears to me that Naib Abdool Latif's report given in last week's diary, No. 20, is more reliable than what has been written to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed.

Sirdar Mahomed Syud Khan also writes that if he was entrusted with the management of the Bolan, he would make satisfactory arrangements for the protection of kafilas.

On Tuesday last when visiting his Highness the Khan he alluded to the Seistan Mission, and expressed an opinion that the Persians were being pushed on by Russia, and that within two years serious fighting might occur to arrest their further progress, consequently Beloochistan would be of the greatest importance to the English Government. With reference to the latter part of this speech, I replied that if his Highness relied more on the cordial support of his chiefs and people than on a few regular troops, Beloochistan would certainly be a place of importance.

Enclosure in No. 91.

Diary, No. 22, by Political Agent, Khelat, for week ending 13th July 1872.

In last week's diary, No. 21, Haji Khan Rustumzai reported that the Zemindars of Mustung at the instigation of Faizu were endeavouring to create a disturbance with the Brahooees. A few days after this Faizudad, Karim Shahdi Khan, Jamsher, Dil Murad Ali, and other Zemindars wrote to his Highness that the Brahooees were robbing and ill-treating them, and that they would not remain unless protection was afforded. Faizu himself is the largest Zemindar, his Highness' Kardar, and connected, as before stated, with the Kalat Moonshees. Faizu also writes to his Highness that Naib Abdool Aziz is siding with the Brahooees and does not exert himself about recovering kafila property.

Naib Abdool Aziz and the merchants write: The Sarawans will not restore what they have plundered, and force will be required to recover the same. On hearing this Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, by the advice of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed sent Sumandar Lehri to the different tribes to ascertain who was withholding property. He is to return in six days and state against whom forcible measures are required.

On the 10th July the merchants at Mustung received a letter from Candahar telling them to come at once to the latter place; that their claims would be represented to the Governor General at Calcutta by his Highness the Ameer, and compensation obtained for them, and that there was no further necessity for their remaining in Beloochistan. Naib Abdool Aziz begged them to delay until he could communicate with his Highness and ascertain his wishes. Naib Abdool Aziz also writes that the merchants state they will not receive wool or the goods taken, but cash payment. The latter are well aware that seventy loads can be recovered, but as the price of wool has fallen they don't care about receiving the same.

Sirdar Nur Ali Khan, son of Shere Ali Khan, Governor of Candahar, wrote to his Highness, stating that in the kafila plundered Musha merchant had Rupees 5,945 worth of goods that had been purchased for his father.

This property was looted in your country; if you are in want of money you can keep it. "As we are friends," if not required, you can refund the same to Musha.

His Highness the Khan wrote the following reply: You are well aware that in this world fighting and plundering occur by chance. There has been rebellion in my country; I at once gave directions to my Naib to close the Bolan to merchants. He did so. Some of those who went gave written agreements that they took the responsibility of proceeding by this route on themselves, whilst others in a self-willed manner disregarded the advice given them, consequently they have only to blame themselves for the losses sustained. The said merchants then complained to the English Government, and the records on this subject are in Major Harrison's possession. The English Government decided that the Brahooe chiefs were responsible for this kafila, and the said Sirdars agreed to restore what they had plundered. On arrival at Khelat I directed one of my officials to assist them in recovering the same. My property is yours and yours is mine. I will do the best I can to recover what you have lost.

Sirdar Abdul Rehman, Zugur Mingul, of Nushky, writes to his Highness: The receipt of your letter has given me great pleasure. All the Seistanis are banding together and intend plundering Chaga, Nushky, and Kharan. About 60 camel sowars came secretly to Nushky and carried off 30 to 40 camels belonging to Alum Khan, Rakshani, and 25 belonging to the Minguls. We followed these Seistanis as far as Chago, but could not come up with them.

Small pox is very prevalent, as also a bad type of fever.

No. 92.

No. 1558, dated Simla, 7th August 1872.

From Officiating Secretary to the Government of Punjab, to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, with the Governor General.

I AM desired to forward, for information, copy of letter addressed to the Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, by Captain R. G. Sandeman, dated 27th July, reporting a raid by a party of Loharani Murrees on the frontier village of Chota Bala.

Enclosure 1 in No. 92.

Dated 27th July 1872.

From Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, to Officiating Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

I HAVE the honour to report that a few days ago a party of eight Loharani Murrees from Nassan made a raid on the village of Chota Bala. They succeeded in getting clear off with 60 head of cattle. Two herdsmen, who were in charge of the cattle, were made prisoners, and taken by the marauders to the second range of hills, and there released.

2. I reported this affair to the Commissioner in Sind by telegram, intimating to him that I believe the act was committed without the knowledge or consent of the Murree chiefs, who are still deliberating at Kahan as to what reply they will give me regarding the return of the plundered kafila property.

3. The marauders were followed by a party of Lugharis who are now in a Mussooree (Boogtee) village in the Shum plain. The stolen cattle are with the Zoherani Murrees close by. I am now sending off a party to demand from the Zoherani chief the return of the stolen cattle. The result will be communicated to you hereafter.

4. The village of Chota Bala, from whence the cattle were plundered, is on our extreme border, and beyond the line of our frontier posts. Why I think the act was not done with the knowledge of the Murree chiefs is, because the object was apparently plunder only, as they did not injure the herdsmen in charge of the cattle. This is the view taken of the offence by the chief of the Lugharis, Jumal Khan. I enclose in the vernacular copy of the report made by the chief recording the occurrence.

Enclosure 2 in No. 92.

Demi-official, dated Camp Murree, 27th July 1872.

From Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, to Colonel Mainwaring.

THE enclosed I think it right to send you at once. The village on which the raid was made, is quite near to the Murrees, and it is of course exposed to any depredation of theirs, being 13 miles beyond our present line of posts. A post in the Shum plain, which I have so long pleaded for, would entirely protect this border, and now I hope that this much will be clear, that it is necessary to afford our subjects (situated like the Chota Bala people), protection.

Surely it is hardly fair to take revenue from a village like Chota, if we do not protect it; yet we do so. I think the Zoheranis will give back the cattle, but in their present state of mind it is hard to tell. I will do my best.

In regard to your last letter, I forgot to notice one point when replying. You say it would not do for me to go as a suppliant to Kahan about the restoration of the property. Of course I know that, but had I gone I would have taken at least 600 sowars with me.

Kahan is really quite accessible from this, the country open and easy, and there are only 300 Murrees in the little fort.

I would have appeared before it half as a friend and half intending to demand the stolen property. Of course there would have been a little risk, but not so much as appears on the surface, for most of our Belooch chiefs who would have been with me are related to the Murrees, and they could hardly have resisted my friendly request, put in a way that made it rather difficult for them to refuse. However, under the circumstances, I think with you that it was well that I did not go.

Since last I wrote, I have had no reply from the Murrees. I expect it every day, though the delay shows that the chiefs are seriously considering their position. This letter, like the last, goes viâ Boogtee Dera.

Enclosure 1 in No. 93.

No. 785, dated Kurrachee, the 7th August 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Excellency the Governor and President in Council of Bombay.

In reference to my telegram of this day's date, I have the honour to submit copies of the documents marginally noted.

Letter No. 100, from Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat.
Letter No. 101, forwarding translation of khureeta from his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

2. In the first Major Harrison expresses his opinion that his Highness the Khan has not been actuated in his late proceedings by promptings from any foreign source, and that he is confirmed in this by the assurance of the Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. This may be depended on, and the view is so far satisfactory.

3. The causes then may be looked for in local circumstances only, and would appear to be attributable to the Khan's dissatisfaction with, and dislike to the Sirdars, who have given him so much trouble during his reign, to the encouragement in these of a few interested individuals who have unfortunately gained the confidence of the Khan, and who fear the loss of the influence they have obtained over him, should matters become more settled, and the Khan be induced to depend only on his legitimate and faithful advisers, and further to the difficulties he finds himself beset with in consequence of recent events.

4. Major Harrison seems, from additional information he has received, to be convinced that his Highness the Khan was fully cognizant of the intended attack on Sher Dil, Murree; and from what was said at first, as well as what has since transpired, it may be possible that he was led into countenancing such, on the suggestion that as the perpetrators started from the neighhourhood of the estates of the Sirdars, the odium of the act might easily be fixed on those Sirdars. Be this, however, as it may, there is no gainsaying the one fact that a gross outrage was committed within the Khan's territory on a body of people who were at the time residing inoffensively and unsuspectingly in that territory, and that this outrage led to others on the trade highway, involving heavy loss to merchants passing through the country, for which the Khan must be responsible, and, especially as regards the merchants, is clearly so under the treaty existing between him and the British Government.

5. But as regards the attack on Sher Dil, Murree, supposing the Khan to have known nothing of it, it only goes to prove that his subjects are quite beyond his control, or that he does not care to try and bring them back within it. This is a most unsound state of affairs, and unless a change takes place there can be no other result than the speedy dissolution of the Khelat Government.

6. Hitherto the Khan has never failed to listen readily to advice proffered by the Political Agent, and has most willingly acted upon it; but he seems now so perplexed by the troubles that beset him that he has quite lost his head, and deliberately rejects the only safe course that lies open for him.

7. His complaint in conversation with Major Harrison as to the manner in which the Murrees had been separately recognised and treated with as if they were not his subjects, and that therefore he ought not to be held responsible for their actions, is not altogether unreasonable. I have always opposed that system as most objectionable both because it tended to lower the Khan's authority in this country, and because it was encouraging a portion of the Khelat kingdom in their acts against the sovereign of the country, and making them quasi-independent. In this instance, however, the plea adduced by him will not hold, for the injury done by the Murrees to the merchants was brought about by the unjustifiable aggressive action of the Khan's own subjects on that tribe.

8. Of the men on whom the Khan has so unfortunately taken to lean, the two moonshees are ordinary people of the country, sharp, clever, unscrupulous creatures, who being ever at the Khan's elbow, fill his mind with all sorts of suspicions, and with wild ideas as to the best means of getting free from his present embarrassments. One of these last I am told is, they have assured him the British Government will never proceed to the length of withdrawing the Political Agent, and that he need not feel anxiety on that score. This accounts for the quiet and almost unconcerned way in which he received my letter.

9. Shukur Khan is a Brahooee by birth, and has always shown great loyalty to the Khan. During the disturbances last cold season he commanded the Khan's troops serving in Kutchi, and showed much gallantry when his camp was attacked at night by the rebel Sirdars. He is a sensible man in his way, though not possessed of any marked ability. It is thought expedient by the intriguing party to secure his services, and the bait has been held out to him that he shall be made commander-in-chief of all the Khan's regular troops. But this will be of little use to him or them, unless he has more personal influence than at present he has the credit of, for the Khan's troops are mostly Hindustanees, and the majority of them would most strongly object to being commanded-in-chief by a Brahooee of small military experience.

10. In speaking to Major Harrison, his Highness the Khan remarked about Darogah Gul Mahommed and Gangu Bania in connexion with the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, as if the latter caused their removal. This is most unjust to the Shahgassee. The removal of those people took place shortly after the Khan's accession, before the Shahgassee became Wuzeer, or took any very prominent part in public affairs, and was desired by the British officials at the time, in consequence of the great injury the Darogah and the Bania did the Khan's cause by their bad advice and evil proceedings.

11. The reply of his Highness the Khan is, I regret to observe, most unsatisfactory; he endeavours to throw the blame of the attack on Sher Dil, Murree, and others, and evidently hints at the Sirdars being the promoters of it. But the information received from Major Harrison, especially in regard to the statement that a share of the plunder had been received by the Naib of Mustoong, which is generally spoken of, as well as the exertions the Sirdars have been making to recover the property plundered by their followers, all lead to the conclusion that the Sirdars were not mixed up in this matter, while it is pretty certain the Khan's officials were. The amount restored to Bashir, brother of Sher Ali, was only a portion of what was taken from the latter, and I have not yet heard of any of the perpetrators of the outrage having been punished by his Highness the Khan.

12. I have always done my utmost to support his Highness in his legitimate position as ruler of the country, and would be only too glad to place faith in the intentions he expresses, that they "are such as to benefit my country and government in every way. God willing, as far as I am able, I will not fail in the slightest degree;" but I am reluctantly compelled to say that judging from the present state of affairs I am unable to do so. His Highness declines to make arrangements for compensation on account of the kafila property plundered by the Murrees from the kafilas, and rejects the advice tendered him to remove from his side those persons who it has been pointed out to him by the Political Agent are misleading him, and inducing him to act in a manner which cannot meet with the approval of the British Government. He also denies that he had any intention of committing any injustice towards the Wuzeer, or of removing him from his position.

13. This last I am quite unable to credit. The Shahgassee is a man of staunch loyalty, of undoubted courage, proved on more than one occasion of great danger and difficulty, and I feel perfectly certain he would never have left his master to claim protection from the British representative had he not most positive reasons for knowing that his liberty, if not his life, was in danger and that he could do no good either to his sovereign or his country by remaining longer at his post.

14. Having carefully weighed all the circumstances, and having in view the indifferent and insincere attitude now assumed by his Highness the Khan, I feel convinced that to bring him to a proper sense of his position and responsibilities, it is absolutely necessary to convey to him in an unmistakeable manner that his present proceedings can only be regarded as directly opposed to the friendly relations previously existing between the two Governments, and at the same time to let him see that the intimation of the intended withdrawal of the Political Agent from his Court, if he did not conform more correctly to his treaty engagements, was not a mere idle threat. I have therefore addressed the instructions in the appended telegram to the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind for communication to the Political Agent at Khelat, and trust what I have done may meet with your Excellency's approval.

15. Judging from the Khan's character hitherto, it is not probable he will press matters to extremes, but will yield at the last moment. He well knows that he would be perfectly helpless without the support of the British Government, deprived also as he will be of the services of the only man in the country who has honestly and truly stood by him and given weight to his government, the Wuzeer Wullee Mahomed. Flight would be the only resource left to him, and he cannot but be aware that in the present unsettled state of the country, with the various factions existing around him, that would be most difficult if not impossible. The regular troops being entirely dependent on him for their pay and livelihood would try and prevent his leaving.

16. It remains then to be considered what should be done in the event of the Khan acceding to the stipulations which it has become necessary to impose. I would here beg to observe that setting forth any such stipulations beyond simple adherence to the treaty, was quite opposed to the policy I have all along advocated with reference to our relations with Khelat, but it was rendered imperative by the interference forced on by unfortunate circumstances last cold season, when prominent action had to be taken between his Highness the Khan and his chiefs on subjects which in their original state (that is before the plunder of the kafilas in the Bolan) related mainly to themselves, and needed no direct intervention on our part. However, that is all past, and I only allude to it here now to show that when recommending interference, which I have for so long strenuously endeavoured to avoid, it is from no change of view as to the policy that ought to have been maintained, but that the relative positions have been so much altered that something more than was before sufficient must now be entered upon.

17. The course, then, that I would recommend, should his Highness the Khan yield, is that he should give by letter, and immediate action clear assurance that he will cause the restitution of the property plundered from the kafilas in the Bolan in December last, and when such is not recoverable, that he will cause compensation to be made in money. The Sirdars are quite ready to exert themselves in this respect and, sincerely supported by his Highness the Khan, there is not the least doubt the measure may be perfectly carried out; that he will earnestly set to work to do justice to the Muzaranee section of the Murrees upon whom the outrage was perpetrated by the Sumalanee Minguls, the Murrees also restoring the property they captured from the kafilas in April last or its equivalent; that he will restore to his former position and to confidence the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, who was appointed to that post originally with the concurrence of the British authorities, and that he will personally answer for his safety and honourable treatment; that he will remove from his counsels the evil disposed people who have been misleading him, and whose ill advice had led him into his present difficulties; and finally that he will at once make good arrangements for the safe transit of merchants and their goods through his country.

18. There is nothing in these that should bear heavily on his Highness the Khan, if he is sincere in his intentions and will heartily act up to what is asked of him. The most difficult part of all, the recovery from the Murrees of the property carried off by them, can be greatly, if not completely, facilitated by arrangements which Captain Sandeman from Dera Ghazi Khan is engaged in, and in which I have every confidence he will be successful. Then with justice done by his Highness the Khan, on the aggressors, or the Muzaranees, I trust to be able to make such arrangements with the whole Murree tribe, in conjunction with the Khan's officers, as should lead to their better behaviour in future, and to the strengthening of his Highness the Khan's position by having them more under control.

19. Before concluding this report I should mention in reference to the Khan's family that he has three sons—

1. Miah Mahomed Khan, 9 years of age, of good family by the mother's side, intelligent and pleasing.
2. Shah Nawaz, about 4 years old, mother not well connected, bright and intelligent.
3. Miah Azim Khan, by the sister of the Panjgur chief, 13 months old, promising child.

The Khan has taken a great dislike to his eldest son* because he heard at one time that it was proposed by the Brahooees to put him on the throne on his, the Khan's removal. The families to which the mothers of the first two belong are not mentioned, but will be obtained and communicated hereafter.

* A not uncommon thing among Eastern monarchs.

20. Captain Humfrey, with company of rifles and treasure, had reached Khelat, so Major Harrison was well strengthened and provided.

Enclosure 2 in No. 93.

No. 100, dated Khelat, the 18th July 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge correspondence forwarded under your endorsement No. 1675 of the 3rd July, and to report as follows:—

During the past three years I have as a rule found his Highness the Khan amenable to reason and willing to abide by my advice; consequently his recent behaviour is unaccountable, and makes me doubtful of his sanity.

Having heard him talk of Persian progress supported by Russian influence, it struck me that he might have been in secret communication with these countries, and I imparted this suspicion to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, who assured me that to the best of his belief no such communication had occurred.

This suspicion having been set at rest "to a certain extent," his Highness' behaviour can only be attributed to local causes.

In the early part of the year, when his Highness authorised the Commissioner in Sind to act on his behalf, he was under the impression that the Sarawan chiefs would be too much ashamed of their conduct to visit Jacobabad, and that he would therefore get the credit of complying with the wishes of the English Government without any settlement taking place. When, however, the Commissioner's arrangements were completed, and it was understood that the chiefs on certain conditions were to return to their country and hold the same rights and privileges as they had done in the late Nusseer Khan's reign, "his Highness in my opinion set about trying to nullify what had been done."

First thing heard was that the Brahooees had attacked Sher Dil, Muzaranee, and the latter had revenged himself on the kafilas. "Knowing the character of the people in this country," I at once surmised that the raid on Sher Dil had been at the instigation of his Highness or some of his officials. On reaching Khelat, I was confirmed in this belief, and was told only a day or two ago by Sirdar Nawab Khan, Dinarzai, that such was the case, the Naibs of Mustoong and Quettah being great favourites of his Highness. My urging an inquiry was distasteful, particularly as I pointed out that he was responsible for the acts of his subordinates. His Highness' present feelings to the Sarawan chiefs may be understood from the conversation narrated in last paragraph of diary No. 21, and I fear his Highness' hatred to these chiefs is such that he would do anything sooner than see them again established on their own lands.

His Highness' chief advisers are Saleh Mahomed and Gul Mahomed, Moonshies, as also Shukur Khan, commanding one of his Highness' regiments; "the two former "have accumulated large fortunes by peculation and acts of oppression," and doubtless feared that if quiet was restored their own conduct might be too strictly scrutinized. The last-named, though a good soldier, has been spoilt by familiar treatment, and has cast in his lot with the above moonshees. I have vainly endeavoured to point out to his Highness that the Shahgassee and myself have his real interest at heart, and that low intriguing people will assuredly be his ruin. How futile advice is will be seen from the conversation that followed on presenting his Highness with the Commissioner's khureeta, translation of letter No. 1214, by the Secretary, Government of India, and paragraphs 2 and 5 of Commissioner's letter No. 623 to your address.

The khureeta was given to his Highness when visiting me on Friday afternoon, and as he did not seem to realize how serious the business was, I advised him to read it quietly when he got home, and that I should return his visit the next evening. Accordingly on Saturday I had a private interview, and first of all pointed out that the Ameer of Affghanistan had made very strong representations to the British Government regarding the losses sustained by his subjects in Beloochistan, and that my Government looked to him to carry out his treaty with them; I further stated that, as the Murrees were his subjects he was responsible for their acts, and that the best thing to be done would be to meet the difficulty in a manly spirit, pay what he could afford, and in the cold weather exact restitution from the Murrees: if compensation was not afforded in some way or another I should be obliged to withdraw from his Court.

To this he replied that during the past four years Colonel Phayre and Captain Sandeman had so interfered with the Murree tribe that he could not consider them his subjects, or be responsible for their acts, and therefore declined to give the slightest compensation. I again urged him to consider what the consequences would be, but he insisted upon adhering to what he had said.

I then told his Highness that Government had called upon me to report regarding the raid on Sher Dil, and had most unwillingly come to the conclusion that it was either at his instigation or that of his Naibs. His Highness denied this, and stated that the Sumalanees alone were to blame.

In conclusion I urged his Highness to follow the Commissioner's advice and dismiss his evil counsellors, mentioning Saleh Mahomed, Gul Mahomed, and Shukur Khan. His Highness in reply stated that I had been biassed against his moonshees by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, a man of intolerant disposition, through whose instrumentality he h lost the services of his former Wuzeer Gangu, Darogah Gool Mahomed, and Sher Kh the commandant of his forces; that if the English Government wanted his countr would surrender it to them, but could not dismiss these servants as they had served faithfully and well. I had to remind his Highness that I last year urged him in strongest manner possible not to be guided by the advice of Nawab Mahomed Khan his moonshees, but to listen to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. Having given me s decided answers regarding the Murree question, as also his determination not to dismis evil counsellors, I was obliged to let his Highness understand that there was every probability of my leaving Khelat at an early date. Hearing this he begged and urged me to remain, and to induce the Shahgassee to return to his duty, as the moment we left there would be a general outbreak. "His Highness, however, still adhered to what he "had said regarding treaty arrangements and dismissing evil advisers."

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed states that his Highness will not be guided by my advice, or that of the English Government, there is no probability of his having any influence as Wuzeer, and that he therefore gratefully accepts the protection offered by the British Government.

Enclosure 3 in No. 93.

No. 101, dated Khelat, the 18th July 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I have the honour to forward reply by his Highness the Khan to the Commissioner in Sind's khurreeta. Translation of the same is enclosed.

His Highness' letter is intended to disprove any complicity in the raid against Sher Dil; his freedom from responsibility as regards the Murree tribe; perfect innocence of the charge brought against him by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed; finally that he is not guided by evil counsellors.

3. As regards Sher Dil's business, in addition to information in letters marginally noted, I have since heard from Sirdar Nawab Khan, Dinarzai, that the raid originated with his Highness, and was carried out by the Naib of Mustoong, who received one fifth of the spoil. A Pathan merchant living near the latter place has been in the habit of purchasing wool from Sher Dil, and advanced Rs. 3,000 for this year's fleece. This man confirms previous statements, but has asked me to withhold his name.

4. Referring to his Highness' responsibility about the Murree tribe, he is more explicit in the conversation detailed in my letter No. 100 than in his reply to the Commissioner in Sind. There can, however, be no doubt of his refusing to be held responsible for the acts of this tribe.

5. His Highness having denied all knowledge of the Shir Dil business is not likely to confess having had any sinister designs against Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

6. His Highness denies being guided by evil advisers, and gives a high character to the people "who are misleading him by their insidious counsel." These three men, Saleh Mahomed, Gul Mahomed, and Shukur Khan are universally detested, particularly the first named. Knowing this I last year urged his Highness not to listen to his advice. His Highness' capacity of discriminating between good and evil counsellors can be estimated from the statement he made regarding Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed in connexion with Gangu, Darogah Gul Mahomed, and Sher Khan, formerly commandant of troops.

Enclosure 4 in No. 93.

Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 9th Jamadi-ul-Awal 1289.

Your letter has reached me. From reading it I am aware of its contents. Through your friendship you write at considerable length regarding the plundering of merchants by the Murrees, and that this was brought about by certain people attacking an inoffensive Muzaranee, Sher Dil, who resides in the Bolan Hill. My kind friend, my reply to this is that the Muzaranees were undoubtedly inoffensive people, and were moreover in my service to look after transit in the Bolan. Ill-disposed people above mentioned, after the treaty arrangement made in your presence, either according to their usual habits, or at the instigation of other people, on arrival at Mustoong collected people from every tribe of Brahooees. My Naib at Mustoong hearing they had collected with evil intent, sent a man at once to stop them. They would not be stopped and gave him a decided answer. My Naib sent sowars against them with instructions to prevent their proceeding and should they not do so, to attack them. Before the latter could arrive, these ill-disposed people had attacked Sher Dil, and were returning with the plunder. Sowars met them on the road and ordered them to return the plunder; they refused to do so and began to fight, upon which one of their number was killed and some of the property recovered. The Naib then reported all that had occurred to me, and by my orders the ringleaders were imprisoned and property handed over to Bashir, Sher Dil's cousin. I was anxious to give the people in fault speedy punishment, but delayed fearing lest the Brahooees should, "to suit their own purposes," give rise to reports that would reflect on me. I therefore delayed punishment until Major Harrison and my Wuzeer, who were at Khozdar, could reach Khelat. When the latter arrived it was heard that Sher Dil and other Murrees had plundered a kafila. I and the Sahib talked together about recovering the property detained by the Brahooees in custody, and sent for Sher Dil, after which every endeavour was to be made to punish guilty people, recover Sher Dil's property and that of the merchants, or compensate them for the same. You, my friend, know how lawless the Murrees are and their thieving propensities. By the blessing of God, and His prophet, to add to my reputation and character, my intentions are such as to benefit my country and Government in every way; God willing, as far as I am able, I will not fail in the slightest degree.

I have never acted in opposition to my treaty with the British Government, and as long as I live will abide by the same, and daily consider the necessity of acting up to it. I look upon the Political Agent here as my elder brother, and have the greatest confidence in his good sense and ability, as his best endeavours are cheerfully and willingly afforded for the welfare and benefit of this country. I feel that his being with me is by the kindness of God and the British Government, I therefore do not act without his advice; consequently the hint you give about recalling him does not please me.

Major Harrison advised me to remove Shukur Khan, two moonshees, and to give compensation to merchants plundered by Murrees from my private resources. Major Shukur Khan is an officer and has served me faithfully and well, and the moonshees perform their duties truthfully and honestly,; these people have not been guilty of a single bad action or erred in the performance of their respective duties. To remove them without any fault appears unnecessary to me.

To give compensation for property plundered by Murrees is a bad precedent, very hard and difficult and beyond my power. I carefully avoid all evil advisers and would not keep anyone in my service through whose instrumentality disturbances might occur. If any such person was in my service, I should at once discharge him. What you write regarding the Wuzeer's faithfulness and truthfulness in the duties entrusted to him at Jacobabad and also in this country is true. He has served me faithfully and well, and I retain in my heart the memory of each service performed. My friend, in this world considering you master of my country and arrangements, I sent my faithful Wuzeer as my representative with the Political Agent. "Alijah," referring to the arrangements made by you and the Wuzeer, I have not acted against them in the slightest degree. The rebels devastated the whole of my country causing me the loss of lacs of rupees: when you forgave them, I forgave them; I agreed to all your arrangements, and have had no intention of disregarding them. "Kindly consider." The Wuzeer has committed no fault but acted faithfully and truly towards me. Why, therefore, should I commit any injustice towards him or remove him from his position? Such action is foreign to a well-disposed sovereign, and that I had such intention is false and untrue: so long as I live, it cannot be proved against me. Major Harrison's place and mine are one, and it caused no ill-feeling in my mind that the Shahgassee went to him. It has, however, been prejudicial to me, its being known that I and the Shahgassee were on terms, and was unnecessary. Before receiving your letter I several times suggested to Major Harrison the advisability of the Shahgassee returning to his house, and that he would be shown every respect and consideration. My wish is that he should return to his wuzeership.

Chiefs in your presence agreed to return the kafila property. What they have restored will have been reported to you by the Political Agent.

This work cannot be carried on without force, but I have abstained from all violent measures lest these chiefs should look upon any such action as tyranny. I await to see them carry out their agreement.

Rest satisfied that I shall respect your arrangements in every way. You write that I am not acting as formerly, and that the course now taken is wrong and will lead to my destruction. My friend, from the day I was first obedient to the English Government until the present day, I have followed the same course and entrusted my life and property to God and the English Government. I consider this country belongs to the English Government, and that I am obedient to them; I am hopeful that the more I am supported by the English Government, the greater service I and my country will be to them. Please consider me obedient to you and think of me in a friendly spirit.

Political Agent at Khelat.

Enclosure 5 in No. 93.

Telegram dated the 7th August 1872.

From Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee, to Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

Khelat papers received. Instruct Harrison to inform the Khan that Government hold him responsible, under the Treaty, for the safety of traffic, and will suspend payment of subsidy unless plundered property is recovered, and compensation given for losses, That, as a true friend of the Khan, I cordially aided him at Jacobabad to promote that recovery to enable him to adhere to terms of treaty as regarded first kafilas plundered by Sirdar's people, and regarding last plundered by Murrees. I was quite ready to do the same to cause restoration of the property taken by them. In my letter I gave Khan the best advice for the preservation of his honour, restoration of order in his kingdom, and for future prosperity of his country. In his reply he shows marked disinclination to follow that advice and expressed wishes of the British Government, and disregards the terms of the Treaty he is solemnly bound to observe. No other course therefore is left but to direct Major Harrison to withdraw from Khelat to a convenient position, there to await the further orders of Government.

Unless Khan, on above being communicated to him, immediately acts on advice in my letter of 29th June, changes his line of conduct by removing evil advisers and setting himself earnestly to comply with treaty engagements, Harrison should withdraw to Bhagwana or Khozdar and there await instructions, unless he considers it more expedient to continue his march to British territory, but first will probably be sufficient.

In the event of withdrawal, Harrison should, if he finds it necessary, again draw Khan's attention to what is said in fifth paragraph of my letter No. 623 to you. If Shahgassee desires it, he should be allowed to accompany Harrison.

No. 94.

No. 4984, dated Bombay Castle, the 22nd August 1872.

From C. Goone, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my No. 4667, dated the 9th instant, I am directed to transmit herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of diary from the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 20th July last, received under the Commissioner of Sind's endorsement No. 790, dated 13th instant.

2. Copy of further diary for the week ending 27th July is also enclosed.

Enclosure 1 in No. 94.

No. 23, dated Khelat, the 20th July 1872.

Diary by the Political Agent at Khelat for the week ending the 20th July 1872.

The bunnias of Lehree have written to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed complaining of Nawab Mahomed Khan's oppression in collecting octroi duties, stating that this is an innovation they will not submit to, and, if persisted in, they will be obliged to leave the country. Dues on the old system they express themselves willing to pay.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan and the zemindars complain of the Janisheen's conduct, stating that he wilfully tried to destroy the fort by opening the mouth of the Nullah Jiha, and that they only saved the place by digging another nullah to carry off the water. They represent, that owing to Murree raids, every protection should be given to keep this fort in a defensible state, and that if Miah Khan is allowed to act as he is doing, they shall be obliged to leave the country.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan complains that the Kardar withholds the money that has been guaranteed for his services. The bunnias and zemindars of Lehree have also written to his Highness asking him to send a company of infantry and a gun for the protection of the place, as Karam Khan's brother is about to attack the place with 1,000 men.

The Naib of Bagh reports that rain has fallen in sufficient quantity for the cultivation of the country, but that Moonshee Saleh Mahomed's son, who is Naib of Jok, Gul Mahomed, on his Highness' mother's account, refused to open the bund, consequently the whole of Nasirabad is uncultivated.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan has written to me regarding the members of his tribes now located at Toj. Copy and translation of the same is attached.

Captain Humfrey writes from Paisht Khana on the 14th, and reports that the men of his detachment have recovered from the exposure they underwent at the commencement of the march. He will probably arrive in the course of three or four days.

Sirdar Azaad Khan's daughter, widow of the late Nusseer Khan, now residing at Kharan, has written to his Highness to give her "subsistence money."

His Highness the Khan appears to be too much under the influence of evil advisers to part with them as recommended by me; consequently there is not the slightest prospect of either the Shahgassee or myself being able to do any good so long as our advice is counteracted by their pernicious counsels. Under these circumstances it may be advisable to make arrangements for retiring on Bhagwana, as soon as Captain Humfrey's detachment has had a short halt.

The Haroonees and Isanees living at Haji close to Sohrab had a dispute regarding a marriage. Pir Buksh, the Haroon Sirdar, was killed, as also Sher Mahomed, son of Daolut Khan, Isanee. "Three others were wounded."

Sirdar Ghazi Khan, Chief of Punchgoor, has married Sirdar Diliwar Khan's daughter, and is now at Dizzak.

Soolton Mahomed, Shalvanee, has complained that his life had been threatened by the Brahooees. His Highness has written to the latter that he disapproves of their proceedings, and requests that each chief will make arrangements with his tribe not to cause annoyance to zemindars or other people. Should they persist in doing so, his Naib has orders to punish them.

Shah Beg, Punchgooree, writes that Ibrahim Khan, Nosherwanee, nephew of Azaad Khan, had gone with Azaad Khan's daughter, Nusseer Khan's widow, to the fort of Khudabadun, and were repairing the place. They had been assisted by the Mulazais. His Highness has written to Ibrahim Khan, asking him what he means by taking possession of the place without his permission, and that ere long he will be punished for his impertinence.

Sirdar Alla Dina Koord wrote to me complaining that the Naib of Quettah had stopped two out of three Shahbanas water supply, and asked me to represent this to his Highness. I informed him that when he showed the same anxiety about restoring merchant's property as he did about the water-supply, I should be glad to assist him; so long, however as he disregarded the agreement made at Jacobabad, I could take no interest in his private affairs.

Naib Abdool Luteef writes on the 8th instant, Jamadee-ool-Awul, that the Sumalanees were assembling in force to attack the Murrees, but that he had forbidden them to do so, and to wait and see if Nawab Khan, Dinarzai, could induce Shere Dil to visit Khelat.

Naib Abdool Aziz writes that Samandar, Lehree, had arrived at Moostoong and made arrangements with various tribes to pay Rs. 9,100 of which Rs. 2,100 was recoverable in Kutchee, and that he had, therefore, written to the Naib of Dadur regarding the last-named sum.

Samandar, Lehree, returned to Khelat on Friday, 19th, with letters to my address from the various chiefs, stating that they have every intention of acting up to what they engaged to do. The following is a memorandum showing what has been given, and what the Sarawans are about to make good:

Returned.—142 camels, 27 donkeys, 3 yabus, 121 "jowals," hairbags, 6 carpets, 300 rupees.

About to return.—267 camels, 360 donkeys, 14 carpets, 14 chogas, 210 jowals, 9,100 rupees.

The above does not represent what they plundered, and it is generally believed that Sirdar Alla Dina is withholding a considerable quantity of the merchants' property. The money above-mentioned is to be collected by making each horseman and footman who participated in the plunder, pay Rs. 26 and 13 respectively.

Samandar, Lehree, corroborates Naib Abdool Luteef's report, and had himself remonstrated with the Sumalanees, pointing out that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed would be very angry if Sher Dil's visit to Khelat was prevented through any act of theirs.

The Sumalanees wanted Samandar to take charge of a letter from them to my address, but he refused fearing that he might be accused of intriguing.

Enclosure 2 in No. 94.

No. 24, dated Khelat, the 27th July 1872.

Diary by the Political Agent at Khelat for the week ending the 27th July 1872.

Naib Abdool Rahman again writes to his Highness regarding the conduct of the Brahooees, stating that they break into dwelling-houses, steal zemindars' grain, and make themselves generally obnoxious, though the conduct of the Sarawan Brahooees is not what could be wished. The Naib, in my opinion, is exaggerating what has occurred, hoping that a disturbance will take place, and prevent any inquiry regarding the raid on Sher Dil, Murree.

The Sarawan chiefs, as also Noordeen Mingul, are trying to evade compensating the merchants for the property plundered. I have spoken most seriously to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed on this subject, and pointed out to his Highness that as king of the country he is bound by his treaty to exert himself in recovering the said property. He professed himself willing to give the Sirdars any assistance in his power, and requested that I would talk over the matter with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. Both agreed that the only thing to be done was to send for all the chiefs concerned and ascertain who was to blame, otherwise each Sirdar would exonerate himself and place the blame on some one not present.

Sirdar Noordeen has handed over a list of what money should be collected, and the names of persons responsible for the same. To pay his own share he asked Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to raise a loan for him, mortgaging what land would be necessary until the sum advanced was liquidated. As no one would risk money on such security, his Highness has been solicited to send sowars to Wud to assist Noordeen in collecting the sum required.

Sumalanees, who are under restraint at Mustoong for having plundered Sher Dil, have written to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the Shahgassee, and myself stating that the raid was at Naib Abdool Rahman's instigation, who received one-fifth of the plunder, and has subsequently taken away their shares and now wishes to put the sole responsibility of what has occurred on their shoulders. They also state that letters on the subject should be discredited as they were written by the Naib, and their seals affixed nolens volens.

Yesterday, Friday, the 26th, about 2 p.m., some one fired a shot into the rifle lines, the bullet passing through a tent in which several of the men were sitting; they at once turned out and searched the gardens in the neighbourhood. Havildar Mahomed Hussein arrested a man about half a mile from camp with a musket that had been recently discharged. Finding on inquiry that the man belonged to Faqueer Mahomed's regiment, I sent him in charge of my vakeel to his commanding officer, and desired that every care should be taken not to punish him without clear and distinct proof. I also suggested to the vakeel that this man might have been bribed by Shukur Khan. Thinking that if severely punished the Pathans of the regiment would be alienated from him (Faqueer Mahomed) and co-operate with him (Shakar Khan), Faqueer Mahomed and the Native officers of his regiment took the same view of the case, as the prisoner's brother was formerly a trusted sepoy in Shakar Khan's corps and recently transferred by him to the cavalry. The intention was to have beheaded him at once; but out to deference to my wishes, punishment was deferred, and the whole circumstances reported to his Highness.

His Highness visited me as usual on Friday evening, and I brought to his notice the incident above reported, as also that a similar case had occurred ten days previously. I reminded him of what had been written by the Commissioner in Sind regarding any insult offered to me or those under my protection, and pointed out that as evil-disposed people were determined to compromise him with the British Government, it would be for his advantage and welfare to punish them, and arrange that nothing of the sort occurred again. His Highness agreed to what I said, and promised to take every precaution. At the latter end of the durbar, Samandar, Lehree, was present, and his Highness pointed out to him that the Sarawan chiefs had up to the present done little or nothing towards fulfilling what they had undertaken, and that the non-fulfillment of their engagements would reflect as much on him as on them, consequently should they desire assistance it would be afforded.

Up to the present his Highness the Khan and the Sarawan chief mutually distrust each other; had it been otherwise the arrangements made at Jacobabad would have been completed long ere this. His Highness has not shown cordiality towards these chiefs, and they in their turn have not taken any trouble about restoring the merchants' property. Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord is the person most to blame.

News from Candahar is that the Russians have occupied Oorgunj.

True copies submitted to Government. This report does not speak so well of the proceedings of the Sarawan Sirdars; but if his Highness the Khan will cordially support them, and the required change in his own conduct is made apparent to all, this supineness will disappear. Alla Dina Khoord has possession of the greater portion of the plundered property, and being a most avaricious person, will not readily give it up until the Khan shows he is in earnest, and is carrying the other Sirdars with him.

2. The act of firing into the rifle camp is evidently an attempt to complicate matters, and should be severely punished by his Highness the Khan. These remarks have been forwarded to the Political Superintendent for communication to the Political Agent at Khelat.

The state of affairs at Khelat is the same as before. The Sarawan Sirdars have made attempts to recover the property taken from the kafilas in January last, but have not been very successful as yet. It is said Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord has the chief part of the plunder, and is very loth to give it up.

2. The detachments of rifles with treasure had reached Khelat on the 23rd July, after a very trying march for the first half of the way, the heat having been most excessive.

3. Meer Nadir has left Charbar for Kussurkund, and Meer Hussein's brother, Mirab Khan, has taken charge of the Fort of Charbar. The latter has proved himself very uncivil, and talked of stopping supplies being furnished to the Telegraph Department, and used threatening language to the employés. He has been called upon for an immediate explanation.

4. The rains at Kedj have been abundant; the town is flooded, and the date crops have been considerably damaged.

Diary of the Political Agent at Khelat for the week ending the 3rd August 1872.

Letters from Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan, arrived on the 29th for Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and myself. I pointed out to the latter chief that under present circumstances it was neither right nor discreet to keep up a correspondence with Azaad Khan, and that I should not send any reply. Copy and translation of the letter addressed to me are annexed. Sirdar. Moolla Mahomed's note was almost verbatim the same as mine, except that Azaad Khan complains of Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed having taken the part of his cousin, Belooch Khan, and written to the Jalk Sirdar, Dilawar Khan, to give him every assistance in attacking Kharan. Azaad Khan also mentions that the Jalk people have carried off considerable property belonging to the Minguls and Rakshanees, and that if the latter will join him, he will recover what has been stolen from them.

On Thursday, 1st August, Sirdar Nawab Khan, Dinarzai, arrived with Sher Dil, Murree, and on their visiting me, I asked the latter to explain why he had plundered the kafilas and all that had occurred. Agreeably to my request he made the following statement: "I visited Mr. Bruce at Dera Ghazee Khan, having been sent for "through Guzzun Murree; the above officer gave me about Rupees (140) one hundred "and forty in cash and a loongee. From thence I proceeded to Jacobabad and met "Colonel Phayre and Captain Sandeman, who gave me presents and the following "arrangements, viz., that I should take service with the English Government and "receive maintenance for twenty sowars at the rate of Rs. 20 each man; also that I "should have the whole of the budrukee dues. I received a written guarantee to this "effect from Colonel Phayre. I told Nawab Mahomed Khan that the whole of the "budrukee had been guaranteed to me, but he advised me only to claim what I had "always received, one-third. On returning to my own country I heard through "Khoosh Mahomed Zarkail, who is in the habit of buying wool from me, that I was "about to be attacked by the Brahooees. I did not believe this, but sent and told "the Naib of Mustoong what had been told to me; he, however, took no notice of "my message. The Sumalanees and Brahooees were about ten days collecting, and "the rendezvous was at Mustoong. When, therefore, I was attacked, I felt convinced "that the raid on me was at his Highness' instigation, and I retaliated on the kafilas. "Had it been a voluntary act of the Brahooees, I should have revenged myself on "them, not on the merchants. Prior to this raid I had claimed his Highness' pro-"tection against the Juttucks, who had carried off six of my flocks, but got no redress "beyond being told that the Brahooees were no friends of his,* and that "I was at liberty to retaliate. The attack on me was out of revenge "for having taken service with the English Government. I lost 30,000 sheep, some "donkeys, 400 flocks of goats, property belonging to 60 houses, Rs. 3,000 in cash and "a hona† containing letters from Colonel Phayre, Captain Sandeman, "and Mr. Bruce. I am unable to return the kafila property, as the "majority of it was carried off by other Murrees. When the last kafila was "plundered the Brahooees were going to attack us, but were prevented by Alla Dina "Khoord. We carried off two-thirds of the property, the remaining one-third was "left on the ground, and was either taken possession of by the Brahooees or the "owners. About twenty days ago I received a loongee from Captain Sandeman, "when I met the above officer at Jacobabad. General Pollock was at the station."

In last week's diary it was mentioned that the Sarawan chiefs were to be sent for. "His Highness accordingly ordered them to come to Khelat with as little delay as possible." Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Sumundar Lehree have constantly represented to me that their arrangements would be very much facilitated if his Highness would publicly appoint the sons of the late Shawanee and Lehree Sirdars as chiefs of their respective tribes, "as doing so" would be only conforming with the usages of the country. I have on several occasions spoken to his Highness on the subject, but he persistently refuses to make these appointments until the Sarawans have restored all property plundered from the kafila merchants.

It was also mentioned in last week's diary that his Highness had been asked to send some sowars to Wud to assist in recovering Syed Ahmed's property. Up to the present no one has been sent. I regret to say that his Highness appears quite indifferent whether property belonging to any of the four kafilas is recovered. The chiefs on the other hand, are equally indifferent, as his Highness either withholds what they are entitled to, or gives it with a grudging hand.

Certain zemindars of Mustung wrote to me on the 29th stating that they had been robbed and ill-used by the Brahooees, the letter having been written by the Naib's Moonshee, and the chief complainant being the Naib's kaidar. I did not put much faith in what was written, and sent Sirdar Moolla Mahomed copy of the letter, with a request that he would ascertain if there was any truth in the complaint.

Enclosure 2 in No. 96.

Translation of a Letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan, of Kharan, to the Political Agent at Khelat, dated 15th "Jamadee-ool-Awul" 1289.

AFTER SALUTATIONS.—News at this place is as follows: I have just received a letter from his Highness the Ameer, in which he tells me to rest perfectly satisfied as regards my own affairs.

An Ambassador from the Russian Government arrived in the Toorkoman country, and asked the latter to allow a force to proceed through their territory to Herat, stating, that if not granted, they would be first attacked and destroyed. The Toorkomans conveyed the Russian Ambassador to Sirdar Yakoob Khan at Herat, who sent them on to Cabul, viâ Candahar. God knows what will happen. Ameer Alum Khan, Janesheen of Ghain, visited the Shah, and is now on his way back. Supplies are being collected for him at Neh. The Persians have instructed the Seistanees to plunder in Beloochistan. They have three times carried off droves of camels from Kharan, but my people followed them up on each occasion, recovering the camels and killing some of the plunderers. They have also raided Nooshky three times, and formed a small camp in the desert close to the place from which they daily plunder in the neighbourhood of Nooshky. The inhabitants collected together on one occasion, but were unable to do anything, consequently the Seistanees still maintain their position. Khodadad Khan appears perfectly regardless of his country and subjects, consequently the Seistanees can pitch their camp close to Nooshky, plunder the place, and close the road to Shorawuck. The Tokees, Narooees, Damnees, and Bahmarees, were formerly under my authority, but sometime ago settled on the Seistan border: the two latter have now offered to join me.

In Mekran there are three or four villages that I am entitled to, which his Highness the Khan took from me about six years ago. If you will kindly give me permission I will re-possess myself of the same. Kindly send me a reply to this letter that I may act according to your wishes.

P.S.—Five slaves of mine have found protection with his Highness. I don't rightly understand whether you are merely engaged in matters connected with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, or have the interests of the whole of Beloochistan at heart. If the latter, it will probably be settled that one person cannot unjustly detain another's property, why, therefore, does his Highness detain my slaves. I would also point out that the people of Gidur are constantly stealing camels from Kharan, and Moosa Khan, Naib, has detained two slaves that I sent there on business. Kindly get them sent back to me, and direct Moosa Khan to restrain people from thieving in my country. If these slaves are not returned, you must not be annoyed with me if I retaliate.

No. 26, dated Khelat, the 10th August 1872.

Diary of the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending the 10th August 1872.

Sher Dil, Mazaranee, when visiting me on Thursday, the 8th instant, suggested the following compromise, viz.,—that a certain amount of his property should be returned for a certain amount belonging to the merchants; the whole of the Budrukee should be given to him, so as to make arrangements with the Murree tribe for safe transit of kafilas; finally, to leave him at liberty to exact khoon, or compensation for blood, from the Samalanee tribe.

On Friday I informed his Highness of what Sher Dil proposed. He, however, declined to give more than the usual amount of Budrukee, one-third, and would agree to no other arrangement than enforcing restitution from the Samalanees and giving compensation for blood. On my suggesting that inquiry should be comprehensive, and include the officials "by whose advice" the Samalanees had acted, his Highness refused, stating that if his Naibs had behaved as stated, he himself would be responsible, "being, however, sure that the accusation against them was false." Inquiry, as far as they were concerned, was unnecessary.

I also informed his Highness that Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed had volunteered to head a force against the Murrees, so as to coerce the latter into compensating the merchants. His Highness stated that, under present circumstances, nothing of the kind could take place.

The merchants who were plundered in the Bolan by the Sarawans write,—Samundar Lehree's arrangement of paying Rupees 9,000 had broken down; "Rupees 3,000 only "had been received;" they further state that Alla Dina and his tribe are withholding all the good-baggage camels and donkeys, and have only returned those in a starved and dying state.

His Highness the Ameer has written to his Highness the Khan, as also to Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen, regarding Syed Ahmed, who was plundered by the latter chief near Khozdar; the sowars that his Highness promised to send to Wud on this merchant's account "have not yet started," though I have reminded his Highness on several occasions.

Sirdar Azim Khan and Sher Khan, Khybarees, as also Wullee Mahomed, Magzee, and Daoo Mahomed, Jamalee, have arrived at Khelat, having business to transact with his Highness.

Sirdar Gazee Khan has returned to Punchgoor from Dizzak.

No post has been received from Jacobabad since the 24th July, excepting a packed of Native letters and a newspaper for Captain Humfrey, forwarded by Nawab Mahomet Khan, on the 2nd instant.

SIR, Dated 11th September 1872.

I AM desired to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 1425 P., of the 27th June last, copy of which and of its enclosure were forwarded to Captain Sandeman for compliance with the instructions contained in paragraph 3.

2. It was suggested to Captain Sandeman that he should summon Ghuzzun or his brother, and take down their statements, so that no further doubt could remain as to the exact scope of the complaints of the Murree tribe. He was also requested to furnish a catalogue of the sections and sub-divisions of the tribe, together with a statement of the locality in which each was settled.

3. I have now the honour to forward, by desire of the Lieutenant-Governor, copy of Captain Sandeman's reply, No. 713, dated 14th August, with enclosures, containing the information he was called on to submit, and a report of the manner in which he has carried out the instructions given him in regard to the grievances and future management of the trible.

4. His Honour observes that, while Ghuzzun's statement throws no new light on the subject of the Bolan Pass arrangements and the share of the tribe in the late attack on the kafilas, these matters can best be dealt with by the Commissioner in Sind in communication with the Khelat officials.

5. I am, however, to remark that the statement now furnished is somewhat contradictory of Captain Sandeman's earlier information as to the unity of the Murree clan. It is now clear that the Mazarani section has to some extent broken off, and is more in subordination to the Bungulzais than to Ghuzzun. Still the Lieutenant-Governor is doubtful of the expediency of employing this section to guard the Bolan Pass owing to the jealousies which this arrangement has already excited.

6. His Honour sees no objection to the establishment of a post in the Shum plain on the part of the Khan's government, but he deprecates the employment of the Punjab Frontier Force in its garrison.

7. Three copies of the map sent by Captain Sandeman are enclosed.

I have, &c.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your No. 51 S, and its annexures, regarding the Murree tribe, and in reply beg to enclose copies of my reports* to the Commissioner in Sind and Political Superintendent on the subject, which show in detail the manner in which I have carried out the instructions of Government as contained therein.

Statement of Ghuzzun Khan, Murree Tomandar.

2. In compliance with the instructions contained in the 3rd paragraph of your letter under reply, I have the honour to enclose a tabular statement in which are given the sections and sub-divisions of the tribe as detailed by Ghuzzun Khan the Tomandar himself. I also enclose a sketch map showing where the different sections of the tribe are now located. It must, however, be remembered that the tribe is predatory, wandering about from place to place in the vast country known as the Murree country. The fixed settlements (where there are small forts) of the tribe are, however, marked in the map.

3. The country occupied by Sher Dil and his people, as represented in the map, is the tract they fled to after they were so murderously attacked by the Minguls. The hereditary lands of Sher Dil and his people are situated not very far from Kahan itself. The Mazaranis are a sub-division of the Ghazni section of the tribe.

4. Many tracts of the Murree country are, when cultivated, most prolific. The tribe are fully alive to the benefits that would result to them as a people were their country only settled and cultivated; and this year the Loharani section have made a beginning by cultivating a portion of the Nassau plain. This fact the Loharani chief told me the other day with apparent satisfaction. In the valley of Kahan, when I visited it, there were many signs which showed that at one time large portions of it had been under cultivation. The water from the surface in many of the valleys I visited is said to be only 10 or 12 feet. The Wattakari valley is about the size of the Kohat valley, with a beautiful perennial stream flowing through it. Its soil is notoriously prolific, even amongst the semi-barbarians in whose country it is. The Murang valley, adjoining the western slopes of the Drajil mountain, is a portion of the Gurchani country. The perennial stream called the Kaha flows through it. Even to this day the wheat crop it used to yield is talked of as having been very fine. It also is now lying empty and uncultivated.

R. SANDEMAN,
Officiating Deputy Commissioner.

DERA GHAZI KHAN,
Deputy Commissioner's Office,
The 14th August 1872.

Enclosure 2 in No. 99.

No. 707, dated 13th August 1872.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan, to the Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

IN accordance with the orders contained in letter No. 1425P., dated 27th June 1872, from the Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, to the Secretary to Government, Punjab, I have the honour to lay before you, firstly, what are the desires and hopes of the Murree tribe (I do not call them grievances, for I do not think the chiefs desire them to be viewed as such); secondly, the specific measures I would propose for remedying the unfortunate position this tribe holds in regard to its relations with the British Government.

2. To enable me to submit these so as to be understood, it seems desirable first of all to make clear from a Murree point of view the system that has of late years been adopted for the protection of kafilas passing through the Bolan Pass. Regarding this the Foreign Secretary in paragraph 2 of the letter above named writes :—" The account " of the present aspect of the matter given by the Deputy Commissioner is by no " means clear; but his Excellency in Council gathers that it is somewhat as follows: " the protection of the Bolan Pass has been confided to one section of the Murree tribe, " the Mazaranis, instead of the whole tribe, who claim to share in the money given " for the protection of the Pass. The Mazaranis were attacked by a party of Minguls, " and in retaliation plundered traders in the pass, and the whole tribe is now held " responsible for the outrage, although only a section shares in the benefit of the " engagement which has been violated."

3. As you are aware, I have only recently met the Murree Tomandar, Ghuzzun Khan. I will therefore explain in his own words the Murree view of the case as it at present stands. I quote from his statement made before me :—

" The Mazaranis are really Murrees, and belong to the Ghazni section of the tribe. " Years ago, before my time, when Doda Khan and Mobarak Khan were the two Sirdars " of the Murree clan, the Mazaranis quarrelled with the rest of the tribe. They left the " Murree country and went to Mustung and the Bolan Pass. They placed themselves " under the protection of the Bungulzais and other Brahooees.

" About 12 years ago Karm Khan, the chief of the Bijaranis (Murrees), attacked the " Mazaranis and the Brahooees, who protected them, and killed 11 or 12 of the former, " besides carrying off some of their flocks. In retaliation for this the Mazaranis " attacked the Murree clan and killed a headman called Maddata Sangani, of the " Ghazni section of the clan. There were other Murrees also killed. The Murree clan " remained at feud with the Mazaranis. About five years ago it suited the purpose " of his Highness the Khan to take the Mazaranis under his protection. They became " his servants, and he placed them in charge of the Bolan Pass. They were entrusted " by his Highness with the duty of escorting kafilas through the Pass. This succeeded " fairly when the kafilas were large, and the escort which accompanied them was so " too, but small kafilas were plundered, and the road was not very safe. The Murrees " from Khot Mundai and the Duman Kakars plundered travellers, &c. It is not true " that after the Mazaranis Shel Dil and Kainchi took service with the Khan of Khelat, " that they paid me a share of their gains. They were entirely the Khan's servants, " and I heard that a portion of the escort fees went to him. The Mazaranis from that " time were looked upon by the rest of the tribe as entirely separate from it; and last " October, Kainchi Khan, Mazarani, Mukaddam, (headman of a section) came to " Kahan to me, and we settled together the blood feud. Last winter, when war broke " out in Khelat between the Khan and his Sirdars, the Mazaranis took part in it, and " Kainchi and Shere Dil joined Walli Muhammad, the Naib of Dadar, and fought on " the side of the Khan's troops. The Sirdars captured Dadar and took Sher Dil and " Wali Muhammad prisoners; Kainchi Khan escaped. The Sirdar of the Bungulzai " Brahooees, Shadi Khan, got the rebels to release Sher Dil, and he returned to his " people; but the Mazaranis were not strong enough to hold the Pass against the " Brahooees, who took possession of it and plundered kafilas in it. All this time the " Mazaranis were quite faithful to the Khan, and, when opportunity offered, did his " service as usual. This created anger in the hearts of the Brahooees, as they did not " consider that the Mazaranis had any right to kafila fees. On this account and out " of revenge the Minguls collected an army and attacked Sher Dil's camp, and killed " his son and 11 men, and carried off all he had in the world. His flocks and herds " and all he had were taken. After this Kainchi Khan and Shere Dil consulted " together as to what course they should pursue. It was arranged that Kainchi Khan " should go himself to the Khan and tell him of the conduct of the Brahooees. This " was done. Kainchi Khan returned to Sher Dil and told him that the Khan was in " anxiety himself about his own affairs, that he had not yet settled the Sirdars' case, " and at present he could not aid Sher Dil. After this Kainchi Khan, who is inter- " married with the Bungulzai Brahooees, left Sher Dil and joined their Sirdar, Shadi " Khan. Sher Dil, helpless and in great distress at the death of his son, left the " Bolan Pass altogether with his people, and encamped at Sangam and Khatt close to " the Murree country. He waited there for three months, and succeeded in collecting " an army of 500 men with which to take his revenge by attacking the Brahooees. The " force he collected was composed as follows:—Namdani and Silachi Pathans, 20 men " (they are ryots of Kandahar), Saingani (section Ghazni), and Bijarani Murrees, resi- " dents of Khott Mundai, 140; Mazarani Murrees, 280. There were also 40 Kahan " Murrees who had gone to Khott to aid in cutting and collecting the harvest. The " lands of Khott Mundai are the joint property of the Murree clan. They are held in " common. Sher Dil, without my knowledge, asked these 40 Kahan men to join him. " The army started to attack the Minguls, and on arrival at the Bolan Pass they met " the kafila en route to Kandahar. Shere Dil, in grief and rage at the death of his " son, and because he was helpless, attacked the kafila. After the act was committed, " on the way back, when the Murrees were returning with their spoil, they found that " they were hotly pursued by a large party of Brahooees. As the pursuing party greatly " outnumbered the Murrees, they left their spoil and fled. A messenger from the " pursuers came after them and said that they were friends and not to fly. The place " where this happened is called Bibi Nani, and what I tell is well known. The " Murrees got the name of doing all the damage, but they were not to blame more than " the others." Further on in his statement with reference to the protection of the Bolan Pass, after declaring his desire to make any restitution that was possible for the loss of property, he adds: "The Bolan Pass is in Khelat territory, and belongs " to the Khan. I have nothing to say to it, nor did I ever have; nor did any of the " Khans of Khelat ever make the Murree Sirdar responsible for the Pass. The Khan, " through his other Sirdars, is the only person who can arrange to protect it; I am a " Sarawan, but the Murree country is far from the Pass." Again he says: "One thing " I beg to represent. The Murree chief has no power in the country if the Brahooee " Sirdars are allowed to send for the Murrees to join in their quarrels. This winter " the Brahooees sent to Mundai and Khott and called out the Murrees. Let this be " stopped, and with Government aid I can settle with the Murrees there, and prevent " them from plundering. The Bijarani Murrees had never any connexion with the " Mazaranis. The two are separate sections. The Mazaranis have for long obeyed " the orders of the Sirdar of the Bungulzais. I am quite content to be entirely sepa- " rate from them, and if they are employed by the Khan in the Bolan Pass, I can " have nothing to say against it. The old quarrel between the Bijaranis and Mazaranis " has been healed. Kainchi Khan, the Mazarani headman, came about this during " last October, and all was arranged. I am sure that the Bijaranis will not bear " enmity any longer to the Mazaranis. I can become responsible for this. I have " quite authority as chief of the tribe over the Bijaranis; and, with the aid of " Government, I can keep them in order and be responsible for their acts."

4. From the above extract from the statement of the Murree Tomandar, as well as from conversations which I held with him, I am able to assert that his wishes and those of his chiefs are—

1st.—That if it suits the purpose of his Highness the Khan to employ the Mazarani section of the Murree tribe in the protection of kafilas passing through the Bolan Pass, they cannot accept any responsibility in the matter.

2nd.—That the Bijarani section of the Murrees has no longer any feud with the Mazaranis or jealous feeling regarding their employment in the Pass.

3rd.—That the protection of the Pass should entirely rest with and be undertaken without reference to the Murree clan by the Khan of Khelat, in whose country it is.

4th. That if his Highness employs the Mazarani Murrees, they should be for the future considered as the Khan's servants, and not as a part of the Murree tribe.

5th.—That with the aid of Government they can prevent the Bijarani Murrees from plundering kafilas, and would under certain circumstances (to be named hereafter) undertake the responsibility of this.

6th.—That on account of circumstances arising out of the late war, and because they considered they had a right to share in the kafila fees, the Minguls attacked the Mazarani Murrees, who were at the time loyally performing the Khan's services.

7th.—That on account of similar circumstances the Khan was unable to right the Mazaranis, which led to their attacking the kafilas after a portion of them under Sher Dil had rejoined the Murree tribe.

8th.—That from circumstances over which they had no control a few of the Kahan Murrees did join in the plunder of the kafilas, therefore they are prepared to be held responsible in as far as is considered fair and right; but they desire it to be understood as an undoubted fact that the Mazaranis were employed for the protection of kafilas entirely by the Khan and on his responsibility; and at the time they were attacked by the Minguls they were not at feud with the Murree tribe. They did not pay them a portion of the kafila fees and were acting independently of the Murree tribe under the protection of the Khan and Bungulzai Brahooees.

9th.—That they will do their best to meet the wishes of Government in whatever way it is considered to be advantageous.

5. I now come to the second portion of my subject, viz., what specific measures I would recommend being put in force in order to remedy the present unsatisfactory state of our relations with the Murree clan.

6. The most essential point of all, I consider, in dealing with a tribe like the Murrees, is to avoid even the appearance of a double-sided policy in our dealings with it. Unity of purpose, and uniformity of action on the part of the British officers when dealing with the tribe are essential to success. This am I sure will be admitted, and that the Government having once defined clearly its policy and laid down the principles on which it is based, it behoves all concerned to co-operate cordially and vigorously in carrying it out.

7. Having premised this much, I think I may safely assume that the policy you will recommend the Government to carry out with regard to this clan is a conciliatory one where possible, supplemented by material aid where you think it may be wise and beneficial to aford it. As I believe I am in some measure aware of what is required to enable this tribe like its neighbours to settle, I will endeavour briefly to record it.

8. I think the object from the foundation, and which in all our dealings with the tribe ought never to be lost sight of, should be to prevent the tribe plundering at all. I am fully convinced that this can gradually be brought about. I will begin by showing how I would permanently prevent their plundering in the Punjab.

9. The first measure I should at once put in force would be clearly to define the boundary line between the Punjab and Khelat. In as far as it was possible I would, in concert with the Punjab Government, arrange for the peace of the two borders and the protection of the lives and property of the subjects of Khelat and the British Government.

10. There is no independent tribe occupying any portion of territory between Khelat and the Punjab, but there is a very important tract of country lying between the two countries which is wholly unprotected by either Government. In this lies the great evil to Khelat and Punjab subjects, more especially to the latter, for this portion of country is actually the property of Punjab subjects, and its occupation by them is absolutely necessary to their prosperity.

11. Until means are adopted to enable them to occupy it in peace, no progress and no security for either life or property on this portion of the Khelat and Punjab borders can be hoped for or expected.

12. In illustration of what I mean I will for one moment direct your attention to my letter of the 10th April 1872, No. 227, to the address of the Secretary to Government, Punjab, a copy of which was sent you, and will briefly quote from it: "At the "annexation of the Punjab our Government did not fix our border line according to "the possessions of our new subjects. We made an arbitrary border line, leaving the "principal and by far the most valuable lands of the Gurchani clan outside our terri- "tory, and nominally included in that of Khelat. It thus happens that a portion of "the Gurchoni clan are subjects of the British Government and a portion of the "Khelat State." I continue my letter by showing, which is an undisputed fact, how terribly disastrous such an arrangement has proved to the unfortunate Gurchani clan.

13. I confidently assert that an inspection of that portion of the Punjab and Khelat border line will clearly prove, to any one taking the trouble to make it, that no permanent reform in the Murree clan can take place until we recognise with regard to their depredations that it is the first duty of a really beneficent government to protect its subjects in as far as is possible from violence or oppression. At present neither the Punjab nor Khelat Government does this as fully as it might, the result being that the subjects of the two Governments have hitherto been allowed to destroy each other at pleasure.

14. I have further shown in my letter of the 10th April, already alluded to, that the principal clans of this district whose country joins on to Khelat, are in a great measure dependent for safety and comfort on the forbearance of the Murree clan, and to the friendship that I succeeded in establishing between the two by means of our chiefs intermarrying with the Murrees.

15. This unsatisfactory state of things extends along the entire frontier occupied by the Murree clan. I am sure it will readily be admitted that any arrangement, never mind how well it may to all appearances work, must be unsatisfactory when its durability and permanency solely depends on the forbearance of a clan like the Murrees.

16. In order to illustrate this, and to show as clearly as I possibly can under present circumstances the relative positions of the clans along this border to the Murree and Boogtee tribes, I have had sketched from the Murree Hill, where my camp a very few days ago stood, the enclosed sketch map. As far as this border is concerned, although very roughly done, it is fairly reliable.

17. By glancing at it you will find that the entire border line of this district, as far as Kot Chacha, in the Khetran country, bounds the Khelat State, and that Murrees and Boogtees reside in close neighbourhood to the Punjab. Further, if you observe the position of the line of posts, it will be clear that there is a considerable tract of territory within the Punjab entirely unprotected. It was simply on this account that, the other day, the Loharani Murrees from the Nassau plain were able to make a successful raid on Choti Bala. The circumstances I reported at the time for your information.

18. A further inspection of the sketch map will show that the Punjab line of posts of the Lower Derajat are a considerable distance in rear of the Sind line of posts. For example, take the Sui post (Sind) and either the Sabzil-ki-kot, Drigri or Harrand (Punjab) posts. What I desire to establish by drawing your attention to this is that apparently the Sind posts were established with the view doubtless of protecting the Sind border from Khelat subjects; but also with the clear object of benefiting the latter when opportunity offered as much as possible, because they were subjects of a friendly State in alliance with our Government. On the other hand the Punjab posts would appear to have been established for defence only, and not as a protection to the subjects of Khelat as well as those of the Punjab.

19. The remedy, I would propose for the evils that exist and which I have done my best to demonstrate, is as simple as it would be effective, and could be put in force with hardly any additional expenditure of public money. I would propose that in the same way that the Sui post (Sind) was advanced to command the Boogtees (Sir Henry Green is my informant as to this) a post be erected in the Shum plain to enable us to command the Murrees, for had we one there such a result would undoubtedly be obtained.

20. I will not add to the length of this letter by giving my scheme in detail. Suffice it to say that the Shum post might be erected in the Khan's name, materially aided by the Punjab Government, or jointly in the name of both Governments. The Murrees and Boogtees in our pay I would place in it. They already number together about 100 horsemen. At first I would have a body of 200 Punjab cavalry also in the post, but ultimately as the country settled, I would withdraw these and garrison the post entirely by Guides or Militia belonging to the Gurchani, Mazari, and Drishak tribes, in addition to the Murrees and Boogtees, all under the command of a Native officer of rank and character.

21. On the Punjab border, with the exception of one or two of the larger posts, most of them are garrisoned in a somewhat similar way to the one proposed. The genius of the Belooch admits of this, and after a few years I feel confident such a post as the proposed one would not only remedy the evils I complain of in our present system, but do much to strengthen the Khan of Khelat's hold on that part of his territory. The desirability of such a post was concurred in by Colonel Sir Henry Green, and I believe the proposal has also the approval of Colonels Phayre and Mainwaring.

22. Regarding the other remedies that may be required for the settlement of the Murree clan, more especially in regard to the prevention of their depredations into Khelat territory, you are a much better judge than I can pretend to be. I would only suggest if it be possible that when arrangements are made with the clan for the Punjab at the same time those for Khelat should take place. I know well the chiefs are most desirous of being reconciled to the Khan's Government, and would gladly see their old position with regard to it re-established. In support of this I will again quote from Ghuzzun Khan's statement made before me. With reference to the recovery of the plundered kafila property from the Mundai Murrees he said: "I beg the Govern" ment not to ask what is impossible from me. I have not the power single handed " to deal with Sher Dil and the Khott Mundai Murrees; the reason I can explain. The " Khott Mundai Murrees were formerly kept in check, but the Murree Tomandar was " then aided by the Khan's Government, and a Sirdar of the tribe lived at Mundai

" whose duty it was to make arrangements in the Khan's name for the protection of " the country. For instance, my cousin Gaman Khan I can name as one who aided " the Khan in this way. The Khan allowed the Murree chiefs Rs. 12,000 yearly for the " purpose of employing the minor chiefs according to their position in the tribe in " keeping order. In addition to this the Sirdars of the clan got from the Khan the " village of Tunia in Jagir; all the arrangements were made in the Khan's name and " performed properly, for he is the (Wali) ruler of the country. It was during the " reign of his Highness Nusseer Khan that the Rs. 12,000 were paid. It was not until " the reign of the present Khan that the allowance was reduced from Rs. 12,000 to " Rs. 6,000. This sum was paid very irregularly and at intervals. By degrees misrule " occurred, and the Murrees, as they were very poor, took still more to plunder. At " last the Khan stopped entirely the allowance, and no chief of the Murrees remained " as servant of his Highness at Mundai. I am too poor to keep a chief there at my " own personal cost to keep order."

23. In my dealings with this tribe hitherto, and in carrying out the remedies for its settlement which I now recommend, I trust it will be apparent that the primary object I have in view is by every means in my power to get such a hold over the tribe that ultimately its power to do evil will gradually, as in the case of the Boogtees and our own Gurchani and Mazari tribes, disappear.

24. That this object is obtainable by the means recommended I feel confident, and that if these were once adopted and put in force we would bestow on a fine and deserving people, in exchange for anarchy, distress and poverty, peace, plenty, and happiness. They are entirely dependent on our Government for their prosperity, and its acknowledged responsibilities would seem to necessitate some such remedies for the evils complained of and which undoubtedly exist as those proposed by me being put in force without further delay.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan, to the Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

IN accordance with the orders of the Government I submit for the information of the Commissioner in Sind a report* regarding the Murree tribe.

* No. 707, dated 13th August 1872.

Enclosure 4 in No. 99.

No. 712, dated 14th August 1872.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan, to the Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

WITH reference to the correspondence which has taken place between us on the subject of the surrender, by the Murree clan, of property plundered from kafilas in the Bolan Pass, I have the honour to submit, for the favourable consideration of the Commissioner in Sind and for any order he may be pleased to pass on the same, the statement made by the Tomandar Ghuzzun Khan, regarding the plunder of the said kafilas; I will here briefly state what passed between myself and the Murree Chiefs prior to their visiting my camp for the purpose of discussing the surrender of the plundered property.

2. As directed by you in your demi-official letter of 10th July last, I communicated with the Murree Tomandar on the subject of the restoration of the property. At first, on account of the undoubted great difficulties which were in the way of his complying with the Commissioner's instructions in a way that was at all likely to prove satisfactory, he seemed inclined to meet the demand in sullen silence; and a few of the Loharani Murrees occupying the Nassau plain, seeing how matters stood, made a raid into British territory. The Loharani chief, Nihal Khan, however, arrayed himself quickly on the side of order. The cattle plundered in the raid from our territory were returned to a party of my men sent by me for the purpose of recovering them, and Ghuzzun Khan, the Murree Tomandar, came himself after some delay into my camp to discuss what plan he could adopt together in order to comply with the Commissioner's wishes. These events I intimated to you by telegram, viâ Rajanpur, in which I stated my belief that the chiefs were anxious to do their best to comply with our wishes.

3. In reply to this you sent me, by telegram, further instructions from the Commissioner in Sind, which were to the effect that if the Tomandar could not restore the actual property plundered, he could show he was in earnest by restoring what he could recover. The Commissioner, in the telegram, also expressed his approval of my arranging for the Tomandar to pay a money compensation for any property he might be held responsible for. This compensation the Commissioner said could be paid by instalments.

4. After discussing the matter fully with the Tomandar I was enabled to send you the following telegram :—"Ghuzzun Khan pleads that because of division of property " he is unable to do more than surrender plunder in Kahan. He will send you 15 " camels at once, all there is. For the rest, as approved by Commissioner, he agrees " to give money compensation if held to be responsible." This agreement the Commissioner, through you, was pleased to approve by telegram, and I had the pleasure and satisfaction, at the same time that he conveyed his sanction, to receive his thanks for having brought it about.

5. Before breaking up my camp on the Murree hill, I gave the chief's agent a demi-official letter for you, as he was there, and then sent off to Kahan to fetch the 15 camels. I trust by this time they have been taken to you to Jacobabad.

6. The Tomandar's statements annexed to this letter is so plain as to the circumstances attending the plunder of the kafilas that I do not require to add to it. Moreover, the actual state of the Murree clan, as well as their connexion with this border, is so fully known to the Commissioner in Sind, that it seems unnecessary for me to say more regarding the offence which has been committed, and how I believe final terms with Sher Dil and his portion of the clan might be arranged. I will only add that Ghuzzun Khan seems to think that full reparation could be obtained from those actually concerned in the plunder of the property; and should any further information be required by the Commissioner regarding this, on your intimating his wishes to me, I can then supply it. I feel very confident in concluding this letter by saying that I feel sure that whatever portion of the property the Commissioner considers that Ghuzzun Khan ought to be held responsible for, the payment of the compensation can without difficulty be arranged in the manner approved by the Commissioner.

Enclosure 5 in No. 99.

Copy of statement of Ghuzzun Khan, Tomandar of the Murree tribe, to Captain Sandeman, regarding the plunder of kafilas in the Bolan Pass.

I HAVE come to your camp, as directed, to explain all I can regarding the plunder of kafilas by Mazarani Murrees and others in the Bolan Pass.

The Mazaranis are really Murrees, and belong to the Ghazni section of the tribe. Years ago, before my time, when Doda Khan and Mobarack Khan were the two Sirdars of the Murrees, the Mazaranis quarrelled with the rest of the clan. They left the Murree country and went to Mustung and the Bolan Pass. They placed themselves under the protection of the Bungulzai and other Brahooees.

About 12 years ago Karm Khan, the chief of the Bijarani Murrees, attacked the Mazaranis and the Brahooees who protected them and killed 11 or 12 of the former, besides carrying off some of their flocks. In retaliation for this, the Mazaranis collected and attacked the Murrees and killed a Mukaddam called Maddata Saingani, of the Ghazni section of the tribe. There were also killed Ghazi Saingani, Goru Kalwani, and others. The clan remained at feud with the Mazaranis. About five years ago, it suited the purpose of his Highness the Khan to take the Mazaranis under his protection. They became his servants, and he placed them in charge of the Bolan Pass. They were entrusted by his Highness with the duty of escorting kafilas through the Pass. This succeeded fairly when the kafilas were large, and a large escort accompanied them; but small kafilas were plundered and the road was not very safe. The Murrees from Khott Mundai and the Doman Kakars plundered travellers, &c. It is not true that after the Mazaranis Sher Dil and Kainchi took service with his Highness the Khan, that they paid me a share of their gains. They were entirely the Khan's servants, and I heard that a portion of the escort fees went to him. The Mazaranis from that time were looked upon by the rest of the clan as entirely separate from it; and last October, Kainchi Khan, Mazarani Mukaddam, came to Kahan to me and we settled together the blood feud. Last winter when war broke out in Khelat between the Khan and his Sirdars, the Mazaranis took part in it, and Kainchi and Sher Dil joined Wali Muhammad, the Naib of Dadar, and fought on the side of the Khan's troops. The Sirdars captured Dadur and took Sher Dil and Wali Muhammed prisoners. The latter was put to death. Kainchi Khan escaped. The Sirdar of the Bungulzai Brahooees, Shadi Khan, got the rebels to release Sher Dil, and he returned to his people; but the Mazaranis were not strong enough to hold the pass against the Brahooee Sirdar, who took possession of it and plundered kafilas in it. All this time the Mazaranis were quite faithful to the Khan, and when opportunity offered did his service as usual. This created anger in the hearts of the Brahooees, as they did not consider that the Mazaranis had any right to the kafila fees. On this account and out of revenge the Minguls collected an army and attacked Sher Dil's camp and killed his son and 11 men, and carried off all he had in the world. His flocks and herds and all he had was taken. After this Kainchi Khan and Sher Dil consulted together as to what course they should pursue. It was arranged that Kainchi Khan should go himself to the Khan and tell him of the conduct of the Brahooees. This was done. Kainchi Khan returned to Sher Dil and told him that the Khan was in anxiety himself about his own affairs; that he had not yet settled the Brahooee Sirdars' case, and at present he could not aid Sher Dil. After this Kainchi Khan, who is intermarried with the Bungulzai Brahooees, left Sher Dil and joined their Sirdar, Shadi Khan. Sher Dil, helpless and in great distress at the death of his son, left the Bolan Pass altogether with his people and encamped at Sangan and Khatt, close to the Murree country. He waited there for three months, and succeeded in collecting an army of 500 men with which to take his revenge by attacking the Brahooees. The force he collected was composed as follows:—Namdani and Zilatchi Pathans, 20 (they are ryots of Kandahar), Sangai (Ghazni) and Bijarani Murrees, residents of Khott Mundai, 140, Mazarani Marris, 280. There were also 40 Kahan Murrees who had gone to Khott to aid in cutting and collecting the harvest. The lands of Khott Mundai are the joint property of the Kahan Murrees. They are held in common. Shere Dil, without my knowledge, asked these 40 Kahan Murrees to join him. The army started to attack the Minguls, and on arrival in the Bolan Pass they met the kafila en route to Kandahar. Sher Dil, in grief and anger at the death of his son and because he was helpless attacked the kafila. After the act was committed on the way back when the Marris were returning with their spoil, they found that they were being hotly pursued by a large party of Brahooees. As they were greatly outnumbered, the Murrees left their spoil and fled. A messenger from the pursuers came after them and said they were friends and not to fly. The place where this happened is called Bibi Nani, and what I tell is well known. The Murrees got the name of doing all the damage; but they were not to blame more than the others. I cannot be sure who the pursuers were, but they were Sarawans, and I know that there were both Koords and Bungulzais with them, and others. The kafila property was divided between the two sides. The Brahooees got the most, as they were the larger party of the two. I know what share each Murree of the party got. It valued Rs. 25 per man. The army numbered 480. The total Murree share came to Rs. 12,000. I received the Sirdar's share of the plunder. I received it from Sher Dil. He sent me 15 camels, also 12 or 13 thans of white cloth and some silk cloth. I am quite willing to make what restitution I can for plunder. I will return what I can and give any compensation I can. I beg of the Government not to ask what is impossible from me. I have not the power to deal with Sher Dil and the Khott Mundai Murrees. The reason I can explain. The Khott Mundai Murrees were formerly kept in check, but the Murree Tomandar was then aided by the Khan's Government to do so, and a Sirdar of the tribe lived at Mundai, whose duty it was to make arrangements in the Khan's name for the protection of the country; my cousin Gaman Khan I can name as one who aided the Khan in this way. The Khan allowed us Rs. 12,000 yearly for the purpose of employing the minor chiefs, according to their rank in keeping order. The Sirdar of the Murrees got from the Khan the village of Tunia as jagir; all the arrangements were made in the Khan's name, and were performed properly, for he is the ruler of the country. It was during the reign of his Highness Nusseer Khan that the Rs. 12,000 were paid for the maintenance of order, and to enable the Murree Chief to obey the Khan's wishes. It was not until the reign of the present Khan that the allowance was reduced from Rs. 12,000 to Rs. 6,000. This sum was paid very irregularly, and at intervals. By degrees misrule occurred and the Murrees, as they are very poor took still more to plunder. At last the Khan stopped entirely the allowance, and no chief of the Murrees remained as servants of his Highness at Mundai. I am too poor to maintain a chief there to keep order at my own personal cost. The Mundai Murrees therefore have become very unruly, and I could not recover the plunder from them; but I will refund the plunder given to me and make the Kahan Murrees make restitution. If I can do more, I will do so. As to the property with Sher Dil, he will at once obey the order of Shadi Khan the Bungulzai Sirdar. I know this because he has always gone by his advice in all matters. It was Sher Dil's fault that the 40 Murrees from Kahan joined him. They were at Mundai to cut and collect the harvest, and he, without consulting me, got them to join him. He ought to be held responsible for this by the Khan through the Sarawan Sirdars, who have the power to make him give restitution, which I have not. The Bolan Pass is in Khelat territory and belongs to the Khan. I have nothing to say to it, nor did I ever have, nor did any of the Khans of Khelat ever make the Murree Sirdar responsible for it. The Khan, through his other Sirdars, is the only person who can arrange to protect. I am a Sarawan, but the Murree country is far from the Pass. With Government aid I can protect my country and prevent the Mundai and Bijarani Murrees from plundering if the old arrangements are again put in force. The Murree Tomandar is a servant of the Khan's. He had in Jagir the village of Tunia in Kutchi, and the Mundai chiefs served the Khan through him. A brother of the Tomandar or near relation was in charge at Mundai. One thing I beg to represent. The Murree Chief has no power in his country if the Brahooee Sirdars are allowed to send for the Murrees to join in their quarrels. This winter the Brahooees sent to Mundai and Khott and called out the Murrees. Let this be stopped, and, with Government aid I can settle with the Murrees there and prevent them from plundering. The Bijarani Murrees had never any connexion with the Mazaranis. The two are quite separate sections. The Mazaranis have for long obeyed the orders of the Sirdars of the Bungulzais. I am quite content to be entirely separate from them, and if they are employed by the Khan in the Bolan Pass, I can have nothing to say against it. The old quarrel between the Bijaranis and Mazaranis has been healed. Kainchi Khan, the Mazarani Mukkaddam, came about this during last October, and all was arranged. I am sure the Bijaranis will not bear enmity any longer to the Mazaranis. I can become responsible for this. I have quite authority as chief of the tribe over the Bijaranis, and with the aid of Government I can keep them in order and be responsible for their acts. I will arrange to the best of my power to do whatever the Government requires of me.

From Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, with the Governor General.

In continuation of this Office No. 4841, dated the 16th ultimo, I am directed to forward herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of a further Memorandum No. 883, dated 9th instant, from the Commissioner in Sind, transmitting the diary of the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 17th August 1872.

Enclosure in No. 100.

Diary No. 27 of 1872 by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 17th August 1872.

A letter from Sirdar Abdul Rehman to his Highness the Khan reports that the Afghan authorities had intercepted a kafila at Shorawak and retained all property belonging to Jalawan people in retaliation for the kafila plundered by Sirdar Noordeen.

Letters from Sirdar Gaji Khan to the address of his Highness the Khan and myself, as also a note to me from the leading men of Punchgoor, shows that dissatisfaction has been caused in this province by a harsh letter from his Highness in connexion with Ibrahim Khan Nosherwani's occupation of Khudabadan attributing this move on his, Ibrahim Khan's part to support derived from Gaji Khan and not from any instruction conveyed to him through Darogah Atta Mahomed. I lost no time in pointing out to his Highness that disturbances would arise at Punchgoor and Nushky if he was not more conciliatory towards his chiefs, and people begged him to allow affairs connected with the above places to remain in abeyance until he paid me his usual visit on Friday.

On Friday his Highness having heard what I had to say assured me that no complication would arise at Nushky as Imamdad had strict orders not to fight. To prevent any mistake written instructions would be sent without delay. His Highness also promised to write to Sirdar Gaja Khan in a friendly spirit.

Sirdar Abdul Rehman Zaggar Mingul of Nushky has for some time passed been on bad terms with the minor chiefs of his district, "particularly with" Alam Khan Rukshani and Pur Dil Mingul: both the latter were also represented to have been in correspondence with Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan consequent on Sirdar Abdul Rehman's representations and that of Dost Mahomed Rukshani. His Highness sent for Alam Khan and Pur Dil, and received a reply that they would come as soon as they had finished putting down their seed, His Highness at once sent off a party of horse under a Dewar "Imamdad" to arrest them. Having timely intimation of the Dewar's movements the minor chiefs previously named fled to Shorawak. The Dewar, being reinforced by Dost Mahomed's tribe and other people on bad terms with Alam Khan and Pur Dil, destroyed their fields, and a slight skirmish ensued, in which two or three were killed and wounded. Sirdar Abdul Rehman remained neutral and tried to convince the Dewar that harsh measures were not requisite, as the people to be arrested had fled. His Highness never informed me of what was going on until Imamdad had started; consequently when he sent this morning, Saturday, to tell me what had occurred and to ask my advice, I pointed out that his present act showed—

"He scarcely appreciated the efforts of the English Government to restore peace and quiet in his country," and that I could not therefore assist him with my advice.

Yesterday Friday I had all the Sarawan chiefs in my tent with Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed; a rough statement of accounts was given to them showing what had been realised, and that (60,000) sixty thousand Rupees would be required; before any settlement could be made with the merchants a capitation tax of one rupee on each person in Sarawan was suggested: this plan is under consideration.

With the view of adjusting claims against his Highness Sirdar Noordeen has been asked to agree to the latter chief's suggestion of mortgaging some of his land in Kutchi and authorising Nawab Mahomed Khan to raise Rupees (10,000) ten thousand on the lands mortgaged.

In continuation of my letter No. 4959 of the 20th August 1872, and previous correspondence, connected with the affairs of the Khelat State, I am directed to enclose, for submission to the Government of India, copy of further papers on the subject, received under endorsement from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 893, dated the 16th instant.

Enclosure 1 in No. 102.

No. 119, dated Khelat, the 29th August 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 2004, dated 8th August, embodying a telegraphic message from the Commissioner in Sind, confirming previous instructions to withdraw from Khelat, should his Highness the Khan not agree to certain stipulations. This message was translated and forwarded with the letter that accompanied my diary, No. 28.

Having vainly endeavoured for weeks past to induce his Highness to accept the responsibility devolving on him by treaty with the British Government, as also to dismiss evil councillors, I felt further discussion was useless, and that the only thing to be done was to at once intimate my intention of withdrawing from his Highness' court.

His Highness' reply to my letter and the telegraphic message, was received on Tuesday morning, the 27th. From perusal of the same, it will be apparent that his Highness, whilst professing to value the support of the British Government, the Commissioner in Sind's kindness and advice, and the advantage derived from my presence, "still maintains the position he started with," viz., freedom from all responsibility as regards the Murree tribe, and a denial that evil councillors are admitted in his Durbar.

After intimating my intention to withdraw from his Highness' court, he at once adopted the suggestions that had been made "regarding Sirdar Noordeen and the Samalanees," though he had previously opposed the same, as reported in the first two paragraphs of diary No. 28.

On Tuesday evening, his Highness visited me, and stated that his conduct must have been misrepresented to induce the English Government to withdraw their support. He, therefore, hoped I would re-consider my decision about leaving Khelat. In consequence of this statement, I reminded his Highness that my withdrawal was not attributable to what may have been said or written; but that the Commissioner in Sind considered ignoring the claims of merchants plundered in his territory "breach of treaty," and was also of opinion that the government of his country suffered from the confidence he placed in three or four disreputable people. His Highness still adhered to what he had previously said and written regarding the Murree tribe; "and with reference to evil councillors," he said, "I, Shukur Khan and Moonshees "Saleh Mahomed and Gool Mahomed form one head, and if any attempt be made to "put these men out of office, my position as Khan would not be worth a day's "purchase." I at once pointed out to his Highness that this was tantamount to acknowledging "he was merely Khan in name, and that Messrs. Shukur Khan, Saleh "Mahomed, and Gool Mahomed, were actual rulers of his country;" to this I received the usual reply, viz.,—that they were good men, and to remove them without any fault would be unjust.

At this interview his Highness alluded to the treaty made at Jacobabad, and appealed to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to prove that he had done all in his power to carry it out. The Wuzeer having solicited his Highness' forbearance in case what he said might be considered disrespectful, &c., "told the Khan plainly" that he had shown on every occasion that the arrangements were distasteful to him; had it been otherwise," he would have cordially co-operated, and everything would have been settled long ere this. The faithful old Wuzeer begged his Highness not to recklessly throw away the support of the English Government, and pointed out how it was valued and appreciated by the Ameer's Government.

His Highness having ample time to consider his position, it would be weak to accept any compromise that might be made at the last moment, as little reliance could be placed on any such agreement; consequently I have ordered camels and intend leaving Khelat at an early date.

In conclusion, I would briefly allude to the character of the men who have got so much influence with his Highness the Khan.

Shukur Khan belongs to the caste Shaik, "converted Hindoos," resides at Mustoong, and was formerly in one of the Belooch battalions, but discharged for misconduct; since then he has been in his Highness' service, but had little or no influence in political matters until quite lately. The active part he has taken in late intrigues "is from ill-feeling" brought about by Shahgassee Golam Jan having reported his embezzling the men's pay and rations at Beylah. Saleh Mahomed and Gool Mahomed are also Shaiks, and natives of Bagh; they were formerly Moonshees under Wuzeer Mahomed Hussein, when, however, the latter's villainy was exposed by General Jacob. Nusseer Khan discovered that the above Moonshees were equally guilty, so had them severely beaten, fined, and imprisoned, and kept in confinement until his death. On the accession of Khodadad Khan to the Khanate, these Moonshees were released and taken on by Gangoo. On his removal from office, they were nominally under Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, but have gradually instituted themselves as the confidential advisers of his Highness in all matters, and have free access at all times to his private apartment.

From Colonel W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, to the Officiating Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

In reference to your endorsement No. 2319, dated 9th instant, forwarding original report from Major Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, I have the honour to inform you that that officer's proceedings, as detailed in his letter, are entirely approved, and I request you will be good enough to inform him accordingly.

2. As it appears to me from the reply given by his Highness the Khan of Khelat that he does not fully appreciate the gravity of the course that it has become necessary to follow, and that the withdrawal of Major Harrison from his court is really the breaking off of friendly relations between the British Government and that of Khelat, in consequence of the deliberate disregard by his Highness of his treaty engagements, and that the withdrawal to Baghwana or Kozdar only, may not be regarded by his Highness in the manner it was intended it should be, viz., that it involved the complete suspension of those friendly relations, I have, therefore, by telegram requested that you will forward, by express messenger, instructions to Major Harrison to come down the Moolla Pass and return to British territory with the least delay, intimating to his Highness the Khan of Khelat that such orders have been received in consequence of the position he continues to maintain.

3. The Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed may, if he desires it, accompany Major Harrison.

Enclosure 3 in No. 102.

Translation of a letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the Political Agent, Khelat, dated the 22nd Jamadee-sanee, 1289.

AFTER SALUTATION,—I have received your letter, and am aware of its contents, viz. regarding the friendship that has existed between us, and receipt of a telegraphic message, confirming previous instructions, which necessitated your leaving Khelat. My friend, "this is true." Our friendship has existed for four years. I have always looked upon you as my elder brother, and am in no way to blame for the present misunderstanding. Your remaining in this country by God's blessing is of the greatest benefit, and you leaving it is far from wise. I regret one hundred times what you have written regarding your intended departure.

Your Government hold me responsible for returning the kafila property, or giving compensation for the same; but the Commissioner in Sind had, from kindly motives, assisted me, and was prepared to give further assistance, so that I might fulfil my treaty. My friend, I am fully prepared to carry out this treaty, and am acting by your good advice. By God's blessing, as long as I live, I will respect my treaty. The assistance given by the Commissioner in Sind was the act of a friend and of the greatest service to me. I appreciate the arrangements that have been brought about by God and the Commissioner in Sind, and will abide by the same, "as also what the Commissioner in "Sind wrote regarding future assistance."

On a former occasion, when replying to a letter of the Commissioner in Sind, I wrote regarding property plundered by the Murrees. My friend, you are aware that the Murrees are not under my control, and daily commit depredations; to give compensation would not be confined to the present raid, but to all occasions. This is quite out of the question, and how could it be expected from me. I did not refuse compensation, but I considered it unnecessary. The arrangements that were made for me by friends I approve of. The telegraphic message sent by the Commissioner in Sind to Colonel Mainwaring has been duly received through you. In it it is stated that merchants are to travel in safety through my country, and that if their property or compensation for the same is not given, Government will withdraw their annual subsidy of Rs. 50,000. You, my friend, know that it is my heart's wish that merchants should have safe transit through my country. The treaty by your assistance, with the Mazaranees and Samalanees was for the above object, viz. that on the latter compensating the former, half was to be given to the merchants. I am hopeful that the arrangements made with you by the Sarawans will be carried out in the course of a few days.

Rs. 50,000 have been granted by the English Government for years past. I am the slave of God, and hope by His blessing and friendly assistance that this annual grant will be doubled. It is true that the Commissioner in Sind gave me the greatest assistance in connexion with the Sarawan raid, so as to enable me to keep my treaty. He showed such kindness and friendship to me, that it was apparent to the whole world. I am hopeful that he will always treat me in the same way. I will abide by your Government's advice, and in so doing I shall preserve my reputation and respect. I have no other object in view, and will strive, heart and soul, to keep my treaty, and shall not fail. This treaty was executed some years ago, and is binding, and there are no evil-minded persons in my Durbar to recommend my disregarding the same; if there was such a man rest satisfied that I should remove him. My friend, you talk of going to Baghwana. Khelat and Baghwana are yours, but it would be better not to leave in displeasure.

My friend, I am obedient to your Government in every respect; how, therefore, could I allow you to be treated with disrespect, or sanction anything disrespectful by my ryots or sepoys? I swear to God that if any disrespect is shown the person guilty will not be screened, not even if he was my son, Mahomed Khan. My enemies are in Khelat, and out of devilry commit disturbances. You know this well, and knowing this, ought to show some consideration to me. If you are still bent upon going to Baghwana, every arrangement shall be made for you. If the Shahgassee goes, I would remind you that I have on several occasions spoken to you as to my willingness to reassure him, and it would be becoming on your part to induce him to return to his duties, as he will be treated as formerly with consideration and respect.

2. Notwithstanding pretended assurances to the contrary, his Highness the Khan seems determined to adhere to the unwise and unreasonable course he has lately adopted. No. 905, dated Kurrachee, the 20th September 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, to the Secretary to the Government of Bombay in the Political Department.

At Khelat matters were quiet. His Highness the Khan carried on the usual courtesies towards the Political Agent, but he still held back from acting up to the terms of the treaty between him and the British Government under which he was bound to cause restitution or compensation to be made to the merchants who had been plundered while passing through his country; as the early settlement of this question did not seem to sufficiently engage his Highness' attention, or to be likely to take place as matters stood, the Political Agent had instructions to withdraw from Khelat, and was about to do so. He had not left up to the 5th instant, but expected to be ready to move in a day or two.

2. The Chief of Toomp proceeded to Kedj lately to arrange with Naib Ali Jan for the annual payment of taxes, and Meer Hussein Khan has returned from Kussur-kund to Sirbag.

3. Fever of a mild form is prevalent in the town of Gwadur; the country is again perfectly quiet; the agriculturists are expecting an abundant harvest; wool and cotton are imported from Bahu and Dashtyari; the price of the former, however, has risen very high.

Nos. 901 and 906, dated respectively 18th and 21st September 1872.

Enclosure 1 in No. 104.

No. 28, dated Khelat, the 25th August 1872.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 25th August 1872.

In diary No. 27, it was mentioned that Sirdar Noordeen wished to mortgage some of his land with the view of settling accounts with Syed Ahmed, merchant, "who was plundered at Kozdar." On Friday, 23rd, I again urged his Highness to give every assistance in the settlement of this business. I regret to say that his Highness would not take a sensible view of the case, said it was muskri—"nonsense," and that whenever Noordeen visited him, he considered the idea of paying Syed Ahmed a joke. On the other hand Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed state that Sirdar Noordeen is most anxious that Syed Ahmed's claims should be adjusted.

On Wednesday the 21st his Highness sent the Sumalanees and Muzaranee Murrees to my tent, requesting that the Shahgassee and myself would hear what both parties had to say, and devise some plan to settle their dispute. On Friday morning both parties agreed to the following terms, viz.: that the Sumalanees should give full compensation, "according to the scale sanctioned by the Great Nusseer Khan," for the six Murrees who were killed whilst defending their property. "Sher Dil's estimated loss was accepted," two rupees per sheep being given, and full value of donkeys and other property; money being a scarce commodity, payment was to be given in live stock, such as camels, donkeys, sheep, &c. the latter at the price agreed upon, and the two former on the Great Nusseer Khan's scale. After realising the full value, the Muzaranee Murrees agreed to give up one half for the benefit of merchants who had been plundered through their instrumentality. On Friday afternoon when his Highness visited me as usual Sumalanees and Murrees were present, and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed clearly explained the above arrangement. His Highness gave a doubtful assent to this scheme, but on Sunday morning sent a message through my vakeel that the plan suggested was cutcha, "unsatisfactory," and could not be carried out. His Highness had attempted to settle this dispute, "but failing in doing so" had sent the parties concerned to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and myself. As far as I can ascertain his Highness' intention is to have as many Sumalanees as he can. The Sumalanees, therefore, told my vakeel that they were being hardly treated, as they had been promised protection, if they did not implicate Naib Abdool Rehman.

The Sarawan chiefs have agreed to raise 20,000 rupees for the kafilas plundered by them, payable in two monthly instalments.

The Barochees of Shorawuk have written to his Highness stating they will not give up Poor Dil and Alum Khan, and trust that if their land and property is to be confiscated, the families of these chiefs may be allowed to proceed to Shorawuk. On the other hand, if his Highness is anxious to treat with them, five Barochees will at once proceed to Khelat and do their best to effect a reconciliation.

The Ruckshanees of Nushky, "Edul Khan, Shurif Khan, and other," write to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, that when his Highness had sent for Poor Dil and Alum Khan, they replied that they were then busy with their crops. "Every one was "satisfied when you Wuzeer Sahib wrote that they might remain until they had "finished putting down their seed." About midnight Alum Khan heard that there was a force coming to make him prisoner, he then fled to Shorawuk; at daylight a force composed of Jumaldinees, Mandanees, Harunees, Purazais, Sassulees, and others came to attack us, "so we sent Mulah Din Mahomed to intercede for us," with Naib Lushks and Imam Dad, and state that if not attacked we would make our salaam. Imam Dad then insisted upon our supplying him with provisions, occupied our houses, looted everything in them, and demanded that the members of eight families should give themselves up as prisoners. Notwithstanding our having agreed to this, he attacked us and being helpless we had to fight: "people were wounded on both sides," but words cannot explain what losses we have sustained by the plundering of our crops and property. On the 15th August we all leave for Khelat, to complain of the treatment we have received.

In connexion with the above, his Highness wrote to Imam Dad: I have heard from the macebearer all about your movements and those evil-disposed people you were sent against. These Rukshanees are my cultivators. I have written to Sirdar Abdool Rehman to send his brother with Alum Khan's brother and other people of influence to me; these men will be treated as they deserve; in future, don't interfere with them. I am of opinion that Alum Khan will come and make his salaam.

The substance of his Highness' letter to Sirdar Abdool Rehman was as above stated, with this addition, that his Highness' threatened to send a force to Nushky, if Alum Khan did not make his salaam.

Naib Ali Jan of Kedj writes to his Highness: When I went to visit Captain Miles at Gwadur, I left Yar Mahomed Sungur in charge of the fort at Kedj. During my absence Sirdar Bhai Khan tried threats and promises to induce Yar Mahomed to give up the fort, but he refused.

Ali Jan also writes: "Sirdar Faquir Mahomed is in constant communication with "the Mekran chiefs, inciting them to rebellion, and though I have done all I "can to conciliate, Sirdar Faquir Mahomed's letters have unsettled the people and "caused dissatisfaction; kindly, therefore, send me some sepoys and guns. Shah "Umer Gitchki, Meer Kumur, and Yar Mahomed Sunjas, may be relied upon. If "Bhai Khan's Sirdarship is taken from him, the rest of the chiefs will behave well; "to do this assistance would be required. The poorer classes are dissatisfied with the "above Sirdar."

Sirdar Faquir Mahomed has written to Sirdar Bhai Khan that the treaty between your Highness and the Sarawan chiefs has broken down, and hostilities would commence in a day or two. In a postscript to this letter, Sirdar Faquir Mahomed states that it was your Highness' intention to arrest and imprison Sirdars Noordeen and Moolla Mahomed, and that on Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed remonstrating with you, "you determined to make him prisoner;" but on hearing what your intentions were, they sought safety in Major Harrison's camp, "and that matters are now in a very "unsatisfactory state as far as you are concerned." I am, therefore, much perplexed on your account, so send me speedy intelligence.

Musah Khan, Naib of Sohrab, writes that Azaad Khan is shoeing his horses, and intends plundering Sohrab. The Naib requests that a detachment of infantry may be speedily sent for the protection of the place.

Telegraphic instructions from the Commissioner in Sind embodied in Political Superintendent's letter, No. 2004 of the 8th August, were duly received on Saturday the 24th. "Translation of the same," with forwarding letter, were sent to his Highness the Khan. Copy of the letter is annexed.

Mahomed Russak, a Belooch of the Mahomed Hussuni caste, writes to his High[illegible]ss that "though now in Seistan, owning to the enmity of the Minguls, he will [illegible]turn, if "he (the Khan) will take him into his service."

On Friday, the 23rd, his Highness received a letter from Naib Abdool Luteef of Quettah, in which he mentioned a rumour of the Russians having taken Balk. I told his Highness that I did not think this information reliable.

Enclosure 2 in No. 104.

Translation of a letter from Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated Khelat, the 25th August 1872.

AFTER SALUTATION,—Taking into consideration the friendship that has existed between Your Highness and myself for nearly four years past, it is painful for me to inform you that previous instructions have been confirmed by a telegraphic message, and that I have now no other alternative except to arrange to leave this at an early date.

In the telegram it will be seen that Government hold you responsible either for the losses of the merchants or compensation for the same, and that the friendly efforts that have been made "and would have been made" in no way relieve you of this responsibility.

The stipulations by which the support of my Government would be continued were plainly set before you on a former occasion, and declined in your reply to the Commissioner in Sind.

Out of friendship I have waited most patiently, hoping that you would eventually carry out what had been advised by your well-tried friend, Sir William Merewether, but as you have shown no such inclination and evidently don't appreciate the efforts that have been made on your behalf, I must, as before stated, make arrangements to leave Khelat at an early date.

Enclosure 3 in No. 104.

No. 30, dated Khelat, the 3rd September 1872.

Diary by the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 3rd September 1872.

HIS HIGHNESS the Khan, after receiving my letter intimating my withdrawal from his court, professed himself willing to adopt the suggestions that had been made regarding the recovery of property plundered by Sirdar Noordeen and the Muzaranee Murrees. With reference to the former, Sirdar Noordeen gave a duly signed document to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, mortgaging certain land, proceeds of which would liquidate all claims against him in the course of six months. The Shahgassee on his part gave Syed Ahmed a letter, stating what terms had been agreed upon, and that the money, "a little over Rupees 17,000 would be forthcoming" in the time agreed upon. With reference to the Muzaranee question, his Highness took a bond duly executed by the Sumalanees, in which they agreed to compensate the Murrees in the manner described in last week's diary No. 29. I regret, however, to say that his Highness left re-employing the Muzaranees an open question, and was evidently inclined to entrust transit duties in the Bolan to the Sumalanees who raided the Muzaranees.

On the 27th ultimo Sirdar Nawab Khan, Dinarzai, Kachi, and Sher Dil, Muzaranee came to take leave of me. Having presented them with suitable khilluts, I told the two latter that whatever provocation they might receive, I looked to them not to retaliate on inoffensive merchants; at first Sher Dil said that if the transit dues were given to the Sumalanees he would do all in his power to obstruct them, eventually they agreed to respect my wishes regarding kafilas.

[redacted]ib Abdool Luteef in the early part of the week wrote that a kafila laden with wool had past down the Bolan in direct disobedience of his instructions; later in the week the above Naib reported the arrival of a Candahar kafila at Quettah, and solicited instructions whether an escort should be given by Hybut, Sumalanee, as the traders refused to go by any other route than the Bolan.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed having shown me the above letter, I pointed out that entrusting this kafila to the Sumalanees could end in their being attacked by the Muzaranees, and that it would be far better to insist upon the merchants proceeding viâ the Mulla, and in the event of their still refusing his Highness would be exonerated from all blame if he refused transit and badraki dues. His Highness' instructions to Naib Abdool Luteef were to point out to the merchants that the Bolan was unsafe, and that there were other routes very nearly as expeditious, viz., viâ Lehdo or the Takare. Should, however, they insist upon going by the Bolan, he, the Naib, might employ Hybut Sumalanee

From the circumstances just narrated, it appears to me that his Highness has no intention of coercing or punishing the Sumalanees, and that he is foolishly imperilling the safety of merchants by placing them in charge of the very tribe who plundered and ruined the Muzaranee Murrees.

Naib Abdool Luteef writes to his Highness that he has no money, and that the detachment are dissatisfied not having been paid for four months. His Highness replied that the revenue of the district ought to cover the expenditure, but as arrangements in this world were unreliable, he (the Naib) was not to be anxious, for a hoondee would be sent to meet present requirements. The Naib mentioned that the Dumars had attacked the Lehrees and carried off some oxen. The latter had followed in pursuit, but could not overtake the former.

News regarding Afghanistan, as reported in Quettah, is as follows:

1st. Sirdar Yacoob Khan had treated Ahmed Khan, Meer Akhor, with disrespect, and fined him Rupees 15,000, in consequence of which treatment Ahmed Khan had proceeded to Cabul to complain to his Highness the Ameer.

Ahmed Khan, it is reported, states that Sirdar Yakoob Khan has again quarrelled with the Ameer, and has entered into arrangements with the Persian Government.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan, Dhoombkee, writes to his Highness—I have served you well, and can barely support myself on the income derived from my land, and certain privileges that have always been held by family, viz., a share of Government and Zemindar's grain $\frac{1}{3}$rd octroi duties, a share in transit dues, $\frac{1}{4}$th of money realised by fines, the inam lands of Togachee and Moradwah free from any restriction as to supplying grass, finally grazing fees. Your Highness' subordinates, by order of Nawab Mahomed Khan, prevent my realizing what I am justly entitled to. Kindly instruct Mahomed Khan that I am to have the same as my forefathers, and that he is to offer no further obstruction. My brother Malik Meeran, has, according to sunnud, Zemindar's rights over the villages of Kutbar, Nehal, and Khood Kasht. Although these sunnuds were shown to your Highness when in Kutchi, Mahomed Khan pretends to believe that I have not got them. I hope your Highness will afford redress to my brother and myself. We are both your servants.

IN continuation of my letter of the 28th ultimo, No. 5652, I am directed to forward, for the information of the Government of India, the accompanying copy of a memorandum from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 913, dated 26th idem, giving cover to the diary of the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending the 8th September 1872.

Enclosure in No. 105.

Diary No. 31, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 8th September 1872.

IN last week's diary, No. 30, paragraph 2, it was reported that his Highness had adopted Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's suggestion with reference to the Samalanis and Mazaranis. At the time I had doubts as to his Highness' sincerity in this business not only from the fact that he was prepared to hand over charge of the Bolan to Hybat Khan Samalanee, but from his Highness having told me it was more than probable the Samalanees, who plundered Shere Dil, would escape from custody; with reference to the latter remark, I told his Highness such a thing could not occur if he was inclined to take ordinary precautions. Three days after this conversation the Samalanees were allowed to escape on their road back to Mustung with the exception of one decrepid old man.

In the early part of the week it was reported to me that Sirdar Azaad Khan had proceeded on a plundering expedition to Jalk. Letters from the above chief addressed to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and myself state that he is still at Kharan, but has made preparations to join the Afghan force in Seistan. Owing to present state of affairs at Khelat I have declined to answer letters written by Azaad Khan or any else, and strongly advised Moolla Mahomed not to have anything to say to the Kharan chief, as the latter is, I believe, only preparing to take advantage of any disturbances that may occur in this country.

A bania at Chagah wrote to one of his trade at Nushky stating that 1,500 Seistanis had started on a plundering expedition; the latter at once communicated with his agents at Khelat to send as much powder and lead as they could, for the above articles would command a high price.

On Saturday my Vakeel communicated certain suggestions made by his Highness in connexion with plundered merchants and evil counsellors. I sent my reply in writing forwarding copy of the same with letter to Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

Having engaged camels for myself and escort I intend to march on Saturday, the 14th, en route to Baghwana.

TRUE copies submitted to Government for information. Major Harrison's decision about Azaad Khan and his advice to Moolla Mahomed are most correct. It is to be regretted that the Seistanees do not abstain from plundering while the subject of the sovereignty of Seistan is under discussion.

Diary No. 32, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 15th September 1872.

DURING the past week I have been visited on several occasions by Darogah Atta Mahomed. On Wednesday afternoon he informed me that his Higness acknowledged his responsibility in connexion with merchants plundered in Khelat territory, and was willing to give them pecuniary assistance until their accounts could be adjusted. With reference to those merchants plundered by the Sarawans, examination of accounts showed that property and money, aggregating Rs. 19,647-12-0 had been realized, and the Darogah appeared to think that his Highness would advance sufficient money to make up the receipts to Rs. 50,000, i.e., Rs. 29,527 annas 4. The Darogah was also of opinion that his Highness would advance Rs. 5,000 to Syed Ahmed on the mortgage papers granted by Sirdar Noordin.

His Highness was most anxious that I should hold the inquiry and award what advances I thought necessary: as this might have caused serious complications I declined all interference, stating that as ruler of the country in which the losses had occurred, his Highness was the proper person to undertake the duty.

On Thursday Darogah Atta Mahomed again visited me, reporting that his Highness the Khan had paid the merchants the sum above mentioned. Shortly afterwards the merchants visited me and appeared highly satisfied at the arrangement. His Highness adhering to his intention not to dismiss evil counsellors, I saw no necessity to cancel previous arrangements about leaving Khelat. On Friday his Highness visited me as usual, and showed no signs of yielding, as far as dismissing the Moonshees and Shukur Khan. On Saturday all our tents were struck and every arrangement made to march at 6 a.m. On the following morning at 5 p.m. I went to wish his Highness good-bye. All the people were dismissed with the exception of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Darogah Atta Mahomed, Faquir Mahomed, son of Naib Abdul Aziz, Abdul Ajan Patan and Vakil Dost Mahomed. His Highness the Khan having stated that his country and all that he had were at the disposal of my Government, and that he had no other desire except to conform to their wishes, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Darogah Atta Mahomed, and Abdul Ajan asked him to support what he had said by at once dismissing the Moonshees and Shukur Khan. After about two hours his Highness agreed to dismiss these men, but hoped on further representation that my Government would allow him to reinstate them.

Next point was to induce me to defer our march and to persuade Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to return to his duties. At first I steadily refused to alter my plans, stating that whatever evils and disasters might arise from my withdrawal, the Khan alone was to blame. At the end of an hour seeing that his Highness was thoroughly frightened and subdued, I so far yielded to the solicitations of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Darogah Atta Mahomed, and Abdul Ajan as to delay my departure for 24 hours. At 10 a.m. on the following morning his Highness came to inform me in person that the Moonshees and Shukur Khan had been dismissed from his service, and asked me to delay my departure until he could make arrangements to accompany me to Kutchee.

I agreed to wait 15 days provided the men above named were turned out of Khelat within 48 hours. Shukur Khan left for Mustung the same day, but I have not heard anything more regarding the Moonshees except that other men have been appointed in their place.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has left my protection and returned to his duty and family.

Circumstances above narrated show that his Highness has at last yielded to good advice and adopted the course suggested by me on arrival at Khelat.

IN acknowledging your letter No. 2251, of the 31st ultimo, and accompaniments, as also letter No. 4959, of the 20th August, by Secretary to Government, addressed to Commissioner in Sind, I have the honour to report that, prior to receipt of the same, his Highness the Khan had accepted the responsibility devolving on him "by Treaty" by giving the merchants plundered in his territory pecuniary assistance, with an assurance that he would do all in his power to recover the rest of their property. Late on Saturday night his Highness also consented to remove the Moonshees and Shukur Khan for a time only, as he hoped the Commissioner in Sind would sanction their being reinstated.

The correspondence above noted, as also 17th paragraph of Commissioner's letter No. 785, have been translated into Persian and forwarded to his Highness with a request that, after careful perusal of the same, he will give a written guarantee regarding the several subjects brought to his notice.

From Commissioner in Sind to Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

IN acknowledging the receipt of your endorsements Nos. 2463 and 2465 covering Major Harrison's diary up to the 15th September, and his letter No. 127 of the 16th idem, I have the honour to inform you that that officer's proceedings are entirely approved, and to request that you will convey to him my warmest thanks for the excellent judgment, firmness and cool determination he has shown throughout a period of no small difficulty and danger.

2. It is very satisfactory to learn that his Highness the Khan has at last been brought by Major Harrison's resolute and just bearing to adopt a more reasonable course, and it is to hoped that now his Highness' eyes are fairly opened to the dangerous position he was so ill-advisedly rushing into, that he will for the future more carefully adhere to that procedure with true regard for the interests of himself and country induced and always will induce the British officer at his Court to set before him.

3. His Highness the Khan has to a very great extent, if not entirely, conceded what was required of him, but at the same time I am still of opinion that without some distinct guarantee from him, the present arrangements will be liable to be broken through directly pressure of circumstances is removed. Indeed the remark made by the Khan that while he agreed to dismiss the Moonshees and Shukur Khan, he "hoped on further representation that Government would allow him to reinstate them," showed that he was not thoroughly earnest in his removal of them from his councils. I have the honour to request therefore that you will instruct Major Harrison to inform the Khan that any attempt to restore these men to their former position would be looked upon as a grave breach of faith and involve the immediate retirement of the Political Agent from the Court of his Highness, and further that before his present actions can be accepted with the cordiality and thorough faith which it is desirable they should be, the guarantee before mentioned should be frankly given by him, and if it is not that it will be necessary that Major Harrison should still act on his previous instructions, viz., to leave Khelat and retire within British territory.

4. Should his Highness act with the full candour that I trust he will, and show that he is sincerely earnest in the return to his old manner of procedure towards the British Government, it would I consider, be very desirable that he should accompany Major Harrison to Kutchee, and that officer should be instructed to inform his Highness that his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, Lord Northbrook, will be at Jacobabad on the 1st November, where if it was possible for his Highness the Khan to reach that place by that date, his Excellency the Viceroy would be pleased to receive him, and arrangements would be made accordingly. The communication however of this latter part must be left to the judgment of Major Harrison as depending on the state of affairs at the time these instructions reach him.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to the Political Superintendent of Upper Sind Frontier.

HIS HIGHNESS the Khan having made certain suggestions to me through Vakeel Dost Muhammad, I thought it advisable to reply to the same in writing. From copy of my letter annexed you will perceive his Highness has professed himself willing to compensate the merchants, but declines to dismiss evil counsellors.

Taking into consideration his Highness' obstructiveness and insincerity during the past few months, as also circumstances connected with the Samalanees, reported in this week's diary, I felt no confidence could be placed in his Highness' offer to compensate the merchants, and that the proposition was only made to induce me to defer my departure. In replying to his Highness' first and fifth suggestions, I have consulted the interests of merchants and given his Highness an opportunity "to regain "the esteem and confidence of our Government." Referring to first suggestion my Vakeel was instructed to point out to his Highness that sufficient time would elapse before our leaving Khelat to enable me to judge whether he was really anxious to compensate merchants and regain the good opinion of my Government.

His Highness' persistent refusal to dismiss evil counsellors convinces me that the thing to be done is to withdraw from his Court, and to give him an option of joining me at Baghwana in a month's time, provided matters are adjusted as required by our Government.

Enclosure 2 in No. 107.

Translation of a Letter from Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated Khelat, the 8th August 1872.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS,—Moli Dost Muhammad, "Vakeel," yesterday evening indicated to me what arrangements you were prepared to make in connexion with plundered merchants and dismissing evil counsellors:

1st.—That I should investigate the merchants' claims, after which your Highness would give money-compensation.

2nd.—You would dismiss the Moonshees in the course of a few days.

3rd.—To dismiss Shukur Khan would cause your Highness serious inconvenience, but that a written guarantee would be given, stating that in future he would be restricted to his legitimate duties, and have no voice in political matters.

4th.—That the Samalanee question could be easily settled.

5th.—Your Highness wished me to delay my departure for fifteen days, by which time everything would be settled, and you would accompany me to Kutchee.

Before replying to the above I will briefly allude to events that preceded present complications. In the autumn of last year a rebellion broke out in Mustung, which was quelled by your Wuzeer. Owing to his being wounded the rebels found their way down to Kutchee, and, being joined by other discontented people, created further disturbances, and insurrection became so contagious that Beylah and Mekran also rebelled. Nawab Muhammad Khan, who was sent by you to quell the disturbance in Kutchee, failed so completely that the British Government offered to intervene, and your Highness delegated your powers to the Commissioner in Sind and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed; arrangements were then made calculated to restore peace and order in your country. On arriving at Khelat I did my utmost to induce your Highness to give the Commissioner in Sind arrangements your cordial support; but it was soon apparent that you had no such intention, and slighted any advice given. My Government, on being made aware of your feelings, wrote to you, through the Commissioner in Sind, pointing out your responsibilities to them and what was advisable.

Your reply to this was so unsatisfactory that a telegraphic message was forwarded, "translation of which was sent to your Highness." Your Highness' reply to this was merely a repetition of your former letter, in which you refused any reponsibility regarding the Murrees, and declined to dismiss evil counsellors. In the interval that elapsed between the writing of your letters I urged your Highness, as a friend, to do what was right, stating propositions made at the last moment would not be favourably received.

Yesterday morning, when you realised that I was actually going to leave Khelat, and disapproved of what had occurred, "by not accepting your annual gift of a horse," you sent my Vakeel with propositions previously noted.

Before remarking on these propositions, I will merely add that your arrangements regarding the Samalanees render me sceptical as to your sincerity in this matter, and that actions, not words, will be required to regain the esteem and confidence of my Government.

With reference to your first proposition, you have an opportunity of showing that you are really anxious to regain the good opinion of my Government. Merchants plundered by the Sarawans and Murrees are still at Khelat; and as you profess yourself willing to advance money, this business could be either settled at once, or part-payment given, which would give the merchants a reasonable assurance that their claims were in a fair way towards adjustment. Sums so advanced would, of course, be ultimately recoverable from the Sarawans, Muzaranees, &c.

Your second proposition is that the Moonshees should be dismissed in the course of a few days. My opinion is that no object can be gained by keeping these men in your service for a single hour.

Referring to your third suggestion, Shukur Khan has undoubtedly done your Highness good service. Latterly, however, he has taken a very mischievous part in your Highness' administration, and has been guilty of gross disrespect to my Government, talking of my attacking my camp, encouraging his men to talk about turning Ghazees, and sending them to shout and yell close to our quarters at all hours of the night. If you value the friendship of the English Government you will not keep a man in your service who has been guilty of such disrespect.

In your 4th paragraph you say that the Samalanee question can be easily adjusted. I confess I do not understand your policy towards this tribe. Those who raided Shere Dil have been allowed to escape, and Hybat Khan, Samalanee, has been entrusted with transit of kafilas through the Bolan. This scarcely looks as if your Highness intended to coerce them into restoring the property of the Muzaranee Murrees.

Regarding your 5th paragraph, my arrangements to march have been made, and cannot be deferred without great inconvenience and expense. As Your Highness leads me to suppose that a speedy settlement of affairs is practicable, I will remain one month at Baghwana, by which time it will be apparent whether Your Highness is earnestly endeavouring to do what is right. If matters are adjusted as advised by my Government, you can join my camp and proceed with me to Kutchee. At the latter place you may possibly meet the Commissioner in Sind, and can then ask him to overlook your foolish conduct.

No. 6054, dated Bombay Castle, 22nd October 1872.

From Secretary to Government, Bombay, to Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, with the Governor General.

WITH reference to the papers ending with your letter No. 2016P., dated the 24th ultimo, I am directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a letter, with enclosures, from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 950 of the 5th instant, reporting on the question of the coercion of the Murree tribe on the frontier of the Dehra Ghazee Khan District.

Enclosure in No. 108.

No. 950, dated Kurrachee, 5th October 1872.

From Commissioner in Sind, to Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

IN accordance with the instructions conveyed in letter from the Secretary to the Government of India, No. 1426P., dated Simla, the 27th June last, I have the honour to submit in original Captain Sandeman's Report, dated 13th August, and received by me from the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, on the 2nd September, and to offer the following remarks.

2. The whole question of the position of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, in connexion with the Punjab and Sind borders and with the Khelat State, has been much mystified by the supposition that those tribes suffered undeservedly from unadjusted claims from grievances unredressed, and that they were a very ill-used body. In his present report, however, Captain Sandeman has correctly and judiciously abandoned this line, and draws attention "to the desires and hopes of the Murree tribe" (about whom he chiefly writes), adding,—"I do not call them grievances, for I do not think the chiefs desire them to be viewed as such." This gives the matter its proper and true bearing, simplifying the question greatly, so that it is fortunately unnecessary to go over old ground, or to refer at any length to what has passed.

3. Before remarking on what Captain Sandeman now adduces, I would in the first instance endeavour to put in as clear a light as possible the real aspect of affairs as they existed at the time alluded to in Mr. Secretary Aitchison's letter No. 1425 P. of the 27th June last. For a few years past the Khan of Khelat had entrusted the guardianship of the Bolan Pass transit to a section of the Muzzarani branch of the Murree tribe, they having established themselves as residents on the line of that pass, and being accordingly well placed to carry out that duty. This section had for some years before been quite separated from the other portions of the Murree tribe, and would have nothing to do with them. It was stated in former correspondence that the main portion of the Murrees felt hurt, because the section of the tribe was employed on the Bolan, and the whole did not share. This I always considered an entire mistake, and Captain Sandeman's present report goes to prove it so.

4. During the disturbances last cold season a portion of the main clan of the Murrees associated themselves with the followers of the rebellious Sirdars, and joined in that plunder of the kafilas which occurred in January. In April the Sumalani Minguls, Brahooees, for reasons which are not yet quite satisfactorily cleared up, attacked the Muzzarani Murrees at their camp near Bibi Nani in the Bolan Pass. In reprisal Sher Dil Muzzarani attacked not the Sumalanis, but an inoffensive kafila passing along the road. The Muzzaranis then retired from their old position near Bibi Nani to Khot Mundai, where the Bijarani Murrees reside, and getting assistance from them, as also from a certain number of the Kahan Murrees, who are immediately under the Sirdar Ghuzzun returned to the Bolan and plundered another kafila. From the above it will be seen that the Murrees generally had portions of the plunder taken from kafilas in January and April, and the Muzzaranis the whole from the first outrage in April.

5. I should have been very glad to have carried into effect the Mittunkote arrangements before I left the frontier last April, but after what had occurred in January I did not consider it right to do so. Afterwards, with reference to all that had passed I instructed Captain Sandeman to intimate to the Murree chiefs that I could not look on them with favour, or extend the consideration to them that would otherwise be accorded, unless the property plundered from kafilas, and which was in possession of the tribe, was immediately given up or its equivalent. I am not aware that it was ever said by me that the whole tribe was responsible for the Muzzarani section. I certainly did not intend to do so, for I have always held them to be entirely separate, and pointed out that it was very undesirable the Punjab officers should have anything to say to that section, as neither they nor the Murree Sirdar at Kahan had anything to do with it. Sher Dil Muzzarani was informed from me direct that he must surrender the property he and his people had plundered, and on his doing so the Khan of Khelat would be moved to redress the injury he and they had sustained at the hand of the Sumalani Minguls. According to my view of the case only those who possessed the plunder should be held responsible, the Kahan Murrees for their portion and no more, and unless they did deliver it up I consider it would be necessary to mark our sense of the misconduct by blockading that portion of the tribe, and suspending any payments made to them. It was of course a measure of precaution to prepare the Punjab frontier line for anything that might occur; but it did not seem to me likely the Murrees would proceed to the extremity of breaking with us. Our connexion is too valuable to them, and I therefore did not anticipate any breach of the peace on the Punjab Frontier in consequence of the measures, the proposed adoption of which I had considered necessary. The small raid by certain Loharani Murrees that did take place had nothing whatever to do with the question under review. It was merely part of an old blood feud.

6. I will now turn to Captain Sandeman's report. The statement of the Murree Chief Ghuzzun is very fair, and in the main correct. If the tribe is only considered to hold the position he describes and the course proposed by Captain Sandeman be followed strictly, no difficulty will occur. It was never intended to make the whole tribe responsible for the safety of the Bolan Pass. But if any members of it join the Mùzzarani section, or whoever may commit outrages on that trade route, the chiefs of those so engaging will certainly be held answerable for the conduct of their followers. I should be glad to see the whole Murree tribe united under one head, and to think that Sirdar Ghuzzun had power over the Bezoranis and others. It will be my object to promote this in forthcoming arrangements. But I am afraid from the previous career of Ghuzzun and the history of these people it is not likely to be the case. We must then deal with as few heads as we can.

7. In former years when our troops were in Afghanistan, the Murree tribe, almost entirely footmen then, were confined as to plundering to their immediate neighbours, principally against the Boogtees, Khetrans, Pathans in the hills, and the district of Seebee in the western plains, with an occasional distant raid to the Bolan on one side or the Punjab on the other, but neither of these last were then frequent, owing to the great distances that had to be traversed. The Murrees themselves always date their taking to horsemanship from the capture of the British Artillery horses at the unfortunate affair of Nuffosk in August 1840. But even then they made but little use of these, because there were other tribes more powerful and more dashing in their forays than they were. The Dhoombkees and Jakranis were the celebrated border raiders in those days, having their places of gathering at Lehri, Phulaji, and Chatun, in Kutchee. They under the famous leaders, Bijar Khan, Dhoombkee, and Turk Ali, Jani, and Rahmut, Jakransis, used to plunder the whole of Kutchee as they pleased and often penetrated far into Sind. It was the sack of Kambar, near Lurkuna, in 1844 that roused Sir C. Napier's anger, called forth the famous hill campaign of 1844–45, and subsequent surrender of the Dhoombkees and Jakranis and their transport to Sind. These two warlike tribes being removed, the Boogtees then saw their way open to plunder in Sind and Kutchee, and continued to do so until the severe defeat and heavy loss they experienced on the 1st October 1847 broke the strength of the tribe and caused them to be more careful in future how they left their hills. At that time we were on very good terms with the Murrees; indeed, it was partly through information given by the chief of the Murrees, Deen Mahomed, that the punishment reached the Boogtees. From this time the Murrees may be said to have increased in power, and to have taken their position as prominent plunderers. There was no reason exactly why they should except the natural love of these wild people for a life of adventure, and that, being now strongest of all, they had it pretty much their own way. The younger, Nusseer Khan, at General Jacob's suggestion, endeavoured to bring them to a more orderly state of life, and established Government officials, both at Kahan and at Bubrack Dera, in the Boogtee Hills, but with little effect; the officials carried no authority with them. Had Nusseer Khan lived he would have conducted an expedition into the Murree Hills to punish that tribe for their misdeeds, but his death and subsequent disorders prevented the plan being carried out until the end of 1858, when the present Khan, at the earnest pressure of General Jacob, took the whole force of Sarawan and Jalawan into the Murree Hills, and brought them to subjection, taking with him to Khelat hostages for the future good behaviour of the tribe. After a short residence there the hostages, fancying themselves aggrieved by the behaviour of some of the officials towards them, fled from Khelat, got back to their hills, and the old state of affairs was revived. The endeavour was then made to keep them and the Boogtees quiet by the Khan paying them, but unfortunately just at that time the extra grant of a second half lakh of rupees that had been made to the Khan by our Government was withdrawn, in consequence of a raid made by the Murrees into the Punjab, and the Khan had to withhold his payment to the hill tribes. They have ventured, or it has been supposed so, to claim this subsidy as one of the rights withheld from them, but as it was paid to them to behave well they naturally and justly forfeited it on their misbehaving and plundering in British territory and other places.

8. Of late years, since communications have been opened with the Murrees from the Punjab side, and men from that clan as well as from the Boogtees have been taken into the pay of the British Government, those two tribes may be said to have behaved well and faithfully as regards their engagements on that side. But then this arrangement, while acting excellently for the Punjab, caused difficulties in the opposite direction, from the fact that we were paying and treating well portions of tribes, who were all the time misbehaving by deliberately plundering travellers on the roads and harrying the country of their Sovereign, and our ally the Khan of Khelat. The arrangement was doubtless a very good one for them. They got regular pay on one side, and plunder at their pleasure on the other, on what they called their "shikar grounds," the plains of Kutchee, without being brought to task for it, the Khan being unable to do so. It was the unevenness of this arrangement, as well as the injury it really did the Murrees in encouraging them on one hand, though it was well known they were behaving most outrageously elsewhere, that led to the conference at Mittunkote, and the endeavour to introduce one uniform policy with the view of putting a stop to all plundering.

9. I should myself have preferred the bolder policy of telling these people we would not allow plundering in any form or anywhere, and if they attempted it they would lose our favour, and be attacked and destroyed whenever they engaged in any outrage, we at the same time giving such assistance to the Khan of Khelat as would enable him to act in a similar way in his country to protect the roads through and towns in Kutchee. This would have established peace for ever, but it would have, I believe, involved the necessity of extra military force (all armed militia within our boundary should be put a stop to) on the Punjab border. As the next best plan I advocated the entertainment of chiefs and bodies of Boogtees and Murree horsemen, who should be paid in the name of the Khan, and the Sirdars in return for such employment of their people made really to keep their tribes in order.

10. Captain Sandeman, in commencing on the second portion of his subject, enunciates in his 6th paragraph truths that are incontestible. There should most certainly be only one policy in dealing with these wild people, and one head to direct and be implicitly followed. It has been the absence of proper joint and unanimous action that has caused all the difficulties it is now intended to remedy.

11. Captain Sandeman's proposals appear to be two:—

1st. To clearly define the boundary line between the Punjab and Khelat; and 2nd to establish a post in the Shum Plain.

12. As regards the first, he does not seem to be exactly aware that the boundary line was laid down accurately after full inquiry, not at the time of the annexation of the Punjab, but in 1856 by then Captain, now Colonel, Graham, who was Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan and myself. The question of the lands to the westward of the Gehandari mountains was taken into consideration, and as it was found those lands had been long abandoned by the Gurchanies and others, who used at one time to graze their flocks there, and to advance the boundary into the plain beyond would give a line difficult to hold, it was decided that the plan generally adopted in most countries should be followed, and that was that the watershed of the highest ranges should be proclaimed the boundary line, and all British subjects should confine themselves to the localities to the eastward of that. General Jacob, who was then Political Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Sind, entirely concurred in this view; the Punjab Government, I believe, did so likewise, and it was finally approved by the Government of India. A straight line was drawn from the Sind and Khelat boundary, Tower and Sevee, 16 miles west of Kasmore, to the highest point of the Gehandari Mountain, and from that, as well as along the Murree Mountain, the watershed was fixed to mark the territorial limits.

The Muzzaris even put in a claim to the western slope of the Gehandari Hill.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

13. I would strongly recommend that this boundary arrangement should remain undisturbed. Gurchanies and all others who imagine they have any claims to lands beyond the frontier line, which they had abandoned because they could not hold them, should be told, as I think they ought to have been in the first instance, that they must elect either to be Kulab or British subjects, and confine themselves entirely to the land of their adoption. Some assistance from Government in the shape of improved means of irrigation to lands they may have in British territory would quite satisfy them, and make them forget all about the old places. There can be no question, but that these mixed possessions on a border side are a fruitful element of discord and disturbance, and they should always be done away with whenever this is possible. The country west of the Gehandari Mountains belonging to Khelat would be disposed of as the Khan thinks best, probably to the Murrees and Boogtees, who would then become the responsible holders up to the British boundary, and no British subjects being allowed to pass or have any claims beyond, there should be the less cause for perpetuation of old animosities.

14. There is, I know, a very strong desire on the part of the Belooch within our border to get back into the hills. The grazing and chance cultivation on the Shum and other plains there has a great charm for them, but it ought to be steadily discountenanced, and every encouragement given to those who are our subjects to settle finally on the grounds they have within the border. Officers who have visited the hill tracts also think it would be well that something should be done to utilize such good land. I would most strongly deprecate any attempt on our part to interfere with these parts, leave them to be ultimately occupied, and used by the hill people themselves, when they choose to be at peace with one another. They would like very much that we should do the police work of the hills, and keep order while they cultivated in peace. But it is not, I hold, expedient that we should enter the hills for such a purpose only.

15. As regards a post in the Shum plain, there would be no difficulty whatever in establishing it as far as the Khan of Khelat is concerned. He would, I am sure, raise no objection. But the question is, is it advisable to advance a post not only within the hills, but with a high mountain between that post and its supports. In this respect the Shum post would differ considerably from the Siri post on the Sind Frontier. This latter is scarcely within the hills. It is on a hill torrent just within the lower range, and was established there, as Sir H. Green correctly observed, to command the Boogtees, that is, it is so far advanced that if any parties of Boogtees ever dared attempt to make a raid into Sind they must be cut off from return by means of this post. There is in advance of it a good-sized plain, "the Mubt plain," on which cavalry could act with advantage. In the rear of Siri there is nothing but open level country, and its communication with its supports at the outposts of Kasmore, Toj, and Sunree is unimpeded. The post of Hurrund more assimilates to that of Siri, and in the Shum plain would be akin to placing one from the Sind side in the valley of Dehra with the high hill, called the Zin, intervening between it and the other posts. I have never seen the pass which is stated to connect Hurrund with the site of the intended Shum post, but it should be made very easy, and quickly available at all times if such post is placed there. If the Punjab Government thinks it desirable to have this post I shall be very happy to assist in every way in getting it established.

16. The only thing I object to is the entertainment of any idea of advancing our present line of posts into the hilly country. I consider this would be a grave strategical error; we should be leaving an open country, where our cavalry can act with vigour and rapidity, and where they can with ease intercept any enemy who may dare to think of crossing that open space to attempt plundering in Sind, to coop that cavalry up in closed valleys where the robbers are quite at home, and where our horsemen would find themselves comparatively useless. Besides the Shum post then, if that is decided on, I would most certainly say no other should be taken inside the hills.

17. The map alluded to by Captain Sandeman was not forwarded with his letter, but the different frontier maps will show the places I have mentioned, and how the country lies.

18. Captain Sandeman's proposals only refer to the management of the hill tribes as respects the Punjab Frontier. But nothing done there will have any permanent good effect unless a similar system is followed on the Khelat side, and the Murrees and Boogtees are induced equally to abstain from harassing that country and the trade routes. This I hope to be able to effect by carrying out the arrangement proposed at Mittunkote, and afterwards sanctioned by the Government of India. These have been delayed hitherto first, because the sanction only reached me in December last, when serious disturbances were going on in Khelat territory, and it was not possible to do anything final until those disturbances were brought to a conclusion, and then when they were the action taken by a portion of the Murree tribe made it impossible to treat them with favour until they had made restitution of the property they had received as share of plunder from the kafilas. Captain Sandeman informed me by telegram that the Murree chiefs, apart from the Muzzaranis, had agreed to give up all of the property that could be collected, and equivalent in money for the remainder. This being done removes all impediment to the execution of the Mittunkote scheme, and during the ensuing cold season I purpose proceeding myself to Jacobabad, and there, in consultation with the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, the Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, who will be requested to attend, and the Khelat authorities, to make the best arrangement with the sum of money that has been granted by Government to check these hill tribes from following longer their lawless and predatory habits, whether in the Punjab or in Khelat territory.

19. I have delayed submitting this report, because the state of affairs at Khelat was so very critical, and it was so uncertain whether our relations with that Government were to continue on the same friendly footing as before, that it was impossible to state definitely what course could be pursued. His Highness the Khan having at last acted reasonably all complications appear now to be in a fair way to be adjusted, and there is nothing now to prevent any requisite arrangement being carried out in connexion with the Khelat authorities.

20. In conclusion I would beg to bring to your Excellency's notice the very great desirability that early sanction should be accorded to the expenditure asked for in the enlargement and extension of the "Maksudawah" from Kasmore through the Desser; this is a most important political work, as giving means for the employment and settlement of large numbers of the wild people, whom it is our best interest to reclaim from their lawless habits. I believe some technicality stops the scheme from being pushed forward. I would beg that this may be removed. It is not necessary that this canal should be constructed on the most scientific principles. It is only required as an inundation canal, to convey water during the rise of the Indus, and all that is needed is the sanction for the sum asked for to merely enlarge and extend what is now little more than a ditch, and to place masonry heads where required to prevent water being wasted. Unless early sanction is accorded another season will be lost, and I shall be deprived in the coming arrangements of the valuable assistance the certainty of this canal being ready next inundation would give me, and the power I should possess of holding out inducements of peaceful life to such of the robbers who would like to enter upon it.

No. 109.

Memorandum of a conversation held at a private interview between his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, at Sukkur, on Tuesday, the 5th November 1872.

Present:

His Excellency the Viceroy.
His Highness the Khan of Khelat.
The Commissioner in Sind.
The Foreign Secretary.
The Private Secretary.
The Political Superintendent, Sind Frontier.
The Political Agent, Khelat, Interpreter.
Captain Henderson, Attaché, Foreign Department.

His Excellency the Viceroy commenced the conversation by observing that it afforded him much pleasure to have had the opportunity of meeting the Khan at so favourable a time after a settlement had been arrived at of the various disputes that had been distracting the Khelat State. The disturbed condition of the frontier had been to his Excellency a cause of anxiety, now fortunately removed.

His Excellency then informed the Khan that the proceedings of Major Harrison, the Political Agent, during the recent disturbances had been fully approved by the Government of India. Also that the Government reposed the most complete confidence in Sir W. Merewether, the Commissioner in Sind, to whose measures and policy they had given unqualified support.

Alluding next to the relations of the Khan with the British Government, and especially to recent events which had nearly led to the withdrawal of the British representative from Khelat under orders from the Commissioner in Sind, his Excellency remarked to the Khan that, though on that occasion the Commissioner had seen reason to modify his orders on observing the willingness of the Khan to adopt a more favourable policy, it was nevertheless incumbent on his Excellency to warn him that it was far from probable that the same consideration would be shown on a future occasion.

The British Government, his Excellency continued, had no other object in view than to secure entire freedom and security of trade through the Khan's dominions, and the attainment of this object would be equally advantageous to his Highness. While resolving scrupulously to observe the terms of the Treaty with Khelat, it was also incumbent on the British Government to insist that its provisions should be equally fulfilled by his Highness. The cessation of disturbances in Khelat would go far to facilitate this result, and his Excellency expressed a hope that the Khan, by a considerate and conciliatory course of conduct towards his chiefs, might be enabled in future to avoid all chance of a recurrence of similar disorders.

On this the Khan observed that the maintenance of order in his dominions was no easy matter. For the past three years there had been discussions between himself and his chiefs, and actual hostilities which terminated in the advantage now of the one and now of the other party. To maintain order it was often necessary to resort to stern and harsh measures, without which it would be impossible to uphold his own authority.

To the above his Excellency replied, that there was no wish on the part of the British Government to interfere with his independent exercise of authority so long as peace was preserved on the frontier and Treaty engagements fulfilled. His Excellency recommended the Khan in all his difficulties to consult the British representative at his Court, who would be always ready either to assist him with his own advice, or in matters of great moment to obtain the opinion of his superior, the Commissioner in Sind, or of the British Goverment itself.

Being asked whether it was his wish to make any representations to his Excellency with regard to the subject of the conversation, the Khan commenced general protestations of loyalty towards the British Government, and professions of his anxiety to render that Government any service that it might be in his power to perform. He then asked for sanction to the reinstatement of his favourites,* owing to whose intrigues much of the recent complication was to be attributed, and whose dismissal had only very recently been secured. To this request his Excellency replied that to reverse the dismissal of these men at present would only have the effect of weakening the Khan's authority, and would afford encouragement to other evil-doers. Under these circumstances, therefore, it was quite impossible for the British Government to countenance their restoration, though at some future time, if events proved favourable it might be found possible to re-open the question. Notwithstanding the above refusal the Khan continued to press the matter of his favourites' restoration urging the insignificance of these men and the loss of dignity he would suffer if their dismissal was insisted on. His Excellency replied that it was impossible for him to reply to the Khan in any other sense than he had already done, and that the decision given would not be altered.

* Shukur Khan, late commanding his Highness' Troops.
Moonshee Saleh Mahomed.
Moonshee Gool Mahomed.

The interview then terminated with mutual interchange of civilities.

On the occasion of paying the return visit to the Khan on the following day, his Highness expressed his gratitude to his Excellency for the advice given him at the private interview. His Excellency thereupon observed that the substance of the conversation held at the private interview would be recorded, in order that both parties might have an opportunity of referring to it at some future time.

No. 110.

No. 6436, dated Bombay Castle, 6th November 1872.

From Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, with the Governor General.

ADVERTING to previous correspondence regarding the affairs of Khelat, I am directed to transmit to you herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 969, dated 20th ultimo, giving cover to documents announcing a settlement of the difficulties in the administration of the affairs of that State.

Enclosure 1 in No. 110.

No. 969, dated Indus, 20th October 1872.

From Commissioner in Sind, to Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

IT is with great pleasure I have the honour to forward to your Excellency the accompanying documents, announcing, I trust, the commencement of the permanent settlement of the serious difficulties which have so unfortunately of late beset the administration of affairs under the Government of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

2. The very successful issue that has now been gained, may most justly be attributed in the main, to the ability, cool judgment, and patient bearing of the Political Agent, Major Harrison, throughout a most difficult and dangerous crisis. His unchangeable firmness and calm courage could not fail to command respect and carried conviction at last. I trust his proceedings may receive your Excellency's high commendation.

In all that he has done, he has been most efficiently supported by the Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, whose patriotism and fidelity, often before commented on, has never been more prominently conspicuous than on this occasion. It is a matter of great gratification to find that the services of this able and devoted minister are still to be preserved to the Khelat Government, with, it is to be hoped, increased advantage.

Enclosure 2 in No. 110.

No. 132, dated Khelat, 1st October 1872.

From Political Agent, Khelat, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In acknowledging your letters Nos. 2437 and 2394, with accompaniments, I have the honour to submit the following explanation for not withdrawing into British territory as directed.

2. Facts reported by me in my letter No. 127 of the 16th ultimo, diary No. 32, satisfied me that his Highness would soon realize how he had been misled, and that his regret for the past might be tested by full compliance with suggestion conveyed in the 17th paragraph of Commissioner's letter, No. 785.

3. Since the departure of Shukur Khan, Saleh Mahomed, and Gool Mahomed, people have spoken very plainly to his Highness, and shown him how seriously these men had compromised him by their words and actions.

4. On receipt of letters under reply I sent translations of the same to his Highness, stating that I only accepted the responsibility of not returning to British territory on one condition, viz., that he would give me a written guarantee that he would faithfully and truly carry out what was required of him by treaty, as also other matters that had been brought to his notice by the Government of Bombay and Commissioner in Sind. On Sunday morning I was favoured with the guarantee required, and send the same in original, as also his Highness' forwarding letter to my address. In conclusion, I would briefly state that my having been able to induce his Highness to adhere to his treaty and dismiss evil counsellors has given universal satisfaction. Merchants and traders were seriously alarmed at my intended withdrawal, as his Highness' sepoys had announced their intention of plundering the fort and deserting to their own country. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, are of opinion that his Highness will now honestly try to do what he has guaranteed; under these circumstances I hope my not withdrawing into British territory may be approved.

Enclosure 3 in No. 110.

Translation of Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Political Agent, Khelat.

Your friendly letter has reached me: perusal of the same has afforded me much pleasure. Translations of two letters have also been received, one from the Commissioner in Sind, the other from Colonel Mainwaring. You wrote that out of former friendship to me, you have not carried out the instructions you have received consequent on my having promised you a written guarantee, and that if I valued the friendship of the British Government, and regarded their advice, I should willingly give the guarantee required. I reply in a friendly spirit that in every respect I approve of the advice given to me by your Government and yourself, and agree to the same.

I now of my own free-will send you the guarantee required duly sealed. By the blessing of God everything is right, rest satisfied, and keep me informed of your welfare.

Enclosure 4 in No. 110.

Translation of an Agreement executed by his Highness the Khan of Khelat on the 25th Rajib 1829—29th September 1872.

I, Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, give the following written guarantee:—

1st.—As regards property plundered from Pathan merchants at the latter end of December in the Bolan Pass and Dadar by the Sarawans, I am responsible for the same according to treaty with the British Government; and to give confidence to the merchants, I, on the 19th September 1872, advanced them Rupees 30,000 from my treasury. I further undertake, on arrival in Kutchee, to do my utmost to recover the merchants' property or the equivalent, and hold myself responsible that their claims shall be equitably adjusted with as little delay as possible.

Case Muzzeranis versus Samalanis was inquired into by me in durbar, and the latter gave me a written agreement, but have broken the same. I, Khodadad Khan, faithfully and honestly undertake the responsibility resting on me by treaty as regards kafilas plundered by the Murrees in April and May last. Having heard that the British Government have recovered some of the property at Dehra Ghazee Khan any assistance or kindness that can be shown to me in settling this business will be gratefully acknowledged; after deducting what property may have been recovered I will exert myself to recover the remainder, or its equivalent. I will also do justice as regards the Muzzeranis and Samalanis, punishing the latter, awarding to the former what is just and right, and recovering from them what may be due to merchants. I hold myself responsible that their claims will be adjusted within a short period. I, Khodadad Khan, also advance Rupees 5,000 to Syed Ahmed, who was plundered by Sirdar Noordeen.

2nd:—Saleh Mahomed, Gool Mahomed, and Shukur Khan, "Sheikhs," owing to their intrigues and conspiracies have been discharged from my service out of deference to the wishes expressed by his Excellency the Governor in Council of Bombay and Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B., &c., Commissioner in Sind; and I now give this written agreement that they shall not be re-employed, either directly or indirectly, without the sanction and approval of the British Government. I further hold myself responsible that these men shall not openly or secretly take part in any intrigue, &c., &c.

3rd. Owing to intrigues and conspiracies by the aforesaid three men misunderstanding arose between Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and myself. Through the intervention of the British Government we have been reconciled, after duly considering what was written on the subject by his Excellency the Governor of Bombay and the Commissioner in Sind. I approved of the advice given, presented the Shahgassee with a khillut, and reinstated him to his former position. I now give the following guarantee, viz., that so long as I live he shall be treated with the respect due to him as Wuzeer, shall occupy that position and have control over all affairs fiscal, political, and military, as he will I feel sure act in such a manner as to benefit my country. I further guarantee that during my lifetime neither I nor any one under my orders will cause any injury to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, or treat him with disrespect; should anything of the kind occur the British Government may hold me responsible.

I will exert myself to make such arrangements in the Bolan as will ensure the safe transit of merchant's property, &c. &c.

The disgrace of breaking a treaty rests on me if I fail in anything above written.

This guarantee has been given voluntarily and without pressure to Major Harrison.

Enclosure 5 in No. 110.

No. 970, dated Commissioner's Office, Indus, 20th October 1872.

From Commissioner in Sind, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In acknowledging the receipt of the documents forwarded under your endorsement No. 2665 of the 14th instant, I have the honour to request that you will inform Major Harrison that he acted most judiciously in deferring strict compliance with my instructions to retire into British territory when he found that his Highness the Khan had really arrived at a just perception of the inappropriateness and danger of the course he was following under the evil advice of the bad counsellors he had so unhappily listened to of late. Major Harrison's proceedings as now reported are entirely approved, and I beg that you will convey to that officer my best thanks for the able and patient manner in which he has carried a most delicate and difficult crisis to so satisfactory a conclusion.

2. I have also the honour to forward herewith a letter addressed to his Highness the Khan to be forwarded to Major Harrison for delivery to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

Enclosure 6 in No. 110.

Translation of a Letter addressed by the Commissioner in Sind to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

IT is with extreme pleasure I have received from Major Harrison, the Political Agent, at your Highness' Court, intimation that your Highness has fully and sincerely decided on cordially acting up to the treaty engagements between yourself and Her Majesty's Government, and on removing finally from your side those evil counsellors who have of late been leading your Highness astray, and inducing you to act in a manner which could only meet with the marked disapproval of Her Majesty's Government. I sincerely trust that the change in your Highness' procedure, which has recently and so happily taken place, may be taken as a fair augury of the restoration of peace and happiness in your country on a sound and secure basis, and that it may be the commencement of increasing prosperity to your Highness, and to all the subjects of your dominions as well as of honour and renown to yourself.

His Excellency the Right Hon. Lord Northbrook, Viceroy and Governor General of India, is about to visit Jacobabad and will be there on the 1st November. He desires it may be so managed that he may have a meeting with you at that place. I trust, therefore, it may be convenient to your Highness to be at Jacobabad on the above-mentioned date; and I beg to invite you in his name to be present there.

From Punjab Government, No. 273 S., dated 11th September 1872.
From Bombay Government, No. 6054, dated 22nd October 1872.

OBSERVATIONS.—By the resolution quoted in the preamble sanction was conveyed to the expenditure of Rs. 32,040 for the entertainment of certain horsemen of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, with a view to the better maintenance of order on the portion of the Sind and Punjab Frontier which adjoins the Khelat State. This amount was sanctioned experimentally for one year only, and on the understanding that the question of the grant, connected as it is with the administration of the Sind and Punjab Frontiers, should be taken up shortly and discussed in all its bearings. Owing to the recent disturbances in Khelat, however, the arrangement sanctioned by Government could not be carried out.

2. In June last the Punjab Government forwarded copies of a correspondence that had passed between Captain Sandeman and the Commissioner in Sind, in the course of which the former officer alluded to certain grievances of the Murree tribe, which called for redress at the hands of the Khan of Khelat. Captain Sandeman was desired by the Government of India to state categorically what these grievances were, and what specific measure we would propose for remedying each and all of them. From his reply it appears that the Murrees have in reality no grievances, but desire only to be relieved from responsibility as regards the conduct of caravans through the Bolan Pass. His Excellency in Council is of opinion that Captain Sandeman has correctly appreciated the real position of the tribe, and the Commissioner in Sind has expressed his conviction that no difficulties are likely to arise if this position of the Murrees be admitted to that described by their chief himself.

3. While, however, denying the existence of any actual grievances, Captain Sandeman submitted two proposals for remedying what he considered to be the unfortunate position which the Murree tribe hold in regard to the British Government. These were—

1st.—That the boundary between the Punjab and Khelat should be clearly defined.
2nd.—That a post in advance of the present line of posts should be established on the Shum plain, beyond the British border.

4. With regard to the first of these proposals, it appears that the measure which Captain Sandeman advocates is not a definition but a rectification of the frontier, and that its object is to bring within British territory the whole of the Goorchanee, some of whom are now in Khelat and some in British territory. According to Sir W. Merewether, the tract occupied by the Goorchanees was advisedly excluded from the British possessions when the boundary was laid down in 1856, and he recommends that the arrangement then made should remain undisturbed, but that all those who have any claims to lands beyond the British frontier should be made to elect once for all to be subjects either of the Khan or of the British Government. With regard to these proposals, his Excellency in Council is of opinion that tribes situated within British territory, should in future be prohibited from occupying lands beyond the frontier, but that the status quo as regards tribes partly within and partly without the British boundary need not be disturbed.

5. As regards the proposed establishment of a post on the Shum plain, his Excellency is entirely opposed to any measure of the kind, and considers it needless to discuss the question after the adverse opinion expressed by the Secretary of State in his despatch No. 32, dated 24th March 1870, copies of which were forwarded to the Bombay and Punjab Governments.

nclusion his Excellency is of opinion that, as the disturbances in Khelat w to be satisfactorily settled, the time has arrived for carrying out the nts alluded to in the first paragraph of this resolution. But if there is to be chance of the measures being successful, it will be impossible to limit the nt to one year; the restriction upon the sanction to one year should therefore ed. His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General accordingly sanctions rly expenditure of Rupees 32,040, subject to revision of the scheme when tances and experience show such to be necessary.

r W. Merewether brings to notice the desirability of according sanction to an nditure applied for by him in the enlargement of the "Maksudawah" canal from more. It is understood that the project in question has been submitted to ernment in the Public Works Department, and a communication will accordingly addressed to that department, conveying the opinion of his Excellency that the ly execution of the project is highly desirable in a political point of view. It is the sh of his Excellency that authority may be given at a very early date to the ommissioner in Sind to make arrangements for the commencement of the work.

No. 83 of 1872.

Government of India, Foreign Department. Secret.

To His Grace the Duke of Argyll, K.T., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Duke, Fort William, the 20th December 1872.

In continuation of our despatch No. 44, dated the 24th of June 1872, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers* regarding Khelat affairs.

2. Your Grace has already been informed of the serious insurrection that broke out in Khelat early in the month of October 1871, and of the measures taken by the Commissioner in Sind, under our instructions, to bring about an amicable adjustment of the disputes between the Khan and his nobles which had culminated in this attempt to throw off the Khan's authority. The particulars of the settlement effected by Sir William Merewether, with our orders thereon, were reported in our despatch No. 44, dated the 24th of June last.

3. After their conference with Sir William Merewether at Jacobabad, the Sirdars proceeded to their homes for the purpose of fulfilling the engagements into which they had entered to restore the plundered property and return to their allegiance on the understanding that their estates would be restored to them. In consequence, however, of the circulation of a mischievous report, to the effect that the Naib of Mustoong had received instructions from his Highness the Khan to attack them, they became alarmed, dispersed without collecting the plundered property, and subsequently advanced the rumour of the intended attack on them as an excuse for not adhering to the promise they had given to make restitution to the merchants.

4. In the meantime difficulties had arisen on the Murree side. In the month of April last, Kuram Khan, Sumalanee, and Haibat Satakzai, chiefs of the Minguls, near Mustoong suddenly attacked and inflicted severe loss of life and property on a body of Muzzeranee Murrees owning allegiance to Sher Dil. Under the impression that this attack had been instigated by his Highness the Khan, Sher Dil retaliated by attacking and plundering a caravan on its way through the Bolan.

5. Affairs in Khelat again threatened to revert to a state of anarchy, and we found it necessary to remind the Khan that, under the treaty of 1854, we held him responsible for the safety of traffic, and to warn him that the payment of his subsidy of Rupees 50,000 would be suspended unless the property was recovered and compensation given for losses. Under the influence of evil advisers at his Court, however, the Khan at first refused to acknowledge his responsibility under the treaty for the doings of his subjects, and declined to compensate the merchants. His Highness, moreover, dismissed his faithful Minister, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and paid no attention to the friendly advice of our Agent, Major Harrison. Indeed his conduct became so unsatisfactory that we directed Major Harrison to return to British territory, unless there should be an immediate change in the policy and proceedings of the Khan. This threatened withdrawal of British support had the desired effect, and the Khan ultimately dismissed his evil advisers, reinstated Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and entered into a written agreeme[illegible] he promised to abide by his treaty engagement with the British Government a[illegible] compensation to the merchants.

6. During his recent tour the Viceroy met the Khan of Khelat and so[illegible] principal Sirdars at Sukkur on the Indus. A memorandum of what passed at [illegible] view accompanies this despatch. We are not without hope that the meeting bet[illegible] Excellency and the Khan will be productive of good, and contribute towa[illegible] permanence of the arrangements which have been brought about by the good ju[illegible] and firmness of Sir William Merewether and Major Harrison.

7. Your Grace will observe that we have now sanctioned the arrangements fo[illegible] entertainment of some Murree and Boogtee levies on the Sind and Dera Ghazee I[illegible] frontier which were approved of last year, but were held in abeyance in consequenc[illegible] the recent disturbances in Khelat.

No. 2432P., dated Fort William, 28th December 1872.

From Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

In the course of the voluminous correspondence regarding the recent disturbances in Khelat, the inconvenience and injury to the public interests which arose from the different views of policy entertained by the Commissioner in Sind and the Political Agent in Khelat on the one hand, and by Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent of the Sind Frontier, on the other, were the subject of frequent representations by the Government of Bombay to the Government of India. I am to refer you more especially to the telegram of his Excellency the Governor of 18th March 1872, and the Viceroy's reply of the same date. So serious were the embarrassments arising from this state of things that the Governor-General in Council authorised the Government of Bombay to remove Colonel Phayre from Jacobabad on leave, and by recall, if he should refuse leave. Colonel Phayre accordingly proceeded on leave on 20th March 1872, and it is understood by his Excellency the Governor-General in Council that he has now returned to India.

2. The views of Sir William Merewether as to the policy to be pursued in the conduct of the political relations with Khelat have met with the full approval of the Government of Bombay and also of the Government of India in the letters noted in the margin. Moreover his Excellency the Viceroy, at the interview which he had with the Khan at Sukkur, informed his Highness that Sir William Merewether possessed the entire confidence of his Excellency, and that his proceedings were approved and confirmed by the Government of India.

No. 1214P., dated 30th May 1872.
No. 1893P., dated 5th September 1872.
No. 53C.P., dated 10th November 1872.

3. Under these circumstances, and bearing in mind the very serious embarrassments already caused by the conflict of policy between Colonel Phayre and the Commissioner in Sind, and the fact that the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars, who were recently in rebellion, are fully aware of the differences of opinion and action which led to those evil results, and which are believed to have contributed considerably to the difficulties in the way of a satisfactory settlement of the disputes between the Khan and his Sirdars, his Excellency in Council is of opinion that it is not advisable in the interests of the public service that Colonel Phayre should resume the Office of Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier.

4. His Excellency the Governor-General in Council accordingly requests that Colonel Phayre may be provided with employment in some other suitable post under the Bombay Government, or, if such be not available, that his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council will place that officer's services at the disposal of the Military Department.

5. I am to add that his Excellency the Governor-General in Council has come to the above determination with no wish to make any unfavourable reflections upon Colonel Phayre, and without reference to a correspondence which has taken place with regard to certain alleged frauds at Jacobabad, but solely from the considerations already stated, and a conviction that is impossible satisfactorily to conduct political relations with Khelat through an officer whose views of policy and action are much at variance with those of his immediate superiors and of the Government of India.

* No. 115.

Enclosure in No. 118.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for week ending 23rd September 1872.

With his Highness the Khan's consent Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed wrote as follows to Sirdar Azaad Khan :—

You have written to me regarding making arrangements for you. I have represented the matter to his Highness, and now inform you that the subject cannot be discussed without your being present.

His Highness the Khan and Major Harrison will shortly leave for Kutchee, and it would be a good thing for you to meet them at Sohrab; if time will not permit, you had better defer the visit until their return to Khorasan. Rest satisfied and write to me of your welfare.

With his Highness' approval I wrote to Sirdar Azaad Khan that owing to recent complications I had not thought it advisable to answer his letter; if, however, he was anxious to make Anjani or Treaty, a favourable opportunity would occur of visiting his Highness at Sohrab when en route to Kutchee, or on his return to Khelat.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed also wrote to Sirdar Azaad Khan stating that recent misunderstandings had been settled, and his Highness the Khan, Major Harrison, and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed were on good terms, and that if he, Azaad Khan, had anything to settle, or request to make, he had better meet his Highness at Sohrab. Other circumstances he would learn from Major Harrison and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's letters.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed informs me that the following arrangements will in all probability be adopted by his Highness in connexion with the provinces of Mekran and Lus Beyla. With reference to the former, Sirdar Faquir Mahomed, Bezonjao, to return to Kedj, and Naib Ali Jan transferred to Punchgoor; and as regards the latter province, Ali Khan, Jamote, is to be told, through Sirdar Noordeen, that he has the option of withdrawing quietly to make way for his Highness' representative, or a force will be sent to compel him to do so. As the presence of regular troops may cause dissatisfaction, it is under contemplation to place this Province in charge of the Bezonjaos.

His Highness the Khan, at the request of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, has reinstated Darogah Atta Mahomed as Naib of Khelat and Gundava.

Naib Abdul Rahman writes that the Samalanis have sought safety in Shorawak and amongst the Kakars, and that it will be difficult to recapture them. He had, however, sent Kutab Khan, Satakzai, to the Kakars to induce them to break their treaty with the Samalanis.

Sirdar Sarfaraz Khan, Sanjrani, of Chaga, writes to his Highness the Khan :—

You are the master of my life and property. The Seistanis night and day devastate the whole country. My districts are dependent on rain for cultivation. By your prosperity I remain here. The Seistanis plunder Shorawak, Nushky, and Kharan, and I get the credit of having done it—1st, food is not procurable in my country; 2nd, the Seistanis also plunder me; 3rd, I am falsely acccused by the Barichis, Mingul, and others of inciting the Seistanis to plunder them. If your Highness will kindly give me food, I shall remain contented; if you do not, show me this kindness—please protect me from the accusations and enmity of the above people, I shall then be able to remain in my country. If any one accuses me of any fault in your Durbar, don't believe them. Whenever the Seistanis are on a plundering expedition I give timely information to the Minguls at Nushky; they therefore falsely accuse me. Kindly write to the people at Shorawak and the Barichis to abstain from all hostilities against me. Being helpless I was obliged to make my salams to the Persians. I would come and make my salam to you; but the Seistanis and Persians never cease plundering and raiding my country. I have sent my two sons, Mahomed Shah and Pussand, to visit you and perform any service that may be required of them either in Khelat or Kutchee.

Meer Pussand, Amirzai, who lives at Bandarana Hussinabad, instigates the Seistanis to attack Nushky and then puts the blame on me. Inquire from the Tokeys, of Chaga, and those who live in the hills, as also from Imam Khan and Kamal Khan, of Rodbar, whether I am to blame in any way, and if they say anything against me, do what you think advisable. With your friendship I am not afraid of the Seistanis. Dated 3rd Rujub=7th September.

It being the general wish of the Sirdars and other people of influence that his Highness' reconciliation to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed should be publicly notified by the presentation of a suitable khillut, I suggested this course to his Highness which he at once adopted. On Thursday evening I attended the Khan's Durbar with Captain Humfrey and Dr. Bowman; and in presence of a large assembly his Highness presented Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed with the usual Wuzeer's khillut, consisting of one horse with handsome silver bridle and trappings, Cashmere shawl, kinkab kambarband, embroidered lungi, and gold mounted dagger.

Shukur Khan is at Mustung, but the Moonshees have not yet left Khelat. When visiting his Highness on Tuesday next, I intended reminding him that delaying my departure was on the express stipulation that these men should at once leave for Bagh. I also intend to urge his Highness to give me the written guarantee, to which allusion was made in my letter No. 127 of the 16th September.

Enclosure 1 in No. 119.

Diary, No. 34 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 29th September 1872.

THE sons of the Chaga Chief, Sarfaraz Khan, Mahomed Shah and Meah Pussand, visited me on Saturday, the 28th, and handed me over a letter from their father, substance of which was, that he was a servant of the English Government and his Highness the Khan, and as the whole of Seistan was under Persian rule, he trusted that protection would be granted to him against Persian oppression.

2. Sirdar Alum Khan, Sakshani, and Pur Dil Khan, Mingul, residents of Nushky, left Shorawak on receipt of a letter from Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and are now at Khelat. Sirdar Abdul Rahman, Zaggar Mingul, accompanied them, and there is every prospect of affairs being quietly settled at Nushky.

3. Sirdar Abdul Rahman and Pur Dil Khan paid me a friendly visit.

4. Daroga Attah Mahomed has appointed Shafi Mahomed, Mingul, Janeshin of Gundava.

5. Sirdar Azaad Khan writes to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that his Highness' Naib had attacked Gaorjak in the Rakshani District, carried off all the dates, five flocks of goats, ready money, and other property, and killed a connection of his, Dost Mahomed.

6. Azaad Khan states that having confidence in the English Government and respecting Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's wishes, he has remained quiet at Kharan, and therefore hopes efforts will be made to induce his Highness the Khan to cause the above property to be returned or compensation given for the same.

7. The Naib of Dadar writes, a sepoy of Your Highness, Rahim Dad, met the Samalani Minguls at Seriab and Mach, where they had taken up positions; they told him they were in rebellion against your Highness.

8. On Wednesday, the 26th, Moonshees Saleh Mahomed and Gul Mahomed left Khelat for Kutchee,

9. His Highness has nearly concluded his marching arrangements and will probably start on the 4th or 5th proximo.

Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 2 in No. 119.

Diary No. 35 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 5th October 1872.

WITH the view of making arrangement for safe transit in the Bolan, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed wrote to Sirdar Nawab Khan, Dinarzai, to bring Shere Dil, Mazarani, with him to Khelat, Some days previous to the receipt of this letter Shere Dil had proceeded to the Tudri hills near Kahim, consequent on the delay that would have ensued in summoning him, Nawab Khan and the Shahgassee recommended his Highness to entrust these duties for a time to Kutab Khan, Satakzai Koord, a great friend of Shere Dil's. This his Highness agreed to, and it is hoped that on reaching Kutchee arrangements may be made to induce the Mazaranis and Koords to take joint charge of the Bolan. "To afford further security to merchants" Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has persuaded his Highness to restore to the Dunimars and Kakars a small annual allowance of money and grain that had been discontinued for some years. Abdul Latiff, the Naib of Quettah, now at Khelat, has done his utmost to thwart these arrangements; both he and the Mustung Naib, Abdul Rahman, are annoyed with his Highness for dismissing Shukur Khan and the Moonshees, and threaten to resign their appointments; having been asked my advice by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, I told him that he was at liberty to tell his Highness that in my opinion accepting their resignation would benefit him and all his subjects.

Naib Ali Jan complains that disaffection is kept up in Mekran by Sirdar Bhai Khan's wife, a daughter of Sirdar Faquir Mahomed; arrangements alluded to in diary No. 33 will doubtless put an end to these complications.

Sirdar Khan Mahomed, Kambrani, has been reappointed his Highness' Naib at Punchgoor.

Darogah Atta Mahomed and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed are cordially assisting Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and nothing is wanting to ensure success except his Highness' honest and sincere support. Since the departure of those who biassed his Highness with their evil counsels, he has acted more sensibly, and would, I feel sure, have cordially accepted present arrangements had it not been for the unfortunate presence of the Naibs of Mustung and Quettah; as it is, he has given a written guarantee binding himself to carry out his treaty arrangements, and to adopt the advice given him by the Government of Bombay through the Commissioner in Sind. His Highness' intention of going to Kutchee, being a sudden resolve, some difficulty has occurred in procuring carriage. All necessary arrangements will be concluded in the course of three or four days.

Sirdar Azaad Khan has written to say that he cannot visit his Highness at Sohrab without his Highness the Ameer's permission, and that no necessity exists for such visit unless his Highness restores his stores and country.

Memo. No. 987, dated Indus, 8th November 1872.

WITH reference to paragraph 1 of the Khelat Diary for the week ending 29th September 1872, the Political Superindent, Upper Sind Frontier, is requested to inform the Chaga Chief, Sarfaraz Khan, through the Political Agent, Khelat, that if he wishes for safety and immunity from attack, he should prevent his people from proceeding to plunder in Persian territory, as has lately been the case.

2. Major Harrison should be called upon to report whether there is any truth in the statement made by Sirdar Azaad Khan, referred to in paragraph 5, that his Highness' Naib had attacked Gaorjak in the Rakshani District and carried off plunder therefrom.

3. Further report is awaited in regard to the Samalani Minguls at Seriab and Mach, mentioned in paragraph 7.

Diary No. 36, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 15th October 1872.

LEFT Khelat with his Highness the Khan on the 7th, reached Sohrab on the 9th, "halted one day," arrived at Pifseebent on the 13th, and calculate upon reaching Gundava about the 24th.

Fifteen hundred Murrees attacked the Brahooee tribes of Umrenis, Hafsoonis, and Lehris en route to Kutchee, at the bottom of the Bolan Pass, at a place called Choki. Thirty Brahooees and six Murrees were killed, and the former plundered of all their property except two camels and two flocks of sheep.

2. This is an instance of how very uncertain the Murrees are to deal with, and how necessary it is that they should have firm control exercised over them, considering that the question of their previous misconduct being condoned is now under consideration, their present action is most impertinent.

Dated Paniwan, 21st October 1872.

Diary No. 37 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 21st October 1872.

THE only event of the week was Sirdar Faquir Mahomed Bezonjao having joined his Highness' camp with his eldest son, Meah Kaira, a halt was made at Pashtkhana and Jah, with the view of making arrangements regarding Kedj and Mekran. On the evening of the 20th it was reported to me that Sirdar Faquir Mahomed had agreed to resume his duties as Naib of Kedj. On the morning of the 21st his Highness presented the Sirdar and his son with suitable khilluts, and I also gave the former a kinkab and embroidered lungi. Sirdar Faquir Mahomed will shortly start for Mekran.

Consequent on my having sent his Highness the Khan a Persian translation of the Commissioner in Sind's letter, No. 933, he has written to say that Shukur Khan and Moonshees Saleh Mahomed and Gul Mahomed will be handed over to the British Government to live in English territory.

His Highness the Khan will arrive at Gundava, on the 25th instant.

Dated Kimda, 29th October 1872.

Diary No. 38 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 29th October 1872.

SHUKUR KHAN late Commandant of his Highness' regiments, and one of the most active in late disturbances in Khelat, has sought safety in Afghan territory, and was last seen at Sher Khod. Should he be allowed to remain at Peshin or Candahar he will be engaged in intrigues and give endless trouble. I would therefore suggest that his Highness the Ameer might be asked to deport him into British territory.

Moonshees Saleh Mahomed and Gul Mahomed are now in Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's charge, and accompany his Highness to Jacobabad. His Highness having asked me whether the above Moonshees might be allowed to visit him, I pointed out that such a course would be inconsistent, and communication with them far from desirable.

Shere Dil, Mazarani, aided by other Murrees, waylaid certain Brahooees en route to Kutchi, as reported in a previous diary. The Brahooees have assembled a force of 500 to retaliate, but have consented to defer their movements until after his Highness' return from Jacobabad.

Enclosure in No. 121.

Dated Gundava, 19th November 1872.

Diary, No. 39 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 19th November 1872.

ON the morning of the 11th, at Mahmul, Sirdar Sohrab Khan, Dhoombkee, informed me that during his absence from Lehri certain Dhoombkees, Boogtees, and Khybaris had proceeded against Fateh Khan, Boogtee, and Beluch Khan, Shirani Murree, both of whom had quarrelled with respective Sirdars of their tribe, Guzzun and Gulam Murteza, and carried off some sheep belonging to the Shiranis; no loss of life ensued on either side. Sirdar Sohrab Khan also stated that he had been asked by Gulam Murteza to attack Fateh Khan and Beluch Khan, but had declined to do so until he had ascertained the wishes of his Highness the Khan on the subject.

In diary No. 38 it was reported that the Brahooees had assembled with the view of retaliating on Shere Dil and the Murrees for having attacked and plundered them as they were en route to Kutchee, but had consented to defer their movements until his Highness' return from Jacobabad; instead of so doing they proceeded to Mundai. The Murrees hearing of this movement had driven the major part of their flocks further into the hills, and collected a force to oppose the Brahooees; a fight ensued, in which the Murrees were defeated, and 30 or 40 of their number killed. The Brahooees plundered about 200 sheep, a few bullocks and camels, and fifty mares; amongst the latter were several mares that had been plundered from the Brahooees.

His Highness the Khan is going to station two companies of infantry at Lehri. A strong detachment is also to be stationed at Kirta, in the Bolan, for the protection of kafilas.

His Highness the Khan re-entered Gundava on the 15th, and talks of going to Bagh after the Ramzan.

Enclosure in No. 122.

Dated Gundava, 25th November 1872.

Diary No. 40 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 25th November 1872.

Naib Abdul Aziz, who was stationed for some months at Mustung to assist the Sarawanis in collecting property plundered in the Bolan at the latter end of last year, has marched through the Bolan with a force, and is now stationed at Dadar. The Shahgassee, by direction of his Highness the Khan, wrote to the above Naib that, as the arrangements made by the Brahooees to pay Rupees 20,000 in two monthly instalments had failed, he is to exact restitution from those who were actually engaged in plundering the kafila. Naib Abdul Aziz writes that Yar Mahomed, after accompanying his Highness the Khan to Jacobabad and Sukkur, rejoined his father, Sirdar Alla Dina, and publicly announced that the British Government intended to compensate the merchants for $\frac{1}{3}$rd of their losses, his Highness the Khan $\frac{1}{3}$rd, and that they, the Brahooees, were only to be held responsible for the remaining $\frac{1}{3}$rd. Sirdar Alla Dina Koord, immediately after his son's return, moved his camp to Mishkab, and intends, so Naib Abdul Aziz says, to seek safety in Seebee or the adjacent hills if coercive measures are attempted. The Bungulzais are the only tribe who are siding with Alla Dina and refuse to give up the plunder.

I spoke to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in presence of Dr. Bowman regarding Yar Mahomed's statements, and Alla Dina's conduct in connexion with the former. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed stated that his only wish was to carry out what the chiefs had engaged to do at Jacobabad, and that he had neither directly or indirectly given anyone reason to suppose such arrangements were under contemplation as announced by Yar Mahomed. Referring to Sirdar Alla Dina Koord, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed stated he regretted not having severed from Alla Dina and his family as recommended by the Commissioner in Sind and myself, and that he had screened him for the past eight months, hoping a feeling of honour would induce him to act up to his engagements. Now, however, that he was behaving like a common thief, he begged it to be understood he had severed all connexion with Alla Dina, and hoped his Highness would punish him like any ordinary robber or thief.

I pointed out to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that if Bakhtawar Khan of Seebee allowed Alla Dina and his family safe asylum, his Highness the Ameer would in all probability hold him responsible for recovering the merchants' property. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed felt convinced Alla Dina would meet with no encouragement from Bakhtawar Khan, but to ensure such being the case wrote to the latter on the subject. The Sirdar thinks that Alla Dina and those who accompany him may find shelter with the Kajjacks.

It was reported to me on leaving Jacobabad that Naib Mahomed Khan had been intriguing with Yar Mahomed and other Sarawanis, and tried to induce them to believe it was against their interest to give up the merchants' property. The Nawab's conduct in connexion with matters past and present has been reported on officially.

On Thursday, the 21st, his Highness received letters of congratulation from his sons from Khelat, Darogah Atta Mahomed and others, regarding the honourable reception he had received at the hands of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

Darogah Atta Mahomed wrote me a few lines, the only Khelat news was that the Seistanis had raided on a small scale close to Nushky, carried off a few sheep, and killed two or three men. The Minguls and Rakshanis went in pursuit, but did not come up with the Seistani plunderers.

On the 21st November a telegram arrived at Jacobabad for his Highness the Khan from Sirdar Faquir Mahomed:—"Respectfully inform you I have arrived at Kolwah and expect to reach Kedj in three days. Have met Captain Miles here. The country is quiet. Moola Rehmut-ool-la sends his salam."

On Friday, the 22nd, a detachment of 200 infantry and one hundred cavalry marched on Lehri. Arrangements are now being made to station 400 infantry and 100 cavalry at Kirta.

Enclosure in No. 124.

Diary, No. 41, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 1st December 1872.

On Tuesday morning I handed over to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, for transmission to his Highness the Khan, a carefully executed translation of the conversation held at a private interview between his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India and his Highness the Khan of Khelat at Sukkur on Tuesday, the 5th November 1872. On the afternoon of the same day, on visiting his Highness, I alluded to the above translation, and hoped that he, the Khan, would lose no time in making arrangements for the safe transit of kafilas through the Bolan, suggesting at the same time that no good results would ensue unless the Naibs at Quettah and Dadar were really good men and would cordially co-operate with each other. My reason for making this remark was, that the Naib at Dadar was formerly a farrier in his Highness' cavalry, and has no influence whatever. His Highness the Khan received this advice, as far as I could judge, in a friendly spirit, but in replying to the same said he had now no authority in the country, and that there was no one fit to be Naib of any place; further that I and the Shahgassee * might do what we liked, and he would agree to any arrangements we might make. Consequent on this reply I reminded his Highness what his Excellency the Viceroy had said about not interfering with his authority so long as peace was maintained on the border and treaty arrangements carried out, and that I must, therefore, decline any interference except friendly advice, but would urge him to take an interest in making such arrangements as would maintain peace and quietness in his country.

* This is the greatest difficulty the Political Agent had in Khelat will have to meet henceforth. The interference which has been forced on us by the events of the last few years, which was always avoided as much as possible, must now occur more often, and will render a ruler of the Khan's disposition and temper captious and irritable, and the Political Agent will always have to most carefully guard against interference being too often excited. On the present occasion Major Harrison met the case very judiciously.

Sirdar Alla Dina Koord has written to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. In the former letter he declines to pay up what he agreed to, wishes to rediscuss the question. To the Shahgassee, Alla Dina has had the impertinence to write that the Commissioner in Sind promised them assistance to settle the merchants' claims, and that as it had not been given, he would not pay his share, which he thought excessive. I told Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that as his Highness had given the British Government a written guarantee to settle the merchants' claims at an early date, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed had directed Naib Abdool Aziz to use force if stolen property was not restored by the Eed. I strongly advised Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the Sarawan chiefs to leave Alla Dina to his fate; they acknowledged that he was worthy of punishment, but asked if matters could not be settled by confiscating his land and mortgaging it for sufficient to meet the demands against him. I referred him to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and concluded by informing every one present I could no longer look upon Alla Dina or his sons as people of rank or respectability, and that in future they would never be allowed into my Camp or Durbar.

Syud Shere Dil, a resident of Quettah, in Khelat territory, alluded to in Cabul Diary for the week ending 26th September, visited me a few days ago; he claims Rupees 7,500 as compensation for losses sustained in the Bolan, but I should be sorry to admit the claim if I were his Highness without very satisfactory evidence. He admits that Rupees 1,000 for four kinkabs is a rough statement of value, as he was never informed of their actual price, and that the balance Rupees 6,500 was in cash. Knowing that merchants only carry sufficient money for actual expenses, I asked him whether he and the other horse dealers did not feel nervous at having to carry so much coin through dangerous passes; not understanding the drift of my question, he at once replied that neither he nor any other horse dealer ever thought of carrying money between Bangalore and Cabul, as they always purchased Hoondees.

His Highness when visiting me on Friday afternoon, stated that for some time past he had thought of making Abdul Latif Naib of Dadar, as well as of Quettah, but would, as a temporary measure, appoint Naib Abdul Aziz to the former place, who would arrange that his son, Faquir Mahomed, should be in charge of the detachment which started a few days ago for Kirta in the Bolan Pass.

No. 22 P., dated Fort William, 4th January 1873.

From Officiating Under-Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

WITH reference to your letter No. 6436, dated the 6th of November 1872, announcing a settlement of the recent difficulties in Khelat, I am directed to request that the Commissioner in Sind may be called on to submit, for the information of the Government of India, a special report showing, 1st, what has been done by the Khan towards recovering the property of the merchants plundered in the Bolan and paying their compensation; and, 2ndly, what remains to be done to compensate the merchants in full for their losses.

No. 126.

Substance of Letter from Afghan Commissioner to Officiating Under-Secretary, dated 23rd Ramzan, 1289 A. H.

REFERRING to the interview with his Excellency at Poona, and to the statement then made to him that the Khan of Khelat had been required to restore or give compensation for the whole of the property plundered from Afghan subjects, states the merchants are in Shikarpoor, and inquires to what authority they should apply for restoration of the plundered property. Asks that a letter to the Political Agent, Khelat, may be given to him (the Commissioner) in order that he may send it to the merchants, who, armed with this letter, may be enabled to apply to the Political Agent for restoration of their property.

Requests also, if it be deemed advisable, that the subject of the plundered property may be mentioned to the Ameer.

No. 49, dated Camp, 11th January 1873.

From Officiating Secretary to the Government of Punjab, to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed to forward, for the information of the Supreme Government, copy of letter No. 270, dated 20th December 1872, from the Commissioner of the Derajat Division, with annexures, reporting the result of negotiations between Shere Dil Mazarani, and his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

Enclosure 1 in No. 127.

No. 270, dated 20th December 1872.

From Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, to Officiating Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

I HAVE the honour to submit, for his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's information, copy of a letter No. 606, of the 14th instant, giving cover to translations of two letters from the Murree chief, describing the result of negotiations between Shere Dil, Mazarani, and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, as recently called for by you.

Enclosure 2 in No. 127.

No. 606, dated 14th December 1872.

From Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, to Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

IN reply to your No. 455, of 23rd November 1872, calling upon me to report, for the information of Government, the results of the negotiations between the Shere Dil, Chief of the Mazarani section of the Murree clan, and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, I have the honour to submit translations of two letters received from the Murree Tomandar, which give the required information.

Enclosure 3 in No. 127.

TRANSLATION of a Report of Ghuzzun Kan, Murree Tomandar.

STATES that he met Shere Dil, Mazarani Murree, at Chakar Thang, and inquired from him of the arrangements come to between himself and the Khan of Khelat. He replied that, according to the orders of the Khan, he went to pay him his respects, who asked him why he had removed from Khelat territory, and that he had replied that he had only resided in the Khorasan territory on the strength of the Khan's friendship; but that when he was injured by the Brahooees and represented his grievances to his Highness, he met with no redress, and therefore he had quitted his Highness' territories. The Khan then inquired under what conditions he would again return, to which he had replied, that as his son and five men of his tribe had been killed by the Brahooees, that the redress he looked for was the blowing away from guns of six men of the Brahooee tribe, and the restitution of the whole of the property, of which himself and tribe had been plundered, and that upon these conditions being fulfilled he would be willing to return. The Khan first agreed to these conditions, and sent for six Brahooees, with the intention of having them dealt with in accordance with Shere Dil's wishes, but previous to carrying his intention into execution, the Khan had sent for his Wuzeer, Shahgassee, who on being consulted, opposed the sacrifice of the lives of the six Brahooees, stating that if his Highness the Khan were afraid of Shere Dil's vengeance, he would take upon himself to meet him in the field; but to facilitate an amicable adjustment of the matter, he suggested that money compensation be made to Shere Dil for the lives of his son and five clansmen and for the property of which himself and tribe had been plundered. The Khan accepted his Wuzeer's advice and did not carry out the execution of the six Brahooees, but caused an agreement to be drawn up, which he signed himself and to which he also obtained the signature of Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, by which he agreed to pay Shere Dil within 15 days the under-mentioned compensation, viz.:—

Blood-money for the lives of the six Mazaranis, at Rupees 600 per life - - - - - - - -	3,600	0	0
Value of 14,000 sheep and goats plundered, at Rs. 2 each -	28,000	0	0
Ditto 400 donkeys ditto at Rs. 10 each -	4,000	0	0

The Khan then sent a body of 40 sowars with the six released Brahooees into the Mingul country with orders to collect from the tribe the amount of compensation which he had agreed to pay Shere Dil, but on the sowars making the demand for the money, the tribe refused to furnished it and drove them out of their country. The Khan on being informed of this refusal on the part of the Minguls wrote to Shere Dil, informing him that he was powerless to grant him the redress asked for, and that he (Shere Dil) was at liberty to take such measures for obtaining redress for himself as he might think necessary. On receipt of this letter from the Khan, Shere Dil collected a large force and attacked Derah Shahwani, killing 69 of the Brahooees and carrying away great booty, the loss on his own side being three Mazaranis killed and 30 wounded. Subsequent to this Shere Dil had made three more raids into the Bolan country, and had carried off three large herds of sheep and goats, which on being divided among his followers 60 fell to the share of each man. Shere Dil was prepared to make still further raids. He had stated his willingness to present himself before Captain Sandeman if sent for. Shere Dil and his followers are at present residing at Kot Mundai.

Enclosure 4 in No. 127.

TRANSLATION of a Report of Ghuzzun Khan, Murree Tomandar.

His Highness the Khan of Khelat is now at Bagh, and it is rumoured that he is collecting a force to fight the Murrees. The Brahoees are also with the Khan. A large force of Minguls and Brahooees have plundered a Shirani Murree village. The Murrees pursued and fought with them, but were beaten and retreated; three Murrees were killed and 20 wounded. They also lost 50 mares which the Brahooees took. The plundered property was not distributed, but each man took what he could get. The share of the kafila plundered by the Brahooees is estimated at Rupees 27,000. The Brahooees first refused paying, but have now agreed to do so. The Khan has promised to restore their jaghires to them.

Enclosure in No. 119.

Diary No. 43 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 14th December 1872.

His Highness the Khan was to have left for Bagh on Friday, the 13th, but wishes the march deferred until after the 23rd, as a marriage takes place on the latter date at Ganjam, four miles from Gundava, between Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's eldest son and a daughter of the late Jalawan Chief, Taj Mahomed. I have urged that, as he has been here more than a month, it would be better to proceed at once to Bagh, and lose no further time in adjusting merchants' claims.

Letters from the Zaggar Mingul Chief, Sirdar Abdul Rahman, reported raids on Nushky, and that his people would be obliged to acknowledge Persian supremacy if his Highness did not make arrangements for them on his return. Copies of letters were forwarded at once to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

Enclosure in No. 130.

Diary No. 44 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 21st December 1872.

NAIB ABDUL AZIZ has written to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed stating that Piara Murree Tangany had visited him, requested employment, and was prepared to work with Bakhtiar and Kotah. His services, however, had been declined, and intimation given that in case of any improper conduct on his part, he, the Naib, would punish him. Shere Dil, Mazarani, also wrote to Naib Abdul Aziz that he was prepared to undertake any duty that he might he entrusted with, but was told that, though he had been forgiven previous misconduct, he had again acted so badly that if he came to Dadar, he would be handed over to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, who would decide what was to be done with him.

Merchants from Candahar have written to Abdul Latif, Naib of Quettah, not to allow any kafilas to proceed by the Bolan Pass unless satisfactory arrangements have been made by the British Government and his Highness the Khan with the Murree tribe.

Sirdar Azaad Khan, of Kharan, writes to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed :—"His Highness "the Khan has written to the Punchgoor Chief, Ghazi Khan, as also the Janishin to "turn my cousin, Ibrahim Khan, and sister out of the fort of Khudabudan. If any "attempt of the kind is made, I will raid Punchgoor." Sirdar Azaad Khan also mentioned that if his Highness the Khan had given the assistance he suggested, Kharan, Shorawak, and Nushky could have kept the Seistanis in check. Nothing, however, had been done, and thirty Seistanis had been able to do a great deal of mischief, as his Highness' 50 sowars were afraid to face them.

A general earthquake was experienced in Kutchee on the 15th at about half-past 8 p.m., the shock being transitory towards the west, but continuous in the east at Gundava and adjacent villages. The shock, though severe, only lasted two minutes or so. Several houses fell down, and the walls of his Highness' residence cracked in every direction. At Lehri and neighbouring villages the earth quaked nearly the whole night. The fortifications at the above-named place fell down, and the whole town became a wreck. 150 Hindos and 20 Mahomedans were killed, several wounded, and great loss of cattle and property. In Iccar 50 residents were killed and several wounded.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan has pointed out to his Highness that no supplies are now procurable for his troops, and begs that provision may be made for them. He also solicits a further reinforcement, as they are at the mercy of the Murrees now that the fort has fallen down.

His Highness the Khan sent a detachment of 40 men on the 19th instant to Mahmul to receive charge of 139 Khorasanis deported from British territory. His Highness left Gundava on the same date for Bagh.

Enclosure in No. 131.

Diary No. 45 of 1872, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 28th December 1872.

Naib Abdul Aziz, of Dadar, writes to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed that Shere Dil, Mazarani Murree, through the influence of Bibi Said Ma Bibi, had visited him, stating he withdrew all claims for blood-money, and left his Highness the Khan to realize for his own benefit any fine that might be inflicted, as the Samalanis were his (" Shere Dil's ") enemies. Shere Dil further stated the only road open for him was to perform any duty that might be assigned to him by his Highness the Khan and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and that he was prepared to remain with his son either at Dadar or Kirta, but could not summon his tribe from the hills, until his Highness the Khan had punished Raho Samalani for the murder of his son, and made satisfactory arrangements for the Mazaranis. Shere Dil also requests that his Highness will exact a guarantee from the Mahomed Shai and Shawanis not to molest him.

Abdul Aziz, in reference to the above, requests that the Shahgassee will get his Highness to write as follows:—" I am aware of your circumstances through Naib Abdul Azeez; rest assured that you will not be molested by any Brahooee; should they do so, I ('the Khan') will punish them."

Mahomed Yar, commanding troops, after visiting his Highness at Gundava, informed me that his Highness' instructions were to attack and plunder Baho wherever he might be found should opportunity occur. I will obey these orders.

I am busy returning the wool that was plundered and sold to bunias by the Brahooees.

If his Highness the Khan will give me his support, I will make such arrangements in the Bolan that it will be as safe as any bazar.

I am anxiously awaiting replies to my letters to your address.

Mahomed Yar, Captain, commanding troops at Dadar, writes to his Highness that Shere Dil, Mazarani, through fear of the Sarawans, arrived at night through the assistance of Bibi Ma Bibi; as far as I can learn Baho and the Samalanis are in the neighbourhood of Shorun and Sanch; Karim Khan with his branch of the Samalanis are at Nooshky; Shere Dil has visited the Naibs; withdrawn all claims for compensation; and wants terms made for him with the Sarawans. The Naib sent for Jundar Shawani and others, but they said they must first consult their Sirdar and would then give an answer. The Murrees visit the Naibs, who have entertained some of them. Your Highness should instruct the Brahooees to abstain from further hostilities; for this reason that the Anjam should be complete and satisfactory as the Murrees have withdrawn their claims.

Sirdar Alla Dina Koord arrived here on the 24th and wished to visit me, but I declined to receive him until he had returned all stolen property in his possession.

Mahomed Azum, Mahomed Akrum, Noor Mahomed, and others have written to me from Dadar, saying that Naib Abdul Aziz and his son, Faquir Mahomed, are giving them every assistance, and request me to aid them in recovering the wool that was taken into British territory.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan Dhoombkee visited his Highness the Khan and solicited assistance to rebuild the fort, as also that some abatement in revenue and taxes should be granted to compensate people for losses sustained through the earthquake. His Highness having declined to give any kind of assistance, the Dhoombkee chief returned to Lehri far from being satisfied at his Highness' views on the subject.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed rejoined his Highness' camp on Thursday, and his son returned with his bride to Seebee.

The information given by the Boogtee Tomundar to Captain Sandeman shows how facts may be misrepresented by these people, and how such statements might mislead. The real state of the case is that Moolla Mahomed Raisani is now cordially acting with the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed in working for the best interests of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, not against the latter. The complexion given by the Boogtee Chief probably arose from reports of differences between the Khan and his Wuzeer, but the latter only does his best for his master.

Diary No. 1 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 4th January 1873.

As far as can be judged, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the Sarawan chiefs are now exerting themselves in recovering the property plundered from merchants at the latter end of 1871.

Shere Dil, Mazarini, arrived with the Dadar Said on Wednesday.

Captain Marsh, of the 18th Bengal Cavalry, arrived at Dadar on the 27th, reached Bagh on the 30th, and proceeded on the 1st instant to Sukkur viâ Rojan.

Naib Meer Khan Mahomed, Kumbrani of Punchgoor, writes to his Highness.

"I have received no answer to the letter I wrote on a former occasion. You have placed no force at my disposal, and the residents of Punchgoor will not assist me against Sirdar Azaad Khan's nephew, Ibrahim Khan Nowsherwani. If you think it will benefit you sacrificing my life to Ibrahim Khan, I will not hesitate on your sending a reply to this letter. The Belooch will not pay proper transit dues, only what they think fit. By next post I will send an account showing what has been realized. I have not been able to realize $\frac{1}{20}$th of what is due. What can be done in a large country like this with only ten sowars. The Mahomed Husenis who came here had a dispute about transit dues, cut off my slave's hand, and wounded a Kiahzai. Since your departure from Khelat the inhabitants of Punchgoor have formed other plans. Please recall me, I have committed no fault, and you decline answering my letters, why I cannot understand, for no revenue has been collected to embezzle if I had felt so inclined."

Sirdar Gaji Khan of Punchgoor to his Highness the Khan of Khelat:—

"I have committed no fault against your Highness, though on a former occasion you considered me responsible for the acts of my people which I had not power to restrain. I explained this to your Highness in a former letter, but received no answer. Since the arrival of your Naib I have worked night and day on your behalf. If you entrust me with any duty, I will perform the same; if you wish me to attend on you, I will come at once; on the other hand, if you don't require my services, tell me to leave your country, and I will do so, trusting to God and the Prophet to provide for me; under all circumstances, I shall be faithful and obedient."

By the same post complimentary letters were received by his Highness from Shah Beg Attah Mahomed, Mulazai, and Meer Morad.

Sirdar Syud Khan, Bamuzai, has arrived at Seebee to collect his Highness the Ameer's revenue.

On Friday afternoon, when his Highness visited me, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed suggested the following arrangements to put an end to recent feuds between the Sarawan Brahooees and the Murrees, viz., that as the Samalanis, a Brahooee tribe, aided by other Sarawans, had commenced the quarrel by raiding the Mazaranis, any retaliatory measures should be overlooked and condoned, and that the Mazaranis should forego what they were entitled to as blood money, or compensation for loss of property, as the losses they had inflicted exceeded those they had sustained.

It was also suggested that the punishment of the Samalanis was to be left in his Highness' hands.

On Saturday morning Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, with the Sarawan chiefs, visited me with the Shahgassee, and agreed to adopt the latter's suggestion regarding the Mazaranis, and to intimate the same to his Highness the Khan.

Judging from the conversation I had with the Brahooees, they are perfectly willing to give up raiding the Murrees, if any guarantee can be given that the latter tribe will not molest them.

Diary No. 2, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 11th January 1873.

A DONKEY kafila from Shikarpoor arrived at Bagh on the 8th; on the merchants requesting me to state whether or not they could proceed in safety through the Bolan, I told them as far as any one could judge the pass was safe, but that the responsibility of going by this route rested with them and his Highness the Khan.

One hundred and thirty-nine Khorasanis arrived under escort on the 2nd instant; they have petitioned his Highness to go to Beylah and return to their country viâ Bunder Abbas. As this was merely a scheme to get back into English territory, I advised his Highness to escort them as far as Quettah, and leave them to return to their country by one of the northern routes.

Imam Dad, Naib of Nushky, reports that Sirdar Azaad Khan sent one of his retainers, Eedu by name, to plunder in Seistan, and that he carried off considerable property, which, however, the Seistanis recovered before he got clear of their territory.

Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan writes to his Highness the Khan:—The Seistanis come monthly and raid Nushky; unfortunately the Rukshanis are not on good terms with me, on this account defensive powers are divided, as each person looks after his individual interest and protects the village he lives in. I wrote to the Barrichis, the latter collected 1,500 men and proceeded to raid Boso, at which place I joined them with thirty sowars, and made defensive arrangements with them as follows, viz., that in the event of any marauding Seistan force coming towards Shorawak and Nushky, we should both arm and rendezvous at Shah Ishmael's tomb; we have now scouts out to give us timely notice of the Seistanis' movements. One force had assembled, but hearing of the arrangements were dispersed. Sirdar Azaad Khan has returned from the Jalk boundary. About 200 Seistanis attacked the Safsoolis Bululis at Raig Shorawak; 18 of the latter were killed and three Barrichis. The Seistanis lost three men, but carried off a drove of camels.

IN continuation of the letter from this Office, No. 727, dated the 1st instant, I have the honour, by direction of his Excellency the Governor in Council, to forward for the information of the Government of India, the accompanying diary of the Political Agent at Khelat for the week ending 18th ultimo, received through the Commissioner in Sind under his endorsement No. 93, dated 31st idem.

Enclosure in No. 135.

Diary No. 3 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 18th January 1873.

Bagh, 18th January 1873.—Naib Abdul Azeez left with a detachment of cavalry early in the week to escort one or two kafilas that had arrived at Dadur. He has left his son, Fakeer Mahomed, at the latter place, and will remain himself at Kirta. Both father and son give every reasonable assurance that transit through the Bolan will be devoid of risk or danger. Two or three smaller kafilas have passed through Bagh en route to Dadur, and several camel-owners have gone up the pass with their camels to bring down wool and other articles of export belonging to buniasan d merchants in Quettah.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed left some days ago to visit his family at Seebee, but intends to return to Bagh shortly. Since his Highness the Khan's arrival at this place, about Rupees 11,000 have been collected for the merchants who were plundered by the Sarawanis.

Merchants plundered by the Murrees, are at Bagh, hoping something may be done for them. The recovery of their property appears to be hopeless, tea and other articles of no value to Murrees were wantonly wasted, and other merchandize, camels, donkeys, &c., appear to have been sold for nominal sums to people who cannot be traced.

A Moonshee of the Maharaja of Cashmere complained to me that his Highness the Khan had directed his officials to levy a tax on 120 cows he had purchased for the Maharaja, and that he, the Moonshee, had declined to pay the same. I explained to this individual that his Highness the Khan, being sovereign of the country, might consider the wholesale purchase of a valuable breed of cattle injurious to his interests, and therefore wish to discourage their exportation.

His Highness, I subsequently heard, had taken this view of the case, explaining that any person might buy four or five cows free of all restriction, but that wholesale purchases would be discouraged, or the breed of cattle would soon become extinct.

His Highness the Khan, when visiting me on Friday afternoon, was particularly anxious to know whether he would be invited to meet the Commissioner in Sind, or whether Sir William Merewether would visit him in Kutchee. He also made particular inquiries regarding the desert canal, and appeared to have realized how beneficial to him the carrying out of this project may be. In reply I told his Highness that I could not give him any information, but thought it just as likely as not, that the nonsensical talk at Gundava might cause the Commissioner in Sind to make some change in previous arrangements, and that as regards the canal, if the project was not undertaken, it would be most probably for the same reason that might cause the Commissioner to forego his intended visit. The object in replying as above was to let his Highness perceive that foolish talk is not so harmless as he imagines and may cause him regret and inconvenience.

Sirdar Abdool Rehman writes to his Highness the Khan—" A small force of Seistanis " killed two Jamaldini Zemindars at the Baghuk boundary. Naib Imdad and I went in " pursuit, and had a skirmish with them at the Jabar boundary, which resulted in their " defeat. Imdad behaved very well, and we should have done better had we had Sowars " instead of Zemindars. Please let Major Harrison know this, so that he may inform " the Commissioner in Sind, who will make some arrangements to protect us against the " Seistanis."

Early in the week it was reported that a raid had been made against the Murrees. So I asked Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to inquire who had originated this raid and to punish those who were to blame; from inquiry it appears that a man called Noze Boogtee Rahija informed Nawab Khan Gevund Buduzai that there were some Murree flocks close at hand, with only an old man to protect them. The Buduzais, 47 in number, were joined by two or three Dhoombkees, three or four Boogtees, a few Samalanis Minguls, and three or four Khybiris amongst the latter, Atibar Khan's son. These men, in all about 100, proceeded to the Ghori river, killed the one old man, and carried off 240 goats and seven bullocks, which they divided amongst themselves. The above party organised another raid against the Murrees and had got close to the hills, when a messenger arrived from Sirdar Sohrab Khan stating that raiding the Murrees had been strictly forbidden, upon which the party dispersed.

The Murrees, it is reported, raided the Raijah Boogtees at Sibri, carried off a flock of sheep and another of goats; being closely pursued they left the sheep and escaped with the goats.

From Commissioner in Sind to Governor and President in Council in Bombay.

IN accordance with Government Resolution, No. 420, of the 22nd ultimo, I have the honour to report that soon after his Highness the Khan returned to Gundava it was intimated to him that the Sarawan Brahooees of Mustung, who had been called upon to contribute Rupees 20,000 as their share of the property plundered from the kafilas, had failed to do so, orders were then issued by his Highness that restitution was to be at once exacted from those who were actually engaged in the plunder. Since the Khan's arrival at Bagh Rupees 11,000 have been collected from the Sarawans generally.

2. Alla Dina, the Khoord chief, who managed to possess himself of the greater part of the plunder, was required by his Highness the Khan to give it up, but he refused, and no steps have yet been taken to make him do so. This man is one of the worst characters in the whole of Beloochistan, and a most inveterate plunderer as the merchants all assert, and his brother Sirdars now admit. Major Harrison has very properly refused him admission to his camp or Durbar, until he has disgorged all the stolen goods in the possession of himself and tribe. His son, Yar Mahomed, accompanied his Highness the Khan to Sukkur, and on his return falsely gave out it had been decided the British Government would give one third of the compensation for the plunder, the Khan a second, and the Brahooees were only to pay the third.

3. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani has exerted himself well, and is still doing his best to recover the property stolen; but this is said to be most difficult, much having been destroyed, and the greater part sold or removed. Moolla Mahomed has entirely separated himself from Alla Dina, and expresses regret he ever consorted with him. The Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, has done his utmost to bring about restitution or compensation, and being cordially joined in his efforts by Mool the Sarawans, there is little doubt he would have greatly thoroughly supported by the Khan.

5. Of his Highness the Khan's proceedings in promoting property to the merchant or its equivalent, I regret to say I c

Diary, No. 6 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week end 1873.

A KHUREETA from the Commissioner in Sind for his Highness the and delivered on Saturday at 1 p.m.

On Sunday afternoon I visited his Highness and advised him to l in settling with those merchants who had been plundered by the M to use my influence with them to accept 10 annas in the rupee, p payment was guaranteed.

On Monday I went over the accounts with the merchants; their cl nted to Rupees 92,000, including compensation for camels and donkeys. On presenting to Akhoond Abdul Majid Kafilabashi that with cash payment of 10 an in the rupee, merchants would more than recoup the difference by being early in the Candahar market with piece goods, they cheerfully compounded for Rupees 49,000 (origi al claim Rupees 78,400), and held themselves responsible for the claims of all merchants. The owners of camels and donkeys had tried to impose by claiming Rupees 13,600 as compensation for nearly twice as many animals as their Dadar Pass showed. Compensation was offered for the number certified by the Naib of Dadar's Pass at the rate of Rupees 40 per camel and Rupees 20 per donkey, total Rupees 6,620; this was considered a fair adjustment by all respectable merchants, but not accepted as such by the owners.

On Tuesday I visited his Highness and pointed out what terms the merchants were willing to accept, and he expressed himself highly pleased at the arrangement and anxious to carry out the same.

On Wednesday his Highness had an interview with the merchants, and explained that as he had no money, they must wait until the amount required could be realized from revenue. This offer they declined, stating their claims had been compounded on condition of receiving immediate payment. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed then had an interview with me, and asked if the British Government would advance his Highness' annual subsidy, or allow an order to be given to the merchants antedated to the 1st April. The Shahgassee assured me that his Highness had every wish to pay the merchants, but really had not got the money. No encouragement was given regarding the subsidy, and the following arrangement was ultimately arrived at by his Highness: Rupees 15,620 in cash, and two hoondees for Rupees 20,000 each at one and two months' sight, payment guaranteed by Saucar Saju. This amount, Rupees 55,620, settles every claim.

A special cossid from Daroga Atta Mahomed arrived on Wednesday, reporting that a man, called Toti, with several of his friends, had seized 26 camels at Shorawak belonging to Langaos in lieu of what had been taken from him by the Sarawan Brahooees at the latter end of 1871. The Langaos proposed retaliating on the first Afghan kafila that entered Khelat territory, and instructions were solicited by Daroga Atta Mahomed.
On the above report being placed at my disposal, I strongly urged his Highness to Arrangements are therefore being made by the Commissioner for an interview with his Highness the Khan of Khelat early next week. No. 7, dated Bagh, 15th February 1873.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 15th February 1873.

On the 9th the kafilah reported as having arrived at Dadar in diary No. 6 passed through en route to Kurrachee. It consisted chiefly of wool and dried fruits. On the road between Haji-ke-Shur and this four camels with their loads strayed into the jungle; one was recovered next morning by his Highness' officials and returned to the merchants, the others, when found, will be handed over to Abdul Majid, merchant.

On Monday Sher Dil, Muzarani Murree, after making his salam to his Highness the Khan, left this with a few followers for Jacobabad. The same evening Sirdar Gholam Murteza, accompanied by a large number of his tribe, arrived from Jacobabad. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed pointed out their encamping ground, and furnished them with supplies of grass, wood, &c. The next morning they made their obeisance to his Highness in public Durbar, afterwards visited me when I advised them, as they had complied with the wishes of the Commissioner in Sind and Political Superintendent, to return to Jacobabad with as little delay as possible. They left this on the morning of the 12th.

On Wednesday a khureeta from Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, for his Highness the Khan, was received and delivered at 12.30 the next day. The Shahgassee personally delivered to me his Highness' reply to the same, which I forwarded to the Commissioner in Sind. The Shahgassee stated his Highness was much gratified at its receipt, and was using every endeavour to march upon Shahpoor, so as to arrive there on the date specified. His Highness has forwarded invitations to the Sarawan, Jalawan, Kind, and Magsi Chiefs to accompany him; he proposed marching on the morning of the 16th by Janú and Chatar.

On the 11th his Highness received a letter from Guzzun Khan, Murree Sirdar, in which he still hesitates to accept the invitation to meet the Commissioner in Sind at Jacobabad. No reply from Karim Khan, Bijarani.

On the same day a private letter from Candahar to the address of his Highness was received for perusal. The writer states that the current opinion at Cabul regarding the Camp of Exercise at Hasan Abdul is that the troops have been assembled to watch events in Seistan; also t at a news-writer from Lahore had been sent to live at Candahar.

At Seebee Bakhtiar Khan, Baruzi Chief, and his nephews, Akbar Khan Sirbuland and Ismail Khan, have had a family quarrel, the latter left Khurk and have taken up their residence at Dapal.

This morning a letter to his Highness from Abdul Aziz, Naib of Dadar reports, that some Pathans made a raid upon Sher Dil, Muzarani Murree's village and carried off the villagers' property. His Highness' Regiment, the Wazeeree, stationed at Kirta, followed up the robbers, recovered the stolen property, and returned it to the Murrees. Six Pathans were killed, one Regimental Moonshee, Faiz Mahomed, was slightly wounded on the shoulder.

The Bolan Pass is freely made use of by merchants, travellers, and kafilas, and is quite safe. At present cossids have arrived at Dadar with about 1,000 camel-loads of wool. A few large donkey kafilas have also passed down. A good many merchants have also followed the direct route to Kurrachee, the whole way from Khelat through the hills viâ the Rajroad.

2. The balance due to the merchants as compensation for losses sustained last year has been paid by his Highness the Khan, and received by them in full settlement of their claims.

3. The Commissioner met his Highness the Khan at Shahpoor, and visits were interchanged on the 20th and 21st instant.

4. It is now reported that several slight shocks of earthquake have been felt at Bagh and other places, since the severe shock which did so much injury in December last.

No. 1036, dated Kurrachee, 27th November 1872.

From Commissioner in Sind, to Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

In forwarding the accompanying copy of a letter from Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, with its accompaniments, I have the honour to state that, taking into consideration what has passed during the last six months at Khelat, I consider it a matter of great importance that the ill-advisers who induced his Highness the Khan to act so inconsiderately should be kept away from him, or they will be only perpetually endeavouring to revive their old intrigues. These men are:—

(2.) Moonshee Saleh Mahomed.
(3.) Moonshee Gool Mahomed.

2. These men were brought into Sind lately by his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and being delivered over to the local authorities were left by my direction on the frontier districts. I instructed Colonel Mainwaring, the Political Superintendent, to locate them for the present at Thul, the central talooka of the frontier district, where the Mooktiarkur resides, and ordered that they should be simply watched that they abstained from engaging in any communications with people beyond the border.

3. These people are quite capable of maintaining themselves, and therefore no expense will be incurred by their remaining in British territory. But the question of their legal detention may be raised, and in case it should, I have the honour to request that I may have warrants from your Excellency, under Act III. of 1858, and Act XXXIV. of 1850, authorising the detention of the three men above mentioned.

4. It is just possible that the use of these warrants may not become necessary, but it would be very important to have them in hand, so that should these men at any time give trouble the law may be duly enforced towards them. If they choose to remain quiet, they will be in no way molested.

Enclosure 2 in No. 144.

No. 146, dated Paniwan, 21st October 1872.

From Political Agent, Khelat, to Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I have the honour to report, for your information, that I sent Persian translation of the Commissioner in Sind's letter, No. 935, to his Highness the Khan, "with the "exception of paragraph 1." In connexion with paragraphs 3 and 4, I pointed out to his Highness that he might convince the English Government of his sincerity by directing Shukkur Khan and the Moonshees to live in British territory, and that if he was prepared to accept this suggestion, I should be most happy to take him to Jacobabad to meet his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

His Highness' reply, with translation, is annexed.

Enclosure 3 in No. 144.

From his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to Political Agent, Khelat.

GOD be praised that we are both well. Your friendly note of the 12th instant reached me at a good time and made my heart happy. I also received translation of a letter from "Alijah Moolla Paega," Sir W. Merewether, to Alijah Colonel Mainwaring, and am aware of its meaning from beginning to end. As regards what was written about Shukkur Khan and Moonshees Saleh Mahomed and Gool Mahomed residing in English territory, I write to you as a friend that my only wish and happiness is to please your Government, and that I will act according to their wishes. On arrival at Gundava I will send for the Moonshees, and will also send a man to fetch Shukkur Khan. Rest satisfied, and me informed of your welfare.

Enclosure 4 in No. 144.

No. 8142, dated Bombay Castle, 12th December 1872.

From Secretary to the Government of Bombay to Solicitor to the Government of Bombay.

I AM directed to forward to you the accompanying copy of a letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 1036, dated the 27th ultimo, and to request that you will advise Government as to the steps necessary to effect the legal detention in British territory of the persons referred to by Sir William Merewether as State prisoners. Drafts of the necessary warrants should be prepared and submitted by you at the same time.

Enclosure 5 in No. 144.

No. 1333, dated Bombay, 30th December 1872.

From Officiating Solicitor to the Government of Bombay to Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your No. 8142 of 1872, under date 12th instant, and to state that if it be necessary to detain in British territory the persons referred to by Sir William Merewether, in accordance with the Indian statutes, the object can only be attained by giving them into charge of a sheriff of a gaol, of the commandant of a fortress, or officer in charge of any gaol or other place of confinement.

2. I am unacquainted with the nature of the duties of the Mooktiarkur referred to as residing in the village where the persons in question are located, but it occurs to me to doubt whether this location can be considered as in accordance with the Acts for the custody of State prisoners.

3. Care should therefore, I think, be taken if the necessity arises for the warrant, that the same is directed to a person contemplated by the Act, and that such person should be actually in charge of the State prisoners.

4. I may mention that I have shown these papers to the Hon. the Acting Advocate General, and I am authorised to state that he approves of the form of warrant, and concurs in my remarks in this letter.

Enclosure 6 in No. 144.

DRAFT REGULATION.

To

WHEREAS the Governor in Council of Bombay for good and sufficient reasons has resolved that shall be placed under personal restraint at

You are hereby ordered in pursuance of that resolution to receive the person above named into your custody, and to deal with him in conformity to the orders of the Governor in Council of Bombay, and the provisions of Regulation 25 of 1827, and Acts XXXIV. of 1850 and III. of 1858, of the Legislative Council of India. Bombay, the day of December 1872.

By order, &c.,
Chief Secy. to Govt. of India.

Enclosure 7 in No. 144.

No. 623, dated Bombay Castle, 28th January 1873.

From Secretary to the Government of Bombay to Commissioner in Sind.

REFERRING to your letter, with accompaniments, of the 27th November last, No. 1036, on the subject of the detention in British territory of certain individuals from the territory of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, I am desired by the Hon. the Governor in Council to forward for your information the annexed copy of a letter,* and of its enclosure, from the Officiating Solicitor to Government with reference to this matter, and to state that your further report will be awaited.

* No. 1333, dated 33th December 1872.

Enclosure 8 in No. 144.

No. 174, dated Camp Jacobabad, 25th February 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind to Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

IN reference to Mr. Secretary Gonne's letter No. 623, of the 28th ultimo, and its accompaniment from the Officiating Solicitor to Government, I have the honour to state that as it is necessary, according to the Indian statutes, that people in question should be given in charge to some officer in charge of a gaol or place of confinement, they can be best located at Umarkot in Lower Sind, where there is a gaol and gaoler. I would request therefore that your Excellency will favour me by causing the necessary warrants to be issued for the delivery into the custody of the gaoler of the Umarkot of the three men marginally noted.

1. Shukkur Khan.
2. Moonshee Saleh Mahomed Wullud Shaikh Abdool Kabir.
3. Moonshee Gool Mahomed Wullud Shaikh Abdool Kabir.

2. From all I have seen and heard lately here, I am more than ever convinced of the great desirability of keeping these men away from Khelat territory, and their being removed to Lower Sind is the best course that can be adopted.

3. In the Thul Talooka they were only under the surveillance of the Mookhtiarkur, this is shown by the Solicitor to Government to be incorrect. I have therefore issued instructions for them to be passed on to Umarkot, and would beg that the warrants may be supplied at an early date.

No. 145.

DIARY No. 11 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 16th March 1873.

ON Monday his Highness the Khan had a private interview with Noordeen Mingul, at which the ex-Vakeel of Jacobabad, the Kazee of Bagh, and Moollah Jumma were present. I heard indirectly that his Highness, at the advice of these people, had decided upon appointing Azaad Khan, of Kharan, Governor of the whole of Mekran, and his cousin, Belooch Khan, Naib of Punchgoor; also that Noordeen had been informed no active measures were to be taken against Beyla, and an express had been sent by the latter to intimate this intelligence to Ali Khan Jamote.

On Tuesday, when visiting his Highness, he told me of his intentions regarding Azaad Khan and Belooch Khan, and that the former was to pay him Rupees 20,000 per annum. I begged his Highness to reconsider the question, as Azaad Khan was a treacherous unreliable person, and his cousin quite recently an acknowledged feudatory of the Persian Government. I further pointed out that such action on his Highness' part could not be received with indifference by my Government. His Highness agreed not to act without further consideration, but informed me people of Azaad Khan and Belooch Khan's character were required for the Mekran Province, as Faqueer Mahomed, Bezonjao, was the person who instigated the Sarawans to rebel, and the Kedj and Punchgoor Chiefs were altogether out of hand.

On Wednesday Shalgassee Wullee Mahomed advised his Highness to summon Sirdar Gaji Khan of Punchgoor, to meet him at Khelat on a certain date with the revenue of his province. His Highness wrote this letter, but at the same time wrote to Esau Khan, Gitchki, that he would appoint him Sirdar, vice Gaji Khan, and to meet him at Sohrab with Belooch Khan, who would be made Naib.

On Friday, when his Highness returned my visit, I asked if he had made any appointment with Sirdar Azaad Khan and Belooch Khan to meet him at Sohrab, and, on his acknowledging he had invited them, I again pointed out how distasteful these measures would be to my Government, as they would most assuredly lead to rebellion and disorder. His Highness replied that, though these Nowsherwan chiefs were to meet him, it did not follow they would be taken into his service; with reference to contemplated disturbances, they could not be avoided, as neither the chiefs nor people would pay their revenne.

This most undesirable interference with the arrangements his Highness adopted at Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's suggestion emanated from the people with whom his Highness conferred; as far as I can learn, the object is to cause enmity between the Minguls and Bezonjao, so as to prevent their taking further interest in the Sarawan country. Sirdar Azaad Khan being taken into favour is also to alienate him from Moollah Mahomed. If his Highness carries out the programme drawn up for him by the ex-Vakeel, there will be a serious rebellion all through Mekran, as also through the Jalawan country from Kozdar to Lus Beyla.

Shortly before his Highness arrived on Friday a khureeta from the Commissioner in Sind was received. I urged his Highness to take steps regarding Lus Beyla. He replied: "The Shahgassee had repeatedly told him it could be easily retaken with Brahooee levies, and that it was a favourable opportunity for Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to prove what he had said. He, the Khan, did not believe repossession could be so easily effected as the Minguls would be obstructive; on my pointing out some of his regulars might be employed on this service, he informed me his troops were not loyal; those he trusted were required for his personal protection, and it would be useless to detach those he had no confidence in; even, however, if all were loyal and true, my suggestion could not be carried out, as no expedition could be organized or despatched without money, and he had none.

I tried my utmost in a friendly and quiet manner to induce the Khan to meet difficulties and overcome them. The only response to anything I advised was my Government might do what they liked, as he himself was perfectly indifferent to all matters connected with the government of his country, and never intended to take any further interest in them.

His Highness wished to withdraw the detachment from Kirta, but I have asked him not to do so until the kafila season is over. During the past week kafilas have been daily passing through Bagh from Candahar and Shikarpoor; two of the largest were from the former place and brought about six hundred camel-loads of wool.

His Highness leaves this on Wednesday, and expects to be at Gundava on Saturday, the 21st; he wishes to proceed up the Moolla Pass with as little delay as possible.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed informed me that his Highness wished to know if there was any objection to his giving his agent proceeding with indigo to Meshed a letter to the Governor of the latter place. I replied that writing to Persian officials might be misunderstood, and that, under all circumstances, it might be as well not to do so.

His Highness, alluding to disturbances in Seistan, stated the Persian Government would soon have a large force in those parts and punish the rebels. His Highness persists in stating that Sirdar Yakoob Khan has a friendly compact with the Persians, and will never assist his father, the Ameer, against them. His Highness informed me of his having written to Sirdar Yakoob Khan, but made no allusion to the contents of his letter.

In Diary No. 7 of 1873 a misunderstanding in the Barukzai family was reported. The ex-Vakeel has solicited permission from Buktyar Khan to reside at Seebee and been refused. Buktyar Khan's nephews, Surbulund and Ismail Khan was sent for from Seebee by advice of Mahomed Khan and Moollah Jumma, and arrived at Bagh yesterday. No good object is in view if reports can be relied upon.

Yesterday Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed suggested the advisability of his resigning on arrival at Gundava, and proceeding from thence to Kurrachee. He states his Highness has a policy of his own, which will be carried out in spite of any advice that he or I may give. His Highness contemplated arrangements in Mekran; interference with affairs at Seebee; and other circumstances support Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's statements, and makes me doubt the inert attitude his Highness has chosen to assume.

Diary No. 12 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 23rd March 1873.

ON Monday I visited his Highness the Khan, as he professed himself anxious to consult me with reference to the Commissioner's khureeta, dated 10th March. The conversation that ensued on this occasion was reported on the 20th instant in letter No. 44.

Sirdar Azaad Khan collected 1,000 Barichis and proceeded to Seistan, in spite of Sirdar Futteh Khan's prohibitory orders.

The Roonjaos of Lus Beyla have written to the Jamshir of Khozdar asking whether they should send presents to his Highness or meet him on his road back to Khelat. For some time past this tribe has been most anxious that his Highness should take possession of Lus Beyla, and put an end to the fighting and plundering that is going on.

Traffic through the Bolan is satisfactory.

No. 935, dated Jacobabad, 9th April 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

I HAVE the honour to report, that in reply to a communication I made to Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, on the receipt of your instruction contained in No. 217, dated 14th ultimo, that officer reports as follows:—

"I have the honour to acknowledge your No. 596 of 20th March 1873, on the subject of a reported raid on the Murree clan, and to state that further reports did reach me, but the raiders were said to have been Pathans. I never heard that some Murrees had been caught in the Bolan Pass, and if it was the case they have carefully concealed the fact from me.

"I have sent a special messenger to the Tomandar to inquire into the truth of these reports, and as I shortly expect to meet his brother Meeroollah at the Sakhi Sarwar fair, I will then be in a position to report more fully on the matter, which I will do if the information received is of sufficient importance to warrant my doing so."

Enclosure 1 in No. 147.

From Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, to Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that information has reached me from the Murree hills that a party of Brahooees attacked the Murree town of Mundai and killed eleven Muzzerani and Sheeranee Murrees, capturing a very large number of cows, sheep, and goats.

2. Should further particulars reach me, and should they appear of interest, I will forward them.

IN reply to your letter No. 217 of the 14th ultimo, having reference to the report made by Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, on the 27th February 1873, that a party of Brahooees attacked the Murree town of Mundai, and killed eleven Muzzerani, &c., &c., I have the honour to inform you that Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, states the attack made on the Pathans by his Highness' troops after the latter had attacked and plundered the Muzzerani Murrees under Sher Dil, reported in my diary of the 15th February last, is probably what has misled Captain Sandeman.

2. None of the Sarawans have as yet left Kutchee, and they have assured me the news communicated by Captain Sandeman is without foundation as far as they are concerned.

3. No reply to my letter on this subject has as yet been received from Captain Sandeman.

Docket, No. 217, dated Kurrachee, 14th March 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind.

REFERRING to his endorsement No. 655, dated the 5th instant, the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, is requested to be so good as to state whether the Muzzeranis alluded to by Captain Sandeman are the same as those caught in the Bolan, or whether this is a new case? If the latter a full report should be submitted.

I AM to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 1599, dated 15th ultimo, regarding the detention in British territory of the persons marginally noted.

Shukkur Khan.
Moonshee Saleh Mahomed.

2. The first Section of the Bombay Regulation No. XXV. of 1827 provides that the Governor in Council may cause a person to be apprehended, and when apprehended, delivered over to any person in whose custody it may be deemed expedient that he should be placed. The warrant of committal runs to the effect that the Governor in Council has resolved that A.B. shall be placed under personal restraint at Y.Z., and the officer is ordered to receive A.B. into his custody and deal with him in conformity with the orders of the Governor in Council and the provisions of the Regulations. Section II.

of the Regulation provides that such warrant shall be sufficient authority for the detention of any State prisoner in any fortress, gaol, or other place within the zillahs subordinate to Bombay.

3. This Regulation appears to the Governor-General in Council to secure all that is wanted. Apprehension may be effected by simply exhibiting the warrant, and the term "custody" is consistent with any degree of liberty which it may be deemed expedient to allow. The question of the detention of the men above named does not appear to be affected by the Acts of 1850 and 1858 which were passed to remove doubts about the conflict of the State prisoners' regulation with the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts, and need only be referred to when the detention of the prisoners is required in some place within the jurisdiction of those Courts.

4. The Governor-General in Council is of opinion that the proper course is for the Bombay Government to issue under Regulation XXV. of 1827 warrants for the detention of the persons referred to, who should be placed only under such surveillance as may be considered sufficient to prevent them from escaping or intriguing. The prisoners, however, should be warned that any attempt to violate the conditions under which they are detained will be followed by arrest and imprisonment. The warrants should be sent to the Court in Sind with instructions not to put them in force, unless he has reason to believe that the persons in question are making a bad use of the liberty allowed them.

No. 13, dated Shoran, 30th March 1873.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 30th March 1873.

Darogah Imam Dad, of Nushki, writes to Darogah Attah Mahomed that all the Minguls, at the instigation of Mahomed and Pur Dil, have gone into the hills and intend attacking Nushki. Sirdar Abdool Rahman, his nephew, cousin, and immediate relatives are the only people now in Nushki, the whole of the Minguls having deserted their Sirdar.

2. Sirdar Azaad Khan has laid siege to the fort of Chaga, belonging to Surfaraz Khan, Sangram, and explained to the latter that he must compensate the Barichees for the camels he plundered some time ago, also to furnish 1,000 men to assist him in a raid against the Seistanees. Surfaraz Khan explained to Sirdar Azaad Khan that the Barichee claim had been settled long ago, and declined to surrender. All standing crops have been destroyed, and Azaad Khan is pressing the siege. It is reported that the Bakshanees of Nushki intend going to Seistan. Dost Mahomed and Jam Beg, Bakshanees, write to his Highness that Mir Dad Kurreem, son of Dost Mahomed, had joined Azaad Khan with 30 followers, and the rest of the Minguls had left their lands and would not give them to anyone, consequently there would be no cultivation this year, finally they, Dost Mahomed and Jam Beg, only remained trusting to his Highness for support.

3. Darogah Attah Mahomed writes to his Highness that the nephew of Wuzeer Yar Mahomed Khan Akulzai, formerly Governor of Herat, is at Khelat, and wishes for employment. His Highness having asked me whether it would be advisable to give him service, I replied it would be better to adhere to his old policy with reference to Afghan refugees, viz., to show them hospitality for a few days and then request them to settle elsewhere than on his frontier.

4. Sirdar Fukeer Mahomed, Bezonjao, Naib of Kedj, has sent the following as last year's revenue, and explains that the small amount Rupees 4,260, Rupees 10 gold, Rupees 468 silver, four camels, Rupees 560, is owing to the people having refused to pay their revenue, and that no further collection can be made unless his Highness will place regular troops at his disposal. Sirdar Bhai Khan, Gitchki, writes to his Highness that if he acts according to his, the Khan's, orders, his tribe will desert him, and that he must yield to their wishes unless his Highness is prepared to support him.

5. A large kafila from Candahar, about 300 camel-loads of wool and jiri, passed through Bagh on Wednesday.

6. His Highness the Khan left Bagh on the 28th, and will arrive at Gundava on the 1st April.

7. On Friday, Yar Mahomed Koord-Junda Shawani, Mahomed Khan Rustomzai, and Aref Khan Lehree were sent by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to arrange about the Sarawan subsidy, but as his Highness the Khan and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed were busy making preparations for their march that evening, the above Sirdars were directed to accompany his Highness to Gundava.

8. Sirdar Noordeen visited me the other day, so I told him he would neither benefit himself nor his friends by interfering with affairs at Beyla or keeping up a surreptitious correspondence with his nephew. My object in making this remark was that a servant of the ex-Jam's son, by name Dadu, had just arrived with letters from Haidarabad.

They have all been committed by Nowsherwan Chota and Dewriah Bundejo, two lawless petty chiefs. His Highness the Khan has been called upon to punish these men and to make immediate arrangements for the establishment of better order in this part of his dominions. POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, Simla.

SIR, Commissioner's Office, Kurrachee, 3rd May 1873.

I HAVE the honour to submit for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General the following report on proceedings in connexion with the Khelat State.

2. Before, however, entering on recent events, I must briefly revert to some circ stances that occurred before, in order that the present state of affairs may be thorou understood.

3. Until a Political Officer was appointed to Khelat, business with that Goverr was transacted through a Wukkeel, who as a rule resided at Jacobabad, but occasio visited the Khan's Head Quarters, wherever they might be, in Kutchee or at Kl On a British officer being placed with his Highness the Khan, the Wukkeel wa kept on at Jacobabad, as it was convenient his being there to arrange local matter about revenue questions, which then began to crop up in regard to lands in the K territory that were cultivated by means of water given from our Sind canals. Tl person who held the post of Wukkeel was one Moolla Ahmed, a fairly respectabi courtier who, though he did not always exactly adhere to the truth, was believe General Jacob, myself, and Sir Henry Green to exert himself sincerely, and do al he could to promote the interests of both the Governments, Khelat and British, he l quite shrewd enough to be sure that his master's interests would be best served by maintenance of cordial relations with the latter. He died at a good old age in 18 and was succeeded by his son Moolla Mahomed Khan, then quite a youth, and as he h been a great deal at Jacobabad with his father, seen his policy, and watched his actio it was thought he was the best person that could be selected, and that he would alwa follow the same course his father had done. He did so for some years, but latte having become rich, and thinking he saw an opening for his own advancement in t dissensions that occurred between his Highness the Khan and his Wuzeer, the Sha gassee, he has very greatly changed, become a gross flatterer, most untrustworthy in h statements, and an incessant intriguer. He is naturally clever, and had he only be possessed of some physical courage, he might have done a great deal more mischief tha he has.

4. In 1870–71, Mahomed Khan, the "Moolla," is seldom, if ever applied to him now, accompanied Major Harrison to Khelat, and then commenced his attempts to supplant the Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. By fulsome flattery and innovations that brought about temporary increase to the revenue, he soon succeeded in establishing himself in the good graces of the Khan. The Shahgassee saw it all, and held himself aloof, until the disturbances broke out at Moostung in September 1871. These were in some measure brought on by certain acts of the Khan, carried out on the advice of Mahomed Khan. In spite of all that had occurred, the Shahgassee, when called upon by the Khan, displayed his usual fidelity and bravery, at once took the field, defeated the rebels at Moostung, and had he not been severely wounded, would have followed up the scattered rebels, and have prevented their ever collecting together again. Unfortunately his wounds were so long in healing, that the rebellion gained new vigour in Kutchee, and it became absolutely necessary to despatch a strong body of troops from Khelat to put it down. The Khan thought at one time of going himself, and it would have been well if he had, but disturbances were threatening on his Western Frontier, and he did not like to leave his capital. The selection then unhappily fell on Mahomed Khan, who was still at Khelat. He started with immense protestations, declared that the time for giving the rebels any consideration was passed, and that only their destruction or complete dispersal was left. All who knew this man's character foretold that only evil would come of his being sent with the troops, but the Khan would not believe that a man who talked so largely could be so utterly untrue. So it proved however. Though he had a much stronger force than the rebels, he feared to attack them, and immediately he got face to face with them, he commenced treating, and ended in making a compact with them, which was most dishonourable and degrading to his master, and entirely destructive of the latter's position as ruler in the country. At first this shameful conduct was attributed to cowardice only, but from what I have learned, and seen since, I am now convinced that deliberate treachery to his master's best interests, with a desire to be in good esteem with the rebel Sirdars, had as much to do with his behaviour as the want of courage.

5. The Khan was most justly indignant when he heard what had occurred, and expressed himself to be most angry with Mahomed Khan. On my reaching the frontier in December 1871 I found Mahomed Khan had arrived there with the intention of bringing the rebel Sirdars to have their compact ratified before the British officers. His conduct was very severely commented on by me to the Wukkeel personally, when he presented himself at Jacobabad. He was ordered to return immediately, and to tell the Sirdars to do the same, and further that he most rejoin his troops, and act with them as his sovereign had ordered.

6. When ultimately the Sirdars were allowed to come into Jacobabad, and a settlement was effected in the name of and for the Khan, Mahomed Khan was not allowed to have anything to do with matters he had so shamefully mismanaged. When all was completed I pointed out to the Wuzeer that as Mahomed Khan had behaved so badly he ought to be removed from his appointment of Wukkeel and some more faithful person appointed in his stead. The Wuzeer quite acknowledged the justice of this, but in the goodness of his disposition, and forgetful of the other previous treachery towards himself, he pleaded hard for the Wukkeel, and begged that he might this time be forgiven. Although all had ended so well I was extremely averse to accede to the Wuzeer's request, but he was so very urgent that I at last consented to let Mahomed Khan remain at Jacobabad if his Highness the Khan wished it.

7. I was not then aware of what was passing between the Khan and Mahomed Khan; indeed I was under the impression that the former was still angry with the latter. I have since learned that all the time I was engaged at Jacobabad in endeavouring to bring matters to a satisfactory conclusion, Mahomed Khan was busy misleading the Khan in regard to what was passing, and formed a compact with Shukkur Khan, the military commander, the two Moonshees, Saleh Mahomed and Gool Mahomed, and some of the Khan's relations, to counteract all that was being done at Jacobabad. Their object was to persuade the Khan that Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed had joined in with the Brahooee Sirdars, and that the intention of the British Government was to depose him, the Khan, and put his eldest son, Meeah Mahomed Khan, on the throne. Subsequent events at Khelat, and the Khan's strange behaviour last autumn, proved the effect their representations had had, and how completely the Khan had accepted them, in spite of all that I had written to him and all that was told him by Major Harrison after his return to Khelat last year.

8. I may here mention what is the family of his Highness the Khan. He has three sons:—

1. Meeah Mahomed Khan, about nine years of age now; of good family by the mother's side; intelligent and pleasing.
2. Shah Nuwaz, about five and a half years old; mother not well connected; bright and intelligent.
3. Meeah Azeem Khan, about two and a half years old; mother is sister of the Gitchkee chief of Punjgoor; a promising child.

A roll of the wives and children of his Highness is appended.

The Khan dislikes his eldest son greatly, as is almost always the case among Asiatic sovereigns, fearing he may be made to supplant him. The Khan has an ambitious sister, Bibi Futteh Khatoon, married to a chief of the Eltarzye branch of the Brahooee royal family. She is sedulously working against the Khan, in the hopes of his being killed or removed, that then her eldest son, who is about 15 years old, might have a chance of succeeding to the throne. He is not, however, at all a brilliant youth, and is not likely to be chosen, being out of the direct line. She does not see this, but joins in all Mahomed Khan's intrigues heartily, taunting the Khan with want of spirit in not showing sufficiently his power and independence of the British Government.

9. When the Khan of Khelat was passing through Kutchee en route to Sukkur to visit his Excellency the Viceroy, Mahomed Khan joined the Khan en route, and at several interviews remonstrated with him for having yielded to the wishes of the British Government in giving up Shukkur Khan and the Moonshees, telling him he would never derive any benefit from being on friendly terms with that government. He also cautioned his Highness against going into Sukkur, as he would in all probability be made a prisoner. It was from this man the absurd idea first originated of intended treachery against the Khan, which was at that time very generally believed in, and which led to the ridiculous scene that occurred on board his Excellency's yacht, when the Khan thought the foretellings had come true. Mahomed Khan also, in the hopes of getting his master into bad odour, and so to break with the British Government, spoke to several of the Sarawan Sirdars urging them on no account to give up the property plundered from the Kafilahs, or its equivalent.

10. The Shahgassee and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee at that time discussed Mahomed Khan's character and proceedings with Major Harrison, and they both agreed in saying that he had for his own purposes deliberately and cunningly worked on the bad traits in the Khan's character, and was ruining him.

11. It was thought that the safe return of the Khan and the highly honourable way in which he had been received by his Excellency the Viceroy would have opened the Khan's eyes to the untrustworthiness of his adviser. At first he seemed very much pleased, and as if he really intended to exert himself in causing the restoration of the plundered property, and had given up his mischievous counsellors. If he had, it was only for a short time, for they soon got control over him again and worked evilly on him by pointing out that after all he had come back without attaining his chief object, the release of Shukkur Khan and the Moonshees. The inhabitants of the harem had been before brought to bear on him on this subject, and they were now very bitter when he returned as they said empty-handed, excepting with a few presents. The interpretation by the adverse party of the nature of the presents was, that the presentation of a sword and shield was a hint to him to exterminate his enemies. And as regarded the remarks made by his Excellency the Viceroy, the Kazee of Bagh, who is the Wukkeel, Mahomed Khan's chief assistant, explained that as the British Government had no wish to interfere with him, the Khan, in the management of his country, he might do whatever he liked. These people also at this time induced the Khan to believe that the proposed Desert Canal was intended to injure him; to lead to the annexation of his country by the British.

12. The Khan went from Sukkur to Gundava, and while he was there during November and December, reports got spread about that forgetful of the written guarantee he had voluntarily given in September for the safety of the Wuzeer, the Khan had again revived the folly he had contemplated at Khelat. At first Major Harrison expressed his total disbelief in such stories, and did his best to assure people there could be no foundation in them. But in December the Shahgassee went to him and said there was no doubt treachery was intended towards him, that the Khan had even gone the length of talking openly in the Durbar that he would have the Shahgassee and others of his relations and friends killed, and it was known that four men of the regiment Shukkur Khan used to command had been paid to watch their opportunity to assassinate him, the Shahgassee. Major Harrison mentioned further that it was generally reported that if the Shahgassee was assassinated, an attempt would be made to prove that it was purely accidental, or that the deed was committed by men whom the Shahgassee himself had hired to take the life of his Highness the Khan.

13. All this time his Highness was most civil to Major Harrison, and profuse in the expression of his intentions of carrying out all he had undertaken. Whether the reports circulated conveyed more truly what were his real views than the words he used to Major Harrison, time could alone show, but certainly little or nothing was done towards collecting the merchants' property. The Khan did not exert himself, but rather appeared to wish that the unpopularity of forcible recovery should rest on the Shahgassee alone. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee seeing the present state of affairs would not risk his personal safety by advocating coercive measures against the Sarawans, as they would desert him and leave him powerless in the hands of the Khan.

14. The Khan was aware that I proposed paying a visit to the Frontier, and desired to have an interview with him. I therefore felt confident that whatever truth there might be in the above reports, nothing would be allowed to take place before that interview, and any interference if ever required had better be delayed. But it did not seem to me that the Khan was really exerting himself to carry out the promises he had made at Khelat, and if he really was not, it would not be fitting that the interview should take place. I therefore, on nearing the Frontier, addressed him the following letter :—

" No. 27 of 1873

" To his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

" Camp Abad Malani, 29th January 1873

" After Compliments.—In October last I wrote to your Highness stating the great satisfaction it had afforded me to hear of your having determined on adopting a course suitable to your position as Sovereign of your country, and in accordance with your obligations to the British Government.

" To prove to your Highness how satisfactorily and cordially this change was estimated, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General was pleased to assent to a meeting taking place with your Highness during his Excellency's tour through Sind..

" That meeting was happily carried out in November last. His Excellency the Viceroy received your Highness with high distinction and honour, and personally expressed to you his satisfaction at the fortunate termination of the difficulties that had lately existed. But I must remind your Highness that at the same time he also distinctly warned you that recurrence of any of the circumstances which so nearly caused the withdrawal of the British officer from your Court could not meet with the same favourable consideration that have been on that occasion accorded.

" At parting with your Highness at Sukkur, I mentioned that I should shortly be returning to Upper Sind, and that it would afford me much pleasure to have a further interview with you to arrange certain matters for the mutual benefit of your country and the British Border.

" I am now approaching the Frontier, and would be glad to arrange for carrying out the above intention. But I regret to have to state that from all I learn of what has passed since your Highness' return to your own country from Sind, it would appear that you have used no real endeavour to carry out what you had solemnly promised to perform and that you have failed to benefit by the wise counsel his Excellency the Viceroy addressed to you. Such being really the case, I can entertain little hope that personal communication with me will lead to any beneficial results.

" In the paper your Highness delivered to Major Harrison at Khelat on the 29th September last (25th Rujub), you affirmed that on your arrival in Kutchee you would take immediate steps for the restoration of the property plundered last year from the different bodies of merchants, for which you were responsible, or give them the equivalent thereof.

" Several months have now elapsed since you entered Kutchee, and I am still without any intimation from your Highness that the claims of these poor people have been fully satisfied.

" It becomes necessary therefore for me before completing arrangements for the interview I so much desired, and which I should be loth to abandon, to request that your Highness will inform me whether you have carried your avowed promises in regard to compensation to the merchants into full effect, and whether their claims have been entirely satisfied.

" My unwearying endeavours always for the welfare of your Highness and for the good of your country will convince you that it is with extreme regret I have felt called upon thus to address you, but my regard for your best interests as well as my duty to my own Government compel me to do so. In the hope that I may speedily receive a favourable and satisfactory reply, I subscribe myself,

" Your true friend and well-wisher,
" W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel,
" Commissioner in Sind."

15. His Highness replied as follows :—

" From his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

" After Compliments.—Your letter of the 29th January, No. 27, reached me at a happy moment and made my heart glad. I reply to the same in a friendly spirit, that I have made every effort to carry out what I guaranteed to do at Khelat on the 25th Rujub, and have fulfilled the same.

" You have always been a friend to me, and decided that the Brahooees were to make good what they had plundered from merchants. Seeing the delay that ensued, I advanced 30,000 rupees to reassure the merchants, and since my arrival in Kutchee have so far succeeded in getting compensation for the merchants that their claims can be readily adjusted.

" To the merchants who were plundered by Sirdar Noordeen I gave 5,000 rupees, and the above-named chief's lands are mortgaged until the claims against him are liquidated.

" You, my friend, have written to me regarding the kafilah plundered by the Murrees. You, my friend, are well aware that for some years past the Murrees have not recognized my authority, and have taken every opportunity to plunder my ryots and country. Seeing that it was the wish of the English Government that the merchants plundered by this tribe should be compensated, I had every intention of carrying out what I undertook on the 25th Rujub, reckoning that no difficulty would occur in selling my grain.

Up to the present my tithes have not been paid, and I have not sufficient money to settle this claim.

" My kind friend, on receipt of your letter of the 29th January, I saw what the wishes of the English Government were, and settled with the merchants for 55,620 rupees, as follows:—Cash 15,620 on 7th February, two hoondees by Soucar Sajram for 20,000 each at one and two months' sight, payment guaranteed by the above Soucar. In this manner merchants' claims were settled at once; for your information I send a copy of their receipt. You, my friend, know well that I realised nothing from last year's revenue, or would have compensated the merchants. In everything that happens I recognise the kindness of the British Government and yourself, for instance, last year, taking my circumstances into consideration, I was presented with a lac of rupees, from this sum I previously advanced merchants 35,000 rupees, and have now paid 15,620 rupees; the balance has been expended in other ways. My only reason for paying these merchants is that the British Government may be kind to me, and that I may visit you.

" You, my friend, know what my revenues are, as also the character of the Murrees and Brahooees. I myself see no prospect of being able to recover the 90,000 rupees I have advanced, any attempt to do so would cause a disturbance in the country.

" My friend, I have a great wish to meet you, as I have several things to talk about, and should like your advice. Always show your kindness by writing, and believe me your friend.

" KHODADAD KHAN.

" Receipt.

" The merchants, Moolah Mujeed, Mahomed Jan Akhoondzada, Abdool Huk, Mahomed Oomur, Shah Nam, Moolah Mahomed Aiyas, Luteef, Mahomed Yusuf, Shere Khan, Deen Mahomed, and other merchants, have agreed to accept 10 annas in the rupee for the kafilah plundered by Murrees in the Bolan, and have received payment in full as follows:—Ready cash from his Highness the Khan on the 7th Zoolhuj, 15,620; written guarantee for 20,000 rupees payable 8th Mohurrum 1290; and a further sum of 20,000 rupees payable 8th Sufur 1290. The above payments are guaranteed by Soucar Sajram of Gundava, and will be drawn when due and after money is realised; no further claims will be made, should any be made we are responsible. In case of nonpayment by the Soucar when the guarantees fall due, we shall renew original claim.

" (Signed) MOOLAH MUJEED, &c., &c., &c.

" (True translation)

" C. H. HARRISON, Major,

" Political Agent, Khelat."

16. From reports received from Major Harrison it appeared that after reaching Bagh his Highness the Khan had bestirred himself somewhat in recovering compensation from some of the Sarawan chiefs, even Alla Dina Khoord had been made to pay, and as stated by his Highness in his reply above given, all claims were satisfied in the beginning of February, and copy of receipt from the merchants accompanied his letter. Major Harrison had also reported what had been arranged in his diary dated 8th February. His constantly repeated advice, firmly maintained, aided by the hearty support and exertions of the excellent Wuzeer, undoubtedly brought about this satisfactory settlement of this very difficult and troublesome question. On the advice of Major Harrison and the Shahgassee, the Khan after some little trouble had been induced to make very good arrangements for the protection of the Bolan traffic. His Highness the Khan having acted thus wisely and well in these matters, no obstacle remained to prevent my meeting him, and arrangements were immediately made for an interview to take place at Shahpoor in his Highness' territory. I thought this was preferable to his being put to the inconvenience of making a long journey again into British territory, and Shahpoor was about equi-distant from Bagh, where he was, and from Jacobabad.

17. I hoped when I met the Khan to be able to carry out the arrangements suggested at the Mittunkote conference for the better management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, subjects of the Khan, but who for some time past had paid him but very faint allegiance. Also to make good permanent arrangements for the protection of the trade-route through the Bolan and Kutchee. Provision for the protection of kafilahs coming down the Bolan had just been made by the Shahgassee, under the Khan's orders, and at the pressing instigation of Major Harrison, as above mentioned. And I may here mention that it has answered admirably up to the present time, the Bolan being still reported as perfectly safe, and traversed by travellers without the least fear or difficulty.

18. In regard to the Murree and Boogtee question it was necessary that the chiefs of those two tribes should present themselves at Jacobabad, and any arrangement made explained to them personally. For a time past the idea had gained favour with some officers on the frontier that it would be best to deal with the Murrees and Boogtees directly, and entirely as independent tribes, ignoring the fact that they owed allegiance to the Khan of Khelat. This I have always considered a grave mistake. It was commencing to dismember a kingdom, and that one it was our best interests to maintain in its completeness. Certain of these Murrees and Boogtees had been taken into the pay of Government on the Punjab frontier, to promote maintenance of peace and order on that side. The Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan had stated that these tribes had acted well up to their engagements, and as the principle of so employing them answered as far as that frontier was concerned, it was desirable not to disturb anything that had been done there, so far as it could be avoided. There was, however, one disadvantage in the system in vogue there. It drew these tribes to look to a separate Government, and separate officers from those on the frontier of Upper Sind, in whose hands was the conduct of political affairs with the Khelat State, and it had the effect of fostering in them a feeling of independence of the Khan of Khelat to which they had already a strong leaning, though outwardly they professed to regard him as their Sovereign, and I believe really that they liked to have him still as such, though it may appear somewhat paradoxical to say so. There is always among these wild people a certain amount of superstitious respect for hereditary authority, and they do not easily throw it off entirely.

19. With a view to bringing these tribes back to proper allegiance, and to improve the Khan's position as much as possible, I directed that they should be summoned by and through the Khan, and instructed the Officiating Political Superintendent accordingly. The Boogtee chief, Goolam Moorteza, obeyed the summons, and has been rewarded accordingly. But the Murree chief made improper and frivolous excuses, and was altogether so impertinent in some of his letters, that I was compelled to cause them to be returned, and he simply told that no communications would be received from him, nor any favour shown to him, until he wrote in a proper style, and what was of first importance until he obeyed the orders that had been sent to him by the Khan. One of his excuses was that whenever he was required to attend anywhere, two persons of importance were sent to bring him, and that when the Khan and the British send two each, he would come, not before. This was most insolent, arrogating to himself a position he was not entitled to, and endeavouring to get it acknowledged by us that he was a person of sufficient importance to be so dealt with. I know as regards procedure on the Sind border that such a thing was never done before, and it would be establishing a very bad precedent to permit it now. While allowing these people every proper consideration and treating them with judicious kindness, it is of the first consequence that they should be kept exactly in their place, and not have any opening given them for assuming what is not really their due. They are quick enough to take advantage of it, if given. On the other hand they are thoroughly able to understand firm straightforward management, and fully respect the power that keeps them in proper order. One of the reasons why Guzzun held aloof was his knowledge that he had misrepresented things most shamefully in regard to the share he and his people had received when the kafilahs were plundered. He had told the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan that they gained very little, and when called upon by my order to restore what they had, or the equivalent, he sent in a few camels, and made no further attempt in the matter. The real facts of the case are, that his people, or the Kahun Murrees, as they are styled, to distinguish them from other branches, received a very large proportion of the plunder, and Guzzun Khan, the Sirdar, got for himself alone one fifth of the whole amount taken from the wretched merchants.

20. I considered that the conduct of the Kahun Murrees in joining in that outrage was particularly bad, because the chief Guzzun was receiving pay from the British Government at the very time they joined in an attack on harmless merchants who were bringing their goods to British market. I therefore ordered last year that until the Murrees had made restitution of the property they had got possession of, they would forfeit the favour of the British Government. A very small portion as above mentioned was given up. I maintain that it is only just and proper the rest or its equivalent should also be surrendered by them, before certainly any new arrangements can be made with the head of the tribe which are intended to benefit them. The Khan of Khelat has lately paid large sums of money to the merchants who suffered the losses. Part of this was recovered from the Sarawan chiefs, but the greatest part has been paid out of his own Treasury, and I am decidedly of opinion we should give no encouragement to men like the Murrees, who have been the cause of the greatest amount of loss to him, unless they first make due restitution.

21. That this can be enforced I am quite certain. It only requires a little firmness and plain speaking to them, and at the same time letting them clearly understand that they will lose by non-compliance. Their not presenting themselves to me through the Khan will cause some delay in the completion of what was to have been done, but that should make no difference, our position is the just one, and should be firmly held, if any real power over these people is to be maintained. I left full instructions with Colonel Loch, now Officiating Political Superintendent, on the subject, as the annexed documents will show, and I am quite satisfied that he will carry them out with becoming decision and judgment.

22. There was nothing to prevent taking the Boogtees into pay under the Mittunkote arrangement. Indeed there was everything in favour of it. Their chief had obeyed orders. He and his people have behaved very well for some time past, and he and they were well deserving of encouragement, at the same time the valuable favour accorded them will have the best effect. It will show to the Murrees how much they have lost by their foolish and improper behaviour.

23. I had instructed the Officiating Political Superintendent to invite Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, to be present at Jacobabad when the proposed arrangements with regard to the Hill tribes were being carried out, as in respect to them he is under the Political Superintendent, and it was right he should see and know what was done. He attended accordingly, but the holding back of the Murrees prevented anything final being settled, and after he had given me a return of all the Hill Belooch he had in his pay on the Punjab Frontier, he was detained no longer but allowed to return to his districts, which Colonel Munro, the Commissioner of the Derajat, had informed me was much required.

24. The meeting with his Highness the Khan was fixed for the 20th February. Accordingly I crossed the desert from Jacobabad, accompanied by Colonel Loch, Officiating Political Superintendent, and escorted by the 1st Regiment Sind Horse, the Mountain Train, and a Wing of the 30th Native Infantry, or Jacobs Rifles. On the 20th visits were interchanged, but purely of ceremony. His Highness came to my camp at noon, accompanied by his Wuzeer and all the principal Sirdars, including Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, Noordeen Mingul, &c. All the British officers were present. I took the opportunity of introducing Colonel Loch, who had lately assumed the office of Political Superintendent, and who had not before met the Khan, asking his Highness to communicate fully and freely with Colonel Loch, as with me, that he would find the interests of both Governments best served by doing so, Colonel Loch having my fullest confidence, and being an officer of high distinction and great experience. In the evening I returned his Highness visit, attended by Colonel Loch, Major Harrison, Mr. Moore, Assistant Commissioner, and the officers commanding regiments.

25. The Khan being desirous of having a perfectly private interview came to my tent next day alone. The conversation that took place was lengthy, but I regret to say entirely unsatisfactory. He came apparently with the determination of trying solely to get effected the release of Shukkur Khan and the two Moonshees, and would not enter fully into any other subject. I at once explained to him that such a thing was impossible, that his Excellency the Viceroy had given him an answer at Sukkur, which for the present must be considered final. When attempt was made to discuss any other subject, he would after talking a short time say it was no use his doing anything, he had no power in the country now, he could not even protect, and keep by him three poor creatures like Shukkur Khan and the Moonshees. I felt perfectly confirmed from his manner that he had been urged on to this by others, and I have since learned that the ladies of his Palace even had been prompted to taunt him with the subject, and urge him to make a stand on it as the one thing that unless agreed to he could and would do nothing. It was also said that when he returned to Bagh from Shahpoor, they were so vexed at his want of success, that they would have nothing to say to him. The principal movers in this are his Highness' mother and sister, both of whom have been among his worst advisers throughout. Finding it was useless to get him to engage in the various important points I desired to discuss with him, I endeavoured to get him to see the absurdity and impropriety of the course he was adopting under evil counsels, but to no effect, he would only return to the one subject. He at one time remarked that every one was against him, that Major Harrison even who had formerly done everything that was correct now listened to stories against him. He thought therefore the only thing left for him was to abdicate. I pointed out to him what he termed stories could no longer be considered such, when they were exemplified by events such as occurred at Khelat last autumn, which must be fresh in his Highness' memory, and that I considered Major Harrison had shown extreme patience, and always acted most sincerely for his, the Khan's best interest. The interview had to be concluded without any good result being arrived at. In the evening, when paying a return private visit, I told again he was adopting a very wrong and foolish course, which must bring upon him the disapproval and disfavour of the Government of India, and that I begged he would reconsider before too late. That it was useless attempting to talk further with him, but I would write to him on the following day to show him what seemed to me best for him to do, and which I intended telling him orally.

26. After his Highness left me in the morning, the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed paid me a visit in accordance with the wish of the Khan that he should do so. The Shahgassee dwelt mainly on the very difficult position he was placed in owing to the unfortunate dislike his Highness the Khan had taken to him since he attended the meeting at Jacobabad in March 1872. He had then endeavoured to do the best for his master and country, and what he had done was he knew approvingly written of by me to the Khan at the time, but in spite of all, designing people had poisoned the Khan's ear against him, and everything he attempted to do now was either viewed with suspicion or secretly thwarted, showing he had lost the confidence of the Khan.* He was quite ready to work on to the last, if he would do any good, but as matters stood he thought it better that he should resign the Wuzeership on returning to Khelat, so that someone else might be appointed whose offices would be more agreeable to the Khan, and with whom the latter would be able to work more frankly. He said he could not account entirely for the change that had taken place in the Khan's demeanour of late years, but it had certainly altered greatly, and nothing now progressed satisfactorily. The disturbances that had broken out between the Khan and the Sirdars had been settled, and had he received the full support of the Khan, he would have easily recovered all the plundered property that was in possession of the Sarawan chiefs. But somehow the Khan would not enter cordially into the matter, so that only a portion was got back, and the remainder of the compensation paid by the Khan to the merchants had to come out of his, the Khan's own Treasury. In spite however of the restoration of peace, and the merchants being satisfied, he regretted to say there was nothing final decided for the general settlement of the country. He should still endeavour to his utmost as long as held office to bring about improvement in this respect, as was his duty, and with God's blessing he hoped matters would mend. I could see however that he was very despondent and that, though naturally a most brave and determined character, the opposition he now always met with, and the reports that were spread about of the Khan's openly shown animosity towards him, as well as stated threats of ill-usage, had had the effect of making even this faithful and good old servant distrustful of his master, and anxious about his own fate. I told him generally I was very sorry to hear what he said, that of his fidelity and zeal for his master's best interests and those of his country,* there could be no doubt these had been displayed in so many instances, but that as his Highness had unhappily chosen to withdraw his confidence from him, and it was impossible that the State duties could be efficiently carried on when the ruler and his first minister were not in perfect accord, I thought his intention of resigning was a wise one; his Highness would then have an opportunity of trying others, and would soon be able to judge from whom he received best counsels and most faithful service.

* It has been reported that the Khan had on one occasion told the Shahgassee in Durbar before every one, that he had no cause to thank him for the arrangements that had been made at Jacobabad.

* Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, the most powerful and influential Sirdar in the country, has repeatedly acknowledged to Major Harrison that the Shahgassee is the only man fit to be Wuzeer, owing to his stanch fidelity and good sound sense, and that he was the only man who could maintain order in the country.

27. It was also desired by the Khan that I should receive the Sirdars of Beloochistan who had accompanied him from Bagh. At the conclusion of the interview with the Shahgassee, he brought and presented them to me at an afternoon Durbar. I took the opportunity of telling them that the restoration of peace in the country was a matter of great gratification to the British Government, and that I trusted it would continue. That what was most desired to be seen was a strong Government in the country, supported by the united good feeling of all people, high and law. This would be best brought about by the Sirdars showing their Sovereign, the Khan, they were always ready and willing to work with and not against him, and so draw his consideration and favour towards them, in which case it would soon be felt by all that their interests were one and not separated, as unfortunately had so much been the case. I also warned them that disturbances such as had occurred in Kutchee close to the British border in 1871–72, disordering everything, could not be tolerated, and should such occur again, the people engaged in them would be regarded as simple robbers and treated accordingly. All present gave their assurance through the head Sirdar, Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, that they would do their very best, and it would not be their fault if peace were again disturbed.

28. When his Highness the Khan paid me the first formal visit, Sirdar Noordeen Mingul accompanied him. In consequence of his persistence in rebellion last year, and his repeated acts of hostility against the Khan, he was removed from the headship of the tribe, a cousin named Meer Mahomed having been appointed by the Khan in his place. This Noorden choose to take offence at, because he was not assigned the place of Sirdar in that Durbar, and stayed away from the Durbar held by the Khan in the evening to receive me. This was most disrespectful towards to Khan, and the more insolent, as the Khan had shown him great favour less than a year before by allowing him to surrender with the guarantee of his life, notwithstanding all his ill-conduct. I noticed his absence at the time, and being afterwards told the reason by Major Harrison, I forbade his, Noordeen, being permitted to accompany the other Sirdars, when they came to pay their respects to me.

29. On the morning of the 22nd I marched from Shahpoor to Minotee, and then addressed the following letter to his Highness the Khan :—

" To his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

" After Compliments.—During the conversation I had with your Highness yesterday I found with much regret that it was impossible to engage your attention on any other subject than one, the release and return to you of the three men who were dismissed from your Highness' service and brought into Sind. Notwithstanding that I at once, on your opening the subject, distinctly informed your Highness that such a request could not be listened to, this matter was repeatedly reverted to by you, and was the only one you were disposed to give full consideration to. His Excellency the Viceroy of India in replying to a similar request at Sukkur, decided ' that to reverse the dismissal of these ' men at present, would only have the effect of weakening your authority and would ' afford encouragement to other evil-doers. Under these circumstances therefore it was ' quite impossible for the British Government to countenance their restoration, though ' at some future time if events proved favourable it might be found possible to reopen ' the question.' The very recentness of the unfortunate events which were brought about by the evil machinations of these men could not have been forgotten by your Highness, and should have shown that there was no reason for the presumption you seemed to entertain that the present was the fitting moment alluded to in the latter part of his Excellency's reply. I can only therefore now again say, as I repeatedly stated yesterday, that the decision of his Excellency the Viceroy rejecting the request for the release of these men must be strictly adhered to, and as your Highness' best friend, I would most strongly urge not only that you should cheerfully accept that decision, but that you should remove from your mind all idea of the probability of any appeal in their behalf being received or listened to, as such expectation most prejudicially affects your actions, and the satisfactory performance of the duties of the high position you hold.

" Perceiving that further conversation in your Highness' present frame of mind would be productive of no good, I considered it best not to prolong my stay at Shahpoor, but to return to Sind, and to lay before you in writing the points which I had wished to have discussed orally with you. They are as follows, and to them I would ask your Highness' best and most careful consideration, and the favour of the expression of your views, after mature thought, on the several points brought forward, that I may submit them to my Government.

" It cannot be expected that the disorders which have so unfortunately prevailed in your Highness' dominions can be remedied all at once. Time must be allowed for this. But if you will devote your earnest attention to this work, and use your utmost endeavours to win the hearts of your Sirdars to yourself, there can be no doubt that success must attend your efforts, that peace and good order will be established in your kingdom, and prosperity be restored to the advantage of yourself and subjects; of this being a happy time for such exertions on your part, there is abundant proof of the reconciliation with your Sirdars effected last year in the present tranquillity in your dominions, and in the important works about to be carried out by the British Government, either in, or in the immediate neighbourhood of your country. I allude to the Grand canal being made to bring water from the Indus at Kusmore to fertilise the present desert part between Sind and Kutchee, which will give employment now, and improved means of subsistence hereafter, to a large number of your people, and to the railway through Sind, which cannot fail to attract merchants from Affghanistan, and very largely increase the traffic by them through your country.

" I have learned with much pleasure from Major Harrison of the good and successful arrangements you have made for the re-opening of the Bolan Pass, and the protection of merchants desirous of following that route. Such improved measures will add largely to your good name, as well as to your advantage, and the officers who have so well carried out your Highness' orders are deserving of the highest commendation.

" The question of permanent arrangements for the safety of the Bolan passage was one I wished particularly to discuss, as my Government is anxious to give all reasonable aid to your Highness in carrying out a measure of so much importance to your country and those on either side of you.

" You have represented to Major Harrison that the subsidy of Rupees 30,000 per annum which you receive from the British Government does not by a considerable sum reimburse you for the loss you sustain by the reduction in the duty tariff agreed to at the time of the Treaty concluded in 1854. Such being the case, I need hardly assure you that a clear statement in this respect will certainly receive every consideration at the hands of Government, and if you will favour me with data showing the amount annually received on this account into the Khelat territory before the Treaty, and the amount realised annually under the new tariff since then, I shall have great pleasure in submitting it to Government for favourable review.

" Meanwhile, with the view of aiding in preserving safety throughout the Bolan, I had intended proposing to you that a sum of Rupees 500 per mensem, or Rupees 6,000 per annum should be paid by the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Sind in your Highness' name to Shere Dil Muzzeranee Murree, who has on former occasions served you well, and is able and willing to undertake the task of protecting travellers through the part of the Bolan he and his tribe inhabit. That a further sum of Rupees 1,000 per mensem, or Rupees 12,000 per annum, should be paid by the same officer also in your Highness' name to the chief of the Sarawans, on condition that certain bodies of horse or footmen be employed to assist in maintaining security in the Bolan. The details of time and mode of payment at Jacobabad to be made afterwards by the Political Superintendent.

" I have proposed the latter arrangement with regard to the Sarawans, first because the Bolan route passes through their lands, and next, which I consider of most importance, because it should be your Highness' object to gain over the Sarawans to your side, and by giving them employment as well as a direct interest in the maintenance of order, draw them away from the temptation of associating with evil disposed characters, who may try to renew disturbances, especially from the habitually discontented and restless Jalawan Sirdar, Noordeen Mingul. By the above means you will be relieved from much care and anxiety, and I should be glad to have your Highness' assent to the proposal.

" It is also the desire of my Government that a portion of the Murree and Boogtee tribes in the hills be taken into service in your Highness' name, with a view of putting a stop to the injury done at times to your province of Kutchee by raids from the hills. The recent misconduct of the former, in the disrespect they showed to you and to the British authorities, render it impossible to show them any liberal consideration now, but should they by subsequent good conduct prove they are sorry for the way they have misbehaved, they may perhaps be re-admitted into favour, and dealt with as considered then most advisable. The Boogtees having followed a more becoming course, and shown themselves anxious to do good service, will be employed at once.

" I would call your Highness' attention to the urgent necessity that exists for early arrangements being made for the proper administration of the rich district of Beyla, now for so many months left without any official to represent and maintain your authority. This is required in justice to your subjects there, but it will likewise tend greatly to your advantage in the largely increased revenue that will come into your Treasury.

" I would also press on your Highness that nothing tends so much to the honour of a king, and to the prosperity of his country, as the careful selection of good governors or Naibs for the different districts. They should be men of known weight and good repute, such as while asserting your authority will also have a just regard for the welfare of your subjects over whom they are placed.

" I regret to have to inform you that I find it utterly impossible that the duties of Wukkeel at Jacobabad can be left longer in the hands of Mahomed Khan, the present holder, and I must beg your Highness will appoint some other person in his place. This man's conduct for some time past has been such as to seriously injure your Highness' interests and good name. Last year during the disturbances then taking place, when he was sent against the rebels in command of your troops, he proved himself an arrant coward and deliberate traitor. Since then he has, as you well know, never ceased to endeavour to misrepresent matters to you with a view of leading your Highness to misunderstand the wishes and actions of the British Government. The Political Superintendent on the frontier will cease to transact business through him, and I would request the early appointment of his successor.

" I took the opportunity of a visit paid me yesterday by your excellent Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, to enjoin on him a steady continuance of the fidelity and zealous exertions he has always shown in your Highness' service, and he assured me, as I was well convinced would be the case, that his best efforts and faithful labours had been and would be at your disposal, even to the sacrifice of his life. At a subsequent Durbar when, with your approval, all your Sirdars paid their respects to me, I publicly enjoined on them that their first duty was true and cordial support to their Sovereign in all things; that they must clearly understand the sole desire of the British Government was that there should be a strong Government and one head in Beloochistan, without which prosperity and happiness was impossible; that the British Government could only regard them as supporters of the Government through the Sovereign, and any favour ever extended to them must be through him, and for him. They all expressed their anxious desire to obey and serve your Highness in all things.

" In conclusion, I will only repeat what I have often said before, that as your oldest and most sincere friend, I have only your Highness' welfare at heart, and that in all I have done and said I have only worked for your good. Major Harrison, who has resided with you so many years now, and is so well acquainted with your people and country, has, as your Highness knows, my fullest confidence, and any advice he may tender to you will most assuredly be only for your benefit. In considering the different points I have mentioned above, I would recommend that you should freely take advantage of the counsel and support he will readily give you, and in the confident hope that you will act in the way that is most beneficial to the interests of yourself and country, I subscribe myself

Your sincere friend and well-wisher,
W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind."

30. In my letter to the Khan I adverted to the question of the deficiency of the present subsidy to meet the loss the Khan has sustained since the introduction of the new schedule of rates on merchandise in transit through his country, because I well know this is a matter that has been reckoned to have added greatly to his difficulties, is a subject of dissatisfaction on his part, and therefore the sooner it is thoroughly cleared up, and rectified, if necessary, the better. Returns from the Khelat Treasury records would at once show whether there is real foundation for the statement, and, if it is proved, I feel confident his Excellency the Viceroy would desire that the cause of complaint should be removed.

31. The proposals to subsidize the Muzzeranee Murrees and Sarawan chiefs partly were mentioned with the view of carrying into effect the arrangement agreed to at the Mittunkote conference. The Kahun and Bijaranee Murrees having failed to present themselves, as directed, were to be left for the present, until by good behaviour and acting up to what was required of them, they showed themselves deserving of being treated with favour and liberality, and that they could be trusted in. The Boogtees had behaved exceedingly well for some years past.

32. The district of Lus Beyla had been without a Governor for more than a year, ever since the Shahgassée Goolam Jan had been forced to fly from it through the treachery of the regular troops. The Khan was constantly urged by Major Harrison last summer, after tranquillity had been restored, to send some suitable person to represent him in this important part of his kingdom, but he would decide nothing then, and has not been able to make up his mind since. The result is the district has been getting into a worse state of disorder every month, and has now become quite unsafe to travel through. There is no one actually in opposition to the Khan and his authority excepting Ali Khan Jamote, and he is a very petty chief, with but a small following. He has taken up his cousin Sirdar Meer Khan's cause merely on family grounds. The disturbances partly proceed from an old clan feud between the Chootahs and the Jamotes, the latter being egged on by Noosherwan Chootah, uncle of the present chief of the former tribe, Sirdar Khan, and who has ever since his brother Oomed Ali's death been doing his best to take the chief power from his nephew. This man Noorshewan has also allied himself with a notorious ill-doer, Deoriah, Bundijo, and the two have lately attacked and partially plundered some small kafilahs of merchants on their way from Kurrachee to Khelat, en route to Afghanistan. These acts have been committed in Khelat territory just beyond the border, across the river Hubb, and it is generally reported they have been prompted by Noorden, the Mingul Sirdar, who advised them to act thus that they also might be paid to keep the road safe.* It is also now stated that Noordeen was instigated to this by people about the Khan, who told him it would help to restore him to favour, because it was what the Khan wished to prove he was right in what he had said about the uselessness of subsidising the Sarawan Sirdars to keep the Bolan route safe. At the time the Khan was addressed, these last-mentioned outrages had not taken place, but the state of Lus Beyla was such as to cause considerable anxiety, and to make it necessary to urge on the Khan the necessity of taking early steps to introduce proper rule there once more. The Roonjahs, one of the principal tribes in Beyla, and some others, had themselves petitioned the Khan to send a governor without delay, whom they would receive well and gladly obey.

* This road would not be used if the Bolan route were made permanently secure.

33. The question of the selection of good officials to hold charge of the different districts was one calling for immediate steps, as little or nothing good had been done in this way since the last rebellion, when the Naibs generally most signally failed in their duty towards their master.

34. The conduct of Mahomed Khan, the Wukkeel at Jacobabad, both during the rebellion and since, had shown how utterly unfit he was for so important a position, and how impossible it was for the Political Superintendent on the frontier to place any confidence in him, or to continue to transact business through him which related to the interests of the British Government and that of Khelat. This man's proceedings at Khelat in the summer of 1871, his treachery towards his master in his dealings with the rebellious Sirdars in the autumn, and cold weather, and all his actions since prove that he only cares for his own selfish ends and his personal aggrandisement. As long as he attained his present object he would not mind what happened, thinking he would be able to right matters afterwards. Added to this, he has lately plainly shown that he entertains most vindictive feelings against the British authorities, and to gratify them would not hesitate as to who he sacrificed. It is the more ungrateful on the part of this man as he has always been treated by the frontier officials with marked favour and consideration, for the sake of his father who preceded him, and also on account of the high position he held as representative of the Khan of Khelat. On my reaching Jacobabad this time I decided not to have anything to do with him, and directed that no more business should be transacted through him. I considered it therefore essentia that the Khan should be requested to appoint another Wukkeel. From the time of my reaching Jacobabad I had refused to let him come before me.

35. His Highness the Khan gave the following reply :—

"From his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

"After Compliments.—I received your friendly letter at a happy moment. In it you intimate that there was no intention of releasing my three servants. My great friend, when I succeeded to the Khanate my late brother's Wuzeer Gungo was in office; he committed no fault whatsoever, and performed his duties in a truthful and honest manner, but of friendship to the British Government I agreed to remove him from his position, and he went to live in Roree. Subsequently he was imprisoned, and only released after having overcome a thousand difficulties to die in his own house.

" Lately it was the pleasure of the English Government to deport three of my servants from Khelat. Although they had committed no fault, each of these men performed their respective duties without interfering in any other person's business, they served me well in every possible way. The removal of these men has injured my reputation throughout the country. In spite of all my representations Major Harrison would not listen to what I had to say; being helpless I had to make them over to the British Government, but told Major Harrison I should discuss the question with the Governor Sahib and the Commissioner in Sind.

" On leaving Khelat for Sukkur, I had great hopes in my heart that I should be allowed to discuss matters connected with the maintenance of order in my country, &c., &c. On visiting the Governor Sahib, I hinted regarding the release of my three servants. My request was not conceded, but I was told that arrangements would be made at some future date. Seeing no attention was paid to this trifling request, I considered how other representations would be treated, and remained silent.

" I have just visited you, my friend, at Shahpoor, and how often did I speak to you regarding my three servants. As you would not listen to what I had to say, no benefit has resulted, and my name has been disgraced. My friend, whatever was in my heart I revealed to you from beginning to end.

" At Khelat, when my afore-mentioned servants were suspended, it was agreed that they might remain undisturbed in their respective homes. At Pusht Khana, in the Moola Pass, I received a letter from Major Harrison, stating that his Government wished these men to live in Sind. I placed them under surveillance, and brought them to Sind as requested by the British Government, though it was a great disgrace to me.

" You, my friend, write that treating my Sirdars with consideration will add to my reputation, and ensure peace, and quiet for my ryots and country. This is true my friend. Last year a treaty was made in your presence to return property belonging to merchants and ryots: what has become of this treaty? I yielded all personal claims. The merchants and ryots have not received anything. You, my friend, know all the circumstances of the case.

" You write a desert canal is to come from Kusmore through uncultivated lands in Sind and Kutchee, and that it will benefit the country and people: also that the railway will be beneficial to merchants and traders. My friend, when visiting you, I talked about my country and all other matters. My country belongs to the British Government, and I am willing to abide by their wishes.

" You request information regarding transit-dues before and after my treaty with the British Government. In reply I beg to state no change has taken place in transit-dues in Affghanistan and other countries, but the British Government reduced the rates in my country to less than one half, causing a loss of 80,000 rupees, and it being their pleasure reduced rates only are taken.

" The British Government, for the protection of the Bolan, have proposed to give Shere Dil Muzeranee Murree Rupees 500 per mensem, and Rupees 1,000 monthly to the Sarawans. My friend, it appears to me that safe transit through the Bolan cannot be ensured until my Government is strong. You know that when my authority was felt and recognized, arrangements for the Bolan were satisfactory: until my power is re-established, transit in the Bolan is difficult. If you carry out what you propose, the Jalawan Sirdars will also expect to be subsidized, and it is a doubtful question whether safety in the Bolan would be ensured. The British Government are masters.

" You have also written about Murrees and Boogtees employment to prevent raiding in Kutchee. Since the Boogtees have been subsidized, they have been quiet and done no injury to my country or ryots. The Murrees are a bad set of people, and if subsidized by your Government and myself, would not refrain from plundering: there is no other remedy except to exterminate them, and carry off their property. The Murrees do not acknowledge my authority, and I do not wish to have anything to do with them. The British Government are masters.

" Regarding what you wrote about Lus Beyla some time ago, I punished the Sirdar of that country, Jam Meer Khan, and drove him out of Beyla. Ali Khan Jam had not power to act as he has done, the disturbances in Beyla were brought about by the Sarawan chiefs. Rebellion at the present time is not merely confined to Beyla, Punchgoor and Kedj are also disaffected. If I had had no other disturbances or work to attend to, I should long ere this have repossessed myself of Lus Beyla.

" You request me to appoint another Wukkeel at Jacobabad. My friend, since the Wukkeelship was first instituted, it has been held by Nawab Mahomed Khan and his father, and from first to last they performed their duties faithfully to both Governments. Their services are known to the whole world. You, my friend, know that when I was at the Noorwah, how faithful Mahomed Khan was, what services he rendered, and that he was prepared to lay down his life for me. The above facts are as clear as the sun. There is no one to equal Mahomed Khan, or suited for the appointment. He has my fullest confidence, and there is no one besides him who would perform the duties of both Governments, especially towards the British Government. If your Government does not agree to this, they are at liberty to appoint who they like, and Mahomed Khan will remain with me, in case people of this country should injure him: if not, he will go to Lehree, of which place he is Naib, if the Government wish it, and guarantee that he will not be molested in any way.

" You write that the Sarawans may be alienated from Noordeen Mingul. My friend, if the present state of affairs is considered strong government, rebellious people will not sever from Noordeen, neither will he sever from them.

" You say that Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed will perform his duties with the same faithfulness, truthfulness, and loyalty that he has always done, also that advice given me by Major Harrison will benefit me; this is true, I have always followed his advice and intend to do so. What I had to say regarding Major Harrison and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed was communicated at Shahpoor.

" My hope was, that I, my country, and resources might some day be of use to your Government in such a way as to add to my name and reputation. When your Government intention was such, it was also well. By the blessing of God all is well here. Comfort my heart by writing to me, &c. &c."

36. This reply was most unsatisfactory. It in fact conveyed nothing beyond a sort of indifferent assent. Major Harrison reported that the delay in answering my letter was caused by the Khan waiting the arrival of Mahomed Khan, late Wukkeel from Jacobabad. The answer was then prepared after confidential consultation with Mahomed Khan, the Kazi of Bagh, and a hanger-on, called Moolla Jooma. These had now become the Khan's chief advisers. I now addressed the Political Superintendent, in the letter below given, and forwarded another khureeta for his Highness the Khan, in the hope that he might be stimulated to some cordial action and to show some real desire to work actively and truly for the good of his people and country, as well as to prove he was really anxious to carry out the Treaty obligations he was under to the British Government.

From the Commissioner in Sind, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, No. 214, dated 10th March 1873.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith copy of a translation of a letter received from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in reply to mine of the 22nd ultimo, and of a further communication addressed by me to his Highness.

His Highness the Khan, in his answer to me, does not give any decided assent to the proposals made to him, but says in reference to the main points the British Government is master. This conveys nothing, and unless he is prepared to heartily join in the course suggested, and to identify himself therewith, there will be little use in attempting to carry any of the measures into effect, and others will have to be adopted.

In the letter which accompanies this, and which I request you will forward by the quickest means to Major Harrison, for delivery to his Highness the Khan, I have simply confined myself to calling on his Highness to state distinctly whether he intends to accept and act on the advice given to him or not.

In presenting this letter, and in any conversation that may occur, Major Harrison should particularly impress on his Highness that the course of conduct he has lately adopted, and persists in following, cannot fail to lead to a change in the friendly feelings, and willing support which have hitherto been invariably extended towards him. His persistence in adhering to men who have been proved to have been acting most injuriously for his interests, and to be utterly unworthy of the confidence of a great ruler, is not merely unbecoming, but it shows he is weak, and that he listens to the words of unreasoning people, who think only of personal matters, not the good of the country. There can be no disgrace in evil counsellors being removed, it can only attach to the selection of such, and to their being taken into marked favour.

" Last year a dangerous rebellion was brought to a favourable conclusion, and quiet restored in his Highness' country, when his own efforts to quell it had proved unsuccessful. What was then done was done by the Commissioner of Sind in his Highness' name, and should have been considered a sacred charge to be carried out to the letter by him, the Khan. Had he acted on the good advice that was tendered to him, all would have ended well, and the plundered property, which has only as yet been partially restored, would all have been given up. The Sirdars have delivered up some, and would have complied fully with the stipulations they had bound themselves to, if firmness and energy had been shown by his Highness, and the advice of his best counsellors had been followed.

"The Boogtees are well behaved, for which his Highness may thank the British authorities on the Frontier. The Murrees would now be made equally so if His Highness would accept the proposals lately set forward. It is not at all intended they should be at once taken into favour, as the instructions left with you will show. A copy of these should be forwarded to Major Harrison for his information, and that he may explain to his Highness the exact plan that is intended.

"Major Harrison should particularly enjoin on his Highness the urgent necessity that exists for early arrangements being made to put the district of Beyla in proper order and bring it under some authority. Recently disturbances have occurred there which are solely attributable to the absence of all governing authority, and not to any distant intrigues, as his Highness would desire to have it understood. Such disturbances, close to the British border, cannot be allowed to continue, and unless prompt measures are taken by his Highness to restore order there, the matter cannot be regarded with indifference. The district of Beyla is a very rich one, and if properly provided for, would add largely to the Khan's revenues. The disregard of this, as lately shown by his Highness, is a significant sign that unconcern and apathy are taking the place of interest and energy in the Government of Khelat.

"As respects the late Wukkeel, Moolla Mahomed Khan, his shameful falseness and treachery have been of late too plainly shown to leave any doubt as to his utter unfitness to be the channel of communication between the Khelat Government and the British authorities on the frontier. I knew his father Wukkeel Moolla Ahmed well, and believe he always worked to the best of his ability for his master's interests and to secure the favour of the authorities he was accredited to. When he died at Jacobabad I was very willing his son should succeed him. But now that that son has forgotten to follow the faithful path of his father, and regards his own selfish ends more than the honour and welfare of his master, or the gratitude he owes the British authorities, it is impossible he should be retained in the office. I see no objection to his residing at Lehree, or anywhere else in Kutchee his Highness may choose to permit, but his Highness should clearly understand that it is not correct or desired that he should hold any confidential position about his, the Khan's person, or proceed in any capacity to Khelat."

"Khureeta, from the Commissioner in Sind to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated 10th March 1873.

"After Compliments.—I have received your Highness' letter dated 3rd Mohurrum, in reply to mine of 23rd February 1873, and regret that its contents can only be regarded as most unsatisfactory, in that they show clearly that you are unable to save yourself from the trammels of evil advisers, and that you pay more attention to the idle talk of foolish persons, than to the sound advice of those who work only for your good.

"I regret extremely to notice that you have so soon forgotten the danger of the position from which you were saved last September, and that you entertain the idea that advantage can come from having about you such low and ill-suited advisers as the Bunnia Gungaram, and the three men who have recently left you.

"The circumstances which rendered Gungaram's removal necessary were fully explained to you at the time by General Jacob and Sir Bartle Frere, and should not have been forgotten. He did your Highness immense injury at the commencement of your reign. The three last-mentioned were doing the same. They are correctly classed with him.

"It is unbecoming to further discuss the removal of these three men, your Highness having been distinctly informed by his Excellency the Viceroy that the decision arrived at in regard to them could not be altered.

"To use many words when grave interests are at stake is not good, and may lead to misunderstanding. I will therefore confine myself now to earnestly urging on your Highness that you should carefully reconsider before too late the course you have recently so unhappily adopted, that you should repel the counsels of those weak and silly people who would lead you to regard petty matters as affairs of first importance, while your rule is falling to pieces from neglect of those who have your honour and welfare at heart, and who have the will and the power to promote the stability of your throne and Government.

"The British Government has no wish to interfere, or to do anything except for the good of yourself and of your country. I have always, as you know, steadily endeavoured to promote both. The present very unsettled state however of your kingdom cannot but be regarded with much concern, and I therefore recently addressed you, pointing out the necessity of remedial measures being adopted, and what appeared to me best to be done. But unless your Highness cordially accepts in its integrity the advice that was proffered, and acts sincerely and truly upon it, as if the thought were originally your own, no advantage can follow from attempts to carry out any of the proposals made.

"The manner in which you convey your concurrence in the proposals I submitted in regard to the protection of trade is not such as can be accepted. The arrangements suggested were only to be carried out in your Highness' name, and for your advantage, and unless you as ruler of the country do take them as your own, and determine to forward them to the best of your power, it is quite useless to engage in them.

"I must therefore ask your Highness to inform me simply whether you desire to act on the advice offered, or whether you decline to accept it, that I may be enabled to place the matter before Government in a clear and certain light, and that it may be seen what arrangements should be made for the future.

"Trusting that you will be guided only by regard for what is best for your people and country, and that the friendly feelings which have so long existed may be strengthened only by the course you will adopt, I subscribe myself, &c. &c."

37. During the time that these letters were passing, the Khan remained at Bagh, Major Harrison reported in his diaries that the Khan had at first only intended to send a courteous acknowledgment of the receipt of my letter, and no steps were taken to prepare a reply until the ex-Wukkeel, Mahomed Khan, arrived from Jacobabad, when the one received was prepared after consultation with Mahomed Khan, the Kazi of Bagh, and the man called Moolla Jooma, who appears to have great influence with the Khan.

38. At a visit the Khan paid Major Harrison on the 28th February, his Highness had expressed a strong wish that Mahomed Khan should accompany him to Khelat, but Major Harrison very properly informed him that he was at liberty to act on his own wishes, but if Mahomed Khan did go to Khelat after what had occurred, it was certain he, Major Harrison, would not do so also. His Highness begged that such might not be the case, as disturbances would infallibly occur directly Major Harrison left. At the above interview Major Harrison did all he could to induce the Khan to take interest in the subjects brought to his notice by me, and talked to him with the greatest kindness and patience, but all to no purpose. The Khan merely repeated that he had no intention of ruling the country or taking any interest in its affairs, until Shukkur Khan and the Moonshees were released; that the British Government, the Shahgassee, and Major Harrison might do what they liked. Major Harrison pointed out to his Highness that the only wish of Government was to see him accept his position as head of the country, and to exercise his authority in such a manner as to ensure peace and quiet in his dominions, and that his position as representative of the British Government merely required he should give friendly advice, and he must disclaim any intention of taking any other. The suggestions regarding the proper settlement of Lus Beyla were referred to, but his Highness doggedly maintained the position he had assumed of being neither willing nor able to rule his country.

39. In spite of these assertions it was found that the Khan was raising another regiment of infantry, the command of which he proposed giving to Farrier Abdool Waheed, late Naib of Dadur, a worthless character. The previous force of about 3,000 men had not been paid for three months, and to raise money to pay them the Khan was forcing the Bunnias in Kutchee, Quettah, and Moostung to buy up his grain, which was causing great discontent. The addition of this other regiment can only add greatly to his difficulties, while he certainly would not need them if he followed the advice given to him. The Bolan passage was quite safe under the arrangements made through the counsel of Major Harrison and the Shahgassee, and the payments proposed to the Sarawan Sirdars and Muzzeranee Murrees would have made the arrangements lasting. In Beyla no regular troops were required, the people, excepting Ali Khan Jamote and his small following, being ready to accept and support any good governor the Khan would send. The Murrees in the hills had expressed a desire to be allowed to come in, but the Khan replied to them that he would have nothing to say to them himself, they might go into Jacobabad, and the British Government might make any arrangements with them if they liked, provided he, the Khan, was not held responsible for the acts of the Murree tribe. He further told them they had made a great mistake in not coming when first sent for, as they would now probably not be received by the officers of the British Government. As far as his own feelings towards them went, he said he would never forget having had to pay Rs. 55,000 on their account—referring to the plundered kafilahs—and that if it was ever in his power, he would punish them most severely.

40. On the 4th March the Sarawan Sirdars with Moolla Mahomed Raisanee were allowed to leave Bagh and return to their homes. On the following Monday, the 10th idem, the Khan granted a private interview to Noordeen Mingul, at which the ex-Wukkeel Mahomed, the Kazi of Bagh, and Moolla Jooma were also present. These people advised that the Khan should appoint Azaad Khan of Kharan* Governor of the whole of Mekran, and his cousin Belooch Khan to be Naib of Punjgoor, whilst Noordeen was assured that no active measures would be taken against Beyla. Next day, the 11th, Major Harrison visited the Khan, who then communicated the intention he had formed about Azaad Khan, who was to be bound down to pay annually Rs. 20,000 into the Treasury. Major Harrison at once begged the Khan to reconsider the question, as Azaad Khan was a treacherous, unreliable person, and his cousin, Belooch Khan, was quite recently an acknowledged feudatory of the Persian Government, pointing out also that such arrangements by his Highness could not but be viewed with indifference by the British Government. His Highness agreed not to act without further consideration, but said that people of Azaad Khan's and Belooch Khan's nature were required for the province of Mekran, as Fukkeer Mahomed, Bezunjao, was the person who had instigated the Sarawans to rebel, and the Kedj and Punjgoor chiefs were altogether beyond control. On the Friday following, the 14th, when the Khan returned Major Harrison's visit, the latter asked him if he had made any appointment with Sirdars Azaad Khan and Belooch Khan to meet him at Sohrab on his way to Khelat. The Khan acknowledged he had invited them. Major Harrison then again pointed out that such measures would be most distasteful to the British Government, as they would most assuredly lead to rebellion and disorder throughout his Highness' dominions. The Khan replied, that though these Nowsherwan Chiefs, Azaad Khan and Belooch Khan were to meet him, it did not follow that they were to be taken into his service, and as regarded contemplated disturbances, they could not be avoided, because neither the chiefs nor people would pay their revenue.

* The Khan's inveterate enemy.

41. The arrangements that were existing in Mekran to which Fukkeer Mahomed had been restored, were made at the recommendation of the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. The proposed alteration was said to emanate from the Khan's new advisers, and the object to be to cause enmity between the Minguls and Bezunjaos in the south, so as to prevent them taking further interest in the Sarawan country in the north. Sirdar Azaad Khan being taken into favour is to alienate him from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. If these new plans are carried out there will be a serious rebellion all through Mekran, as also in the Jalawan country from Kozdar down to Beyla. Major Harrison again urged the Khan to take some steps to restore order and rule in Beyla, but the Khan said he could not manage it, that he could send no troops down there without money, of which he had none. Continued efforts were made in a friendly and quiet manner to induce the Khan to meet present difficulties, and overcome them. The only response that could be obtained from him was that the British Government might do what it liked, he himself was perfectly indifferent to all matters connected with the government of his country, and never intended to take any further interest in them.

42. The Khan, in alluding to the disturbances in Seistan, stated that the Persian Government would soon have a large force in those parts, and punish the rebels. His Highness persists that Sirdar Yacoob Khan has a friendly compact with the Persians, and will never assist his father against them. The Khan informed Major Harrison of his having written to Sirdar Yacoob Khan, but made no allusion to the contents of the letter. Lately the Khan would seem to have taken more interest in Persian affairs and proceedings than he used to do, though the Shahgassee has always steadily declared that he does not believe his Highness has had any direct communication with that Government.

43. On the 15th March the Shahgassee proposed that he should resign the Wuzeer ship on reaching Gundava, and go to Kurrachee, because his Highness had a policy of his own, which he would carry out in spite of any advice that he, the Shahgassee or Major Harrison, may give. The latter remarking on this said that the Khan's contemplated arrangements in Mekran, his interference with affairs at Seebee, and other circumstances, support the Shahgassee's statements, and make him, Major Harrison, doubt the inert attitude the Khan has chosen to assume.

44. The reasons for the Khan adopting the line of conduct he had lately followed were not at all clear. Major Harrison about this time was of opinion that disappointment at not having been more fully assisted in a pecuniary way to enable him to completely coerce the chiefs and keep them down, also an exaggerated idea he had been led by evil counsellors to form of the importance of himself and his country to the British Government in connexion with the now much talked of advance of the Russians towards India, and working on this idea he had only to oppose whatever was suggested to get much larger sums of money given to him. On one occasion he had actually mentioned to Major Harrison that he thought the least the British Government would offer him would be two lakhs of rupees per annum, as the Ameer of Cabul was said to get twelve.

45. I dare say both of the above reasons have a great deal to do with the adverse change that has taken place in the Khan's demeanour. But there can also be no doubt that he has chafed very much at the increase of interference in the affairs of his government which recent events had made necessary, and he did not therefore give the British Agent that confidence and consideration he had formerly so readily yielded. It further appears clear that he is wearied out with 16 years of a disordered reign, and though affairs in his country have been placed on a good footing for him, the rebellious chiefs brought under control, and anxious for repose, the inhabitants of Beyla solicitous that an official should be sent to take charge of that district, Mekran settled and quiet, and the Bolan trade-route made perfectly safe, so that with a regular system laid down, order might easily be thoroughly established, and the state revenues be allowed to recover themselves; the Khan has not the energy or will to engage in the work, and prefers giving heed to any advice which suggests expedients to relieve him from difficulties that may arise.

46. The Shahgassee in discussing these matters with Major Harrison said there seemed only two courses left; one, that the Political Agent should withdraw, he (the Shahgassee) accompanying him, to let the Khan act entirely for himself and realise the true nature of his position, and to manage as he best could; the other, for the Wuzeer to endeavour to carry out what was right, whether the Khan concurred or not, he (the Wuzeer) being supported by the British Agent. Major Harrison at once pointed out that this last scheme could not be thought of for a moment, as he could not either directly or indirectly countenance usurpation of the Khan's powers. It was his duty to give advice, but to interfere no further. Copies of letters from Major Harrison, Nos. 37, 38, and 39, dated respectively the 3rd, 4th, and 5th of February are appended.

47. On the 20th March Major Harrison submitted the Khan's reply to my letter of the 10th idem, and in doing so wrote as follows:—

"In forwarding the accompanying letter from his Highness the Khan, I have the honour to report a conversation that ensued on Monday last in connexion with the various suggestions made by the Commissioner in Sind in his khureeta of the 22nd ultimo.

"His Highness appeared to think the ex-Wukkeel's case of primary importance, and having settled that Naib Mahomed Khan's family should remain at Jelal Khan's Gote, and his Moonshee settle all outstanding revenue matters, he (the Khan) declined further procedure in this business, stating I or the Shahgassee might appoint any one we liked as Wukkeel at Jacobabad. It is needless to state this responsibility was not accepted, and his Highness again urged to nominate some one, with what result may be inferred from his Highness avoiding this subject in toto in the letter now forwarded.

"The second point his Highness discussed was subsidising the Murrees and Sarawan Brahooees, with the view of maintaining order in Kutchee and safe transit through the Bolan. His Highness at first maintained he had fully answered this suggestion, but I told him a general expression that the English Government were masters did not convey anything like cordiality or support, and that it was essential that he did signify his hearty co-operation and assistance before my Government would make any subsidising arrangements. His Highness said he would think over this, but would not hold himself responsible for any further raids that might be committed on Kafilahs by Murrees. Ultimately, through pressure on the Shahgassee's part, his Highness has signified his intended co-operation. How far it may be relied upon is doubtful. His Highness's real feelings towards the Sarawans are well known, and at the present time he is intriguing with the nephews of the Seebee Chief to compass the death of their uncle and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. The abrupt dismissal of the Murree Chief's Wukkeel, reported in Diary No. 10, also shows what his Highness's sentiments are with regard to this tribe.

"The Beyla question was evaded in every possible way, and his Highness still carefully avoids giving the Commissioner in Sind any information what his arrangements are likely to be. I pointed out no difficulty whatever existed, and that re-possession might be easily effected, either by a Brahooee levy or detaching some of his troops, instead of massing them at Khelat. Want of funds, their horses and camels, as also that his Sepoys did not care about the heat, were set forth as insurmountable obstacles. Finally, his Highness informed me, when his heart opened, he might take some interest in the question. On being asked when this might occur, and what it implied, he said it might be years, it might be never, and his heart would only open when the British Government gave him assistance and support, instead of interfering with his Government and domestic affairs. I continued talking on this subject with the greatest patience and kindness, hoping his Highness would take a sensible view of the matter. This part of our conversation, however, ended by his Highness stating he did not care for Kutchee or his immediate possessions, still less for the distant province of Beyla, and that my Government might do what they liked.

"Shortly before leaving, his Highness informed me that I had altered a great deal, and implied that my society was distasteful; formerly he thought I was willing to be influenced, whereas I now tried to influence him and oppose his wishes. I replied my advice at present, as in former years, was for his welfare and the good of his country.

"Circumstances noted in the above and preceding paragraphs show his Highness does not appreciate good advice, as his reply to the Commissioner implies. Everything tends to show that his Highness, whilst professing utter indifference to his position as ruler of the country, is actively following a policy of his own that must end in disaster and rebellion.

"I before submitted Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's suggestion of withdrawal for Government consideration, and I am still of opinion this would be the most advisable course to adopt under present circumstances. His Highness, in spite of all he may write, is not in a friendly mood or willing to take advice; and as far as I can judge from passing events, last year's complications will be revived in an exaggerated form, and may not be so easily adjusted."

48. His Highness the Khan's letter was to the following effect:—

"From his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

"After Compliments.—Your kind letter of the 10th March reached me at a happy time, and I have mastered its contents from beginning to end.

"You write me to send you a distinct answer to each proposition in my former letter. I willingly agree to everything you suggested, and realised that those suggestions were to assist me and benefit my country and people.

"Referring to the Bolan route in connexion with the Murrees and Brahooees, I wrote as I did, fearing results expected would not be realised, viz., the safety of the Bolan through means of the above tribes. The English Government know no dependence can be placed either on the Murrees or Brahooees; however, I am pleased at the prospect of employment being given to the Murrees. Guzzun and Muzeeranee, as also the Sarawan Brahooees, consent to the same, and with God's help will give all the assistance in my power, and use my best endeavours to ensure the success of this scheme.

"You ask whether I accept or refuse the advice you gave on a former occasion. My friend, I never intend to leave the course I have hitherto followed with your Government. The advice you gave in a former letter I accept with a willing heart, and will never act in opposition to good advice given by the British Government.

"Referring to what you wrote about Lus Beyla, my arrangements are made to proceed to Khelat. When I arrive at the latter place you will know what arrangements have been made regarding Beyla. All is well here. Kindly correspond and keep me informed of your welfare."

49. About the same time I received from Colonel Loch, officiating Political Superintendent, the letter below given, and as it is answered at the same time as a further communication was made to his Highness the Khan, it will make the narrative more clear if it is given here. Colonel Loch wrote:—

"I have the honour to forward copy of translation of his Highness the Khan of Khelat's reply to your khureeta of the 22nd ultimo, which I regret to say through an oversight on my part did not accompany his Highness the Khan's vernacular letter, as I had intended; also copies of the letters noted in the margin, from Major Harrison.

Letters Nos. 37, 38, and 39, dated Bagh, the 3rd, 4th, and 5th February 1873.

"In submitting these letters I would beg your particular attention to that portion of Major Harrison's letter No. 38, dated 4th instant, in which he says, 'I would solicit 'Government's consideration to the Shahgassee's first proposition to withdraw and leave 'the Khan to his own devices,' and to request your particular instructions on this subject, as both Major Harrison and the Shahgassee appear so strongly in favour of it.

"From my having so lately taken over charge of the Political Superintendent's office, I am rather diffident in offering an opinion, but from what Major Harrison writes and has explained to me verbally of his Highness the Khan's previous history, his fickleness, his undecided character, his aptness to listen to and act on any bad advice given him by the many evil advisers by whom he is surrounded, his inactivity in governing his own country; his evident wish, as evinced by his action, or rather want of action, regarding the settlement of the Beyla and Murree countries, to allow misrule to continue; his apparent want of faith in the English Government, and consequently his determination to act in direct opposition to the advice so lately given him by you; his inattention to the views of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India regarding the governing of Khelat, his great avidity for money, his steady persistence in requesting the recall of the three Moonshees, and his so publicly honouring and listening to the bad advice given to him by the ex-Wukkeel, Mahomed Khan, so lately dismissed in disgrace from Jacobabad, all tend to show that sooner or later Major Harrison's suggestion, viz., that of withdrawing our Political Agent from his Highness' court, and leaving his Highness and his Sirdars to settle the question of the future government of Khelat amongst themselves, will have to be adopted; and it now remains for you to recommend whether Major Harrison, reinforced by one troop of cavalry under a European officer and two companies of Jacob's Rifles, also under a European officer, should be allowed to accompany his Highness to Khelat, or if the time has arrived when we ought to withdraw our Political Agent. At present Major Harrison has only one troop of cavalry with him.

"Looking at the present aspect of affairs in Khelat, as represented by Major Harrison, I feel sure you will agree with me, that it would not be safe to allow Major Harrison to accompany his Highness with a smaller force than I propose sending. I would however wish it to be borne in mind that in sending this force for the protection of the Political Agent, Khelat, a sum of nearly (40,000) forty thousand rupees will have to be sent with them, as in all likelihood Major Harrison will be absent for eight months, and the great difficulties experienced last year will again be felt unless their pay is sent with the troops.

"Major Harrison reports that his Highness the Khan's troops have not received pay for three months, and consequently are not very well affected towards his Highness, and are getting importunate for their arrears, which he seems to doubt his Highness beingable to give them even when he receives his annual subsidy, as his Highness as well as his son, Meah Mahmood Khan, are both trying to take up large loans.

"Under the circumstances, and recalling to mind the occurrences of last year, I await your instructions as to whether it will be best to allow Major Harrison to proceed to Khelat, taking with him this amount of treasure (which if, as seems to be the case, his Highness' troops are disaffected) might be an incentive to them to mutiny when at Khelat, or at once to withdraw Major Harrison from his Highness's Court, allowing Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to accompany the Political Agent, should the Shahgassee feel disposed."

50. It had now become quite evident that it was utterly useless attempting any further to induce the Khan to act up to what he said; he was ready enough with assent, and assertions of desire to please, but nothing was done to show he would heartily endeavour to carry out what was desired. I therefore addressed the following instructions to Colonel Loch, and sent through him a final letter for his Highness the Khan:—

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter from Gundava, No. 659, dated 8th instant, with accompaniments. Since then, I have received a further letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in reply to the one I wrote to him on the 10th March, in answer to his letter of the 3rd idem.

"In his last communication his Highness the Khan affects to agree cordially to all that had been proposed to him, but as you will observe from my reply, copy of which is herewith forwarded, I find it quite impossible to accept his assurances as being sincere, or to believe that he has any real intention of heartily joining in the course recommended to him. His actions now and for some time past point to exactly contrary conclusions, and I feel sure it would only lead to grievous disappointment, if not worse, were any faith to be attached to these written protestations.

"Of the two proposals submitted by the Shahgassee to Major Harrison, the latter officer was perfectly right in rejecting the second; it would have been engaging in an excessive amount of interference in the affairs of the Government of Khelat, quite contrary to the orders and wishes of Government, and it must have been a course most distasteful to the Khan, and in the end objectionable to those he ought to rule over, but whom by such an arrangement he would really cease to govern.

"The other proposal is certainly the most suitable, and taking into consideration the present state of affairs, the Khan's unfortunate obstinacy, his persistent disregard of the counsel and offices of his Wuzeer, as also of the advice of the Political Agent, at the same time readily following the suggestions of low, unqualified, and irresponsible people, and finally the utter indifference he is displaying as to the good government and state of his kingdom, I am quite of opinion that it is the proper course to adopt, in order that the Khan being left to himself, may gain some practical experience of the folly and inexpediency of the line of conduct he has unfortunately been following of late.

"I have therefore in my letter informed him that no alternative is left, but that Major Harrison should be withdrawn from his Court. The vernacular original is herewith sent, and I have the honour to request that you will forward it to Major Harrison for delivery to his Highness the Khan, and that after having done so, Major Harrison should return with his escort and people into British territory.

"As no advantage will be gained by the Shahgassee attempting to carry on the duties of Wuzeer, and as he has throughout, from the time of his being appointed to the office, which was with the approval of the British authorities most earnestly exerted himself to promote cordial action between the two governments, he should certainly be permitted to accompany Major Harrison if he desires to do so.

"I do not anticipate for a moment that any act of insult or injury will be displayed towards Major Harrison, or his people, if his Highness the Khan could prevent it. But considering the very uncertain state of affairs, and the doubtful condition in which his Highness' troops seem to be, I consider it is a very wise and judicious precaution you have observed, and of which you informed me by telegram, to send the full escort to join Major Harrison at Gundava, the same that was intended to have accompanied him had he moved to Khelat. Your proceedings in that respect have my entire approval, as well as your instructions to Major Harrison to withdraw at any moment should any emeute take place, and to permit the Shahgassee to accompany him, should the latter wish it."

51. To his Highness the Khan was written the following:—

From the Commissioner in Sind, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated 31st March 1873.

"In your Highness' letter dated the 20th Mohurrum (19th March), now received, you express yourself willing to agree most cordially to all the arrangements proposed by me in my letter of the 22nd February, from Minotee, and further you say that, if it pleases God, you will render great assistance, and support in the proposals submitted to you. I wish I could unreservedly accept this is a sincere expression of your Highness' feelings and instructions, but I regret exceedingly to have to say that, judging by your public actions, these expressions are mere words, and that nothing is being done by your Highness which would convey to me the assurance that you are really earnest in a desire to carry out any plans that will conduce to the good of your country, the welfare of your subjects, or the improvement of your Government.

"If such were your true wish, you would have used the services of your legitimate adviser and first officer, your Wuzeer, whose actions have always received the approbation of the British Government, and who has never failed to act with the most perfect fidelity to your Highness, and to devote his best energies in your service. You would have sought and acted upon the advice of the British officer deputed to your Court, who you were informed by his Excellency the Viceroy possessed the confidence of the Government of India. And especially after what occurred last September at Khelat, you would have been careful to avoid resorting to the counsels of low, irresponsible people, who ought never to be allowed near you, who are utterly incapable of doing anything else but lead you to serious disaster, and one of whom I had lately been compelled to inform your Highness could no longer be permitted to transact business with the Frontier Superintendent on account of his disgraceful cowardice and his treacherous conduct, both as regarded your Highness' interests and those of the British Government.

"In spite of all that has been urged on you, I see no sign of your Highness making any effort on your own part to restore order to your troubled country. Repeated outrages are reported to me from Lus Beyla, and lately merchants have been plundered there when following the high road. A year and a half has elapsed since any one representing your authority was in that district, and now you only say arrangements for it shall have your attention after your return to Khelat, notwithstanding that measures for the restoration of order in that part of your dominions had been repeatedly pressed on you by your Highness' proper adviser and by the Political Agent. You have more than once mentioned that your finances were in a very embarrassed state, yet I am informed that your Highness is raising another regiment of infantry, which can only prove further embarrassing burden on your State funds.

"You say peace prevails in your country, and certainly the serious disagreements that existed between yourself and your Sirdars have fortunately been brought to an end, so that this increase to the strength of your regularly maintained troops can in no way be required, and can only be regarded as the reckless procedure of one who cares not how he rules, or what becomes of the interests intrusted to his charge. This increase to your troops also cannot fail to be an element of weakness to your Government, when delays in payment cause dissatisfaction among them, and the means of meeting their just dues are not at your disposal.

"All that has passed lately and is passing now goes to show that it is utterly useless attempting to aid your Highness with advice, or to make your position better by the support afforded to you in the presence of a British officer at your Court. The value and benefit of that support seems not to be appreciated by you now, nor the honour it conveys understood.

"I have, as your Highness is well aware, steadily and earnestly endeavoured to maintain your authority in Beloochistan, and such has always been the desire of the British Government; it is therefore with extreme regret I have come to the conclusion that it is inconsistent with the objects for which a British officer was placed with you, as well as derogatory to the honour of my Government, to allow the Political Agent to remain any longer at your Court.

"I have therefore instructed the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to direct Major Harrison to return to British territory, there to remain until such time as your Highness may be disposed to act more openly and sincerely, to work only with your legitimate advisers and officers, and discarding evil advisers, to endeavour truly and honestly to promote sound and good government in your country, so that your power as ruler may be consolidated and your authority once more respected.

"In the earnest hope that you may speedily free yourself from the unworthy thraldom you have lately fallen into, and that you may revert to the more wholesome procedure of former years, I would still desire to subscribe myself as

Your sincere friend,
W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind."

52. To prevent any chance of ill-advised display on the part of any of the Khan's followers, it was very properly arranged by Colonel Loch that the strengthened escort of cavalry and rifles, which was intended to accompany Major Harrison had he gone to Khelat, should join him at Gundava. They did so by the 3rd April. My letter to his Highness the Khan intimating the withdrawal of the Political Agent reached on the 5th, and was delivered on the 7th. His Highness then asked that he might see Major Harrison, but under the circumstances the latter declined, and bearing in mind what had occurred in September last, I think the course adopted was the best one, viz., Major Harrison taking leave of his Highness by letter, and not at a personal interview. On the evening of the 8th Major Harrison accordingly left Gundava, accompanied by the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, with his relations and friends, amounting to some 150 men. In his report dated 24th April, from Jacobabad, Major Harrison writes:—

"After careful perusal of the Commissioner's letter of the 31st ultimo, addressed to his Highness the Khan, and bearing in mind how utterly the latter had repudiated all he had written and said to induce me not to withdraw from Khelat, as directed, I felt further discussion would be useless, as any promises made would be disregarded on the first convenient opportunity; also that it might be for his Highness' ulterior benefit and the interests of his country to show him, in as marked a manner as possible, that he had for a time at least forfeited the friendship and support of the British Government. With this object in view, I forwarded the Commissioner's letter, with one from myself, a copy of which is annexed, intimating that my instructions would be carried out at once. In the afternoon I was visited by a confidential servant of his Highness, asking whether I would take leave of his Highness, or whether he should visit me. In reply I alluded to that portion of the Commissioner's letter in which his Highness was informed that as he had failed to realise the benefit, support, and honour conveyed in having the presence of a British Officer at his Court, further residence was considered derogatory to my Government. I also mentioned that my instructions were clear and decided, and as the Commissioner in Sind had written all that could be said on the subject, I had taken leave of his Highness in writing, feeling that an interview under the circumstances of the case would be disagreeable to both parties.

"Acting as above was I considered giving effect to the Commissioner's instructions, as also to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General's remark to his Highness the Khan. When alluding to the Khan's position with the British Government in an early part of this letter, I mentioned that withdrawal might be of ultimate benefit. During the past year and a half his Highness' relatives, instigated by certain officials, have done everything they could to mislead the Khan, and create ill-feeling between him and the British Government. Sudden withdrawal left them without a policy of their own, and as far as I can now learn, both his Highness and his evil counsellors are doing their utmost to carry out what the Commissioner had so earnestly and repeatedly urged upon the Khan as the most expedient course to adopt. Whether it will succeed is doubtful, as the Sirdars have no confidence in his Highness, or the people by whom he is influenced.

"Directly it was known that the British Government had withdrawn their Agent, a general raid in Kutchee was contemplated, similar to what occurred in 1871, but my influence with the chiefs, and reminding them of what the Commissioner in Sind had said on the subject, has, I hope, effectually deterred them from creating disturbances close to our Frontier.

"My Wukkeel, after delivering the Commissioner's letter, asked me how it should be answered, so I told him my official connexion with his Highness had ceased after delivery of the letter above alluded to. His Highness has, I have since heard, written two or three letters which were posted at Sukkur, and allowed it to be understood that the departure of the Shahgassee and myself was at his particular request, and that another officer would be shortly appointed to his Court."

"From the Political Agent, Khelat, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

"AFTER COMPLIMENTS.—A letter from the Commissioner in Sind to your address has just arrived, which I now forward to you. From a perusal of the same, you will understand all the circumstances of the case.

"My friend, agreeably to the instructions of my Government, I leave this, and return to British territory, as arranged on a former occasion. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed will accompany me. My kind friend, I write this for your information. All is well."

53. The night before Major Harrison left Gundava, Sirdar Noordeen Mingul had a long interview with the Khan, at which the latter tried to gain over the Sirdar, by promising to make him chief Sirdah of Jalawan, give him the standard, and ask for the release of his brother-in-law, the ex-Jam of Beyla, Sirdar Meer Khan, if he and the Mingul tribe would support him, the Khan. Noordeen agreed at the time, but next day came to Major Harrison's Camp at Nowshera, evidently undetermined what to do. Meeting with no encouragement there, he returned to Gundava and asked for leave to return to his native place, Wudd. This was refused by the Khan then, and several times since. Noordeen has sent to tell the Shahgassee he will escape on the first convenient opportunity. The Khan then requested Noordeen to use his influence to get Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to join the Khan, and to assure the Sirdar that he, the Khan, wished to be on friendly terms with his Sirdars and people. Noordeen declined this, saying Moolla Mahomed had neglected his, Noordeen's, interests when at Jacobabad. His Highness on this sent two mace-bearers with a letter to Moolla Mahomed, but they were ill-treated by some Brahooees on the road, and had to return without delivering the letter. Efforts were then made through a friend of the Sirdar's, who was commissioned to tell the latter the Khan was anxious to carry out what had been arranged at Jacobabad, and would in future adopt a conciliatory policy towards him and the Brahooees. But the Sirdar declined, saying he had no confidence in his Highness, or his promises.

54. The ex-Wukkeel, Mahomed Khan, was sent for from Lehree, where he had gone, to come to Gundava to assist the Khan. He came, and at his instigation, it was said, a letter was written and sent direct to me. But it has never reached, if it was ever despatched. Mahomed Khan then returned to Lehree.

55. Some of the Sirdars asked Major Harrison plainly whether they were at liberty to take possession of Kutchee, now that the British Government had withdrawn. He replied he could not participate in any intrigue against his Highness, but as a friend would remind them of what had been said by the Commissioner at Shahpoor, and what might happen if they created any disturbance on the border. The Sirdars appeared disappointed, saying that if the Khan got back to Khelat they could not protect themselves against tyranny and oppression, for he had forts, guns, &c., while they had only swords. They therefore hoped the British Government would take Kutchee, and allow them to settle down in peace and quietness therein. Major Harrison pointed out that such was not at all contemplated, as his withdrawal showed. The Lehrees and Mahomedshaies appeared disposed to trust in the Khan's promises, but the other Sarawan Sirdars clung to Moolla Mahomed. The Sirdars withholding from plundering in Kutchee is a good sign, showing they are sincere in a desire to carefully regard the expressed wishes of the British Government. Some of the Sarawan Brahooees had collected at Dadur with the intention of plundering in Kutchee, but they were immediately checked by Moolla Mahomed, who said he would not allow of anything of the sort, as it would annoy the British Government.

56. A slight disturbance took place at Seebee, where Moolla Mahomed was staying. He and Buktiar Khan Barookzye had heard of the evil intentions of the latter's nephews, Ackbar Khan, and Sirbullund, sons of the late Misree Khan of Seebee, to kill Moolla Mahomed. People were sent to quietly arrest the two young men, but they got intelligence of it, and received the party with a volley, killing seven men.

57. His Highness the Khan had great difficulty in moving from Gundava, but he was said to have started on the 18th April, and reached Kotree, the first march, that day. He proposed waiting there until he heard the result of the mission of Samundar Lehree, who had been sent by his Highness as a last attempt to win over Moolla Mahomed. Darogha Attah Mahomed, who has charge of the fort of Khelat, and all the Khan's people there, had written to his Highness commenting strongly on the folly of his conduct, and advising him to lose no time in returning to Khelat by the direct, shortest, road across the hills.

58. Major Harrison reached Jacobabad on the 14th April. In accordance with the instructions given him, he was accompanied by the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. The latter brought his family with him, and domestic followers, in all amounting to about 150 persons. This excellent and most faithful old servant of the Khelat Government would not lightly have left the master he had steadily adhered to for fifteen years, ever since he was appointed Wuzeer in 1858; but he felt he was no longer able to do any good, owing to the extreme aversion the Khan had lately taken to him; he was only doing harm by remaining, and it was useless risking his life and that of his people when no advantage could possibly come of it. While by keeping out of the way now, he might be able to give his services hereafter, when the country has passed through the crisis, which must now come on from the Khan having so unfortunately joined in with the vain projects of a few short-sighted men, who have only their own selfish views at heart, and can do nothing for the real good of the country, or the enhancement of the honour and position of the Sovereign. A separate report on the future disposal of the Shahgassee, and his people will be submitted hereafter.

59. It has been with extreme reluctance that I have adopted the course of withdrawing the Political Agent from the side of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, but there was no alternative left. It had been fully intended that this step should be taken last September, but discretionary power was left with the Political Agent, and his Highness pleaded so earnestly that he should not be abandoned to what would then certainly have been a most disastrous fate, at the same time yielding apparently most sincerely, as well as thoroughly to all that was required of him, that Major Harrison used the power given him, and acceded to the Khan's urgent request that he would continue with him. This was fully approved, and it was hoped that the imminent danger which was before him, and from which he so narrowly escaped, would have the effect of opening the Khan's eyes as to where his only real safety rested, and that he would thenceforth carefully eschew evil counsellors, looking only to retain the support of the British Government by following unreservedly the advice that was tendered to him, and by exerting himself to rule with more discrimination and judgment, and with justice and consideration for all.

60. The policy that has been followed from the first in regard to Khelat affairs was to avoid in every possible way direct interference in the general government. His Highness the Khan, Meer Khodadad Khan, was "de facto" and "de jure" King of the country, and we had no more right to dictate to him how he should manage his chiefs and subjects than we had with any other potentate ruling independently over a State. As long as he conformed to the terms of the treaty existing between his Government and that of Her Majesty in India, and as long as our territory was free from aggression, or from disturbances caused by his subjects, we were bound to respect his right to rule in his own country as to him seemed best. Being on friendly, and close terms, and having a Political Agent at his Court, we were in a position to offer advice, whenever it seemed necessary to do so, and it was always freely given, though at the same time care had to be taken that any representations so made should not appear meddlesome or dictatorial. Certainly until lately there was no difficulty found in getting his Highness to receive any suggestions addressed to him, and he promptly acted up to proposals laid before him. His character, as I have often said, is not of the best kind, but he is not different in this respect to the generality of Asiatic rulers, who have been brought up in the strict seclusion of the Harem, and who have seen around them nothing but the exercise of despotic power. He was called to the throne at the early age of 18, before which he had never been allowed to participate in any way in State affairs or public duties, and having at that time the credit of being weak in character, he from the very commencement of his rule was looked upon as a likely object to be moulded to the purposes of that one of the rival powers in the State which should be able to get the upper hand. Other circumstances also militated strongly against his success as a ruler over a very uncivilised restless body of chiefs, owning simply feudal obedience, which had been of a very uncertain and captious nature even to his predecessors. I allude to the fact of the near approach of a strong and settled Government as followed when Sind came under the British Crown, and order and system were brought up to his very boundaries. This had the effect of making any shortcomings in his mode of Government more glaring to, and to be felt more oppressive by, his chiefs and subjects, while the sight of firm and methodical rule made apparent to him, and all, the evils which must always attend the feudal system, wherein so much is left to caprice and chance. The barons being discontented, and unfortunately very poor beside, endeavoured to grasp all the power they could, while the Khan, finding he could not trust to them, and seeing the example in his neighbourhood of order successfully established by means of disciplined and regularly maintained troops, he naturally gave up looking to his unruly nobles for support, and took into his service mercenaries upon whom he thought he would be able to depend more certainly.

61. All this has caused a great social revolution in Khelat, and combined with continued disturbances brought on partly by the ambitious projects of the barons, and partly by the hasty and uncertain management of the Khan, promoted, it may almost be said, a total dismemberment of the body politic. The encouragement so unhappily given during recent years to the disaffected Sirdars had a very pernicious effect, while the interference which then became necessary not only helped to fatally undermine the Khan's authority, but it changed his disposition greatly, turning him from us.

62. Knowing the great importance of having one head in Beloochistan, and anxious that the wishes of Government for the establishment of a strong rule in that country should be fully carried out, I have always been most careful to do only what would help to promote the authority and power of the existing sovereign. The Political Agent, Major Harrison, has most patiently and sedulously worked to the same end, so that the withdrawal of that support to the ruler of Khelat which has been accorded in the form of an Agent at his court for the last 18 years, has not been hastily decided on, and is now only resorted to to save the country from falling into a worse state than it is at present, and to bring about a more healthy condition of affairs. As long as the Khan had something to fall back upon to recover from difficulties he had fallen into, he failed to realise the danger he was in. He will now soon learn how weak are the supports he preferred trusting to, and hard experience will bring home to him the value, indeed, vital necessity to him, of what he has so ill-advisedly thrown away.

63. It is of course impossible to say how long it may be before a serious crisis takes place, but it cannot be staved off any length of time. The Khan's treasury is empty, the troops—his sole dependence now—are in arrears, and will soon be clamorous for pay, and prove an element of extreme danger to him, while he has no one by him of ability, or influence sufficient to provide a remedy. His authority will then cease altogether, and he will either have to abdicate, as he said he proposed doing on return to Khelat, or he will have to fly the country again, if an opening is given for him to do so. He is said to have written and sent me a letter since Major Harrison's withdrawal, but none has reached me as yet, and it is probable he has been unable to make up his mind what to say. The presence of the Shahgassee at Jacobabad will facilitate obtaining good information as to what is passing at the Khan's court and in Beloochistan, and obviate in some degree the difficulties resulting from the absence of a Native Wukkeel, not appointed as yet by his Highness the Khan. On his Highness reaching Khelat, he will be again addressed, requesting a Wukkeel may be placed at Jacobabad to arrange about revenue matters and ordinary business, but beyond that I think nothing more should be done at present as regards our connexion with the Khelat Government. But if his Highness, after he has settled down at Khelat, does not show that he can restore order, and that he is working to that end, it will be necessary for him to be distinctly told that the state of affairs in his kingdom has reached such a stage of disorder and misrule dangerous to neighbours, and destructive of the trade which should pass through it into British territory, that measures would be taken to enforce the order and safety to all, which the Khan has shown himself incapable of bringing about. The subsidy of Rs. 50,000 for this year has been withheld from the Khan, and will be so until he restores order in Beyla, appoints a suitable Wukkeel to reside at Jacobabad, and shows that he really intends acting fully up to the treaty under which that subsidy is allowed.

64. Several serious outrages have been perpetrated lately in Southern Beloochistan, quite close to the British boundary, and on merchants proceeding from Kurrachee to Affghanistan. The leading perpetrators are Nowsherwan Chootah and Dewria Bundhejo, The former is uncle of Sahib Khan, the present chief of the Chootahs, a very large and influential tribe located on the main road between Kurrachee and Khelat. Oomed Ali, the former chief of the Chootahs, and father of Sahib Khan, kept the tribe always in good order, but on his death his younger brother, Nowsherwan, has done his utmost to get the Puggree transferred to him instead of to his nephew, Sahib Khan, to whom it regularly went according to the custom of the country. Noorsherwan has several times attacked his nephew, but generally without success; now he has joined this Dewriah, who has long been noted for his lawless propensities, but had been afraid to engage in them for want of sufficient associates. The two combined have collected together some 60 or 100 reckless characters, and with these have attacked kafilahs directly after they have left British territory on crossing the Hubb river. It would be easy to capture these two men and their followers by means of the Sind police, but as the acts are committed within the Khan of Khelat's territory, he is left to deal with them, and reparation must be exacted from and through him. He has been called upon for immediate restitution of the property, or its equivalent, and punishment of the perpetrators of the outrage. It is generally stated that Nowsherwan and Dewriah have been stimulated to these disorders by Noordeen Mingul, in hope of its provoking our direct interference, and its acting to the disadvantage of the Khan, to whom he is in reality by no means friendly. He also thinks that pressure being brought to bear on the Khan, he will be induced to apply to the British Government for the return to his country of his, Noordeen's, brother-in-law, Sirdar Meer Khan of Beyla.

65. This report has been kept back until it could be made complete. I trust the measures that are detailed in it will meet with the approval of his Excellency the Viceroy.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 2 in No. 154.

No. 171 of 1873.

Political Department.

From the Commissioner in Sind, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, Jacobabad.

Commissioner's Office,
Camp Jacobabad, 25th February 1873.

SIR,

GOVERNMENT having sanctioned a sum of Rs. 32,040 to be expended in making, in the name of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, improved arrangements for peace and security in Kutchee, and for safety on the trade-route through the Bolan Pass from Quettah, adopting as a principle the subsidising system, I have proposed to carry out the arrangements which will be explained below.

2. To aid the Officials on the Punjab Frontier in the southern portion of the Derajat, it appears from a report submitted by Captain Sandeman (copy of which is annexed) that 35 Murree and 20 Boogtee horsemen are entertained and paid monthly by that officer as follows:

35 Murrees at Rs. 20 each	Rs.	700
20 Boogtees at Rs. 20 each	„	400

In addition to the above, a personal allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem is paid to the brother of the Murree Chief, as Jemadar, and Rs. 20 to a Moonshee, also Rs. 100 to the son of the Boogtee Chief, as Jemadar, and Rs. 15 to a Moonshee, or in all—

To the Murrees	Rs.	820
„ Boogtees	„	515
Per mensem	Rs.	1,335
Per annum	Rs.	16,020

3. On the Sind border Colonel Phayre, for the purpose of obtaining information, I conclude, recently took into service hill-men as below:

15 Murrees at Rs. 15 each	Rs.	225
16 Boogtees at Rs. 15 each	„	240
Per mensem	Rs.	465
Per annum	Rs.	5,580

These arrangements will be left as they are.

4. The original idea sketched out by me in 1869 bore reference only to the Murrees and Boogtees, the maintenance of peace and security in Kutchee, and the protection of merchants passing through that plain, but subsequent events have shown that is advisable to assist his Highness the Khan in guarding the line of the Bolan Pass as well as Kutchee.

5. It has been proposed therefore to his Highness the Khan that a sum of Rs. 500 per mensem, or Rs. 6,000 per annum, should be paid by you in his name to Shere Dil Muzzeranee, Murree, who resides on the Bolan, and for some years did good service in securing the safe transit of Kafilas through that Pass. That a further sum of Rs. 1,000 per mensem, or Rs. 12,000 per annum, should be paid in the same manner by you to the Chief of the Sarawans, on condition that certain certain bodies of horse or footmen be employed to assist in maintaining security in the Bolan. The Sarawans generally are very poor and having little or nothing to do just now, they would be sure to make difficulties, as they could easily do, without even its being easily detected, and stoppage in transit would be liable to take place at any time, their Camels lying at the head, as also along the Bolan, and below in the plains of Kutchee. An influential person with five Sowars from both the Sarawan Chief and Shere Dil should always be at Jacobabad with you to enable you to communicate with the chiefs, and for them to receive orders from you. The pay should also be handed monthly over to these deputed persons, in the presence of the Wukkeel of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, who should affix his seal with yours to the Purwana forwarding the pay, as also to the Acquittance Roll, which should be kept in your Office.

6. The present quota of Boogtees to be made up to 40 Sowars by an addition of 24 at Rs. 15 each=Rs. 350 per mensem, or Rs. 4,320 per annum, and a personal allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem, or Rs. 1,200 per annum, to Goolam Moorteza, the Boogtee Sirdar, making a total of new payments to the Boogtees of Rs. 5,520 per annum. Directions with regard to this portion of the subject are given in a separate memorandum.

7. The Murrees under Guzzun, the chief of the whole clan, have now 15 Sowars at Rs. 15 each=Rs. 225 per mensem, or Rs. 2,700 per annum. I had intended to at once increase this number up to 50 Sowars with a personal allowance of Rs. 100 to Guzzun, and of Rs. 50 to Kurrum Khan, head of the Bijaranee branch. Of these 50 Sowars, 30 would be under Guzzun, and 20 under Kurrum Khan, Bijaranee. One influential person with 5 Sowars being present always with you at Jacobabad, and the payments would be made through Sirdar Guzzun in the same way as with the Boogtees. Such payment would only be made during the good behaviour of the tribe, and their abstaining from acts of violence and aggression in the Khan's and British territory, either in the plain or on the line of the Bolan Pass. The extra charge on account of this tribe then would be—

15 Sowars* to Guzzun	Rs. 15 each	-	Rs.	225
20 Sowars to Kurrum Khan	„ „ „	-	„	300
Personal Allowances	„ „ „	-	„	150
Total per mensem		-	„	675
Total per annum		-	„	8,100

* Making 30, including present ones.

But the Sirdar of this tribe, Guzzun, has in the most insolent manner neglected to obey the summons of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and of yours forwarded through the Khan. He has also failed to collect and restore the plundered property of the merchants shared in by himself and tribe, though called upon to do so, and distinctly told that unless he did, favour could not be extended towards him. Under these circumstances it is impossible to accord the same treatment to him and his tribe as has been granted to the Boogtees who have behaved well in all respects. Any further grant to them cannot therefore but be withheld for the present, and if the Chief still persists in his disrespectful and impertinent course, it will be necessary to take from him the present small subsidy of 15 Sowars, but before doing so, I request you will in the first instance refer to me, giving your reasons for desiring the withdrawal. Should the Sirdar, however, come in himself, or send some suitable person to represent him, and should he set to work to restore the plundered property or its equivalent, (he having received himself one fifth of the plunder from one Kafilah) the 15 Sowars might be left to him now, and he told that should his conduct during the current year be such as was satisfactory to you, and he and his tribe abstain from all acts of aggression or violence, either in his Highness' territory of Kutchee, or the Bolan Pass, what had passed would be forgiven and forgotten, and arrangements similar to those now carried into effect with others might be adopted towards him and his tribe.

8. The new scheme when completed would then financially be as follows:

To Shere Dil Muzzeeranee, Murree, per annum	-	Rs.	6,000
„ the Sarawans	-	„	12,000
„ „ Boogtees	-	„	5,520
„ „ Murrees	-	„	8,100
		„	31,620

The balance of Rs. 420 would be at your disposal for any chance expenditure connected with these arrangements.

9. The portion relating to the Boogtees may be carried into effect at once, but the other parts concerning the Muzzeranee Murrees and Sarawans should await the receipt of his Highness the Khan's reply to my letter of the 22nd instant, copy of which was forwarded to you and which may be expected any day.

I have, &c.
W. L. Merewether, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind.

Enclosure 3 in No. 154.

Memorandum.

Most of the sowars given in the list noted below, are employed in police and political duties, though a few are entirely under the orders of the military, and must reside in the posts.

Murree Sowars.

Name of Section.	Number of Sowars.	Cost per Mensem.
		Rs.
Ghazani - - - - - - -	15	300
Bijarani - - - - - - -	5	100
Loharani - - - - - - -	15	300

In addition there is one Jemadar, the brother of Ghuzzun, the Tomandar, who gets Rs. 100 per mensem. There is a Moonshee at Kahun on Rs. 20 per mensem. I allow the Tomandar, when it can be spared, a few puts of grain from the Pahurpur farm.

Boogtee Sowars.

Name of Section.	Cost per Mensem.	Number of Sowars.
		Rs.
Shumalani and Kulpur - - - -	5	100
Mazari - - - - - -	10	200
Nutani - - - - - -	5	100

In addition to the above, the Tomandar's son, Shahbaz, gets Rs. 100 as Jemadar. There is also a Moonshee at Lehaf on Rs. 15. The Tomandar is allowed a certain quantity yearly of grain from Pahurpur, but he can be forced by his agreement to give a certain number of cultivators to entitle him to the grain. A small number of Murree Sowars generally reside at district head-quarters in charge of the Murree Wukkeel, Sahan Khan, who gets 30 Rupees a month.

Two Murree Sowars ought to be stationed at Asmee with Meerun Khan, Chief of the Dreshules. He is responsible for that border. Five Murree Sowars ought to reside at Rojun and Rajunpur. Sometimes two or three do so. They are not in addition to those given below.

Of the Boogtee Sowars, 13 ought to do duty in the posts, but the Mazari Chief on account of some private agreement he has with Goolam Moorteza generally does the duty with Mazaris.

Some seven or eight Mussion Sowars are stationed at Hurrund at the disposal of the Goorchani Chiefs.

There are a few Kudenpur Boogtee Sowars in the posts, but they are entirely under the military.

ROBERT SANDEMAN, Captain,
Deputy Commissioner,
Camp, Jacobabad, 7th February 1873. Dera Gazee Khan.

Enclosure 4 in No. 154.

Memorandum regarding Subsidy to the Boogtee Tribe.

Commissioner's Office, Camp Jacobabad, 24th February 1873.

At present the following Sowars are entertained :—

On the Punjab border, under Captain Sandeman, 20 Sowars at Rs. 20 each,=Rs. 400. Besides the above, Shahbaz Khan, the son of the Boogtee Chief, receives Rs. 200 per mensem as personal allowance, making a total then of Rs. 500.

On the Sind border, 16 Sowars at Rs. 15 each,=Rs. 240. It is proposed to increase this number of Sowars up to 40, by adding 24 Sowars at Rs. 15 each=Rs. 360, and to give the head of the tribe, Goolam Moorteza, a monthly sum of Rs. 100 as personal allowance to himself, making additional Rs. 460, or Rs. 700 in all from the Sind border.

This amount will be paid monthly, in the name or on behalf of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and in presence of his Wukkeel, at Jacobabad, to the Boogtee Chief, Goolam Moorteza, or any person deputed by him, as long as he conducts himself to the satisfaction of the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind.

It will be required from him to prevent any of his tribe plundering or committing outrage in British territory, or in that of his Highness the Khan of Khelat outside the hills. Should any of the tribe so commit themselves, the Sirdar will at once have them seized, and sent prisoners either to his Highness the Khan's officers, or to the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad, as may at the time be required.

The Boogtee Sirdar, Goolam Moorteza, will obtain the earliest and best information of what is going on in his neighbourhood in the hills as to the intentions or movements of other tribes, and communicate it with due quickness to the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind at Jacobabad. He will also do his utmost to assist in protecting the villages and lands on the Teywagh in Kutchee from the incursions of evil-disposed persons.

He will place an influential person with five Sowars at Jacobabad to remain there always with the Political Superintendent to arrange for quick and certain inter-communication.

W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind.

P.S.—The above arrangement to come into effect, as far as payments to be made, from this date (24th February), and the different sums should be paid on the completion of the month for which they are due.

Enclosure 5 in No. 154.

No. 37 of 1873.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

SIR, Camp Bagh, 3rd March 1873.

I HAVE the honour to forward his Highness the Khan's reply to the Commissioner's Khureeta of the 22nd ultimo. The reply was received this morning, and no delay has occurred, except in taking an office copy and making a translation for your information.

In translating the same, I observed that his Excellency the Viceroy is merely called the "Governor Sahib;" as there are words in his Highness' office showing what the address should be, this rudeness is scarcely excusable. There are also one or two passages which are decidedly rude and discourteous.

It is as stated here, but I question whether it was premeditated, and therefore did not refer to it in my reply.
W. L. M.

2. As I propose submitting a report in the course of a day or two, I will not add more on the present occasion.

I have, &c.
C. H. HARRISON, Major,
Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 6 in No. 154.

No. 38 of 1873.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

SIR, Camp Bagh, 4th March 1873.

IN connexion with the concluding paragraph of my letter No. 37, I think it may not be inappropriate on the present occasion to place before you certain reasons which have no doubt tended to make his Highness the Khan unreasonable and dissatisfied, also my opinion regarding the present state of affairs, concluding with a few remarks on his Highness' reply to the Commissioner in Sind's Khureeta dated 22nd February.

2. Referring to the first part of the subject to be discussed, viz.: what reasons can have influenced his Highness, I have no hesitation in stating that his Highness' views regarding the Government of his country differ most materially from the suggestions that have been offered to him by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, the Commissioner in Sind, and myself, and he is disappointed at not having received sufficient pecuniary assistance to carry out coercive measures, the only policy in his Highness' opinion calculated to maintain order in his territory. Early in 1872 his Highness unreservedly delegated his powers to the Commissioner in Sind, but was dissatisfied that a reconciliation was effected in place of putting him into a position to carry out his own policy.

3. Another undoubted reason for his Highness' change of demeanour is that he considered Russian progress and Russian aggression would make him indispensable to the British Government, and that they would be only too glad to subsidise him largely. A day or two ago he informed me that the least my Government could offer him would be ten lacs of rupees per annum, as they gave his Highness the Ameer of Cabul twelve.

4. To proceed to the second part of my report. Until within the last few days affairs were in such a state that no insuperable difficulties existed to prevent peace and quiet being restored throughout Beloochistan ; rebellious chiefs anxious for repose ; Roonjahs at Lus-Beyla solicitous that an official of his Highness should take charge of the province ; safe transit through the Bolan, and difficulties in Mekran adjustable. In spite of these favourable circumstances it has been apparent for some time past that his Highness is more anxious for failure than success, and this induced the Shahgassee to propound two schemes—first, that he and I should be withdrawn, leaving the Khan and Sirdars to settle their own differences ; second, he was prepared to do what was correct in spite of the Khan, if I gave him my support and had an escort sufficiently strong for protection purposes. In reply to this alternative scheme I told the Shahgassee I could not directly or indirectly sanction usurping the Khan's powers, that my duty was merely to give advice, and there responsibility ended. Affairs have not improved since the revival of the ex-Wukkeel of Jacobabad, Mahomed Khan. He now holds the position of chief adviser to his Highness, and is engaged intriguing with the Brahooees and his Highness' force, hoping to succeed to the Wuzeership. Seeing how cordially his Highness has welcomed the ex-Wukkeel, and that he prefers his advice to that of the Shahgassee and myself, I would request Government consideration to the Shahgassee's first proposition to withdraw and leave the Khan to his own devices.

5. In conclusion, I would briefly allude to his Highness' reply to the Commissioner in Sind. As far as I can judge the whole tenor of his Highness' letter is wanting in respect and regard to the British Government, and if taken in conjunction with circumstances in Diary No. 9, shows the contemptible position of incapacity his Highness has chosen to assume, also passive opposition to all assistance and advice.

I have, &c.

C. H. HARRISON, Major,
Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 7 in No. 154.

No. 39 of 1873.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Sind.

SIR, Bagh, 5th March 1873.

AFTER despatching my letter No. 38 to your address, I visited his Highness the Khan, and during the conversation it was apparent he was scarcely satisfied with the reply he had sent to the Commissioner's khureeta, and did not realise what he had said regarding the Sarawans might be considered as a decided refusal of the assistance the British Government were willing to give. His Highness also alluded to the pecuniary state of his affairs. With this premise I will give a brief summary of the conversation.

2. His Highness the Khan asked me somewhat nervously if the Commissioner would keep his reply or send it on, and if so to whom. On my telling him it would in all probability be forwarded for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General, he replied, " I shall get a very severe answer in return."

3. All the Sarawan chiefs were present at his Highness' durbar, and asked permission to take their leave and make preparations for the usual exodus from the plains. His Highness asked me if their departure would not interfere with the arrangements my Government were willing to make, so I told him after the views he had expressed it was doubtful whether the subject would receive further consideration ; to this his Highness replied he had written regarding the Sarawans with the best intentions, as the Jalawans would also expect money, and behave badly if they did not get it. The only people he considered unworthy of being subsidised were the Hill Murrees under Guzzun, and they ought to be exterminated. The Muzeranees he looked upon as Brahooees more than Murrees. After the Sirdars took their departure his Highness informed me if the British Government would give Rs. 30,000 to the Sarawans, Jalawans, and Muzeranees, satisfactory arrangements might be made. He also hoped they would give him two lacs of rupees per annum, as he was literally without funds and was trying to raise Rs. 75,000 to compensate merchants and pay his troops, who were three months in arrears.

4. In conclusion, I would bring to your notice that his Highness' reply to the Commissioner in Sind was drafted by the ex-Wukkeel, Mahomed Khan, and the Kazi of Bagh, and that the former since his arrival at Bagh has tried to persuade his Highness the Khan and some of his officials and native officers that sooner or later they would be treated by the British Government as he had been. I would also remark that his Highness' impecuniosity is a reliable fact. Money is being raised in Kutchee for reasons above specified, and his Highness' eldest son, Meah Mahomed Khan, at Khelat has had to borrow Rs. 6,000 for current expenses. With finances in such a state, hopeless confusion may be anticipated.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

I DO myself the honour to give below copy of a news report received from Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, containing the latest intelligence from Kutchee: —

"Sohrab Khan, at the instigation of the ex-Vakeel, sent a party into the hills to raid the Murrees; they succeeded in carrying off 80 sheep and killed Hyder Loonie Koosh and Moobareck Soomar. The Murree chief remonstrated with Sohrab Khan for having committed this raid, retaliated by carrying off 124 sheep and 26 head of cattle from a place near Chuttur, and intimated to Sohrab Khan that the Murrees would shortly revenge themselves on him. Mahomed Khan was at Lehree a few days ago and wished to entertain 300 Dhoombkee sowars. Sohrab Khan wanted Rupees ten per sowar, but the ex-Vakeel would only give a daily allowance of jowari, which was refused. Mahomed Khan sent for the Kazee of Bagh to Lehree, having something important to communicate. Mahomed Khan has appointed Moollah Jumma Janisheen at Lehree, and is to live himself at Bagh."

From the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to the Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

Political Superintendent's Office,
Jacobabad, 9th May 1873.

SIR,

HAVING so lately assumed political charge of the Frontier Upper Sind district, I do not feel myself in a position from my personal knowledge to furnish a detailed report of Khelat affairs: I have therefore called on Major Harrison, the Political Agent, Khelat, to furnish me with a report on the events which occurred in that State during the past twelve months, which I herewith forward.

2. Just prior to my taking over political charge in the end of January last, Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, and Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dhera Ghazee Khan, had been invited by the Commissioner in Sind, Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., and C.B., to Jacobad, in the beginning of February, where in conjunction with the Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, he intended to decide on the best mode of subsidising the Frontier tribes in accordance with the plan proposed at the Mittunkote conference in 1871, and sanctioned by Government.

3. For this purpose Guzzun Khan, the Murree Tomandar, and Goolam Moorteza, the Boogtee Tomandar, had been summoned through his Highness the Khan of Khelat to attend at Jacobabad. The latter Tomandar obeyed the order, but Guzzun Khan, partly through fear of his being made to disgorge the plunder which he had received when Sher Dil Muzeranee Murree attacked and plundered a kafilah in the Bolan Pass in April and May 1872, and partly from a disinclination to own himself a subject of his Highness the Khan, or to obey any orders sent him through his Highness, did not come to Jacobabad.

4. It was arranged by the Commissioner in Sind that the plan he had proposed for increasing the Boogtee subsidy by taking this Tomandar and 23 Sowars into our pay should be adopted, but as Guzzun Khan had neglected to obey the summons sent him through his Highness, and had written one or two disrespectful letters on the subject to the Commissioner in Sind, and Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, it was determined that no increase of subsidy should be given to the Murrees for the present at least.

5. In the middle of February the Commissioner in Sind, Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., and C.B., accompanied by the Officiating Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and the Political Agent, Khelat, met his Highness the Khan of Khelat at Shahpoor by appointment, for the purpose of discussing a plan the Commissioner in Sind had drawn up for the protection and safe transit of merchants and others travelling through the Bolan Pass and Kutchee, and to this end in the Khan's name subsidizing the Sarawans under Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and the hill Murrees under Sher Dil Muzeranee and Kurum Khan Bijaranee, but his Highness was found to be not only quite impracticable on this, but on every other matter connected with the better government of his country, and the welfare of his subjects, more especially so in the matter of the disorder and misrule prevailing in Lus Beyla, regarding which he refused to listen to any advice or counsel given him. The Commissioner in Sind seeing the condition of the Khan's mind and temper, as well as the manner in which his Highness received all the kindly and wholesome advice given by so old and tried a friend as the Commissioner himself, felt that nothing could be done, and so returned to Jacobabad.

6. After leaving his Highness, the Commissioner in Sind wrote to his Highness, thinking then, that even at the last hour he might be induced to listen to advice, so kindly proferred, but with no better results, as all the Khan's replies showed an apathy, either real or feigned, with regard to his country and subjects hardly to be understood, and a total disregard to all good advice or counsel.

7. Major Harrison reported matters in Khan's Camp getting from bad to worse, and it way decided by the Commissioner in Sind that unless his Highness sent him decisive replies to his communications, Major Harrison was not to leave Kutchee. After this it was found necessary to reinforce Major Harrison's escort, and his Highness with that apathy before remarked on, did not make any attempt to conciliate the Commissioner; he neglected to listen to the advice given him any by any of the British Officials, listening only to the work of those by whom he was surrounded, to wit, the ex-Wukkeel or Jacobabad, Mahomed Khan, a man of very bad character, and a known coward, Mahomed Hyat, the Kazee of Bagh, who bears an equally bad character, Noordeen Mingul, and a few others of a like sort.

8. As matters still appeared to get worse, instead of improving, Major Harrison was ordered by the Commissioner to withdraw and leave the Khan to his own devices. Major Harrison returned to Jacobabad, and the old Shahgassee, finding how matters stood, with as many of his family as could then get away, in all about 200 people, accompanied the Political Agent and came to Jacobabad, where he was given a safe asylum, and where he and his people now are.

9. From what I can learn, Major Harrison having been withdrawn from his Highness' Court, and the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed having left of his own accord, it is the intention of his Highness to act up to the counsel and advice given him by the Commissioner in Sind, so far as it lies in his power, and thus to lead the Commissioner in Sind and Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to suppose that the whole of the disorder and mis-government now prevailing in his Highness' country has been brought about by the obstructiveness of the British officer at his Court, and his old faithful and well-tried Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, whom the British Officers have always found such a true and faithful friend. But up to the present no steps have been taken by his Highness to place some trustworthy person at the head of the Lus Beyla State, on the contrary, as his request that the Jam of Lus Beyla might be released and sent back, was refused, he appears to take no interest in this portion of his kingdom; and although matters have as yet passed off quietly, the road from Kurrachee through the Lus Beyla country is not safe for merchants or other travellers. The detachment posted at Kirtah in the Bolan Pass has, I am informed, been reduced to 80 men, a force quite inadequate for the protection of the traffic by this route.

10. The Boogtees are behaving in the most friendly and becoming manner, and their Tomandar, Goolam Moorteza, and his son, Shabaz Khan, are doing their best, and with the greatest effect, not only to prevent plundering on our Frontier, but to put a stop to the constant feuds which have always existed amongst the various tribes of those half savage hill-men, and although as a rule I do not approve of subsidizing, I believe in the present instance it was necessary to assimilate to a certain extent the system carried on our own and the Punjab Frontier, and so far as we can judge of its working it has had a beneficial effect.

11. In consequence of the misbehaviour of the Murrees in neglecting to obey the Commissioner in Sind's and the Political Superintendent's, Upper Sind Frontier, orders, and in committing one or two overt acts, their subsidy has for the present been entirely stopped, but when they fully understand and appreciate the great benefits there are to be derived from being on good and friendly terms with the British Government, and they contrast their present position with that of the Boogtees, their neighbours, I trust they will come to their senses and beg to be treated in the same way as the Boogtees now are, and in the end with equally good results.

12. In conclusion I would beg to draw your attention to the capital arrangements that were made for the transit of merchandise through the Bolan Pass during the past season, by which a very large number of kafilahs were enabled to pass down safely: traffic however since the 8th ultimo has greatly decreased.

13. I would also beg to point out that although his Highness the Khan has behaved in a most unbecoming manner, and in every way unlike what a Sovereign ought to act, still he has done his best to liquidate the sums due to the plundered merchants, and actually paid in hard cash 95,000 Rupees.

14. In winding up this report I think it my duty to bring to your notice that the present quiet state of Kutchee is solely owing to the wise advice given to the Brahooee Sirdars by Major Harrison, the Political Agent, Khelat, before he left his Highness' Camp: had it not been for this, I am led to believe that by this time the whole of the Sirdars would have been up in arms, and Kutchee would have been plundered from one end of the country to the other.

I have, &c.
FRANCIS LOCH, Colonel,
Political Superintendent, U.S. Frontier.

Enclosure in No. 156.

No. 60 of 1873.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

SIR, Jacobabad, 29th April 1873.

I HAVE the honour to submit the following report regarding Khelat affairs during the years 1872 and 1873.

2. At the close of the last official year hopeless anarchy and confusion existed in the Khelat State. Insurrection commenced at Mustoong; disaffected Sirdars and people having watched their opportunity when most of the troops were on detached duty succeeded in seizing the fort at the above place, but failed in their designs on Khelat and Quettah, no time was lost in meeting the rebels, and after severe fighting they were defeated; unfortunately Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed was too severely wounded to follow up his victory, so the rebels rallied in Kutchee and were joined by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who had been an exile in Candahar. Nawab Mahomed Khan was sent with a well-organized force, and it was confidently expected order would soon be restored. His cowardice however was such that he commenced treating with the rebels instead of punishing them, and as soon as this was known, the outlying provinces of Mekran and Beyla followed the examples set by the Sarawans, and compelled his Highness' representatives with the forces at their disposal to retreat towards Khelat. Disorder in Kutchee had reached a climax, owing to the incapacity of Nawab Mahomed Khan, kafilahs being plundered, and no protection for life or property. Consequently the Commissioner in Sind with Government sanction offered to effect a reconciliation between his Highness and the rebel chiefs, and the former was invited for this purpose to Jacobabad. Not deeming it advisable however to leave Khelat, he gave full powers to the Commissioner in Sind to act on his behalf, and deputed Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to give any assistance that might be required; the latter left Khelat on the 11th February, arrived at Jacobabad on the 1st of March, and was engaged in mediatory arrangements until the early part of April. All the Sarawans Chiefs availed themselves of the Commissioner's invitation to meet him at Jacobabad, and the same consideration was shown to Noordeen Mingul, a Jalawan Chief. He however preferred creating a disturbance in the neighbourhood of Baghwanah, and thought by bombarding Kozdar and plundering a kafilah he would be able to make his own terms and demand the release of his brother-in-law, the ex Jam of Lus Beyla. What success attended his efforts will be subsequently shown.

Commissioner's letter to his Highness the Khan, dated 20th January 1872.

Letter No. 22 of 1872, from Political Agent, Khelat.

3. How carefully inquiry was conducted and how suited, the Commissioners arrangements were to restore peace and quiet, is too well known to need recapitulation, suffice to say that the Shahgassee and Sirdars left Jacobabad on the 10th April, thinking his Highness the Khan would give his cordial support to what had been guaranteed in his name. At Gundava it was stated by the Naib of Kotra, Aitibar Khan, that his Highness was dissatisfied, and the Shahgassee would get into trouble for the assistance he had given the Commissioner. No one however put much confidence in reports circulated by the above Naib, and nothing of interest occurred until we entered the Moollah Pass. I then heard of fresh complications brought about by the Sumalanee Minguls having attacked the Muzeranee Murrees, and that the latter having good cause to believe what had occurred, has at his Highness' instigation revenged themselves on him by attacking kafilahs in the Bolan. The merchants on the first occasion repulsed the Murrees, with trifling loss, but the latter being reinforced by Murrees from different clans, intercepted and plundered a large kafilah near Much and Abigoom. His Highness in writing to me tried to insinuate that the Sumalanees had been instigated to this by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, whilst the latter declared that the raid was originated by his Highness and carried out by his officials at Mustoong and Quettah. With both parties mutually accusing each other, it was difficult to arrive at right conclusions, until some months later, when weight of evidence and his Highness' conduct led me to think the onus of this transaction rested on his Highness and his officials.

4. On the 4th May we arrived at Kozdar, and as Sirdar Noordeen had only raised the siege on hearing of our approach, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed thought it advisable to take active measures against the above chief before proceeding on our road to Khelat. With this object he proceeded to a Mingul village, Ferozeabad, five miles off, and informed Noordeen that if he liked to surrender, give up his Highness' guns, mortars, &c., captured at Beyla, and make good what he had plundered from kafilahs, his life would be spared; these terms were accepted, and the Shahgassee rejoined me with Sirdar Noordeen. No further event of importance occurred until we arrived at Sohrab, where we met Darogah Attah Mahomed and a large force that had been some time before sent from Khelat to assist the Naib of Kozdar against Azaad Khan and Noordeen. The Darogah not being a bold man, refused to leave his camp and risk an engagement, whilst at this place I heard of the second attack on a kafilah alluded to in paragraph No. 3.

Letter No. 73.

5. On the 18th April I left with the Shahgassee and the Darogah, reaching Khelat on the 20th May. After the usual visits of ceremony, I went with the chiefs on the 22nd to visit his Highness, and explained to the latter how greatly the British Government were concerned at the disorder that had prevailed of late through misunderstandings between him and the Sirdars, and hoped as the latter had expressed their sorrow for the past, and a desire to give him their full support in future, he would overlook past faults and grant them the same privileges they had enjoyed in his late brother's reign. His Highness having stated his desire to comply with the above suggestions, as also his appreciation of the Commissioner's kind services, there was every reason to hope that with his Highness' cordial support a satisfactory state of affairs would be rapidly effected. The sincerity of his Highness' sentiments was at once put to the test by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, who openly told the Khan of the Sirdars having expressed their inability to the Commissioner to recover merchants' property without assistance, and he as Wuzeer had therefore guaranteed aid would be forthcoming when required. Consequently he hoped his Highness would at once detach Darogah Attah Mahomed with a suitable force to assist the Sirdars in carrying out what they had undertaken. When the matter was thus placed before his Highness, it soon became apparent what he had stated was for effect, and not with any real wish to support what had been done for him in an honest and cordial manner, as he at once refused to adopt the Shahgassee's suggestion, but for appearance sake detached Naib Abdool Azeez with an inadequate force, allowing, or as it was said instructing, the Naib of Mustoong to prevent what the Sirdars had undertaken being carried out. Failing to see why his Highness should be so blind to his own interests, I inquired from various sources to find out what antagonistic influence was at work, for I had always up to that time found him not only willing to follow any advice that had been given, but grateful for the same; it then transpired that the Wukkeel at Jacobabad, from personal motives, determined to try and thwart the Commissioner's arrangements; having influence in the Zenana with his Highness' mother and sister, and making it the interest of other people to assist him, he kept up constant communication with his Highness all the time the chiefs were at Jacobabad, and so poisoned his Highness' mind with his views and opinions, that he (the Khan) never took the trouble to arrive at right conclusions by careful study of the correspondence placed at his disposal, but adopting other people's ideas, did his utmost to render the Commissioner's arrangements null and void, by passively, if not actively, opposing the Sirdars in carrying out what they had undertaken.

6. With his Highness in this frame of mind, it was discouraging to try and induce him to work out what had been guaranteed in his name. I however urged him, both verbally and in writing, to recover merchants' property, or compensate them for the same, secure the safety of merchants passing through his country, and see justice done to Shere Dil Muzeranee, Murree; this advice was not received in the spirit in which it was intended. His Highness appeared to think the Commissioner's arrangements absolved him from all responsibility regarding the kafilah plundered by the Brahooees, and obstinately maintained he was equally irresponsible regarding merchants plundered by the Murrees, refusing to acknowledge them in any way as his subjects. His Highness was also averse to a fair and honest inquiry regarding the Sumalanee raid, and therefore gave good grounds for believing the statement of Shere Dil regarding the action of his Highness' Naib in this matter.

No. 81 of 1872.

7. A very few days after my arrival at Khelat, his Highness expressed disapproval of the Jacobabad arrangements, stating Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed was much to blame, knowing as he did how impracticable it was for him and the chiefs to live in the same country, also that the latter would never carry out what they had undertaken; everything tended to show that though his Highness had unreservedly delegated his powers to the Commissioner in Sind, he had hoped a less conciliatory settlement would have been arrived at, and that the British Government would have given him assistance in arms and money to carry out coercive measures, the only policy in his Highness' opinion calculated to maintain order. In a friendly but firm manner I pointed out that his Highness' Government could only be on a firm and satisfactory footing by his being on good terms with his Sirdars and people, and this policy was most warmly advocated by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. His Highness however stigmatized it as "Cutcha Lulloo Puttoo Kam," and that he hated the Sirdars so much, that after death if they went to heaven, he should prefer being in hell. A month had not elapsed when his Highness' feelings of resentment towards the Shahgassee, for trying to carry out what had been agreed upon at Jacobabad, culminated in a plot against the old Wuzeer's life, and compelled him to seek safety in my camp. From the 15th June his Highness placed himself unreservedly in the hands of Moonshees Goolam Mahomed and Saleh Mahomed, and Shukkur Khan, and kept up a regular correspondence with the Wukkeel at Jacobabad. The people above-named had influence with his Highness' mother and sister, Beebee Futteh Khatoon, and were admitted to secret conferences at all hours of the day or night. The Moonshees and Shukkur Khan wished to compromise his Highness with the British Government, but their foolish advice to attack my camp was of no avail, owing to the sensible conduct of a native officer, called Faquir Mahomud, who saw what danger his Highness was drifting into. But out of bravado, noisy patrols were sent round our camp, but discontinued when Captain Humphrey arrived with another company of Rifles. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed not feeling at all sure as to the honesty of his Highness' intentions towards himself, asked my advice about getting five or six hundred of the Sarawans to join him. I advised him not do so, as it might be considered he had taken the initiative against his Highness; to this he agreed, but the Sarawans were uneasy regarding their Sirdars, and assembled at Moonguchur so as to join him in case of emergency.

No. 89 of 1872.

8. The unsatisfactory conduct of his Highness having been reported, I received instructions in your letter marginally noted to withdraw to Baghwanah or Kozdar, and there await further instructions. His Highness was also informed what was required by the Government of Bombay, in accompaniment to your Office letter No. 2251 of the 31st August. Darogah Attah Mahomed at this juncture did his utmost to induce his Highness to fulfil the terms of his treaty, and dismiss the Moonshees and Shukkur Khan. Beebee Gunjan and a Pathan merchant, Abdoola Jan, in his Highness' confidence, also urged him to comply with the wishes of the British Government. Through pressure on their part his Highness disbursed

35,000 rupees to merchants plundered by the Sarawans and Noordeen Mingul, but positively refused to dismiss the people above alluded to. There being no other alternative, I made every arrangement to march on Sunday, the 15th September, and went late on the afternoon of the 14th to take leave of his Highness.

Diary No. 32 of 1872.

After a protracted interview his Highness yielded the point, and as he gave a written guarantee which induced me to believe he had realised what a false position he had placed himself in, I agreed to defer my departure until his Highness could make arrangements to accompany me. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed also agreed to leave my camp and return to his duties.

9. From the 15th his Highness was most cordial, and appeared anxious to conform in every way with the wishes of Government. We marched on the 7th, and on arrival at Gundava proceeded by invitation to meet his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General at Sukkur on the 4th November. At the interview which took place on the afternoon of the 4th, his Excellency the Viceroy spoke very seriously to his Highness, informing him it was far from probable the same consideration would be shown on a future occasion, at the same time to show what had occurred had been condoned, and hope existed that his protestations of loyalty and anxiety to please the British Government would be proved by following a wiser course than he had lately pursued. He and his retinue were presented with very handsome khilluts. His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, when returning the Khan's visit, informed him of the conversation at his Durbar having been placed on record, and that a copy of the same would be forwarded for his information.

10. The marked distinction with which his Highness had been received spread far and wide, and ought to have induced him to shake off all evil influences and realise who were his true friends.

11. As we passed through Jacobabad en route to Gundava, his Highness without pressure of any kind handed over the Moonshees and Shukkur Khan. Unfortunately, however, the Wukkeel Mahomed Khan had constant interviews with him, and must have submitted his views and opinions to his Highness' mother and sister, for on arrival at Gundava they abused and insulted him for having given up the Moonshees and Shukkur Khan, and so irritated him that he at once reverted to the procedure which had almost necessitated my withdrawal from Khelat. Remonstrances checked this outbreak of feeling to a certain extent, as his Highness hoped to meet the Commissioner in the course of a month or so; in fact, when I was able to give him an approximate date when such a meeting might take place, he was amenable to reason, but had not accepted the responsibility devolving on him by treaty regarding the Muzeranees and other Murrees. On the Commissioner writing to his Highness declining to meet him until he had compensated all merchants plundered in his territory, immediate action was taken in the matter; those plundered by Murrees compromised their claims (vide Diary No. 6 of 1873), whilst others had been liquidated to a certain extent, or arrangements of a satisfactory nature made. His Highness being thus enabled to make a favourable report, I conveyed his reply without delay to Jacobabad, and in consideration of his Highness' compliance with what had been stipulated, he was invited to meet the Commissioner at Shahpoor.

12. His Highness the Khan and Doctor Bowman arrived at Shahpoor on the 18th February, and suitable arrangements were made to receive the Commissioner on the 20th. Ceremonious visits were paid, and on the following day both his Highness the Khan and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed had private interviews with the Commissioner. The latter, perceiving further conversation with his Highness would be productive of no good, left Shahpoor and wrote * at considerable length to his Highness, explaining why he had been obliged to curtail the visit, and asked his Highness' careful consideration and expression of opinion on subjects that would have been discussed orally had he been inclined to do so. His Highness deferred replying to this communication for some days, and ultimately despatched an answer, drafted by the ex-Wukkeel and the Kazee of Bagh, which had to be seriously noticed by the Commissioner, and induced his Highness to effect a cordial assent to all that had been proposed. The Commissioner, however, could not accept these assurances as being sincere. His Highness' procedure then and for some time previous being opposed to all friendly relations, orders were therefore issued to withdraw from his Highness' Court.

Diary No. 8 of 1873.

* 22nd July.

13. Whilst the above correspondence was going on I tried to induce his Highness to follow the Commissioner's suggestions regarding the province of Lus Beyla, and also pointed out the advantages he would derive by my Government subsidising the Boogtees, Murrees, and Sarawans. Goolam Moorteza, the Boogtee chief, having visited his Highness, arrangements with his tribe were duly carried out. His Highness would not, however, have anything to say to the Murrees, and dismissed the Sirdar's agent, as reported in Diary No. 10 of 1873.

14. From the time his Highness left Shahpoor he assumed an air of utter indifference as to what might occur, stating the British Government might do what they liked, as he was indifferent to all matters connected with the government of his country, and had no intention of taking further interest in state affairs. This sentiment was fully acted up to when I urged his Highness to comply with the Commissioner's wish regarding Lus Beyla.

No. 44 of 1873, from Political Agent, Khelat.

15. In letter marginally noted I stated that no insuperable difficulties existed to prevent peace and quiet being re-established throughout Beloochistan. His Highness when writing to the Commissioner would not admit such to be the case, and was about to make arrangements in Mekran which will, if carried out, verify his statements regarding the above province. What those arrangements were I reported in Diary No. 11 of 1873.

Political Superintendent's No. 38 of 1873.
His Highness' letter to Commissioner in Sind, forwarded 3rd March 1873.

16. The province of Lus Beyla has been in an unsettled state since 1871. The Roonjahs have for some time past been most anxious that his Highness should repossess the country and put an end to faction fighting. How his Highness has disregarded all advice, and failed to undertake what was easy of accomplishment, is too well known to need further remark.

17. The harvest in Kutchee has been abundant, so much so as to seriously affect the revenue. Bunniahs would not willingly purchase his Highness' grain. He, however, compelled them to do so, and though the rates were moderate, the procedure was considered tyrannical and caused great dissatisfaction.

18. By placing an intelligent and respectable man, Abdool Azeez, at Dadur, as Naib, and occupying Kirta with a detachment of regular troops, safe transit through the Bolan was ensured.

19. Being about to withdraw from his Highness' court, I tried to find out from Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and other people what policy his Highness would be likely to adopt, and I was told every effort was being made by his Highness the Khan, the ex-Wukkeel, and Kazee of Bagh to conciliate the Sirdars and people, and that they were in fact carrying out for their own safety and welfare the very policy they had obstinately opposed during the past year. Most of the Sirdars, knowing that the Khan and ex-Wukkeel will only adhere to their promises so long as it suits their convenience, are not likely to place themselves in his Highness' power, and disturbances will occur sooner or later directly it was known I was withdrawn. Several Sirdars asked if they might plunder Kutchee. So I reminded them of what the Commissioner had said at Shahpoor, and as they are all anxious to comply with the wishes of our Government, particularly Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, they will, I feel sure, avoid, if possible, making any disturbance on the border, and not interfere with merchants passing through the country.

2. The unfortunate breach between his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars, worked by designing people, seems to have made the Khan utterly unreasonable. The Sirdars behaved very well in not disturbing Kutchee, but there must be serious disturbances above the Pass before long which will decide the fate of the Khan. Major Harrison has shown great patience and good temper throughout, and under most difficult circumstances, and the Commissioner trusts that officer's proceedings may meet with the approval of his Excellency the Viceroy.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In forwarding the accompanying documents * for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy, I have the honour to state that until matters have more developed themselves at Khelat, and until a final decision can be come to by his Excellency as to the course that should be adopted towards his Highness the Khan, I consider it advisable simply to address the letter of warning to him, copy of which is annexed. To the Sirdars I could only, for the present at all events, continue the injunctions I have always given them, that they should abstain from taking the initiative in disturbances, and while they do so any representations from them will have due consideration. The present system of government followed by the Khan of Khelat cannot possibly last, and will probably come to an end in a month or so. The Sirdars have therefore only to hold quietly aloof and leave affairs to run of themselves; by this there will be the least amount of disturbance and injury to the people when the crisis does come.

2. With regard to the outrages that have lately taken place in Lus Beyla, on which a separate report is being submitted, I have directed the Political Superintendent to call on his Highness the Khan for immediate reparation, in either the restoration of the property plundered or payment of its equivalent and the punishment of the perpetrators.

Enclosure 1 in No. 157.

No. 1220, dated Jacobabad, 3rd May 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

I have the honour to forward herewith a letter in the vernacular to your address, received from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, also vernacular letter and translation from him to myself, and my reply to the same, and one to the address of Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat.

2. Before leaving his Highness the Khan's camp, Major Harrison advised all the Sirdars to keep quiet, to prevent their followers committing any overt or foolish acts, to respect the rights of merchants and other travellers, as well as the innocent and harmless cultivators; and up to the present, I am happy to say, they have listened to the good advice given, and abstained from plundering or oppressing innocent inhabitants, or creating any disturbances in Kutchee.

3. I would beg to draw your attention to that portion of the Sirdar's letter in which he says: "His Highness has now confiscated hereditary lands belonging to the Raisanees, "ignored his arrangements with the British Government, and again commenced tyranny "and oppression on all his subjects. My only hope is in your Government; for this "reason I wish to point out to you that I shall be in no way to blame if those who are "oppressed create disturbances as the only chance of saving their lives, and hope, should "anything occur, you will not be annoyed with me."

4. From what I have learnt from various quarters, I believe what Sirdar Moolla Mahomed states regarding the Raisanees' hereditary land being confiscated and many of the Khan's subjects being oppressed, to be perfectly true, and all this I am led to suspect is brought about by the advice and assistance of the ex-Vakeel Mahomed Khan, who is still at Lehree.

5. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's brother-in-law, Meer Aladad Khan, informed me that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was particularly anxious to be allowed to find an asylum in British territory; but this I do not think would be advisable, as it would not only give him hopes and pretensions for the future, but most probably in the present unsettled state of affairs would lead the rest of the Sirdars and others to suppose the British Government were going to espouse their cause in opposition to that of his Highness the Khan, and thus the same state of disorder and anarchy which prevailed so lately in his Highness' dominions might again be brought about.

6. In replying to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's letter, I considered it most advisable neither to hold out any hopes of assistance nor of an asylum in British territory being given him or any of the other Sirdars, but merely to impress on him the good advice given him and the other Sirdars by Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, in the hope that this might induce them to remain quiet for some little time longer, so that the disturbances which I fear must eventually take place in Kutchee may be delayed at least for a time.

Enclosure 2 in No. 157.

No. 61, dated Jacobabad, 30th April 1873.

From Political Agent, Khelat, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to forward original letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to my address, with translation of the same.

Enclosure 3 in No. 157.

Dated 26th Sufur 1290 = 24th April 1873.

From Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to Political Agent, Khelat.

YOU know well that the Commissioner in Sind, as a well-wisher of his Highness the Khan, and regardful of the interests of the country, handed us over obedient to the Khan, and that we have committed no fault up to the present time, but served his Highness heart and soul. His Highness has broken the arrangement he made with the British Government, and confiscated jaghire lands belonging to the Raisanees at Lehree. I wrote to you regarding this, and in reply you wrote that you had been recalled by the Commissioner and were about to leave the country. I have written to the Commissioner in Sind and Colonel F. Loch of the oppressions and tyranny recommenced by his Highness. You are aware of this, and that those who have been oppressed may in self-defence create disturbances; we have in no way acted against the Commissioner's orders, but remained obediently in his Highness' service. All our future hopes rest on the British Government. His Highness failed to perceive that the Commissioner's treaty was for the good of this country. He has now recommenced his tyranny and oppression, and confiscated Raisanee lands at Lehree; so if those who are oppressed create disturbances the Commissioner in Sind and British Government must not be angry with me. For this reason I have written to you.

After your departure his Highness the Khan sent me two orders by Ali Yar Khan Raisanee, as also a verbal communication through Sumundar Lehree. I have sent copies of all the correspondence, &c., and from perusing the same you will understand all the circumstances of the case. I have sent my brother-in-law, Meer Aladad Khan, to you, and he will communicate certain matters verbally that I have explained to him. Kindly look upon him as a trustworthy person. Always consider me your well-wisher, and gratify me by occasionally writing. May your health and wealth increase, &c. &c.

Enclosure 4 in No. 157.

Dated 26th Sufur 1290 = 24th April 1873.

From Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

You are well aware of my circumstances, and that his Highness the Khan committed every kind of oppression on the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars until they became so disaffected that the Commissioner in Sind sent for us to Jacobabad and made arrangement for the welfare of our country, viz., that in future his Highness would treat the Sirdars properly, committing no act of tyranny or oppression, and we in return were to cheerfully afford him our services. Agreeably to this understanding, we joined his Highness the Khan and remained with the latter until he visited the Commissioner at Shapur, when the latter again made further arrangements calculated to ensure peace to his Highness the Khan, as also content and prosperity to his subjects. His Highness has now confiscated hereditary lands belonging to the Raisanees, ignored his arrangements with the British Government, and again commenced tyranny and oppression on all his subjects. My only hope is in your Government; for this reason I wish to point out to you that I shall be in no way to blame if those who are oppressed create disturbances as the only chance of saving their lives; and hope, should anything occur, you will not be annoyed with me, but consider me always the servant and well-wisher of your Government. You and Major Harrison are well aware what kindness his Highness is likely to show us. His only wish and desire is to injure us; it was therefore necessary to petition you on the subject.

After Major Harrison's departure from Gundava, his Highness twice sent letters to me by Ali Yar Khan Raisanee, as also a verbal message by Sumundar Lehree. I send copies of the correspondence for your perusal, as also substance of verbal communication, from perusal of which you will understand all the circumstances of the case. I send my brother-in-law, Meer Aladad Khan, who is authorised to represent matters verbally. Kindly look upon him as a trustworthy person, and that what he says may be relied upon. The British Government have many well-wishers. Consider me one of them, and show me consideration by writing to me of your welfare, &c. May your prosperity always increase.

Enclosure 5 in No. 157.

Dated 10th Sufur 1290 = 8th April 1873.

From his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.

You should trust in my kindness. I now send Ali Yar Khan Raisanee to you. I agree to the arrangements made by my friend the Commissioner in Sind. You may enjoy all you had in my late brother's reign, and should serve me truly and faithfully. You are my chief Sirdar and well-wisher. God forbid that I should do you or anyone else any injury. Accept my service; I have your interests under consideration; it is necessary for you to assist me truly and faithfully, and to rest assured that my kindness towards yourself will daily increase. Do not doubt what I have written.

Enclosure 6 in No. 157.

Dated 15th Sufur 1290 = 13th April 1873.

From Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

CHERISHER of the poor. By your kindness the letter sent by Ali Yar Khan Raisanee has reached me, and was to the following effect, viz., that your Highness agreed to the arrangements made by the Commissioner in Sind, and that it was necessary for us to take service with you. Cherisher of the poor! may God preserve you in your kindness. My petition is that God has given you great sense and wisdom, and it is therefore unnecessary to give you advice. It, however, appears to me that it was inexpedient for the Saheb * to have left your country; if it pleases your heart having done so, you are master. Your Highness states you agree to the Commissioner's arrangements; so do we, for you are our legitimate sovereign. When you treat us kindly we shall serve you to the best of our power. Consider me your humble servant and well-wisher. Show me kindness, and may God increase your wealth and prosperity.

* Major Harrison.

Enclosure 7 in No. 157.

Message from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, through Sumundar Lehree.

You are the head chief and well-wisher of my Government; it is necessary for you to mount your horse and join me, as I will treat you with kindness that cannot be realised.

Enclosure 8 in No. 157.

Reply to the above.

I HAVE no other remedy. Your Highness being the legitimate descendant of our sovereigns, distrusting you I cannot come, for this reason:—First, you swore to me on the Koran, but ignored your oath and tried to injure me; second, you agreed to abide by arrangements made by the British Government, but have not done so. How, therefore, can I trust you sufficiently to mount my horse and join you as directed. We shall remain quietly and watch in what way your kindness will be shown.

Enclosure 9 in No. 157.

Dated 19th Sufur 1290 = 19th April 1873.

From his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.

I RECEIVED your truthful letter, and there can be no doubt of your being my well-wisher. Ali Yar Khan informed me regarding your welfare, &c. From the very first I have always looked upon you as my well-wisher, and consequently again send Ali Yar Khan to you, who will communicate verbally what is going on here. Trust him. Everything is well here. On receipt of this note believe that my kindness towards yourself will daily increase, and that it behoves you to act on what I have written.

Enclosure 10 in No. 157.

Dated 26th Sufur 1290 = 24th April 1873.

Verbal communication from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, through Ali Yar Khan.

You are my head Sirdar; have no other thought but trust in me, and proceed at once by the Bolan to join Khelat. You will be treated kindly and considerately in every way.

Enclosure 11 in No. 157.

Remark by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed.

ALI YAR KHAN is still with me, and I have not answered his Highness' letter. In the Commissioner's letter there is a postscript, substance of which Ali Yar Khan will communicate to you.

This postscript does not appear anywhere.
(Signed) W. L. M.,
Commissioner in Sind.

Enclosure 12 in No. 157.

Dated Jacobabad, 3rd May 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.

I HAVE received your letter of the 24th ultimo, and it has given me much gratification to learn that you and the other Sirdars have acted up so well to the sound counsel given you by Major Harrison, the Political Agent, Khelat, before leaving his Highness the Khan's camp. I have received your letter and its accompaniments to my address, also one to the Commissioner in Sind, all of which have been forwarded to Sir William Merewether, C.B., K.C.S.I., and when his reply to them has been received the same will be communicated to you. Until the Commissioner makes known his wishes I can give you no counsel or advice better than that already given you by the Political Agent, Khelat, namely, not only to keep quiet yourself and to commit no overt act, for which you might have to answer hereafter, but to persuade the other Sirdars and your own people to follow in the same course.

Whatever you do, I recommended you to bear in mind what the Commissioner in Sind, when at Shapur in February, attempted to impress on all the Sirdars, and to prevent any disturbances taking place in Kutchee, for, as you and the other Sirdars well know, should any disturbances and plunderings take place in that country, it will be put down by the British Government with a strong hand. My advice to you is to remain quiet yourself, and to keep the other Sirdars and your followers from committing any evil or stupid acts, respecting rights of merchants, as also harmless and inoffensive cultivators.

Enclosure 13 in No. 157.

Dated 26th Sufur 1290 = 24th April 1873.

From Moolla Mahomed Khan Raisanee to Commissioner in Sind.

IT is known to you what descriptions of oppressions and hardships were practised by his Highness the Khan of Khelat on myself and all the other Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars. In order to put an end to this, and to introduce better government in Beloochistan, you were kind enough to propose measures, according to which I, with all the other Sirdars, presented ourselves before his Highness the Khan, and commenced to render him service and obey his orders. We were also present at Shapur before you in company with the Khan, and have done all we could since then to propitiate his Highness the Khan. Notwithstanding this, you may have learnt that after his departure from Shapur he confiscated the hereditary holdings of all the Raisanees at Lehree. I informed Major Harrison of these new oppressions of the Khan, mentioning at the same time that we look to British Government to redress our grievances, and that we consider ourselves attached to British Government. Major Harrison in reply wrote to me that he was called back and was to leave. Nothing, however, was done for us. Now I beg to state that these renewed acts of tyranny by the Khan on my Raj and Ooloos are likely to be productive of mischief by the disturbed people from fear of their own lives. As I consider myself attached to and a well-wisher of the British Government, I trust I will not incur their displeasure if disturbances take place. The Khan has entirely failed to carry out the good arrangements concluded by you for the peace of the country and for his own welfare. You may also be aware that on marching from Gundava the Khan sent me two letters by Ali Yar Khan Raisanee, and also sent me oral messages through Samundar Khan Lehree; what I wrote in reply to his Highness the Khan, or told to the messenger, is detailed in the accompanying copy. I in every respect consider myself an humble servant of your own and that of the British Government, and I trust I will be distinguished with the honour of being favoured with your kind letters.

Enclosure 14 in No. 157.

Dated 26th Sufur 1290 = 24th April 1873.

From Moolla Mahomed Khan Raisanee to Commissioner in Sind.

It may be in your Honour's recollection that last year, in my depositions given before you, I had fully represented the want of confidence in Meer Khodadad Khan, the oppressions and breach of faith committed by him, and the circumstances under which he had forfeited any reliance whatever being placed on his oaths or words. As you are the greatest British representative, and hold an august position, with full authority from Government, we had great confidence in your judgment and promises. The best policy of a ruler is always to maintain his word and carry out his promises firmly. Bearing this principle in mind, I carried out your wishes and acted up to your advice, by having presented myself before his Highness the Khan. According to your decision, it was declared that his Highness the Khan should behave well, regulating his proceedings by the counsel of the British agent and his own Wuzeer, and that he should act in the interest of his subjects, Raj and Ooloos. Now he has done exactly the reverse, having reverted to his old habits by confiscating the holdings of the Raj and by violating the British arrangements. He has been oppressing his ryots, Hindus and Mahomedans, in various ways; he has entirely ignored your advice and has behaved fraudulently to the British Government. He follows the advice of Mahomed Khan, son of Moollah Ahmed, Vakeel, and several other low-bred individuals, such as Kazee Mahomed Hayat and other evil-minded persons; he has placed the reins of government in their hands. The Agent and the Khan's Wuzeer, disgusted at his deceit and other misbehaviour, have retired to Jacobabad. I therefore beg to remark, for your consideration, that the Khan has proved himself ungrateful for the many favours of the British Government, and discarded the British counsel. The reward received for the long and good service of his Wuzeer is already known to you; what hopes can then be entertained by us? It is evident that his Highness the Khan is not able to manage the country, and will never be so. We Sirdars, Sarawans and Jalawans, &c., lament exceedingly, and feel surprised that, notwithstanding the repeated cautions of the British Government, the Khan fails to carry out their wishes, and has been unable to maintain peace in his country. Now all we Sirdars are particularly obedient to the British Government, and would be satisfied with what that paramount power may wish to do for our welfare. We all are quite disgusted with the Khan's acts, but hope to continue to meet the wishes of the British Government. We beg that your Honour, as representative of the British power, will render us assistance in order to procure a better government and further our welfare. This will spread the fame of the British Government far and wide, and will have the best effect on the people of other countries. Owing to want of confidence in the Khan disturbances and complications are prevalent in the country and the kafila routes are stopped. The Khan will not be able to mend matters, and the interference of the British Government is needed. All are well acquainted with the Khan's deeds. It is hoped immediate measures will be taken, and we await your reply.

Enclosure 15 in No. 157.

Dated Kurrachee, 19th May 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.

I HAVE received your two letters forwarded through Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and in reply have to inform you that I have heard with much pleasure how wisely and well you have followed the good advice so judiciously given you by Major Harrison.

2. Such disturbances as occurred eighteen months ago do most injury to the poor and harmless, most injuriously affecting the prosperity of your country and fellow-beings. They can never help to support the cause of any wrongs that may have been experienced, and a recurrence of them will always be viewed with extreme displeasure by the British Government, who will, in consequence of them, be prevented from listening to any just complaints, which otherwise might have received attention.

3. You should all join especially in seeing that the safety of travellers and merchants passing through your country should be sacredly preserved. The honour of yourselves and your country is closely involved in this, as well as the advantages which trade invariably brings with it.

4. As long as you follow the wise course you have now adopted you may rest fully assured that no effort on my part shall be wanting to promote the well-being of yourself and of the other Sirdars of Beloochistan, and to obtain, at the hands of your sovereign, proper recognition of the rights, privileges, and consideration you are justly entitled to.

Enclosure 16 in No. 157.

No. 468, dated Kurrachee, 19th May 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1220, dated the 3rd instant, with accompaniments from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, and in reply to inform you that I quite approve of the answer you gave to that Sirdar, and that the views you express in your letter are exactly those which should be followed in the state of affairs at present existing in Beloochistan.

2. It will be necessary to watch the course of events most carefully, and to obtain the best and earliest information in regard to all that is passing in the country. Major Harrison, having the assistance of the Shahgassee at Jacobabad, should be able to manage this part well. His political diaries should be continued as before.

3. I enclose two letters, with translations, for your information, one to the address of his Highness the Khan, the other to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, and have the honour to request that you will cause them to be forwarded to their respective destinations.

Enclosure 17 in No. 157.

Dated Kurrachee, 19th May 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

A LITTLE more than a year ago your Highness' country was torn by rebellion. Your authority was reduced to the lowest, and your throne was in extreme danger. The offer of mediation between your Highness and your disaffected Sirdars was accepted by you. All power, as if you yourself were present, was confided in me by you, and you agreed to abide by the decision arrived at. That decision restored peace and order to your country. It was in no way derogatory to your honour, and though it was punitory to the Sirdars they cheerfully accepted it. For every reason, in strict honour and in sound policy, the terms of that decision should have been most closely and faithfully adhered to by you, while the Sirdars have endeavoured to honourably fulfil their part. I regret now to learn that your Highness has deliberately broken the solemn pledge you gave, in that you have caused to be confiscated certain hereditary lands at Lehree belonging to the Raisanee tribe, in the possession of which they were confirmed by the decision before mentioned. There are also grave complaints of other acts of oppression and misrule.

2. It is now my duty to warn your Highness that the above breach of faith, the renewed complaints of misgovernment, and the general disordered state of your country, so inju-riously affecting trade communications, cannot be lightly considered, or be a matter of indifference to the Government of India, to whom I have now reported the whole circumstances, and whose instructions I shall have the honour of communicating hereafter.

No. 158.

Dated Jacobabad, 10th May 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

I HAVE the honour to forward for your information the following news just received from Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat :—

His Highness the Khan of Khelat reached Khelat by the Tehree route in eleven days. Darogah Attah Mahomed met the Khan at Kurgan near Ibattaji. Sirdar Noordeen was presented with a khillut at Mur, recognised as the Jalawan Sirdar, and allowed to return to Wud. His Highness entered Khelat about the 27th of last month.

The ex-Vakeel Mahomed Khan and the Kazi of Bagh met at Lehree to try and entertain Belooch levies for the protection of Kutchee, but every one refused to serve. The Mugzees and Rinds were called upon to furnish 200 sowars, but only sent fifteen or twenty men.

Heavy rain has fallen about Khelat, but no cultivation possible, all the zemindars having been pressed to build stables for his Highness' horses.

It is rumoured that the raiding in Lus Beyla has taken place at the instigation of the ex-Vakeel Mahomed Khan, who represented to his Highness that if three or four kafilahs were plundered, the Commissioner in Sind would remonstrate, and all his Highness would then have to do would be to acknowlege his inability to restore order, and solicit the pardon and release of the Jam of Beyla. By following this policy Noordeen Mingul's support might be relied on.

I am unable at present to say what degree of truth there is in the foregoing rumour, but in a few days hope to know.

No. 159.

No. 1140, dated Jacobabad, 29th April 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

I DO myself the honour to bring the following before you, in the hope that you may be induced to bring the same favourably to the notice of Government.

2. When the Political Agent was withdrawn from the Court of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in the beginning of the present month, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and some of his relatives, in all about 200 persons, were compelled to seek protection in British territory.

3. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has extensive inam lands both in the neighbourhood of Khelat and Kutchee, the latter situated on the bank of the Sirwah Canal, which the Shahgassee represents would yield a fair income if a cutting from the above could be granted to him, but this, from the present condition of the Sirwah, cannot be sanctioned. Situated, however, as the Shahgassee is, it is more than probable that his Highness will confiscate the above lands, as well as any hereditary possessions Wullee Mahomed may have.

4. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed as Wuzeer received certain grants which gave him an income of twenty thousand rupees per annum; but his hospitality to all classes of people has been such for years past that he has always lived up to his income. I do not propose to support all who have accompanied the Shahgassee, but to mark the esteem and respect with which the Shahgassee has always been received by the British Government on account of his long and faithful services to his master the Khan, and the assistance which he has always rendered the British, I would beg to recommend that he be granted personal allowance during such time as he is forced to remain in British territory, and I feel sure all classes in Beloochistan would appreciate some such token of regard being shown to the well-tried and faithful old Wuzeer.

5. To meet such an expenditure no extra budget would be required, as during such time as Major Harrison and Surgeon Bowman are withdrawn from the Khelat Court their travelling allowance of four hundred and fifty rupees per mensem, contingent allowance averaging about fifty rupees per mensem, and limited toshakhana expenditure about two thousand four hundred rupees per annum, would be available; thus making in all a sum of seven hundred rupees per mensem, six hundred of which might be paid to the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed without putting Government to any extra expense, leaving a margin for any trifling contingencies in the Agency, for so soon as Major Harrison is able to return to the Court of his Highness the Khan of Khelat the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed would of course accompany him, and his monthly allowance would then stop.

6. Trusting you will take a favourable view of the old Wuzeer's case.

Enclosure in No. 159.

No. 476, dated Kurrachee, 21st May 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter No. 1140 of the 29th ultimo, I have the honour to inform you that your proposals with regard to the personal allowance of Rs. six hundred per mensem to be made to the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed meet with my entire approval, and I have to request that you will make payments accordingly to the Shahgassee, in anticipation of the sanction of Government, to be considered as commencing from the date of his arrival at Jacobabad.

2. In all probability all the lands previously held by the Shahgassee in Kutchee or elsewhere will be resumed by the Khan of Khelat, including those on the Sirwah Canal mentioned in the 3rd paragraph of your letter; but should they not be, the question arises whether the Sirwah Canal can give the water necessary for the proposed cultivation. On this point you should refer to the Executive Engineer in charge of that canal, who will be able to say whether there will be a sufficiency of water to allow of a new branch being taken off.

No. 477, dated Kurrachee, 21st May 1873.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies submitted to Government. As the allowance to the Shahgassee involves no new or additional expenditure, and as it will cease when the funds temporarily appropriated for this purpose are again required for what they were originally granted, I have sanctioned the Political Superintendent's proposal, and directed it to be carried into effect, in anticipation of the sanction of Government, otherwise the Shahgassee might be greatly inconvenienced. It has often before been mentioned, but may be repeated here, this excellent Sirdar was appointed Wuzeer at Jacobabad in 1858, when his Highness the Khan was on a visit there to meet the Commissioner in Sind. It was done with the full approval of the Political Superintendent at the time, General Jacob, and of the then Commissioner in Sind, Sir Bartle Frere. Indeed, both those officers urged strongly on the Khan that the Shahgassee would prove the best adviser and most faithful servant he could select, to which the Khan assented, and the appointment was afterwards ratified at Gundava in presence of all the Sirdars of Beloochistan. With unswerving fidelity to his master, and thorough honesty of purpose in respect to his own Government and country, the Shahgassee has never failed to carefully regard the wishes and interests of the British Government, and to act most cordially and sincerely with the Political Agent placed at the Court of his master the Khan. He, therefore, I think, deserves every consideration at our hands, especially when it is recollected that his present exile from his country is, in a great measure, brought about by his earnest endeavours to induce his master to follow implicitly the course recommended by the British officials.

No. 485, dated Kurrachee, 23rd May 1873.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

WITH reference to Letter No. 815P., Foreign Department, I have the honour to state that the outrages recently committed on the Kafila route between Kurrachee and Khelat are as follows:

2. On the 21st March it was reported by a Shikarpooree merchant named Mengraj Mal wullud Motumal, residing in Kurrachee, that a kafila consisting of 80 camels, with from 30 to 35 camelmen, which was on its way from Kurrachee to Khelat carrying cloth and other merchandize, had been attacked a little beyond the Hubb in Khelat territory, and a camel with its load carried off. A man of the name of Taj Mahomed Brahooee, belonging to the Kafila with others, pursued the robbers and came up with them; shots were exchanged, when Taj Mahomed was killed. The camel was recovered but the load was taken off by the robbers. About the same time a laden camel was carried off from a Kafila bringing wool to Kurrachee from Khelat. This occurred at almost the same place, and was the act of the same band, consisting of twelve robbers, followers of Nowsherwan Chotah and Dewriah Bundejo. Amongst the twelve the following were recognized:— Bahardin Bundejo, Lukhmir Bundejo, Nubbu Bundejo, and Hussein Bhalul Chotah.

3. A few days afterwards Nowsherwan and Dewriah's followers robbed some Pathans travelling along the road within Khelat territory of four loaded donkeys.

4. Two other outrages were committed towards the end of March by the same people. In one case two Brahooees were said to have been robbed of property valued at Rupees 1,200, and in the second, Rupees 60 in cash and Rupees 10 worth of cloth were taken from a Pathan.

5. In the beginning of April Mahomed Khan Brahooee, a pensioned havildar of the Belooch regiment, was robbed of Rupees 1,250 in cash, and ornaments, when on his way to his home in Beloochistan.

6. About the same time a kafila of Candahar and Khelat merchants, carrying cloth, sugar, &c., were set upon by some thirty armed men directly after crossing the Hubb river and getting into Khelat territory. They, however, drove off the robbers without losing anything. On the 5th April a similar occurrence took place with the same result.

7. Towards the end of April a kafila belonging to Mahomed Deen Khan, Pathan, proceeding en route to Candahar, was plundered in Khelat territory, about 60 miles after leaving the British border. The kafila consisted of 100 camels with 55 men. The robbers, armed with swords and guns, mustered some 80 strong. Two camels were killed at the first onslaught. The kafila people tried to beat off their assailants with stones, when the robbers fired a second time, killing Zinda Shah, a Syed, resident of Shawlcote, and wounding a Brahooee, a Pathan, and seven other men severely. Altogether 13 camels were either killed or carried off. The value of the merchandize stolen is not known, the owners not being present.

8. Another kafila belonging to one Hazee Mahomed, merchant, started from Kurrachee for Khelat about the middle of April. Shortly after entering Khelat territory it was attacked and plundered of property of the aggregate value of Rupees 5,869-11-0, according to a list submitted at the time. They found resistance was of no avail and offered none, the robbers threatening to kill them if they did.

9. Directly the first outrage was reported, all merchants were warned against attempting the route across the Hubb through Lus Beyla, on account of the disturbed state of the country, and advised to go through Sind and Kutchee, up the Bolan, which was quite safe. All the after-departures were in spite of this warning, and merchants ran the risk of their own free will. This, however, does not absolve the Khan of Khelat from the blame of having his country in such a state as to admit of such outrages being committed without punishment immediately following. I at once instructed the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to call on the Khan of Khelat for restitution of the property or its equivalent, and the punishment of the perpetrators, but nothing has yet been done that I have heard of.

10. The directors of these outrages are Nowsherwan Chotah and Dewriah Bundejo. The former is brother of Oomed Ali, the late chief of the Chotah tribe, one of the largest on the Khelat border, their possessions extending from near Kurrachee up to the latitude of Larkhana. On Oomed Ali's death, a few years ago, he was succeeded in the Sirdarship by his son Sahib Khan, quite a young man. Nowsherwan at first tried to gain influence over his nephew, but during the last five years he has gone further and endeavoured to oust his nephew from the Sirdarship of the tribe. The mass of the Chotahs having a natural reverence for hereditary right, oppose Nowsherwan's pretensions, and support Sahib Khan, the legitimate head. For a time Nowsherwan was allowed to reside in British territory, but as he only took advantage of his secure position to molest his nephew, whenever opportunity offered, he was refused further asylum. Since then he has been moving about in Khelat territory with a few followers, joining anyone who would act with him against his nephew and clan, or in any disturbances that were going on.

11. Dewriah is a chief of the Bundejos, a minor clan residing on the west side of the Hubb, and very inferior in status and strength to the Chotahs. This man had been for long a notorious robber, engaging in petty plundering from neighbouring clans. About three years ago he declared he would become a reformed character, and was allowed to pay his respects in my camp, when I was marching along the Hubb. He promised then most solemnly to live in peace with his neighbours for the future, and kept his word, I must say, until lately, when he was led away by Nowsherwan and prompted by others to engage once more in disorderly practices. Neither of these men have any influence in the country, and have certainly not more than 60 or 80 followers at present. But if they can ensure plunder to any who join them, their bands will soon increase, and prove most injurious to trade and the peacefully disposed. Their proceedings are quite distinct from those of Ali Khan Jamote, who has never plundered merchants, but merely acts in opposition to the Khan of Khelat in hopes of bringing about the return of his cousin, Meer Khan, the ex-Jam of Lus Beyla. But as Ali Khan has an old standing feud with the main clan of Chotahs he occasionally engages in hostilities with them, in which Nowsherwan is always ready to offer his services. I think, however, there is little doubt that Nowsherwan and Dewriah have been instigated to act as they have done by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, and intriguers about the Khan to still further complicate the present unhealthy state of affairs in Beloochistan.

12. The dwelling-places of Nowsherwan and Dewriah are only just beyond the Hubb, the boundary between Sind and Beloochistan, and are well known. They could be easily seized by our police; but as these deeds of outrage are committed within the territory of the Khan of Khelat, I consider that sovereign should be held responsible for them and he required to make compensation as well as put an end to such disorderly practices.

13. The police posts on the frontier have been strengthened and orders given to them to put down immediately any disturbances that may occur near their beats, and arrest the people engaged in them.

No. 161.

No. 489, dated Kurrachee, 23rd May 1873.

from Commissioner in Sind, to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department. (Extract)

In reply to letter No. 839P, dated the 2nd instant, from the Under-Secretary, Captain Henderson, I have the honour to forward copies of Khelat Diaries Nos. 8 to 10, 14, 15, and 16. I regret that the omission to despatch these had been overlooked.

* * * * * *

Enclosure 1 in No. 161.

Diary No. 8 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 23rd February 1873.

His Highness the Khan left Bagh on the 17th, accompanied by Dr. Bowman, and proceeded to Shapur viâ Janoo to meet the Commissioner in Sind, arriving at the first-named place on the evening of the 17th. In his Highness' retinue were the principal Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars.

The Commissioner in Sind and Political Superintendent arrived on the morning of the 20th and were received with the ceremony usual on such occasion. About noon his Highness and chiefs were received by the Commissioner in Sind at a Durbar attended by all officers. Robes of honour were presented to his Highness and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, as also presents for Highness' three sons. At 5 p.m. the Commissioner in Sind and Political Superintendent, with heads of departments, returned his Highness' visit. Horses, riding camels, &c., &c., &c., were presented. All his Highness' chiefs were present, except Noordeen Mingul, who refused to attend.

On Thursday the Commissioner had private interviews with his Highness the Khan and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, as also a Durbar for the Sirdars in the evening; the Commissioner in Sind, Political Superintendent, and Assistant Commissioner paid a friendly visit to take leave of his Highness.

On Friday it was reported that a section of the Muzzerani tribe of Murrees had attempted to intercept a kafila in the Bolan, but were repulsed by the merchants and followed up without delay by Naib Abdool Aziz and the Kirta outpost, who arrested all concerned, 40 in number. Copies of original reports with translations were forwarded under cover of letter No. 32 of the 21st February 1873, for the Political Superintendent's information.

On Saturday the Commissioner, Political Superintendent, and party left for Jacobabad viâ Manuti.

His Highness left for Bagh viâ Janoo on Sunday morning.

I have been visited on two occasions by Syed Fazul Shah, who calls himself the Murree Chief's Vakeel. His statements have been so contradictory that it is useless to record anything. He seems most anxious to attribute all misunderstandings regarding Guzzun* to the ignorance and incapacity of his Moonshee, and states that the Sirdar and leading men are anxious for employment and quite willing to pay their respects to the British Government and his Highness the Khan. Syed Fazul Shah had left Khan before Guzzun's impertinent letters were returned to him.

* A Murree chief, who failed to visit the Commissioner in Sind at Jacobabad in January last.

Transit through the Bolan is safe and satisfactory.

Two men were killed at Poolajee by some Murrees during the past week.

Enclosure 2 in No. 161.

Diary No. 9 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 1st March 1873.

A khureeta from the Commissioner in Sind was delivered to his Highness the Khan on Tuesday the 25th, requesting the latter's serious consideration to subjects that would have been discussed at the private interview at "Shapur," had he not discouraged all conversation except that which related to the release of Shukur Khan and the Moonshees.

A reply to the above khureeta has been daily solicited. His Highness at first maintained that no answer beyond a courteous acknowledgment was necessary, and no steps were taken regarding a reply until the arrival of Mahomed Khan, ex-Vakeel, from Jacobabad; since then several rough drafts have been written and destroyed. I am am daily led to understand that a fair copy will be sent to me for transmission to Government.

On Thursday afternoon, Mahomed Khan above alluded to arrived and was cordially welcomed by his Highness the Khan and is now chief adviser; for appearance sake, little or no communication takes place in the day-time except through the Kazee of Bagh and a man called Moollah Jumma. After dark Mahomed Khan visits his Highness and letters of a secret nature are written by the former's Moonshees, and forwarded to their destination.

On Friday I was visited by his Highness; he particularly solicited that Mahomed

Khan should accompany him to Khelat. I replied he was at liberty to consult his own wishes and interests, but as my views and opinions were not in accordance with the ex-Vakeel's I should have to ask the Government to excuse my accompanying him to Khelat. His Highness begged me on no account to do anything of the sort, as there would be a general disturbance directly I left. Kutchee not being considered a safe refuge for Mahomed Khan, his Highness said he should advise him to settle at Bhawalpur, so that if he, the Khan, were driven out of the country he would have some one to live with.

At this interview I did all I could to induce his Highness to take an interest in the subjects brought to his notice by the Commissioner in Sind, and talked to him with the greatest kindness and patience, all to no purpose however, for he reiterated the substance of his private conversation with the Commissioner, stating he had no intention of ruling the country or taking an interest in affairs until Shukur Khan and the Moonshees were released; that the British Government, the Shahgassee, and myself might do what we liked. I pointed out to his Highness that the only wish of my Government was to see him accept his position as head of the country, and to exercise his authority in such a manner as to ensure peace and quiet in his country, and that my position as representative of the British Government was to give him friendly advice, and I begged to disclaim any other.

The Commissioner in Sind's suggestions regarding Lus Beyla, appointing another Vakeel at Jacobadad, &c. were discussed, but his Highness maintained the position he has assumed of being neither willing nor able to rule his country.

Syed Fazul Shah, the Murree Chief's Vakeel, has been here some days. His Highness is sceptical as to the advantages of subsidising, and therefore declined to receive Guzzun; at the same time he expressed himself willing to send men of position to escort the Murree Chief direct to Jacobabad for the British Government to make any arrangements they may desire, provided he, the Khan, is not held responsible for the acts of the Murree tribe.

His Highness is raising another infantry regiment, which is to be commanded by Farrier Abdool Wahud, late Naib of Dadur. His present force, about 3,000, have not been paid for three months, and to raise sufficient money to pay them and meet present requirements he is forcing Baniahs in Kutchee, Quettah, and Mustoong to buy his grain. Great discontent is felt at this act of oppression.

A kossid from Candahar has just passed through the Bolan, and reports that Naib Abdool Aziz's arrangements are so satisfactory that solitary people may go through the pass with perfect safety, halting wherever they like to sleep or cook their food. Several kafilas have passed through, and others are en route.

Meer Mahomed, Mingul Sirdar, whilst visiting me on Saturday, mentioned he had just received information from Beyla, stating that Ali Khan Jamote and Sirdar Ibrahim Khan Roonjao had quarrelled; three Roonjaos were killed, and further disturbances were most likely to occur.

Enclosure 3 in No. 161.

Diary No. 10 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 9th March 1873.

Syed Fazul Shah, Sirdar Guzzun's Vakeel, remained several days at Bagh, and it was hoped his Highness the Khan would send for Guzzun and the principal Murree chiefs. Ultimately his Highness intimated to the above Vakeel that his Sirdar and the Murree chiefs had made a great mistake in not coming when sent for, as they would not now be received; further that he, the Khan, would never forget having had to pay 55,000 rupees on their account, and if it was ever in his power would send all the Murrees, great and small, to Jehannum.

On Tuesday afternoon Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the Sarawan chiefs requested and received permission from his Highness the Khan to return to their respective homes. Late in the evening great excitement prevailed, as a report was circulated that his Highness' troops had received orders to turn out and arrest them, as also the Shahgassee.

Shere Dil Muzzerani Murree returned to Bagh on Friday, and after paying his respects to his Highness the Khan rejoined the Naib of Dadur to assist him in kafila arrangements.

Sirdar Sohrab Khan reports that two Tullanees, who had gone with their bullocks to fetch grass from the hills, were waylaid by Sheeranee Murrees on the 7th instant, and deprived of their cattle. Syed Fazul Shah, Guzzun's agent, was at Lehree when the Tullanees reported what had occurred, and begged Sirdar Sohrab Khan to take no notice of what had occurred, as he would guarantee the bullocks being returned before evening. This promise was not fulfilled, and the Dhoombkee chief represents that no immunity from petty thefts or raids can be expected, as it is generally known his Highness' subjects have been forbidden to take retaliatory measures.

Traffic through the Bolan is still satisfactory.

Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 4 in No. 161.

Diary No. 14 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 6th April 1873.

CAPTAIN MCNAIR, with a troop of the 1st Sind Horse, joined my camp on the 1st instant at Gundava, and Lieutenant Smith of the Rifles, with two companies of his regiment, on the 3rd.

A khureeta from the Commissioner in Sind to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, intimating withdrawal of the Political Agent from his court, was received on Saturday afternoon, and will be forwarded on Monday morning, with a letter stating my intention of at once carrying out the orders received.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee writes to me that Mahomed Khan, Naib of Lehree, "late Vakeel at Jacobabad," has through enmity confiscated the inam lands of Mahomed Ali Raisanee, although they have been in his possession from the great Nusseer Khan's reign until the present time.

Compensation for the kafila plundered by the Murrees has been adjusted in the manner agreed upon and reported in Diary No. 6 of 1873.

(Signed) C. H. HARRISON, Major,
Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 5 in No. 161.

Diary No. 15 of 1873, by Political Agent, Khelat, for the Week ending 13th April 1873.

ON Monday afternoon, after receipt of the Commissioner's letter, his Highness sent a confidential servant, requesting I would call upon him or allow him to visit me. In reply I stated that as the reasons of my withdrawal were fully stated in the Commissioner's letter, further discussion was unnecessary, and as visiting under present circumstances would be unpleasant, I had taken leave of him by letter.

On Tuesday morning I marched on Nowshera, eight miles from Gundava, accompanied by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, his friends and relatives, in all about 150 people.

On Monday night Sirdar Noordeen had a long interview with his Highness the Khan, who promised to make him head Sirdar of the Jalawan country, give him the standard, and solicit the release of the ex-Jam, his brother-in-law, if he and the Mingul tribe would support him, Sirdar Noordeen agreed to his Highness' proposition but joined my camp at Nowshera, evidently undetermined what to do. Meeting with no encouragement he returned to Gundava and solicited permission from his Highness to return to Wud, which was refused, and he, Noordeen, requested to use his influence with Sirdah Moolla Mahomed to induce him to join his camp, and to assure the Sirdar. He, the Khan, now wished to be on friendly terms with his Sirdars and people. Sirdar Noordeen declined to comply with his Highness' request, stating Moolla Mahomed had neglected his interests when at Jacobabad. Consequent on the above refusal his Highness sent two macebearers with a letter to the Sirdar's address; they were maltreated by some Brahooees and had to return without delivering the Kkan's message. A friend of the Sirdars was then commissioned by his Highness to inform Sirdar Moolla Mahomed he, the Khan, was anxious to carry out what was arranged at Jacobabad, and would in future adopt a conciliatory policy towards him and the Brahooees. The Sirdar declined to join his Highness, stating he had no confidence in him or his promises.

His Highness, on receipt of the Commissioner's letter, sent off an express for the ex-Vakeel Mahomed Khan, stating that as he had forfeited the friendship of the British Government by supporting him, he, Mahomed Khan, must join his Highness the Khan's camp at once and make all necessary arrangements. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed informed me that both his Highness and Mahomed Khan would in all probability do all they could to carry out what had been suggested by the British Government so as to make it appear that he, the Shahgassee, as also the Political Agent, were the obstructive persons and brought about late misunderstandings.

His Highness was to have marched on Friday morning, but it is stated he had no one who could arrange like the Shahgassee for his carriages, supplies, &c., through the Moolla. His Highness, it is stated, is in a depressed frame of mind, and the force on which he relies don't seem to be in very good spirits at the prospect of being called upon to quell a general rebellion.

Several of the Brahooee chiefs asked me plainly whether they were at liberty to take possession of Kutchee now that the British Government had withdrawn. I replied I could not participate in any intrigue against his Highness, but as a friend would remind them of what the Commissioner said at Shahpur, and what might happen if they created a disturbance on the border. The Sirdars appeared greatly disappointed at my reminding them of what might occur, stating if the Khan got back to Kelat they could not protect themselves against tyranny and oppression, for he had forts well-garrisoned, guns, &c., whereas they only had swords. Being, therefore, helpless they hoped the British Government would take Kutchee and allow them to settle down in peace and quietness. Sumundar Lehree was the spokesman, so I told him what he suggested was not contemplated, as shown by my withdrawal. The Lehrees and Mahomedshais appear inclined to trust to his Highness' recent promises: all the other Sarawan Sirdars have joined Moolla Mahomed at Seebee.

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, his friends and relatives, entered British territory on Saturday, camping at Soban-ke-Guri; on the following day they entered Jacobabad and occupied houses that had been hired for them in the town.

Enclosure 6 in No. 161.

Diary No. 16 of 1873, by Political Agent, Kelat, for the Week ending 20th April 1873.

In the early part of the week a slight affray at Seebee was reported, the effect of his Highness' intrigue with Akbar Khan and Surbulund, sons of Misree Khan, Barukzais, Buktyar Khan, their uncle, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed having received information of what was intended towards them made arrangements to quietly arrest Akbar Khan and Surbulund; the latter, however, received timely warning and fired a volley on the party sent to arrest them, killing seven men.

Ali Yar Khan Raisanee was sent by his Highness the Khan to assure Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. He would in future treat his Sirdars and people with kindness and consideration, and carry out what was agreed upon at Jacobabad. The Sirdar replied that he had no confidence in anything he might say or write. His Highness then sent Sumundar Lehree to try and induce Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to join his camp.

Sirdar Noordeen Mingul has asked permission to leave his Highness' camp on several occasions and been refused. He has sent to tell the Shahgassee he will escape on the first convenient opportunity.

The ex-Vakeel Mahomed Khan visited his Highness at Gundava, but returned at once to Lehree. A letter, it is said, was written at his instigation and sent direct to the Commissioner in Sind.

Nubbee Buksh, Naib of Lehree, has been appointed to Bagh until Abdool Luteef, of Quettah, can take up the appointment.

Aitbar Khan of Kotra, a friend of Mahomed Khan, has been appointed to Kozdar vice Gholam Mahomed, a brother-in-law of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

Some of the Sarawan Brahooees had collected close to Dadur with the intention of plundering in Kutchee, but were stopped by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who said he would not allow anything of the sort, as it would annoy the British Government.

His Highness the Khan left for Kotra on Friday, and it is said will remain there a day or two until he hears from Sumundar Lehree what Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's intentions may be.

His Highness the Khan received a letter from Darogah Atta Mahomed, who, after commenting on the folly of his Highness' conduct, advised him to lose no time in returning to Khelat by the Takree hills.

No. 162.

Diary No. 17 of 1873 by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending from the 19th to the 25th May 1873.

GOHUR KHAN DINAREE, a resident of Kharee in Kutchee, returned on the 22nd with replies from his Highness the Khan to letters despatched by Political Superintendent on the 3rd instant. He gives the following news :—

I arrived on the 10th, and delivered my post in the evening; saw his Highness in Durbar, and according to custom, asked his Highness what the news was; he declined to give me any, saying I was merely a postman. I replied that I had been sent by the British Government, and if he, the Khan, did not think fit to give me any news, "he was master." His Highness only spoke to me on general subjects, asking how many days I had been on the road, whether the cultivation was good in the plains, &c. &c. During the time I was at Khelat I was under surveillance, and his Highness was very angry with Zemindar Suffer Mahomed, an old friend of mine, for having put me up. I went morning and evening to his Highness' Durbar during the five days I was at Khelat. On the first day he intimated his intention of asking me the Jacobabad news, but changed his mind; the reason of this I afterwards ascertained to be "that his Highness feared displaying curiosity of any kind might be attributed to fear." On taking my leave, he begged me to give his compliments to Colonel Loch, Major Harrison, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and Shahgassee Gholam Jan.

Sirdar Noordeen was anxious to leave his Highness at Nurr, but he would not allow him to do so and took him on to Khelat. His Highness on two or three occasions offered to make Noordeen the Head Chief in Jalawan, but he persistently refused, upon which his Highness taxed him with having evil intention towards himself. It is generally supposed that Sirdar Noordeen will fall in with the Khan's wishes, and his Highness is preparing a khillut for Noordeen suitable for the Chief of Jalawan, and will hand over the standard to him. Noordeen on several occasions represented that Gohur Khan Zuruckzai, a near relative of Taj Mahomed's, ought to be the Jalawan Chief. All the principal Sirdars in Jalawan have refused to acknowledge Noordeen—Chakur Khan Juttuck, Kaisa Khan Moosani, Moodut Khan Pundrani, Kumal Khan Lotani, Fakir Mahomed Bezonjao, &c. &c. His Highness on receiving the post that I took, asked Sirdar Noordeen to send some of his sowars to Nowsherwan and Sahib Khan, but he refused, saying that they were much the same as he was "as far as rank and position went," and that he, the Khan, had better send some of his own people. His Highness gave orders for sowars to be sent, but they had not started when I left Khelat. Sirdar Meer Mahomed is at Khelat, but disaffected at the treatment he has received. Gohur Khan Zuruckzai hearing that it was his Highness' intention to make Noordeen Head Chief, left his Highness' camp at Nurr and went to his own village, Guzan, in the Zehri Valley.

Darogah Attah Mahomed handed over charge of Khelat to Ali Jan, and started for Gundava to urge his Highness to allow him to go to Jacobabad with his son, Mahomed Khan, and Beebee Gunjan, to beg Major Harrison and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to return to his Highness' camp. The Darogah met his Highness at Kurzan, and, not being able to carry out what he wished, returned with his Highness. The latter has since his return urged Attah Mahomed to accept the Wuzeership, but he has declined; this has given offence to his Highness, who has informed the Darogah that if he does not accept the appointment, he will look upon him as a friend of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed; to punish him, give the Wuzeership to Abdool Luteef, Naib of Quettah, and Shahgassee Gholam Jan's appointment to Alif Khan Chobdar.

His Highness' intention was to have placed Mekran in charge of Azaad Khan, and thus secure his good services. His Highness, however, felt doubtful about placing himself too much in this chief's power, so left Kedj in Sirdar Fakir Mahomed's hands, and sent for his father-in-law, Meer Esan, to make him Chief of Punchgoor, vice Sirdar Gassee Khan, who had refused to obey his orders. Belooch Khan's father has accompanied Meer Esan to Khelat. Belooch Khan * himself is to be Naib of Punchgoor, vice Khan Mahomed Kumbrani.

* A Nowsherwan and cousin of Azaad Khan of Kharan. Early in 1871 this man was at Bampur, and professed to be a Persian subject.

(Sd.) C. H. H.

No disturbances have yet occurred in the hills, Kozdar, Sohrab, Khelat, Mustoong, or Quettah. The Brahoees are quite ready to rebel, but are afraid of incurring the displeasure of the British Government; if the Sarawans rise they will be joined by the Jalawans.

Withdrawal of Major Harrison and retirement of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has caused the greatest regret at Khelat. His Highness' mother and sister, Naibs Abdool Rahman, Abdool Luteef, Aitibar Khan, as also Alif Khan Chobdar, are the only people who are glad at the turn affairs have taken. His Highness in public feigns a cheerful manner, but he looks harassed, worn, and thin, and is only cheered up by daily reports sent by Mahomed Khan and the Kazee of Bagh. Every one states that the Khan is completely in the hands of his mother and sister, that what has occurred has been at their instigation, and that all his acts depend on their approval. Mahomed Khan sends off daily expresses of what goes on at Jacobabad, and through his instrumentality it was generally understood that the Shahgassee has met with scant courtesy at the hands of the British Government, he and all his friends having been left unheeded and uncared for on the maidan. I contradicted this report by stating the Shahgassee had been presented with a nice garden containing a suitable private residence and public reception room; further, that all his friends were comfortably housed. His Highness is in a nervous state of apprehension, has all his valuables ready packed, and, in case of emergency, has made arrangements with the Nooshky Sirdar, Abdool Rahman, to assist him across his own border into Seistan. Hemraj and Wullee Khan, Bunniahs, besides other people, give information of everything that goes on at Jacobabad.

Consequent on the arrival of the Brahooees into the hills, his Highness has sent cavalry detachments to Mustoong and Quettah.

The apricot, mulberry, and other fruit trees are utterly barren this year, and people believe it is due to the withdrawal of the British Agent and retirement of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. The loss to his Highness and the inhabitants of Khelat will be very great.

At Kirta there are still one hundred infantry and about sixty irregular horse under Nawat Khan, Dinarzai. Naib Abdool Azeez is at Dadur, and his son, Fakir Mahomed, with his Highness the Khan.

Gohur Khan when returning through Kutchi heard that the Dhoombkees had sent another party to raid in the Murree Hills. Sohrab Khan, it is said, is encouraged in making these raids by the ex-Wakeel, who thinks his Highness the Khan will approve of this policy towards the Murree tribe.

It is currently reported that his Highness' troops are deserting in large numbers as they have not received pay for three or four months; it is also said a native officer of the Nurwai Regiment, "an Afghan," had a dispute with Mozan Khan, his commanding officer, and on being threatened with punishment by his Highness, he defied him to do anything, and deserted with one hundred and ten men of the regiment, carrying off arms, accoutrements, &c. These men marched towards Candahar; ten or twelve other deserters have come into the Frontier Districts and Shikarpoor.

No. 18, dated Jacobabad, 1st June 1873.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 1st June 1873.

THE only news of any importance during the past week relates to a scheme propounded to his Highness by the Kazi of Bagh as calculated to weaken the power of the Sarawans, viz., to imprison the Rhind Sirdar Imam Buksh, and make his cousin, Taj Mahomed, head of the tribe. The Kazi having been directed by his Highness to discuss the advisability of carrying out this scheme with the ex-Wakeel joined Mahomed Khan at Lehree. The latter strongly deprecated anything of the kind taking place, as Sirdar Moolla Mahomed would at once raise the Sarawans to revenge the insult on his brother-in-law.

There is a report that the men who deserted from his Highness' regiment were followed up by their commanding officer and men he could trust to Siriab, and a fight ensued in which six of the latter were killed; it is also rumoured Alla Dina Khoord had availed himself of these dissensions amongst his Highness' troops to create a disturbance at Quettah, the Naib of that place having confiscated some land belonging to him. Four kossids have been sent with various despatches of the Political Superintendent to his Highness, and on their return will be able to give correct information of what is going on in the immediate neighbourhood of Khelat.

News report from Khelat, ending 11th June 1873.

THERE is no particular news from Khelat. The Khan has called on the Sirdars to come to his capital and pay their respects. A few have done so, but the principal ones, Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, Alladinna Khoord, the Mahomedshai and Dinarzai Sirdars, have not.

2. The Khan has sent people to summon Nowsherwan Chootah to Khelat to answer for and surrender the property plundered from the kafilahs, but it is thought the latter would not attend.

3. There has been a quarrel regarding water in the Baho district, on the Mekran Coast, in which one of the principal men was killed, but it is thought the matter may be compromised.

4. Syed Abdool Aziz, who formerly held Gwadur for a time, is reported to have left Bombay for the purpose of recovering Gwadur. Kafilas coming to the coast mention having seen swarms of locusts the whole breadth of the country.

5. Fever is at present very prevalent at Gwadur.

Diary from Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 8th June 1873.

SHAHGASSEE WULLEE MAHOMED received a letter from Sirdar Nawab Khan Dinarzai on the 4th June; being an honest, trustworthy man, the information given by him was submitted without delay to the Political Superintendent.

No allusion having been made about disaffection amongst his Highness' troops, or misunderstanding between Sirdar Alladina Khoord and the Naib of Quettah, it is concluded previous reports were premature and without foundation.

The four cossids sent with the Political Superintendent's letter to his Highness have not yet returned.

A very bad type of fever prevails at Bagh; about 200 people have died during the past three weeks.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 15th June 1873.

On Friday a confidential servant of Buktiar Khan, of Seebee, arrived with letters from himself and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed addressed to the Commissioner in Sind, the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and Political Agent, Khelat. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed also received a note from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, in which he gives the following news: "My brother Meer Haibut went to the village of Mohurrum, and on his return stayed at Bagh and was visited by Kazi Hyat Khan, who sent me the following message from his Highness the Khan: 'I sent Ali Yar Khan 'Raisanee, directing you to mount your horse and join me; if still unable to do so, 'send your son, and consider me the root from which you should thrive. Don't let 'Wullee Mahomed say I left Kohistan and the whole country collapsed. If I, the 'Khan, lose the country you will not get the revenue; any benefit to be derived 'from rebellion or fighting will fall to other people; it is necessary for you, Moolla 'Mahomed, to look upon me as the root, and be one with me. Whatever you say 'I will do; you are my head Sirdar.'" The Sirdar writes that he has no faith or confidence in his Highness, and has therefore sent an evasive answer by Ali Yar Khan Raisanee, promising to send his son Azad Khan as soon as his marriage ceremonies had been completed. The Sirdar wishes to visit the Political Superintendent and Commissioner in Sind, and implied doing so would enable him to maintain his influence with the Sarawan tribe.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, it is well known, is in such a destitute state that he is selling all the ornaments of his wives and daughters.

Kureem Khan Bijarani has, it is said, written to Sohrab Khan that if he is led away by Mahomed Khan "ex-Wukeel" to attack Buktiar Khan Baruzai, their treaty must be considered broken and he shall assist the Baruzai chief, who is a friend of his. The Kujjuk chief, Luskhur Khan, has visited Mahomed Khan near Bagh, and has promised to assist Sohrab Khan against the Baruzais.

Private letters from Bagh state that the fever which was so fatal is declining, but still prevails in neighbouring villages.

and Governor-General in Council approves of the communications on this subject which you have addressed to his Highness and to the Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.

2. Matters in Khelat should now be left to adjust themselves, and no further interference in the relations between the Khan and his Sirdars should for the present be exercised, unless you are appealed to by his Highness.

No. 1546P, dated Simla, 11th July 1873.

From Under Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Commissioner in Sind.

YOUR letter No. 400, dated 3rd May last, reporting on the recent crisis in Khelat, which led to the withdrawal of the Political Agent from the court of the Khan, has been laid before his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council.

2. The special causes which have led to the present interruption of relations with the Khan appear to be (1) the influence of Mahomed Khan and other evil advisers, whose suggestions the Khan accepted rather than the advice of the Political Agent; (2) his persistent demand for the restoration of the three men who had been removed in consequence of their evil influence in Khelat; (3) his evasion of all arrangements to give effect to the measures thought necessary for the peace of the frontier; (4) his neglect to make arrangements for the good government of Lus Beyla and the suppression of the outrages committed on British traders passing through the country.

3. Considering the attitude assumed by the Khan, the Governor-General in Council concurs in your opinion that it was impossible for Major Harrison to remain longer at the Court of Khelat, and his Excellency in Council approves of your having ordered him to withdraw. Your proceedings have been entirely in accordance with the views expressed to the Khan by his Excellency the Viceroy at the Sukkur conference, and are accordingly approved and confirmed.

4. It remains now to consider the policy to be pursued towards Khelat as long as the present posture of affairs continues. His Excellency in Council concurs with you in opinion that no interference should for the present be exercised by Government in the internal affairs of Khelat. The relations between the Khan and his nobles should be left to adjust themselves. No advice as to their future course of action need be given to either party; but the course of events should be carefully watched, and every effort made to obtain the earliest and most accurate intelligence of all that passes.

5. You have for the present, and until such time as the Khan fulfils the provisions of the treaty of 1854, withheld the payment of the annual subsidy which the British Government engaged to pay to the Khan on condition of the faithful performance of his obligations under that engagement. The seventh article of the treaty provides that the British Government may withhold payment of the subsidy if during any year the conditions mentioned in the preceding articles shall not be faithfully performed by the ruler of Khelat. Your proceedings in withholding payment under the circumstances described in your letter are fully approved by his Excellency in Council.

6. The obligations of the Khan under the treaty to protect trade and secure the peace of the frontier remain unaffected by recent events, and I am to request that, in formally communicating to his Highness the determination of Government to withhold the subsidy, you will at the same time distinctly inform him that, in the event of any disturbances occurring on the frontier, the British Government will be compelled to take its own measures for preserving order, and further that, if satisfaction is not afforded by the Khan for the outrages committed in Lus Beyla, it will be necessary to exact reparation in such manner as the British Government deems most suitable.

7. Of the measures for giving effect to the proposals made at the Mittunkote conference, which are detailed in your letter to the Political Superintendent, Sind Frontier, No. 171, dated 25th February 1873, the only portion actually carried out appears to be the grant of Rs. 5,520 to the Boogtees. For the present no further steps in this direction need be taken. If, however, the Khan does not assume a more friendly attitude within a reasonable time, and the state of affairs in Khelat does not improve, it will be necessary to make arrangements for the protection of trade direct with the tribes. The Murree Tomandar will of course be required to apologise for his conduct before any payment can be made to his tribe.

8. With reference to paragraph 64 of your letter regarding the outrages committed in Lus Beyla, his Excellency in Council desires that, in the event of the Khan's failing to restore order, and after due warning has been given to him of the consequences of his neglect, the Sind police should make every effort to arrest Nowsherwan Chootah and Dewriah Bundijo with their gang. The responsibility of punishing these men rests of course with the Khan; but if he should be unwilling or unable to assert his authority, measures must be taken independently of him for the protection of the lives and property of our traders.

9. The question as to a temporary provision for the Shahgassee forms the subject of a separate communication. Major Harrison will continue for the present to reside at Jacobabad, drawing his full salary as Political Agent, Khelat.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA. FOREIGN DEPARTMENT. POLITICAL. (Extract.)

To His Grace the DUKE OF ARGYLL, K.T., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

MY LORD DUKE, Simla, the 28th July 1873.

IN continuation of our despatch No. 52, dated the 28th March last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of further papers,* regarding Khelat affairs.

2. The letter from Sir William Merewether, No. 400, dated 3rd May last, contains a full and interesting account of his proceedings from the date of the interview between his Excellency the Viceroy and the Khan at Sukkur, particulars of which were reported to Her Majesty's Government in our despatch No. 83, dated 20th December last. To the Commissioner's report we would refer your Grace for a narrative of the events which have led to the withdrawal of our Political Agent from Khelat. The Foreign Secretary's letter No. 1546P, dated 11th July 1873, contains a brief review of the Commissioner's proceedings, communicates the approval of the Government of India thereto, and lays down the policy which for the present we consider it advisable to pursue towards Khelat. We trust that the instructions we have issued will meet with the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

No. 171.

No. 136, dated Camp, Bakorah, 8th February 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt to-day of your letter No. 301 P., dated the 30th ultimo, and to report for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy as follows:—

2. I received some days ago direct from the Punjab Government a copy of Captain Sandeman's letter No. 18 of the 6th January, and forwarded it to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, for any remarks he may wish to offer. I have not yet received his answer, but it is unnecessary for me to wait for it before sending my replies to the inquiries contained in your letter.

3. I would, however, first observe that I do not quite understand Captain Sandeman's reason for now bringing so prominently forward the action of the Murree tribe against the Khetran and Moossa Kheyl Patan tribes. To my certain knowledge the Murrees have been fighting with, and plundering as well as being plundered by, those two tribes from the time they have lived adjacent to each other, certainly for long before we had any acquaintance with either of them; and I am not aware that any one of these tribes has for many years past changed its position on the hills in which they have resided. I do not see, therefore, why their usual custom of raiding each other should seem to threaten the Dehra Ghazee Khan border now a bit more than it did heretofore.

4. In the fourth paragraph of his letter, however, Captain Sandeman mentions that Guzzun Khan, the nominal head of the whole Murree clan, led one of the raids in person; that "he is getting quite rich on plunder, and is in consequence becoming very unreliable and the tribe itself more and more demoralized." The former is certainly an unusual circumstance for a man of Guzzun's habitual apathy; the next is easy enough to understand, considering the large quantity of plundered property he has managed of late years to possess himself of and retain, while the last is only the natural consequence of these wild spirits being allowed to do wrong with impunity, and being treated at the same time as if they had no way misbehaved.

5. I conclude from the way Captain Sandeman writes, as above quoted, he anticipates that Guzzun Khan will become so inflated with his success and fancied power that he will, like the frog in the fable, go on swelling himself out until he provokes his own destruction by leading his tribe against the frontier of Dehra Ghazee Khan, also that he and his tribe are fast getting beyond any control.

6. As regards the former, I think it not at all unlikely. In the latter view I entirely agree. It is what I have been pointing out for some time past, viz., that the Murrees were getting, indeed had got, quite out of hand. The reasons are obvious. For long the Murrees have had almost the uncontrolled command of the best raiding grounds in the neighbourhood. Owing to the weakness of the Khelat Government the Murrees plundered in the Khan's territory when and where they liked; and though we were supposed to help indirectly to check them, the efforts used were rendered nugatory by there being two systems at work in the management of them by us. They harried Kutchee and robbed travellers in the territory of their ruler and our ally, the Khan of Khelat; but as they respected the Punjab border and acted up to conditions entered into by them with the authorities there, they continued to receive payment from us and received no correction for their ill-doings elsewhere.

7. Early in 1868 they plundered a kafila near Hajee ka Shuhr, in the very centre of Kutchee, on the direct road from Dadur to Shikarpoor, and in the autumn they made inroads into Kutchee, molesting sorely the Khan of Khelat's subjects. In December, I think, of that year (I write from memory, not having the papers with me), I addressed the Bombay Government, urging that the Punjab Government should be moved to consent to a blockade of the Murree tribe from the plains, and suspension of all payments to them until they come to understand that they would receive no favour from us as long as they acted so outrageously towards their sovereign, the Khan of Khelat, precisely similar measures being adopted on the Sind and Khelat sides.

9. It was unfortunate this arrangement could not be carried out, as I firmly believe it would have fully answered then. It was the bold and clear way of dealing with these people, such as they would readily understand. At that time they had few friends around to aid them, or to give what they wanted and used to get from the British territory. They had not become more powerful than the neighbouring tribes, neither were they particularly feared; and they would have soon felt the inconvenience of being quite alone. Their coercion then would have kept them under easy control afterwards, and it would in all probability have prevented much of the harm that was done by them recently, and which has helped so much to raise their confidence in themselves. The plan could not, however, be assented to, because, as I understood, of the necessity it involved of strengthening the military force on the lower frontier of the Punjab.

10. As an alternative, it was urged that further help in money should be given to his Highness the Khan of Khelat to allow of his trying to bring the Murrees to order. This led to the conference held at Mittunkote in February 1871, to consider the best means of controlling the hill tribes and assimilating the Punjab and Sind systems. It was resolved at that meeting to try the subsidising plan, the same as had been used on the Punjab frontier. It had been successful there because it had been in the hands of an officer, Captain Sandeman, who happened to be particularly well qualified for such a task, he having succeeded in obtaining much influence among the people in the hills. The modus operandi also was most acceptable to the Murrees. They had everything to gain by it and little to lose. They had only to forego plundering the Rajunpoor and Ghazee Khan frontier on the east (a thing they never had done on any large scale), to receive regular pay, while they had still open to them a comparatively easy harvest of plunder in Kutchee and on the kafila routes to the west, what they called their shikar grounds, as well as the Khetran and Pathan countries to the north, with no practical hindrance from anyone. With the Boogtees there was experienced even less difficulty. Only a small portion used to misbehave, the Shimbanees principally, who had separated from the head of the clan, and had become a rallying point for all vagrant and unsettled spirits. Some Murrees would occasionally join them, and their chief, indeed almost only, field for action was the Rajunpoor frontier. After the death of Gholam Hussein, the spirited leader of this faction, it broke up, and the Boogtees as a rule have only acted well and faithfully on both sides, Punjab as well as Sind, for years before; that their conduct on the Sind border had been most correct, and is so still, but then they had been forced into obedience.

11. The plan agreed to was, that Rupees 32,000 should be placed at the disposal of the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Sind to entertain under their chiefs such Murree and Boogtee horsemen as he found necessary, to use them as police to check the rest, and to regard the regular payment of money to the chiefs and their followers as a kind of bond to keep the rest of the tribe well behaved. It was also arranged that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan should be under the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Sind as regarded the management of the Murrees and Boogtees, but nothing more.

12. The sanction of the Government of India to this arrangement was not received by me until December 1871. By that time certain of the Sirdars of Beloochistan had risen in active rebellion against the Khan of Khelat, and the conduct of the Murrees appeared so suspicious that it was not considered desirable to attempt any subsidising measures with regard to them, as such would certainly have been misunderstood. Indeed it was very doubtful whether the tribe was worthy of any favourable consideration. The correctness of this view was almost immediately after proved by their joining the rebellious Sirdars in deliberate outrages on peaceful kafilas passing down the Bolan Pass. The differences between the Khan and his Sirdars were adjusted at Jacobabad in April 1872. It was decided that the Sirdars should restore their share of the plunder seized from the kafilas, and of course the Murrees were called upon to do the same. They were distinctly told that unless they delivered up what they had got possession of the favour and countenance of the British Government would be withheld from them. Captain Sandeman proffered his offices to assist in obtaining restitution by means of his influence with the Murree Sirdar, but this only resulted in the delivery of a small number of camels and a few bales of goods, a very insignificant payment of the immense quantity of loot carried off by the tribe.

13. In November 1872 his Excellency the Viceroy received his Highness the Khan of Khelat at Sukkur, and in February following I proceeded to the frontier for the purpose of having an interview with his Highness the Khan, and with the view of carrying into effect, in connexion with him, the scheme projected at Mittunkote. Knowing well the habits of the people concerned, and bearing in mind the recent lawless acts of the Murrees, as well as the policy of both, strengthening the position of the Khan, and bringing the Murrees under better control, the Political Superintendent on the frontier was instructed to call upon the Murree and Boogtee Sirdars to meet me at Jacobabad, that the arrangements with them might be initiated there and afterwards confirmed when I met his Highness the Khan. To show what was being done was really intended to strengthen the Khan in his authority over his subjects, the calls were sent through his Highness. I was the more particularly prompted to do this, because the Murrees had for some time been endeavouring to get themselves regarded as independent and separate from the Khan, and I had noted a determined endeavour on their part to be permitted to avoid receiving orders from the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Sind, who, if there was to be any real control, must have the supreme management in his hands, as being the person who was entrusted with the conduct of political affairs connected with the Khelat Government. I considered it, therefore, most material to the future success of the scheme that both the Khan's authority should be fully recognised and that the Murree chiefs should at once be made to understand that they were to look first and only to the head on the frontier and not to the subordinate officer at Dehra Ghazee Khan. The first was in accordance with the instructions of the Government of India, and the latter manifestly the only course which could have any soundness in it, or be suited to the circumstances where dealings are with semi-civilised people, who must be ruled absolutely or will not be at all.

14. The Boogtee Sirdars answered promptly and readily, presenting themselves at Jacobabad, visiting first, as I had ordered, the camp of his Highness, then in Kutchee, where also was the Political Agent, Major Harrison, to whom the summonses had been originally sent, that they might have the Khan's confirmation. Shere Dil, Muzzeranee Murree, who has for long been separated from the larger portions of that tribe, also came and was duly received; but Guzzun Khan and the other Murree Sirdars who were summoned, instead of readily responding, raised frivolous and unwarrantable objections, amongst others that they could not visit the Khan and the Political Superintendent without "mootaburs" or influential people being sent from both authorities to escort them in. This was a course that had never been previously followed on the Sind border, and was clearly intended as an attempt to arrogate to themselves an additional status, to which they were in no way entitled. The Boogtee Sirdar, Gholam Moorteza, did not wait for such a ceremonial observance. The Political Superintendent was instructed to inform Guzzun Khan that such a custom, being unusual and quite unnecessary, would not be followed; that if he wished to gain the favour and consideration of the British Government, he must at once obey the summons and present himself, accompanied by the other Sirdars of his tribe. Up to the present time he has failed to conform to the instructions communicated to him. He has several times written to the Political Superintendent, reiterating his impertinent demand for "mootaburs" to be sent to him. Each time Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, has very properly replied that such will not be done, and further added that, besides presenting himself unconditionally, it was required of him that he should make restitution of the large share of plunder which he and his tribe had secured from the goods taken from the kafilas. He (Guzzun Khan) had, in accordance with the custom of these predatory tribes, received very much the larger share, and he was bound to make restitution in the same way that the Sirdars of Beloochistan had been compelled to do. Had his request of being escorted in by "mootaburs" been complied with, it would have been tantamount to recognising him as a more powerful chief than Gholam Moorteza, the head of the Boogtees; acknowledging that he possessed quasi independence, and giving him a position which he not only is not entitled to, but which I hold it is most desirable should not be accorded to him.

15. It is utterly impossible to maintain continued influence over these wild people by being too lenient with them. Treat them by all means with kindness and justly, but at the same time with unchangeable firmness. They must be taught that implicit obedience to orders is the first essential to gaining favour and reward either from the Khelat Government or from us; and above all things it must be conveyed to them unmistakeably that they are, as regards us, to receive their orders from and obey one head only, the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Sind, to whom and to his Highness the Khan they must look for everything, whether for weal or for woe. This must be strictly adhered to if the system to be carried out is to be identical and for the benefit of all, whether on the Punjab or the Sind border. We have had now full experience of how a plan that answers well for one place acts most injuriously on the other, and the proper fusion of interests cannot possibly be made to exist unless the people to be controlled are made to look to one head for guidance and consideration in every respect.

16. I have always been most ready to acknowledge the influence Captain Sandeman has gained among the hill tribes, the judicious way in which he has generally exercised it, and its value to a certain extent. But personal influence with such restless, wayward creatures as the Belooch cannot be depended upon alone. It will last as long as it is accompanied by advantages to the individuals over whom it is exerted, and as long as the latter are satisfied with those advantages. Directly those cease to be sufficient, and a greed for more springs up amongst the recipients, or jealousies become excited amongst those who think they do not receive a sufficient share, or the whole become so wealthy by other means as to render them indifferent to what before their poverty made them prize, the system breaks down and personal obligations are forgotten. With wild, unruly tribes fear of the wrath of the paramount power must always be kept alive, as well as gratitude and affection springing from favours bestowed.

17. I have above briefly sketched the events of past years to save time in reference to previous papers, and also to set forth the policy I have deemed it right to follow and have considered to be soundest in reference to the restless and as yet little civilised tribes beyond our borders. I will now proceed to point out the course I would recommend in order to curb the increasing arrogance of the Murree Sirdar. Unless it is firmly checked and at once, I consider there can be little doubt that the peace on the lower border of the Punjab will be disturbed and active measures be rendered necessary.

18. What appears to me should now be done is, that arrangements for shutting out the Murrees from the Punjab and Sind should immediately be made, so that in case of such a measure being necessary it may be carried out promptly and effectually.

The means already exist on the side of Sind, and his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab would now perhaps be able to reinforce for a time the portion of border from Dehra Ghazee Khan to Sind, so as to render any aggressive attempt by the Murrees impossible of success and fatal to them. I should then be instructed to desire the Political Superintendent on the Upper Sind Frontier to inform Sirdar Guzzun Khan that his disobedience of repeated orders to proceed to Jacobabad was viewed with extreme displeasure by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, and that unless he, Guzzun Khan, did now present himself at Jacobabad before the Political Superintendent within a certain number of days (giving sufficient time to come in and no more), and crave forgiveness as well as show himself prepared to make restitution of the property plundered by his tribe from the kafilas, he and his tribe would be considered to have forfeited the favour of the British Government; that all payments for service of any kind hitherto made, whether from the Punjab or elsewhere, would be immediately stopped; that all members of the tribe would be debarred from that date from entering the Punjab or Sind, or any other portion of the British territory, and any who did attempt to cross the border line would be seized and treated as enemies of the State.

19. I trust his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab will agree with me in the advisability of these measures. They will have a fair chance of being effectual when the Murrees perceive that their outrages on peaceful people are not overlooked, though, in consideration of their good behaviour in some instances, more consideration and time in making reparation had been allowed them than would otherwise have been granted. The terms are only just, and should, I respectfully urge, be enforced. Should it so happen that the Murree Sirdar dares to hold aloof and defy the power of the Government of India, it would then, in my humble opinion, be absolutely necessary that a well-selected and sufficient, though not large, force should be sent into their hills to punish them as they deserve, and enforce conditions which they would be unable to break in future. With our present knowledge of the hills there would be no difficulty in doing this, and as the Murrees have succeeded in thoroughly embroiling themselves with all the tribes around the time required for their subjection would not be long, for they would have no escape.

20. The present Political Superintendent on the Frontier, Colonel Loch, is an officer of long standing and experience as a soldier, and one in whose judgment I have the fullest confidence. The carrying out either of the blockade or of any subsequent operations may be safely entrusted to him, measures at the same time being adopted by me to see that he wanted nothing in assistance or support that I could give.

No. 176, dated Camp, Huttoonga, 17th February 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

REFERRING to letter No. 114 P., dated 12th January last, I have the honour to state, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, that the Doomur tribe are a lawless set owning real allegiance to nobody. They reside in hills at the southern border of Afghanistan and to the north-east of the Bolan Pass. Properly, I believe they should be considered to belong to Afghanistan; whichever way it be, it would be difficult, if not impossible, as matters stand at present, to punish them for their attack on Dilawur Kossid.

2. This, however, does not absolve his Highness the Khan from the blame of having his country in such a state of insecurity that messengers cannot pass down the principal thoroughfare without being subjected to such an outrage as that committed on Dilawur.

3. The same remarks apply to the case of the murder of Baboor Kossid alluded to in letter No. 58 P. of 28th November, and No. 88 P. of 9th January. In Khelat Diary No. 40, ending 2nd November, it was reported that Baboor had been killed by the Doomurs, but in the Candahar news-letter No. 41, dated 26th October, it is stated, "a kossid just returned from Shikarpoor informed me that he found Baboor, who had "charge of my letter No. 36, murdered close to Kirta, and that he recognised deceased "by his clothes." Kirta is near the bottom of the Bolan Pass and some distance from the Doomur country, so it is not certain the act was committed by them. Up to the 7th January nothing further had been learned on this subject, but Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, was still engaged making inquiries as to who were really the perpetrators, the result of which will be reported. It is now awaited and has been expedited.

4. In regard to the Naib of Bagh having intercepted and detained a letter sent by Colonel Loch to Shere Dil Murree, I instructed that officer to write to his Highness on the subject. The reply of the latter has been received, and is not only most unsatisfactory, but so improperly expressed that I have considered it right to address his Highness myself on the subject, and at the same time to require explanation and suitable amende both for this and for a letter previously received by Colonel Loch, in which the usual courteous and respectful style of reference to British authority had been disregarded. Copies of the correspondence are appended.

5. In connexion with the outrages committed in Lus Beyla, his Highness the Khan wrote, as he received communications regarding each, that he had issued orders for the apprehension of the perpetrators and restitution of the property, and that he had sent Sirdar Noordeen Mingul (who it appears was restored to favour) with troops to carry out the above orders and to restore order in Lus Beyla. I deemed it right to give the Khan time to show whether he was really in earnest about the apprehension and restitution, and have waited patiently until now, but nothing has come of his professions, and if he was sincere, he has been either too indolent and careless to see his orders carried out, or had not the power to enforce them; whichever way it may be, it has become necessary to adopt some further measures, and I have therefore addressed his Highness the Khan in a letter bearing in view the instructions previously conveyed to me in your letter of July last. Copy of my letter is attached, and I trust it will meet with the approval of his Excellency the Viceroy in Council.

6. It can hardly be expected, judging from recent events, that the Khan will make any change in the mode of procedure he has adopted of late, but I considered it only just to leave him an opening for recovering himself if he wished to do so, and at the same time availed myself of his Excellency's instructions to place the position in as clear and unmistakeable light before him as it was possible to do.

7. The present state of affairs in Khelat territory is certainly not favourable to the continuation of peace or order among the people of that country. Certain of the Sarawan Sirdars headed by Moolla Mahomed Raisanee complain that the Khan acts tyrannically towards them and confiscates their hereditary estates; but the complaints are only worded generally, and I have been unable to gather reliable accounts of any remarkable acts of tyranny, or of any particular resumptions or appropriation of lands by the Khan, excepting the one instance reported of the Langaos. The Khan on his part has to urge that he is unable to trust the Sirdars, and that they hold aloof from him. There is certainly no identity of feeling or affection between either, and each is only watching for an opportunity to get the better of the other.

8. I think it unquestionable that the Khan's adherents in Kutchee, in the persons especially of the ex-Vakeel, Mahomed Khan, and the Kazee of Bagh, with the Naib of Bagh, Abdool Azeez, have been engaging in the quarrels going on between the Kujjuks and Baruzais in the neighbouring district of Seebee, Afghan territory. Siding with the Kujjuks they hope to bring about injury to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who has taken asylum with the Baruzais. It is stated that the Khan is himself directing this, but there is no absolute proof yet of such being the case; it is not impossible, for his hatred towards Moolla Mahomed has lately become more excessive than ever, and he would not stop to consider much if he saw an opportunity of gratifying it.

9. All accounts tend to show that the Sirdars are quietly preparing for the crisis, which every one appears to think imminent. They were told by me at Shapoor this time last year, when they attended to pay their respects on my leaving, that all that was desired was to see in Khelat a strong and united Government, and that outbreaks such as had occurred in the previous year which injured most the poor and unoffending would always meet with decided disapproval; at the same time I warned them that such disturbances as had before taken place near our border would not be tolerated for a moment, and those who promoted or engaged in them would be treated as common robbers and punished accordingly. The Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed is of opinion that if the Khan endeavours to coerce the Sirdars by means of his regular troops, the latter would not now act against the Sirdars, but in all probability would on the outbreak of hostilities turn against the Khan. If the Sirdars therefore were unanimous in desiring to get rid of their present ruler and establish a new one, they might effect it by proceeding against the Khan at Khelat itself, when the Khan would have either to abdicate or try and seek safety in flight. The Sirdars, however, prefer commencing hostilities in Kutchee, where better prospects of easy plunder present themselves, and they are by that means enabled to gather more retainers around them.

10. Since the withdrawal of Major Harrison, when that officer repeated to the Sirdars my injunctions against disturbances near our border, a strictly neutral course has been steadily followed by me. In December last the Sirdars wrote for permission to come into Jacobabad to pay their respects. I informed them that I should be only there a few days accompanying his Excellency the Governor of Bombay on his tour through Sind, and that under present circumstances I could not receive them. They also sent a messenger to ask whether in the event of the Khan maltreating them or their families they were at liberty to take their own measures for protecting themselves without being actively opposed by the British Government. The messenger added that the Sirdars had studiously and obediently complied* with the wishes of the British Government with no result, what course then would be followed towards them should they be compelled to act differently? That the Khan and Sirdars had remained quiet for the following reasons:—The former was anxious to see whether Government would punish him for his late conduct,* and the latter were desirous to know what benefit would accrue to them, and if any arrangements would be made to ensure living in their country unmolested. They further wished to say that should nothing be done during the Commissioner's visit to Jacobabad, his Highness would renew his persecutions, the Sirdars would defend themselves, and a general rebellion be more than probable. The Brahooees were numerous and not under any regular discipline; should any act of his Highness or his officials cause them to rebel, the Sirdars not to be answerable. This was all very straightforward, and had much that was fair and reasonable in it, but having in view the advisability and justice of observing neutrality in the then state of affairs, I considered it would not be right to accord any reply to these messages. Now, however, should his Highness the Khan's reply to my letter of yesterday's date be unsatisfactory, and should he in no way conform to what is required of him, I would respectfully suggest that I may be authorised to inform the Sirdars that no interference will take place on the part of the British Government in any events that may take place between his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars in behalf of either one or the other, or against one or the other, provided that anything that may happen does not act prejudicially on the quiet and security of the British border, and that any active measures that may be taken by either party do not disturb the peace of the immediate vicinity of that border, or affect the interests and safety of travellers and merchants passing through Beloochistan from Afghanistan or elsewhere to Sind. If this course be approved by his Excellency the Viceroy in Council, I would beg to be favoured with intimation to that effect by telegram so as to be ready to act on receipt of the reply from his Highness the Khan.

* This is quite true.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

* Which the Sirdars would prefer of course.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

11. Meanwhile Colonel Loch, in whose discretion and judgment I have every confidence, has instructions to watch events carefully, and on no account to interfere with anything that takes place beyond the frontier further than to ensure that should any outbreak occur in Kutchee, it should not be allowed to approach the British frontier. This may be effected by judicious patrolling, the means for which he possesses, and is all that is at present required. The action of the Naib of Bagh in proceeding to Shorrun against the young Rind chief, which was thought at first likely to bring on serious results, has ended quietly so far, as communicated by telegram to you. But any ill-treatment of this young chief will assuredly hasten the expected crisis, as he is the head of all the Belooch.

Enclosure 1 in No. 172.

No. 3356, dated Camp, Kusmore, 3rd December 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind, Sukkur.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith a letter in original, and translation of the same, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and I would beg your attention to the want of respect shown throughout the whole of it. His Highness apparently has entirely ceased to prefix the usual titles when either mentioning your name, or in speaking of the British Government, and the remark, "I know that you have done "this at the instigation and request of a person who is the instigator of all distur- "bances and misunderstanding," contained in the last paragraph of his Highness' letter, I presume is meant for Major Harrison and shows his Highness' entire want of respect for that officer.

2. With reference to the restriction placed on persons coming into Sind, I was informed that numbers of people were flocking into British territory from Kutchee and other parts of his Highness' country, many of whom were recognised as sepoys formerly in his Highness' army, others were known then to be actually in his Highness' service, and it was supposed that these men only came as spies through Jacobabad and Shikarpoor, returning by some other route, having collected all the information they could of what was going on. Many of them bringing letters from Buniahs and others to their relatives and friends in Sind.

3. As this appeared most objectionable, I at once issued an order (copy of which was sent to the Naib of Bagh through the Political Agent, Khelat, for promulgation) that in future any persons visiting Jacobabad must have a pass signed by one of his Highness' officials setting forth the duty or business on which he was travelling, and that any person visiting Jacobabad unprovided with such a pass would be arrested and at once sent back to Kutchee.

Enclosure 2 in No. 172.

Dated 29th Ramzan 1290 = 20th November 1873.

From his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

YOUR letter informing me of your welfare reached me at a good time, and I understand all that was written, namely, circumstances connected with the murder of Tegoo Mull, Hindoo, resident of Kurrachee, by Mitta Jamote, and the order of the Commissioner in Sind to arrest the murderer and recover property plundered.

In a friendly spirit I reply that I have sent Meer Noordeen Mingul to Lus Beyla to arrange cases of this description; if through him safety on the road can be restored, murderers and thieves arrested, and property of merchants recovered, well and good; should he fail, I, your friend, by God's help and by force, will make such arrangements for the safety of the road, the arrest of murderers and thieves, and recovery of property, that you will hear of it. All is well here by God's blessing. Make me happy by writing.

P.S.—I hear from my Naibs and officials in Kutchee that you have published an order that people of Kutchee will be sent back, unless they can show a written pass from a Naib or Janesheen. Your Government country and mine are contiguous. My subjects go night and day into Sind on business. Naib Peer Jan and Moonshee Noor Mahomed stationed at Nusseerabad have to go constantly into Sind on business. I know that you have done this at the instigation and request of a person who is the instigator of all disturbances and misunderstandings. I have ordered all my Naibs and Janesheens that if they sent anyone to Sind, they must give a pass. All is well here.

Enclosure 3 in No. 172.

No. 3537, dated Jacobabad, 22nd December 1873.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I WOULD beg to bring to your Highness' notice that a letter from me directed to Sher Dil Murree, dated 18th November, was taken from kossid who was carrying it by the orders of the Naib of Bagh, Abdool Azeez, and after having been detained for many days was handed to Shere Dil Murree opened. As this is a gross act of discourtesy and disrespect not only to me personally, but as the representative of the British Government on the frontier, I do myself the honour to request your Highness to take immediate notice of it, and that your Highness will have the kindness to report to me what steps your Highness has taken in the present instance, and to prevent a recurrence of any similar act of disrespect occurring on the part of any of your Highness' officials.

Enclosure 4 in No. 172.

No. 3555, dated Jacobabad, 23rd December 1873.

Endorsed by Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

TRUE copy submitted to the Commissioner of Sind, in reference to memorandum No. 1223 of 20th instant. Shere Dil Murree, who came to Jacobabad on the 19th idem, stated he had received the Political Superintendent's letter of 18th ultimo from the Naib of Bagh, Abdool Azeez, opened, and he brought a letter from the Naib stating that the letter in question had been handed to Shere Dil.

Enclosure 5 in No. 172.

No. 232, dated Jacobabad, 22nd January 1874.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

In forwarding the accompanying three letters from his Highness the Khan of Khelat I would make the following observations. With reference to letter marked (a.), his Highness denies that a kossid, bearer of a letter to Shere Dil Murree, was detained, and that the letter was opened and afterwards forwarded to its destination, and suggests that the kossid might have been delayed owing to Shere Dil's absence, as he is a wild uneducated man, sometimes with his tribe, sometimes at a distance, but I cannot help feeling his Highness knows this is not the case, as in a letter to the Political Agent, Khelat, Naib Abdool Azeez acknowledges to having forwarded my letter of the 18th November to Shere Dil on the 15th December, or nearly a month after its receipt, and Shere Dil himself told me that the letter was open when he received it, and there is little doubt that the delay which occurred was owing to the letter in question having been sent for his Highness' perusal prior to its being forwarded to Shere Dil, and this, to my mind, is borne out by the fact of the Naib having, as his Highness says, informed him regarding the letter in question.

Note.—It will be difficult to prove this. I have therefore considered it best not to refer to this point in my letter to the Khan.
(Signed) W. L. M.

2. With regard to letter (b.), Moonshee Noor Mahomed, when in here in the middle of last month on the pretence of settling about the liquor contractor being obliged to pay a certain fee to the Khelat State for his Highness the Khan, was most impertinent both to Major Harrison and myself in his manner and address, and as I was informed he was a man of bad character, I desired him never to make his appearance again in Jacobabad. I did not report the matter to his Highness, as I looked on it as too trivial to require any further notice being taken of it. I will, however, now write to his Highness, and explain the circumstances under which Moonshee Noor Mahomed is prohibited from coming to Jacobabad. As far as all transactions being at a stand-still, because this Moonshee is not allowed to come and go as he pleases, this is not so, as all matters connected with leases of land and revenue matters in general can be carried on by his Highness through Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, without the aid of these Moonshees. Had the Khan only attended to the advice so frequently urged on him by you, viz., to appoint another Vakeel in place of Naib Mahomed Khan, who had proved himself in every way unworthy of that post, no complications, such as have lately arisen, either in regard to land or other matters on this frontier, would have taken place.

Enclosure 6 in No. 172.

Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 20th Zoolhaj 1290=10th January 1874.

Your kind letter informing me of your good health reached me at a happy time, and its perusal afforded me great pleasure; in it you wrote that Naib Abdool Azeez had forcibly* detained a kossid, bearer of a letter addressed to Shere Dil Murree, and had forwarded it after opening the same, and request arrangements may be made to prevent any servants acting in such a way again. In reply to the above, the statement is altogether false and untrue; whoever told you this told a lie.

* Incorrectly quoted. The word "forcibly" is not used in Colonel Loch's letter. But it is curious to note that in Major Harrison's Diary ending the 7th December "forcibly" appears. This would seem as if either the Khan was made aware of what was written in the Political Agent's English office, or that Colonel Loch's Moonshee had without authority introduced the word. Inquiry has been made in regard to the latter.
(Signed) W. L. M.

Should any servants of mine ignorantly act in such a manner, God willing, he will be destroyed root and branch. Moolla Abdool Azeez never acted in the way stated. Naib Abdool Azeez informed me regarding this letter. Shere Dil is a wild uneducated person, sometimes with his tribes, sometimes at a distance, perhaps the kossid was delayed from Shere Dil's absence. I have now issued orders on this subject, and it will be out of anyone's power to act as supposed. By God's blessing everything is well here. Make me happy by writing, &c. &c.

Abdool Azeez in a letter to Political Agent, Khelat, acknowledges that he only forwarded Political Superintendent's letter, 18th November, to Shere Dil on the 15th December.

(Signed) C. H. HARRISON.

Enclosure 7 in No. 172.

(b.)

Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE just been informed that people from this country going into your territory on business are reported to you by people at the latter place as spies. When the border of the British Government and your friend's country are contiguous to each other, men go night and day from this side of the border to the other, especially Naib Peer Buksh and Noor Mahomed Moonshee, who have been appointed by me to Nusseerabad and the country in that neighbourhood, and have to go and discuss the claims of zemindars and revenue on lands taken from one to seven years. Peer Buksh and Moonshee Noor Mahomed hearing the above fear to go to Jacobabad, and all transactions regarding land are at a stand-still. I consider myself obedient to the British Government, how then should my people go as spies. I therefore write in a friendly spirit that you should consider what I have written, and make good arrangements, so that my people may come and go to discuss business matters without fear or hindrance. All is well here. Make me happy by writing.

Enclosure 8 in No. 172.

Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 20th Zoolhaj 1290=10th January 1874.

YOUR kind letter informing me of the theft of some bullocks from the district of Nuggur Patta, and that the tracks of the animals had been followed to the village of Kamal Khan, and found in the possession of Rahee Brahooee, and that the people implicated refused to give up the bullocks, has been duly received. You request me to make some arrangement regarding this business. I, your friend, understand all that has been written, and in a friendly spirit reply that I have sent a written order to Meer Noordeen Mingul to arrest the thieves and recover the cattle. All is well here. Make me happy by writing, &c.

NOTE.—This only refers to a common theft of bullocks from Sind, and which were afterwards traced into Khelat territory.

Enclosure 9 in No. 172.

Dated Camp, Kuttoonga, 17th February 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I HAVE been informed by Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Sind, that your Highness in a letter dated 29th Ramzan, or 20th November last, omitted the usual observances of respect when writing of the British Government or of me. Again, in replying to that officer by another letter dated 20th Zoolhaj, or 10th January, on the subject of a communication from Colonel Loch to Shere Dil, Muzzaranee Murree, having been intercepted and detained by your Highness' servant, Abdool Azeez, Naib of Bagh, there appear as used by your Highness the following expressions: "The statement is altogether false and untrue, whoever told you this told a lie." Such words used in such a style of correspondence as was adopted by you in the first-mentioned letter are as unbecoming in your Highness to use as they are for me to receive, and I must demand from your Highness explanation how such could have happened, and suitable apology for such grave discourtesy towards the British Government. With reference to the proceedings of Naib Abdool Azeez, I must further observe that in a letter addressed to the Political Agent, Khelat, Abdool Azeez acknowledged that he only forwarded the letter of the Political Superintendent to Shere Dil Murree, dated 18th of November, on the 15th December, so that Colonel Loch's packet was unquestionably delayed en route for nearly a month. I have to request therefore that you will at once take severe notice of this highly disrespectful conduct of the Naib of Bagh.

Enclosure 10 in No. 172.

Dated Camp, Huttoonga, 17th February 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

COLONEL LOCH, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, by my desire brought to your Highness' notice various gross outrages committed last year by your subjects on merchants and peaceful people passing through the district of Lus Beyla or the Choota country.

2. The chief actors in these were recognised at the time, and their names been communicated to you, being Nowsherwan Choota, Devria Bundijo, Shere Khan Jamote, Oobai Choota, Sooma Guddoo, Kulloo Guddoo, Hufsoo Bukuk, Philoo Choota, and with them were following of Nowsherwan Choota, Ali Mahomed Boorrals, Ali Khan Jamote, and Devria Bundijo. Much valuable property was taken from the merchants and others, statements regarding which were likewise forwarded to your Highness. Colonel Loch was further desired to call on your Highness to punish the perpetrators of these crimes and to cause restitution of the property stolen, or its equivalent.

3. Your Highness' replies to Colonel Loch received at different times conveyed promises of redress and assurances that you had issued orders for the restitution of the property and apprehension of the offenders, that you had sent troops for this purpose, and had deputed Noordeen Mingul to proceed to Lus Beyla to restore order there.

4. I have waited patiently for some months in the hopes of seeing your Highness' promises fulfilled, but up to this moment not one of the men concerned in those outrages have been arrested even, and no measures for the restitution of the plundered property have been adopted.

5. The only conclusion that can be drawn is that your Highness has become wholly forgetful of the assurances you have given of your responsibilities as ruler of the country and of your obligations under treaty engagements. Also that you have become utterly indifferent to the retention of your good name, as well as to the establishment of peace and good order in your country.

6. Within the past few months messengers passing through your country bearing letters addressed to British officials have in two cases been brutally murdered and in one sorely maltreated. The enactors of these deeds of violence may not have been Khelat subjects, but that such could be committed within your Highness' territory is only too evident proof of the absence of all proper arrangements for protection and security, for which your Highness must be held responsible.

7. I have for years past steadily and earnestly used every endeavour to support your Highness, and to aid you in the establishment and maintenance of good government in your country. But I regret to have to record that no good results have followed. Your persistent preference for the counsels of evil and unsuitable persons, as well as marked disregard of the sound advice always readily accorded by your good friend, Major Harrison, Political Agent, rendered it necessary to withdraw that officer from your Court in April last. Your having failed to make efficient arrangements for security in your country and protection to travellers passing through it, which you were bound to do under the terms of the treaty of 1854, caused the subsidy, which had been previously paid to you under the seventh article of that treaty, to be withheld; and your having, as it would now appear, designedly avoided adopting any of the suggestions proffered, or the requests contained in my letter of February last, written from Minotee, show clearly that it is as useless as it would be unbecoming that I should attempt to make any further effort in your Highness' behalf.

8. It therefore becomes my duty to inform your Highness plainly and distinctly, and I do so under instructions from his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, that the obligations your Highness lies under according to the treaty of 1854 to protect trade and secure the peace of the frontier remain unaffected by recent events. That the subsidy will continue to be withheld until such time as your Highness complies wholly and completely with the terms of the treaty. That in the event of any disturbances occurring on the frontier the British Government will be compelled to take its own measures for preserving order; and further, that if satisfaction is not afforded by your Highness for the outrages committed in Lus Beyla, it will be necessary to exact reparation in such manner as the British Government deem most suitable.

9. I trust that your Highness may yet, before it is too late, perceive the danger your recent proceedings have placed you in, that I may be enabled to continue to subscribe myself as your friend and well-wisher.

No. 173.

No. 336, dated Camp, Badamee, 10th March 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

SINCE my letter of the 17th ultimo,* Meer Ala Dad, brother-in-law of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, came to Jacobabad bringing letters and verbal communications from that Sirdar, concurred in by others. Colonel Loch was at first doubtful whether he ought to allow the messenger to enter Jacobabad, as the Sirdars were known to be in opposition to the Khan, though not engaged in active hostilities as yet. But he decided on admitting him because he considered that by refusing he would be placing the Sirdars at a disadvantage, when there would be no just reason for doing so. I quite approved of this decision.

* No. 176.

2. Colonel Loch being absent in the districts, Major Harrison received the messenger and learned from him the Sirdars wished to submit to the British Government; that shortly after the withdrawal of Major Harrison and the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed his Highness the Khan sent a message to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, stating he still adhered to the arrangements made by the Commissioner in Sind, and had only been prevented acting up to the same through obstructiveness on the part of Major Harrison and the Shahgassee. The Sirdar thought it advisable to temporise until the Sarawans returned to Kutchee; he therefore promised to send his son to Khelat. Since the Sarawans came into Kutchee his Highness' officials have repeatedly sent to the Sirdar and chiefs, saying that his Highness bore no ill-will towards them, but only towards Major Harrison and the Shahgassee, because they reported that the country would be disorganized when they left. That his Highness wanted to be on good terms with them so as to disprove the above statements and lower the character and reputation of Major Harrison and the Shahgassee in the eyes of the British Government. If the Sarawan chiefs would not agree to make their salaam, or send their sons, they were asked to sign a general letter that they were on good terms with his Highness. As the Sirdar would not yield to these suggestions, his Highness' officials entered into intrigues with the Kujjucks, bribed some of the chiefs, and altogether made the position in Seebee so unbearable as an asylum, that the Sirdar had no other alternative than to avail himself of the opportunity now offered when the tribes are assembled in the neighbourhood of Dadur preparatory to returning above the passes to try his strength against his Highness' officials. Owing to the restless habits of the tribes, and the chance that they might move off by themselves, as also to the want of money, it was intended by the Sirdars that they should attack Dadur within ten days or a fortnight.† The messenger further added in explanation of the views of the Sirdars that his Highness the Khan's policy towards them, in spite of all he may say, was fully declared by causing Sirdar Imaum Buksh Rind to be arrested and taken prisoner with his family to Bagh. It was also implied that the Sirdars had every hope of succeeding, want of money only being their great difficulty.

† From 24th February.

Meer Noordeen Mingul had written to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, saying the Khan had deceived him about the release of the ex-Jam of Lus Beyla, so he intended to raise the Jalawan country and had been promised support by the tribes. Moolla Mahomed had replied that Meer Noordeen had so often deceived him that he placed no dependence on his statements. He himself knew what were the Khan's feelings towards the Brahooees; they would be treated in the same way Sirdar Imaum Buksh had been.

The messenger added that Naib Abdool Azeez and the Kazee of Bagh had arrived at Dadur with 200 sowars, and talked of attacking the Brahooees when collected together.

3. The instructions sent by me to the Political Superintendent were as stated in my telegram of the 2nd instant, that we should remain strictly neutral and leave the Sirdars to fight it out or not as they liked, but they were to be distinctly informed that in the event of rupture taking place between the Khan and them, they would be made to answer for any injury that might be done by them or their adherents, to merchants or travellers passing through the country, or for any disturbance of order on the British border through their acts.

4. The latest news from Kutchee was that the Sirdars were assembled at Mittree, 16 miles south of Dadur, but undecided as to their movements, owing to the want of means, and it was also said owing to some few of the influential ones amongst them having been bribed over by the Khan's officials. Unanimity, therefore, was not so much trusted in, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was reported to be thinking of seeking refuge in the Murree Hills. The orders Naib Abdool Azeez had received from the Khan were either to coerce the Brahooee Chiefs or obtain their submission before they left Kutchee. In the event of his not being able to do either he was to follow them up the Bolan, and another force would be sent to meet them at the head of the pass.

5. I have received no reply as yet from his Highness the Khan to my letter of the 17th ultimo. neither have I heard of his having attempted to comply with the requisitions made upon him for restitution of the property plundered in Lus Beyla, or punishment of the robbers, further than those mentioned in my letter* to you of the 17th idem. But an event has recently occurred which I think is decisive that further forbearance towards his Highness the Khan of Khelat cannot be permitted, and that his incapability of carrying on the Government of his country, or of maintaining any kind of order therein, demand that immediate and vigorous measures be adopted to compel a better observance of the treaty engagements entered into by him with the Government of India.

* No. 175.

6. A party of 200 armed men of the Sassoolee-Brahooee tribe crossed the British border near the Goj River in the Shikarpoor Collectorate, and forcibly carried off certain slaves who had taken refuge in British territory. It appears from the deposition, copies of which are appended, that these families of slaves living with the Sassoolee tribe of Brahooees† conceiving themselves ill-treated, fled from their masters, and came on the 10th February for refuge to the village of Khubbur Pahee, near Salaree, at the foot of the hills in the Kukkur talooka of the Shikarpoor Collectorate, well within the British boundary. On the following afternoon Police camel sowar Kundoo Khan reached the same village on his way to the Hurbab Pass. The slaves reported themselves to him, and he advised them to proceed further into Sind.‡ A few hours afterwards, at about 8 p.m., 200 armed men headed by Pahur Khan, Chief of the Sassoolees, and Chakur Khan, his brother, entered the village and forcibly carried off the females and children of the slaves, also certain property; the grown males managed to escape. The policeman states that he attempted to check the Sassoolees, but they would not listen to him, and kept him in charge of 15 or 16 of their party, while the others carried off the women, children, and property, leaving apparently at once. The Thannadar of Kukkur, in his deposition, states that the Sassoolees had their swords drawn and matches of their firearms lighted; but this does not appear in the evidence of the camel sowar, Kundoo Khan. This, however, does not materially affect the main question. British territory was entered by an armed body of men, and people who had sought refuge there were forcibly carried away from it.

† The Sassoolees reside in the summer at Zeedee near Kozdar in Khelat territory, but in the cold weather they come to the Goj River near the western border of Sind.

‡ He ought to have taken them at once to his thanna at Kukkur.

7. No one else in the village was molested, so the object of the invaders was clearly only to recover their fugitive slaves; but this cannot be considered in any way to lessen the gravity of the outrage. It is well known throughout Beloochistan that individuals who may be slaves there are free the moment they come on British ground. And should they carry off any property of their former masters, the latter know that on representation through their Khan to the British authorities full investigation would be made, and if robbery was proved, the culprits would be given up for punishment for that crime.

8. The act, therefore, can only be styled as a most insolent and gross outrage, for which the ruler of the country whose subjects could dare to act in such a manner must be held responsible. The police on the spot and in the neighbourhood consisting of—

At Kukkur - - -	1 chief constable, 2 head constables, 5 constables—1 mounted, 4 foot,
At Gool Mahomed-ke-put -	1 head constable, 1 constable mounted, were quite insufficient to follow such a body with any prospect of success, and before a party of cavalry could be sent from Jacobabad the Sassoolees would be far back in their hills.

9. The correspondence during the past few years will show that no effort has been spared to endeavour to support his Highness the Khan of Khelat in the good government of his country, and to carry out the spirit of the treaty between the British and his Government. It is, therefore, with great reluctance that I have now to point out that the present inaction of the Khan and absence of restraining power over the action of his subjects, as evidenced in this late gross insult to the British Government, render it, in my opinion, necessary that a different course should be adopted, and the Khan, as well as the whole country, shown that while the Government of India had no desire to interfere in the internal relations of the State of Beloochistan, it would immediately and severely resent any act that at all affected the British possessions. It is the feeling among the wild Brahooees that such would inevitably follow, as also our known support of the Khan's authority that has hitherto kept the lengthened boundary line on the west of Sind from the northern frontier to the sea, a distance of some 300 miles, safe from any violent breach of the peace, and capable of being held by only a very small body of policemen. If the present outrage is not promptly and severely met, any of the numerous petty chiefs along the border may follow the example of the Sassoolees, and make it necessary for the protection of British subjects that a strong force should be stationed along the whole line down to the sea.

10. As stated in my telegram of to-day's date,† though the season is somewhat advanced, there is yet time to enforce due observance of the treaty on his Highness the Khan, and demand full reparation for this insult, as well as for the outrages committed on travellers last spring, should his Excellency the Viceroy so wish it. During the cold season operations in the neighbourhood of Khelat are not easy, owing to the inclemency of the weather and difficulty in obtaining supplies; but in the spring, summer, and autumn, there is nothing whatever to prevent our troops working when once they are above the passes; and provided they can be in the higher and cooler positions by the end of April, there need be no difficulty experienced whatever.

† Copy enclosed.

11. To ensure the expedition being thoroughly successful, and to restore order once for all, I would venture to recommend that two light columns should be dispatched, one from Kurrachee viâ Lus Beyla and Khozdar to Khelat, the other from Jacobabad viâ Bagh, Dadur, and the Bolan to Moostung and Khelat. The first would instil order in the southern portion, the second do the same in the north, and prevent the Khan attempting to escape at the last towards Seistan.

12. The Kurrachee column might consist of—

A field battery of artillery.
Two 10-inch mortars.
*A regiment of Sind horse from Jacobabad.
Wing European regiment.
Regiment Native Infantry.

The Jacobabad one—

Mountain train now at Jacobabad.
Regiment of Sind horse.
Wing European regiment.
Jacob's rifles.

The mountain train is manned by soldiers from Jacob's rifles, so the two should go together. Provisions for two months should accompany each column, and they should all start as early in April as possible. They would have to spend the summer at Khelat. The whole to be under Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent and Commandant on the Frontier. The Kurrachee column moving under the command of the senior officer with a political officer detached by Colonel Loch with him. The column marching through Kutchee should take possession of it, to be held until the expedition is concluded; well-selected officials of the country who could be trusted being put in charge of Bagh and Dadur, with small levies from the Belooch (who would readily join us) to support them. These to be paid from the State revenues of Kutchee, which would easily meet the charge. Postal communication to be kept open by Belooch sowars, who would be paid regularly in the same way. Private property, or that of the Sirdars remaining quiet or tendering submission, to be scrupulously respected.

* This might be reduced to a wing or two squadrons, so as not to remove too many of the cavalry from the frontier.

13. The wing of the European regiment, with its stores, camp equipage, &c., and requirements for the Jacobabad column, could be sent by steamer to Sukkur from Kotree in nine days, or probably less at this season of the year, and would march thence to Jacobabad, &c.

14. To supply the place of the troops thus taken from Sind it would be necessary to give an European and one Native regiment from Bombay. These would come in two or three days by steamer. A wing of a Native Infantry regiment would have to be sent from Lower Sind to Jacobabad to take the duties now performed there by the Jacob's Rifles. A wing would I think be sufficient. It could also proceed by steamer up the river.

15. In the event of this movement being decided on, I would further venture to recommend that a proclamation should be issued by the Government of India, pointing out the exact reasons that have rendered it necessary, and showing that the operations are solely intended to ensure the exact observance of the treaty his Highness the Khan had entered into with the British Government, which has lately been directly neglected by him, to re-establish order and proper rule in the country, and to provide that rights and privileges of all shall be guaranteed for the future.

16. The Sirdars generally will not join with the Khan against us I feel convinced. The openly discontented ones certainly not. But to prevent our being in any way pledged to them, or to appear as if we were supporting them in their opposition against their ruler, I have, as his Excellency the Viceroy will have learned from previous correspondence, most carefully abstained from giving them any countenance, and I think this will be the fairest and most just plan to follow still. It is for this reason I propose the wording of the proclamation being only general. But it might be added that all who remain quiet in their houses, abstain and make their followers abstain from all acts of violence or disorder during the operations, will have every consideration accorded them, and be confirmed in all their hereditary possessions.

17. I shall be glad of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General's early instructions in this matter as the time left is very short. I would only add that the movement against Khelat would overawe the Murrees for a time. If not the one regiment and a half of Sind Horse left on the frontier would be sufficient to deal with them should they attempt anything on the side of Sind. And should their conduct render such necessary they might be made to answer for their evil deeds in the following cold season by the troops from Khelat, or a portion of them returning through their hills and enforcing their obedience.

Copy of this correspondence will be forwarded direct to the Government of Bombay as usual.

Enclosure 1 in No. 173.

No. 640, dated Camp, Khoraiseo, 2nd March 1874.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

I DO myself the honour to forward, for your information, the accompanying correspondence* (which I shall feel obliged by your returning) received from the Collector of Shikarpoor.

* Vide translation appended.

2. From the statements made by Futteh Ali, Saidad, Khumber, Suffo, and Yaroo before Head Constable Kundoo Khan, it appears that these persons, as well as those who were carried off by force, were the slaves of Pahur Khan, Sassoolee Sirdar, and his brother Chakur Khan, and that they having unlawfully possessed themselves of cattle and other property had left his Highness the Khan's country and taken refuge in British territory in the hopes of receiving protection from the British authorities.

3. From the report made by the Thannadar and police constables, it would appear that these persons arrived in the Larkana district on the 10th of February, and on the following day Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan followed them, and having taken possession of as many of their slaves as they could find, carried them and all their families, cattle, and other property back with them, but that they neither molested nor did harm to anyone else living in the village; it therefore appears reasonable to suppose that these two Sassoolee Sirdars entered British territory for this purpose alone.

4. This, however, does not alter the fact of these Sirdars, residents of Zeedee near Kozdar in his Highness the Khan's country, having invaded British territory, and carried off by force certain slaves, cattle, &c. &c., belonging to them, and the fact of their followers, amounting, it would appear, to about 200 in number, having their matches lighted and swords drawn, shows that they fully intended to act on the offensive had the British authorities attempted to stop them.

5. I consider the police are very much to blame for allowing these slaves, with all their cattle and property, to be given an asylum in British territory; for considering the present most unsettled state of his Highness the Khan's country, it cannot be wondered at, if thieves and robbers are received into our districts, that those who have been robbed attempted to seize the robbers and recover their property. This, however, in no way lessens the cool insolence and impertinence of Sirdars Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan, Sassoolees, and I have the honour to request what measures you would wish me to adopt as to the recapture of the slaves and the recovery of the property, as well as the punishment of the Sirdars.

6. In the hot weather Sirdars Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan live at Zeedee near Kozdar, and in the cold season at Ghoj, which is separated from the Larkana District by the Lak Ghât.

Enclosure 2 in No. 173.

No. 337, dated Camp, Badambe, 10th March 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 2nd instant, I have the honour to inform you, that all the circumstances of the outrage on British territory have been communicated to the Government of India, whose instructions will be awaited. Meanwhile my telegram will have informed you of my desire that demand should at once be made on his Highness the Khan of Khelat that the Sassoolee chiefs Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan should be immediately delivered up to you, with the women, children, and property carried off by them from British territory, that they (the chiefs) may be made to answer for the insolent outrage committed by them.

2. I do not think the police were to blame further than that the Sowar Kundoo Khan should have at once taken the fugitive slaves and their property to the thanna at Kukkur directly he was made acquainted with the circumstances under which they had entered British territory, when the thannadar would have at once reported the matter and applied for orders. Instructions to this effect have been issued to the Police Superintendents of Shikarpoor and Kurrachee for future guidance.

Enclosure 3 in No. 173.

No. 713, dated 25th February 1874.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Political Agent, Khelat.

Seven papers with endorsement No. 500, from the District Magistrate of Shikarpoor, are enclosed. You will kindly inform me if you know any of the depredators named in the correspondence, and where they live.

Enclosure 4 in No. 173.

No. 500, dated 20th February 1874.

From District Magistrate, Shikarpoor, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

The enclosed papers in 14 pages are forwarded. It will appear that the persons named have acted most culpably. Although the people whose property, children, &c. they have carried away were their slaves, yet when they entered the British border they were quite free men, and the depredators had no right then to enter the British border and behave as they did. You will kindly cause the delinquents to be apprehended and sent to me, so that they may be treated according to law; you will also kindly obtain possession of the children, women, property, cattle, &c. they have taken away and send them to me.

Enclosure 5 in No. 173.

No. 254, dated 19th February 1874.

From Magistrate, Mehur Division, to District Magistrate, Shikarpoor.

A REPORT from the Second-class Magistrate, Kukkur, is enclosed with another report, No. 323, and accompaniment, for such arrangements as may be necessary.

Enclosure 6 in No. 173.

No. 319, dated 14th February 1874.

From Thannadar of Kukkur to Magistrate of Kukkur.

TO-DAY, the 14th February 1874, about 3 o'clock afternoon, Mussoo Khan, Thannadar, Put Gool Mahomed Talooka, Kukkur, informed me that three days ago, or 12th instant, Fakeer Bukhsh, constable of the Kuppoee Pass, brought to his notice that on the previous day, or 11th February, at 8 p.m., some 200 mounted and foot armed men entered the village of Kubburpahee, near Salaree Talooka, Kukkur, and committed outrages. I started at once and met Kundoo Khan, camel constable, at the village of Towur, who informed me that he had halted in the village of Kubburpahee, on his way to Hurbab Pass. About 200 mounted and foot armed men came there from the Khan's territory, and stated that the three families who had previously migrated into that village were their slaves, and that they would forcibly take them away. The male members of those three families, by name Dillawur Futteh Ali, Saeedad, Khubbur, Saffoo, Yaroo, disappeared in order to save their lives; he (the camel sowar) checked them, but about 15 or 16 men of the mob laid hold of him, while the rest of the malefactors carried away the children, women, household property, &c., five camels, and six cattle belonging to the above three families. As he (the camel constable) was alone, he would have been murdered by them if opposition was offered, as they were armed with naked swords and with their matches lighted, and appeared ready to fight. I made inquiries on arrival at the place, and found the information given by Mussoo Khan confirmed. The several male members of the above families who had disappeared came to me and stated as follows:—

"That Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan wullud Jehan Khan Sassoolee Brahooees, who reside within the Khan's limits, are our Sirdars; we are their slaves. They divested us of all the property we possessed there. To protect ourselves from their outrages we came and settled in British territory. Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan with their followers came and carried away by force 12 of our children and women, as also property."

This statement was confirmed on the inquiry conducted by me independently of them. The intruders have not touched the property or person of any other person in the village. They only carried away by force children, women, and property of the above-mentioned three families, whom they called their slaves. It was difficult for us, one or two policemen, to follow such a great mob. I have therefore brought with me the above-mentioned injured parties, as also the camel sowar, Kunda Khan, The following are the names of the principal men who led the mob.

In this case evidence has been taken from Mussoo Khan, head constable, under section 112 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It rests with the court either to get the district magistrate to correspond with his Highness the Khan of Khelat for punishing the party of upwards of 200 men who made inroad in the British territory, or to pass such other order as he may deem right. The several injured persons and Kundoo Khan, the camel sowar, are sent to the court for any inquiry that may be necessary. I will await the orders of the court.

Names of the principal men above alluded to:—

Pahur Khan, Chakur Khan, Rechee, Gowur Khan, Door Mahomed, Sher Shan, Peer Mahomed, Jafir Khan Saeedino, Dil Moord, Mirza, Soomur, Khuttoo, Khyro, Musafir, Sahno.

Enclosure 7 in No. 173.

No. 321, dated 15th February 1874.

From Magistrate of Kukkur to Divisional Magistrate of Mehur.

COPY of a report from the Thannadar of Kukkur is enclosed for your information. You will learn from this the particulars of an inroad made by a party of 200 mounted and foot men into British territory, and carrying away by force the children, women, and property of certain families whom they called their slaves. When the several men, whose names are mentioned by the Thannadar, have entered British territory with a large number of followers, some arrangements might be made to punish them. The Thannadar's report reached me at 4 p.m. this day at Futtehpoor, and directly I submit a copy of it for your information. I shall take depositions of Dilawur, Futteh Ali, the police sepoy, and others to-morrow and despatch them to you.

Enclosure 8 in No. 173.

No. 323, dated 16th February 1874.

From Magistrate of Kukkur to Divisional Magistrate of Mehur.

IN continuation of my report No. 321, dated 15th February 1874, I beg to enclose four depositions of Kundoo Khan, camel constable, Thannah Hurbab, and the owners of the houses whose children, women, and property from British limits were carried away by Pahur Khan and other Brahooees of his Highness the Khan's territory. The names of the owners of the houses are Dilawur, Futteh Ali, and Wullee Dad. The Thannadar of Kukkur has sent for the elders of the village of Kubburpahee where the outrages took place; on their arrival their depositions will also be taken and submitted.

Enclosure 9 in No. 173.

Dated Futtehpoor, 16th February 1874.

Deposition on oath of Kundoo Khan, Camel Constable, given before Ootumchund, 2nd Class Magistrate of Kukkur.

MY name is Kundoo Khan, son of Rukhio Khan; my age is 36 years; by caste a pahee Mahomedan; by occupation a camel constable of the Thanna of Hurbab Pass.

My information is that it is the sixth day now when I left Kukkur for the Thanna of Hurbab Pass when I got to the village of Khubburpahee. The sun set. I stopped in the village for the night. Dilawur, Futteh Ali, Saeedad, Kubbur, Suffoo, and Yaroo, who had come the previous day from the Khan's country to settle in the village, made their appearance and informed me that they having escaped from their Sirdar Pahur Khan, who had deprived them of their property, had migrated into the above-named village with their children and families and the rest of their property. I advised them to proceed further into Sind. About 8 o'clock at night some 200 mounted and foot men with arms entered the village of Khubburpahee. I went to check them, but they did not listen to me. I then advised the principal men of the houses to escape, which they did. I was then laid hold of by about 15 or 16 men, while the others carried away the children and females, 12 in number, 5 camels, 6 cattle, and other household things of the above-mentioned persons. Fukeer Buksh, constable of the Thannah of Kussoee Pass, was at the place. I sent him to lay information at the Thannah of Put Gool Mahomed. When I was released by the mob I took with me the hidden persons, Dilawur Khan, Futteh Ali, Saeedad, Kubbur, Suffoo, and Yaroo, and proceeded to the village of Powar, where I met Mussoo Khan, Duffadar, head constable of the Put Gool Mahomed Thanna. I told him what had occurred. Mussoo Khan himself also made inquiries on the spot and found my report correct. The mounted and foot men referred to cleared out of the British frontier during the course of the same night.

Pahur Khan, Chakur Khan wullud Jehan Khan Brahooees, Reechee Khan, Gowur Khan, Door Mahomed, Shere Khan, Peer Mahomed, Jaffer Khan, Saeedino, Door Mahomed and Mirza, Brahooees, residing in his Highness the Khan of Khelat's territory, Khuttoo Khyroo, Moosafir, Soomur, Lalloo, Brahooees, residing within

British limits, were members of the assembly. It being night others could not be recognised. The several persons of the British territory live in the Hurbab Pass; now also they may be there. It is not known whether they have now absconded. Except to the above new comers no loss has been caused to the original residents.

Enclosure 10 in No. 173.

Dated Futtehpoor, 16th February 1874.

Deposition of Dilawur, given on oath before Ootumchund, 2nd Class Magistrate, Kukkur.

My name is Dilawur. I am son of Fowjo; my age 35 years; by caste a Khaskelee Brahooee (Mahomedan); by occupation I am a labourer; I reside in Ghoj in his Highness the Khan of Khelat's territory.

My account is that it is about one month when Pahur Khan our Sirdar despoiled us of one camel, one horse, about one hundred sheep and goats, and one sword. He was also inclined to deprive us of the rest of our property. In order then to protect our lives and property, as we were in danger of being murdered, I came to settle in British territory. Two other families of my brother Futteh Ali and Wullee Dad Brahooee also came, and we all three families settled in the village of Khubbupahee. It is the sixth day since we came. At midnight of the same day a force followed us. There were the following persons in the mob:—

Pahur Khan, Chakur Khan, Reechee, Gowur Khan, Door Mahomed, Gholam Mahomed, Dil Moorad, Jaffir Khan, Saeedino Shere Khan, and Mirza Brahooees. There were also five persons of the British territory, by name Soomur, Khyroo, Lalloo, Khuttoo, Moosafir Brahooees, who were recognised by us. To save our lives we disappeared. They carried away our children and females, 12 in number, 6 cattle, 5 camels, and other household property. The names of the 12 persons carried away are—

1. Faiz Mahomed wullud Futteh Ali.
2. Khyo Mahomed wullud Futteh Ali.
3. Pindo wullud Wulleedad.
4. Moorad wullud Wulleedad.
5. Imam Ali wullud Khubbur.
6. Bindee, daughter of Wulleedad.
7. Muryum, ditto ditto.
8. Kowree ditto ditto.
9. Gunjee, wife of ditto.
10. Suaza, wife of Futteh Ali.
11. Jecundee, my wife.
12. Ganjo, son of Khubbur.

Enclosure 11 in No. 173.

Dated Futtehpoor, 16th February 1874.

Deposition of Futteh Ali, given on oath before Ootumchund, 2nd Class Magistrate, Kukkur.

My name is Futteh Ali; I am son of Fowjo; my age is 30 years; by occupation I am a labourer; I reside in Ghoj of his Highness the Khan's territory.

My account is that about one month ago Pahur Khan our Sirdar deprived us by force of one camel, one bullock, one sword, and a flock of sheep and goats, about 150 in number. He also intended to take possession of the rest of our property; then to protect our lives and property about six days ago we came to live in Kubburpahee, Talooka Kukkur, within British limits. On the very day we arrived at Khubburpahee a force of about 200 men came in at midnight. Of them the following were recognized:—

Pahur Khan, Chakur Khan, Reechee, Gowur Khan, Door Mahomed, Jaffir Khan, Shere Khan, Gholam Mahomed, Peer Mahomed, Saeedino, Brahooee Sassoolees. To save our lives we escaped; our children and females, 12 in number, adults and minor, were carried away by them; also 5 camels, 6 bullocks, and other household property. The following are the names of the twelve persons:—

1. Faiz Mahomed, my son.
2. Khyr Mahomed, my son.
3. Pindo wullud Wulleedad.
4. Moorad wullud Wulleedad.
5. Imam Ali wullud Khubbur.
6. Bindee, daughter of Wulleedad.
7. Muryum, ditto ditto.
8. Kowree ditto ditto.
9. Gunjee, wife of ditto.
10. Suaza, my wife.
11. Jecundee, wife of Dilawur.
12. Ganjo, son of Khubbur.

Enclosure 12 in No. 173.

Dated Futtehpoor, 16th February 1874.

Deposition of Wulleedad, given on oath before Ootumchund, 2nd Class Magistrate of Kukkur.

My name is Wulleedad; my father's name is Moorad; my age is 50 years; by caste I am a Brahooee, by occupation I am a cultivator; I resided in Ghoj of his Highness the Khan's territory.

My account is, that about one month ago Pahur Khan Brahooee deprived us of one camel, one bullock, one sword, and sheep and goats, and appeared inclined to plunder the rest of our property. We then came to live in Khubbupahree within the limits of the British Government. It is now six days since my family and those of Dilawur and Futteh Ali came there. At midnight of the same day a force came in. The following men were recognised:—

Pahur Khan, Chakur Khan, Door Mahomed Reechee, Peer Mahomed, Dilmoorad, Jaffir Khan, Saeedino, Brahooees of his Highness the Khan's country, and Soomur, Brahooee of the British territory.

We were advised at the time by the sowar to run away: we disappeared to save our lives. They carried away our children and women, 12 in number, 5 camels, 6 cattle, and other household property. The following are the names of the persons carried away:—

1. Faiz Mahomed wullud Futteh Ali.
2. Khyro Mahomed wullud Futteh Ali.
3. Pindo, my son.
4. Moorad, my son.
5. ImamAli wullud Khubbur.
6. Bindee, my daughter.
7. Muryum, my daughter.
8. Kowree, my daughter.
9. Gunjee, my wife.
10. Suaza, wife of Futteh Ali.
11. Jecundee, wife of Dilawur.
12. Ganjo, son of Khubbur.

Enclosure 13 in No. 173.

No. 68, dated 27th February 1874.

From Political Agent, Khelat, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In reply to your letter No. 713, dated 25th February 1874, I have the honour to inform you that I made myself acquainted with what you wrote to me. Amongst the names given in the correspondence I know Pahur Khan and Chakur Khan. Pahur Khan is a Brahooee from Sassoolee Section, and is Sirdar of that section. Chakur Khan is his brother. In the hot season they live at Zeedee in Khozdar, and in cold season at Ghoj. The other names given must be those of his tribe whom I do not know.

No. 654, dated Camp Khoraisee, 3rd March 1874.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

With reference to your memorandum No. 190 of the 18th ultimo, I would beg to point out that the quotation of the word "forcibly" in his Highness the Khan's reply is not erroneous as it appears in the vernacular translation forwarded to his Highness, copy of which is attached. The translation of my letter of the 22nd December last to his Highness was made by Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to whom the first report of the letter having been taken from the kossid was made, and I am induced to believe it probable that the kossid in reporting the matter did use the word "forcibly," and that Major Harrison having this fresh in his memory thus introduced it, although I had abstained from using it, as there was no positive proof that such was the case.

2. I regret that the introduction of the word "forcibly" should have escaped my notice when the vernacular translation was read to me prior to my signing it.

No. 593, dated Camp Thul, 24th February 1874.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Commissioner in Sind.

In forwarding the accompanying two letters in the vernacular to your address, also two letters and translations thereof from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, and Sirdar Bukhtiar Khan, Baroozai, with my reply to them, I have the honour to inform you that on Sunday forenoon Yakoob Khan arrived in Jacobabad, bringing a letter from Sirdar Bukhtiar Khan, Baroozai; he at once reported his arrival to Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, and informed that officer that Sirdar Alla Dad, brother-in-law of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, had arrived at Sabaiah-ke-Gote, and requested permission for him to be allowed to come to Jacobabad, as he was the bearer of letters from his Sirdar to the Commissioner in Sind and myself.

2. After duly considering the matter I directed Major Harrison to inform Yakoob Khan that Alla Dad might be allowed to come to Jacobabad the following morning and deliver his letters, and I requested Major Harrison to explain to Alla Dad verbally and impress on him that Government would in no way assist the Sirdars against their sovereign; that it was the wish of the British Government to remain strictly neutral so long as the present misunderstanding existed between his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars, and that the peace of the border did not call for other measures.

3. My principal reason for admitting the Sarawan chief's messenger was that I was afraid if he was not allowed to pay his respects to Major Harrison in my absence and deliver his letters in the same way that his Highness' messengers are admitted, that the Sirdar's adherents and others in Kutchee might suppose that the Raisanee chief was in disgrace with the British Government, and that allowing such an opinion to get abroad would not only be most unfair to Moolla Mahomed after the way he has lately behaved, but that it would make his Highness' officials and troops more arrogant, overbearing, and tyrannical than they are now, and I feared it might be putting the match to the fire and so tacitly assisting his Highness, and thus be the means of setting Kutchee in a blaze, as the Naib of Bagh, Abdool Azeez, and the Kazee of Bagh, advised by Mahomed Khan, late Vakeel, have shown by their late acts that they would not be slow to take advantage either of estranging the Sarawan chief's adherents from him, or to attack him at once if they thought they had a fair chance of defeating him and those Brahoees who might remain staunch to him.

Translation of a Letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, and other Chiefs, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 29th Zoolhuj 1290=18th February 1874.

CHERISHER of the poor! When his Excellency the Governor of Bombay and Commissioner in Sind visited Jacobabad, I sent my brother, Alla Dad, to make his salaam to the Commissioner and yourself. In your reply to my petition you wrote that the Commissioner in Sind would reply to my letter, and I would then learn what he had to say. Cherisher of the poor! three months have elapsed since I wrote, and no answer has been received. I don't know the reason, or whether your servant has been guilty of any fault or disobedience that he has not been made happy by receiving a reply.

Cherisher of the poor! Both the Commissioner and yourself have written two or three times to me that I should be obedient and act as Government desired, and I should be rewarded; up to the present I have not diverged one hair's breadth from the Government wish and am still acting as desired, but I see no reward as yet for my good services and obedience. I am prepared to be obedient and serve—you are my master.

I send my brother, Alla Dad, with letters, so hope he will arrive safely at Jacobabad; he will represent all I wish to say. Kindly treat him as a person of position, and ask the Commissioner to reply to my former letter and the one now sent.

Consider me a servant at your door and make me happy by writing.

May your health and prosperity increase!

Enclosure 2 in No. 175.

Translation of a Letter from Meer Bukhtiar Khan, Baroozai, to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 29th Zoolhuj=18th February 1874.

I REPORTED all that has occurred in a former letter. The latest news is as follows:—A Doomur force proceeded by the rear of old Seebee and the Nari river towards Dadur; on the road between Seebee and Dadur the Muzeranee Murrees were camped. Shere Dil himself with two or three families was on this side of the river, the rest of the Toman who were on the other side were plundered and had to fly for their lives; 45 families were plundered; 12 flocks of sheep besides lambs, as also 160 bullocks and donkeys; one Muzeranee was killed; Sher Dil himself was not attacked. He went in pursuit with 50 men; he sent to the Dadur detachment, who went as far as Mishhale and then refused to proceed. Sher Dil finding he was outnumbered returned. I sent Moolla Yakoob with this letter, and hope he will reach Jacobabad. Consider him trustworthy and believe what he tells you, and kindly send me a reply by him.

Consider me a servant at your door and make me happy by writing.

May your authority always increase!

Enclosure 3 in No. 175.

No. 592, dated Camp Thul, 24th February 1874.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Political Agent, Khelat.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of the two vernacular letters with translations, one from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, and the other from Bukhtiar Khan, Baroozai, and to request that you will write to the former as follows:—"Colonel Loch, "Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, having left for the districts, I forwarded "your letter to him, and he has desired me to write in reply and call your attention to "the Commissioner in Sind's letter written to you in June last, in which he says:— "'Be sure that those who abstain from violence, and do their best to restrain others "'from it, will in the end reap their reward. I do not anticipate that members of your "'Ooloos will misbehave as long as they have so wise an example set them by their "'Sirdar.' Better advice than this I cannot give you, and as for assistance, that is "quite out of the question, as it is the wish of the British Government to remain strictly "neutral; but you are thoroughly acquainted with the wishes of the Commissioner in "Sind and myself regarding his Highness the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars and their "followers; that he should treat them in every way as a father should his children, and "on the other hand, that his Sirdars and subjects should show his Highness the respect,

" honour, and obedience that is due from the children to their parent, from the subjects " to their sovereign; but so long as his Highness is estranged from you and you from " him, I much fear that neither the Commissioner's nor my wishes can be fulfilled."

To the latter Sirdar please merely acknowledge receipt of his letter and say, through press of work I am unable to reply to it myself, but I will do so in a day or two. Letter to the Commissioner in Sind has been forwarded by to-day's post.

Add to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's letter that his letter to the Commissioner in Sind will be forwarded by to-day's post, and that the Commissioner in Sind has, I believe, been prevented replying to his former letter through excessive amount of business consequent on his Excellency the Governor of Bombay visiting Sind, but I feel sure that the Commissioner will some day reply to it as he promised.

From Commissioner in Sind to Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the papers received with your letter No. 593, dated the 24th ultimo, and to inform you that the reply given to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee, is entirely approved.

No. 679 P., dated Fort William, 17th March 1874.

From Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Commissioner in Sind.

I AM directed to communicate to you the orders of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council on your letter No. 176, dated 17th ultimo, regarding the present position of affairs in Khelat.

2. His Excellency in Council approves of the tenor of your letter of the 17th February to the Khan. Should the reply of the Khan to this communication prove unsatisfactory, your next letter should be a simple ultimatum informing him that until he shows a proper appreciation of his position and obligations towards the British Government, no further communications will be held with him. You will also inform his Highness that, failing his performance of the obligations, the British Government will adopt such measures as circumstances may require for the defence of their frontier and the protection of their subjects; and that any of his people maltreating British subjects, or violating the frontier, will be treated as common robbers. Further, that no interference will be exercised in the quarrel between himself and his Sirdars, and no assistance given him in any difficulties in which he may be entangled.

3. His Excellency in Council doubts the expediency of holding any communication with the Sirdars at present on the subject of their relations with the Khan in the manner proposed in the conclusion of paragraph 10 of your letter; at any rate before authorising such a course he will await receipt of the full information which has been called for on the subject of your telegram of the 12th instant.

From Under-Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

IN continuation of the docket from this office, No. 302 P., dated the 30th of January last, regarding the two raids recently committed by the Murrees in the immediate neighbourhood of British territory, I am instructed to forward herewith a copy of a letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 136, dated the 8th ultimo, on the subject, and to request that the Government of India may be furnished at a very early date with an expression of the opinion of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor on the proposals of Sir W. Merewether for the punishment of the Murrees.

No. 178.

No. 391, dated Camp Bagani, 28th March 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I HAVE the honour to forward, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy, translations (with originals) of two letters received from his Highness the Khan of Khelat in answer to my letter of the 17th February last.

2. As will be seen they are utterly unsatisfactory, full of promises and assertions, but nothing more; and he makes no proper amends for the disrespectful style of writing he had adopted.

3. I am afraid that no good will be done by any further endeavours to bring the Khan to a right understanding of his position until he sees that Government is really in earnest and will not submit to his continued evasion of treaty engagements. His present advisers have told him that he has only to write letters and make promises and nothing would be done to him. It is time I think that his Highness should be undeceived on this point.

4. The letter his Highness alludes to as having been sent to me direct was forwarded to me from Kurrachee, and I returned it through the Political Superintendent on the Frontier, requesting him to inform the Khan I could not receive it; first, because it was deliberately sent by the Khan, not through the usual channel; and next, because it was full of statements which I could not accept. It consisted chiefly of statements reflecting on the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, the only really true servant he ever had about him; also it contained remarks reflecting on the proceedings of Colonel Loch and Major Harrison.

5. As the kossid was about to leave Khelat his Highness the Khan despatched Abdoolla Jan, son of the late Daroga Gool Mahomed, on a secret mission to Candahar, the Khan giving the instructions from his own mouth to Abdoolla Jan. The latter objected to carrying the message, whatever it was, but the Khan insisted, and at last he left. Endeavours are being made to obtain information from Candahar as to the nature of this mission, and something may be learned before long at Jacobabad.

Enclosure 1 in No. 178.

Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 22nd Mohurrum 1291.

YOUR letter conveying the news of your welfare and happiness reached me at an auspicious moment and made me glad. You have been pleased to write that last year merchants were injured in various ways by the people of Lus Beyla within the district of the Chootahs; that in reply to a letter from Colonel Loch, I wrote that arrangements would soon be made for the apprehension and punishment of the robbers and restitution of the merchants' property, and that though so many months had elapsed none of my promises had been fulfilled, which showed that I had forgotten the assurances given by me, my responsibility as a ruler, and my obligations under the treaty engagements mutually entered into by me and your Government. My friend, I am certainly responsible for the above acts, and I appointed Meer Noordeen Mingul solely for the purpose of arresting the robbers, obtaining restitution of the stolen property, and restoring peace on the road. Some time after Meer Noordeen Mingul's arrival in Lus Beyla he wrote to me that the identical property of the merchants could not be obtained, but other camels and cattle were being offered in their stead. This I did not approve of, and in reply I informed him that such proceedings would not be sanctioned; the property of the merchants plundered, or its full equivalent in money, would be required. Further it seems that night and day messages from the ex-Jam's son are received by these people assuring them that he (the Jam's son) is shortly to return to Lus Beyla. These foolish people have consequently not yet adjusted the merchants' claims, and have put them off from day to day by excuses. It is necessary now that I should personally take steps in the matter. God willing, shortly I shall appoint one of my servants and place troops under him, so that he will apprehend the malefactors, obtain restitution of every farthing's worth of the merchants' property, and punish the robbers heavily for their acts to serve as an example for the future. You write that two kossids carrying letters for British officials have been murdered in my district, and that the fact of the perpetrators not having been punished shows that there was no management, peace, or order in my country, for which I am responsible. My great friend, some months ago one kossid was seized by injudicious Murrees and deprived of the letters in his charge. My troops that were posted at Kirta for the protection of kafilas having learnt this followed the Murrees by night, killed one Palo, brother of Saleh, and then returned to their post. I am quite ignorant of the case of the second kossid. There is not the least doubt that the Murrees have become lawless. Last year I reported to you from Bagh that they were insubordinate and were not entitled to be my Ooloos. You know how peaceful and quiet the state of my country then was. The disorders which have recently prevailed are owing to instigations and intriguing of restless characters. God willing, with the aid and help of friends I will shortly put an end to this state of affairs. You kindly state that for some years now you have steadily and earnestly endeavoured to assist me in enforcing peace and good government in my country, but no good results have followed, because I had listened to the advice of some ill-designed people and had failed to act on the excellent suggestions of my friend, Major Harrison. It is quite true that you have always interested yourself in the affairs of this country, and I hope for the same favours being continued. I have never followed the advice of evil persons, and have never allowed such people to remain in my presence; but the above gentleman disbelieving my statements placed reliance on the adverse assertions of Wullee Mahomed. All my endeavours on this subject were of no avail, and fearing that matters might daily get worse I started and made myself happy by visiting you on two occasions. Whatever I had to say or propose I told you at Shahpoor, and in order to meet the wishes of the British Government I consented without hesitation to all matters, even such as I thought were derogatory to my prestige. It is mentioned in your letter that the subsidy paid to me was withheld owing to my failing to maintain the good government and order I was bound to do by treaty engagements. My friend, from the first I have adhered to the terms of the treaty of 1854, and have never acted in violation thereof. For the sake of myself and my country I place every hope in you and your Government. Last year in reply to your letter I informed you from Bagh that though I suffered a loss of about Rupees 80,000 annually in transit duties I did not care, but accepted the sum the British Government had fixed. Although the claims of merchants should have been satisfied by the Brahooees I paid them myself as desired by the British Government, in the hope that with your assistance I should receive a substantial consideration from the British Government to compensate me for the losses so sustained, and never expecting that my annual subsidy would be stopped. You wrote that I had not acted on the suggestions contained in your letter written from Minote, and under instructions from his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India you inform me that if any disturbances take place on the frontier, owing to my failing to fully carry out the terms of the treaty entered into in 1854 to protect trade and to preserve peace on the frontier, it will be necessary for the British Government to take their own measures to ensure peace. For my own renown I have at all times endeavoured to maintain peace and order, and will continue to do so. If, however, this is the determined wish of the British Government I and my country are at their disposal in any way they please. As regards the expression that if I do not give satisfaction regarding the outrages committed in Lus Beyla districts the British Government will exact reparation in the best way they deem advisable. I would state that I have not neglected the management of Lus Beyla affairs, but my endeavours have been frustrated by the designs of Wullee Mahomed and the son of the ex-Jam of Beyla, who night and day send messages, encouraging the people to create disturbances. At the conclusion of your letter it is written that before it is late I should think of the dangerous position in which I have thrown myself. My friend, I have never put myself in danger. Having acted carefully and intelligently, I have always resigned myself to the will of God, who is the cause of everything. As is apparent, I placed every hope in the British Government, and desired that my country, my property, and myself should pass to the British Government in preference to other (Humsurs) equals. I sent viâ Kurrachee a previous letter to your address, from which you will have learnt everything. Comfort your mind and make me happy by writing.

Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 24th Mohurrum 1291.

YOUR letter reached me at a happy moment and made my heart glad. You write that in my letter, dated 29th Ramzan 1290, to the address of Colonel Loch, words wanting in respect and courtesy to the British Government and yourself were used. My friend, from the beginning up to this day I have considered myself dependent on the British Government, and have always looked to your kindness and support. How shall I then fail in this respect. A copy of my letter, dated the 29th Ramzan, is enclosed for your perusal. There appear no disrespectful terms in it. If any error has crept into it you will kindly mark it and let me know. You also write that in another letter, dated 20th Zoolhuj 1290, addressed to the above-named gentleman in connexion with Abdool Azeez and the "perwana" sent to Sher Dil Muzzeranee Murree, unsuitable words were used when speaking of the British Government, and that you wanted an explanation of the same. My friend, it is improbable that I would apply such unbecoming terms as "Dirogh" and "Iftirah" to the above gentleman. Never!! Never!! I have used them for my enemies and ill-wishers whose tongues continue to utter unbecoming things. These words also have probably been pointed out by such persons. In the matter of Sher Dil's letter Abdool Azeez did only this much, viz., he gave intimation to Colonel Loch of the receipt of the letter. There were no instructions to make over the letter to any other person. Sher Dil lived among the hills, daily moving from one place to another, and escorted kafilas through the Bolan. At the time when the perwana reached Bagh, Sher Dil was not with his Toman. These circumstances and a man having to go in search of him and bring him to Bagh were the cause of delay.* The letter was afterwards delivered to him. This is the account of the detention of the letter. When I myself would not allow such irregularities to occur in the affairs of the British Government, how could my servants dare to perpetrate them? If any of my servants were to commit such an act he would be so punished that he would serve as an example for others.

* This is evasion and I regret to say not true. (Sd.) W. L. M.

SIR, Dated Lahore, 29th April 1874.

I AM desired to forward for the information of the Government of India copy of a letter from the Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan, No. 524, dated 18th inst., with enclosures, regarding the present state of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, subjects of the Khan of Khelat, and the effect such is likely to have in the Punjab frontier.

I have, &c.

T. H. THORNTON,
Secretary to Government, Punjab.

Enclosure 1 in No. 179.

No. 524, dated 18th April 1874.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan, to the Secretary to Government, Punjab.

HAS the honour to forward copy of a letter No. 523, dated 17th inst., to the address of the Political Superintendent, Jacobabad, regarding the present state of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and the effect such is likely to have on the Punjab frontier.

Enclosure 2 in No. 179.

No. 523, dated Derah Ghazi Khan, 17th April 1874.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan, to the Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

In accordance with my request you were kind enough to direct that Shah Baz Khan, the eldest son of the Boogtee Tomandar, should meet me at the Sakhi Sarwar horse fair, which he did on the 10th of this month. I desired Shah Baz Khan's presence for several reasons, but chiefly on account of similar reports having reached me to the one made in letter from the Mazari Chief to my address, copy of which, along with others, as per margin, I enclose. I had also heard that of late the Massuri Boogtee chiefs had actively opposed their Tomandar, Gulam Murteza, and I wished to know if it was true. I further had heard that Hyder Khan, the brother of the once noted outlaw, Gulam Hossein, who was killed when leading a combined raid of Murrees and Massuri Boogtees on Harrand, had joined the Murrees with all his people, and that it was their intention to, as in former days, raid on their neighbours.

From Babal Khan, Chief of the Khetrans.
Gulam Murteza Khan, Tomandar Boogtee.
Bozdar Vakil, Yar Muhammad.

2. When I met Gulam Murteza, the Boogtee Tomandar, in the cold weather at Wattakeri in our own Lagari Chief's country, he told me of the misconduct of the Massuris, but attributed all to Guzzun Khan, the Murree Tomandar, being allowed to receive discontented men of his tribe, and he asked my aid to prevent this. Gulam Murteza on his part promised me to do his best to put a stop to the Massuris and others of his tribe "looting" the Luni and Shahdozai Pathan Chief and others bringing horses to the fair. This, however, he has not been able to accomplish. I heard at the fair from his son, which was corroborated by Babal Khan, that the Massuris had sent word to their chief's remonstrances, that did the Luni Pathans attempt to visit the fair they would plunder them en route if they could. The helpless position of Babal Khan enables them to do this with impunity.

3. On meeting the young Boogtee Chief he acknowledged that all I had heard was true, that his father had little or no control over the Massuris, who, he said, had again, for some time past, joined the Murrees for the purpose of committing raids.

4. I submit, as stated above, in the vernacular and English, in addition to the Mazari Chief's letter, copies of reports that reached me at the fair and since my return to Derah Ghazi Khan. One is from Babal Khan, the Chief of the Khetrans, giving particulars of the state of his affairs, the other is from the Vakil of the Bozdars, telling of a raid on that tribe by a combined body of Murrees and Boogtees. Babal Khan has been reduced on account of Guzzun Khan's late interference in his affairs almost to a helpless condition. At the fair several of the hill chiefs told me that Guzzun Khan now wrote to some of the Khetran headmen, calling them his "ryots," as he had agreed not to raid on them if they paid him a certain share of the produce of their lands and acknowledge his supremacy. In reply to Babal Khan's letter, I have intimated to him that I have addressed Guzzun Khan and the chiefs of his tribe to ask what their real intentions are, and if they again intended in force to attack Babal Khan. I reminded them of their agreement with me not to do so without previous notice. You will observe that the tone of Babal Khan's letter is very desponding. This is caused by the fact that Guzzun Khan's action in the quarrel between him and his nephew has so weakened him that there is every fear that, as surmised by himself in the petition enclosed, his downfall is only a work of time. Should this occur he will be a great loss on this border. He is an old and very friendly chief, and has been long in communication with the political officers on this frontier, and has ever evinced a most loyal feeling towards our Government; this, I was informed at the fair, has not a little to do with the present combination against him.

5. The report from the Bozdar Vakil telling of the combined Murree and Massuri raid on the Musa Khel Pathans, and its results, is also a striking one. I send these reports because I think it most desirable at the present time that both you and the Commissioner in Sind should know thoroughly what is taking place on this frontier. I am fully aware that to a certain extent, for long, feuds have existed between the Khetrans, Luni Pathans, and Bozdars and his Highness the Khan's subjects, the Murrees and Boogtees. These were, however, greatly checked by the results of the raid on Harrand in the early part of 1867. I was also in hopes that a thorough understanding between myself and the Political Superintendent on the Sind frontier would enable us together to devise means to put a stop to these combined raids which ruin the country. It is solely due to them that the trade routes into this district from the countries to the westward were, until late years, closed. Moreover, the present action of Guzzun Khan and the Massuri faction of the Boogtees is again closing these roads more firmly than ever, thereby destroying the labour of years which has been expended in opening them out. Under these circumstances I have considered it right to submit the reports I enclose in this, for your consideration. They speak for themselves, and prove how very disturbed matters have now become on this frontier. You will observe that the attack by the Boogtees and Murrees on the Shahdozai Chief of Tull Chotiali, in which two of the latter were killed, was very rapidly followed by those on the Musa Khel and Bozdars. These occurrences taking place so soon after the late attack on the Dhoombkees, in which, according to Guzzun Khan's own report, 80 of that tribe were killed, makes me consider that Murree affairs are approaching a crisis, and that I cannot possibly much longer hope to preserve the peace of the Punjab frontier, which, on account of the numerous passes leading from the Murree country into it, is greatly exposed to Murree and Boogtee depredations.

Since writing the above I have received a report (I enclose a translation) from Sirdar Jamal Khan, Chief of the Lagaris, telling that the party who plundered the Bozdars had carried off some cattle belonging to the hill section of his tribe, the Haddianis.

Enclosure 3 in No. 179.

Rajanpur, dated 23rd December 1873.

From C. E. Gladstone, Esq., Assistant Commissioner, Rajanpur, to the Deputy Commissioner, Derah Ghazi Khan.

I HAVE the honour to report that on the 26th of November Ramzan Numari, his wife Bakht-bhari, and Milawar Bhitarah, were proceeding from Shahpur to Dad Kotha.

Case A. When they were within 200 yards of the district high road, at noon, they were attacked by five men, muffled and armed, wearing Belooch chaplis. They were seized, bound, and taken to the jungle, where they were, under threats of death, compelled to remain quiet till evening. The robbers then fled, leaving the robbed men bound in the jungle. In the morning they came to the thanah and reported. From their report it became evident that the robbers were Beloochis.

On the next day (27th) a man named Dilalah and a lad named Uttam were going at noon from Shikarpur to Isan Kotlah, when they were attacked by three men, armed and Case B. dressed as Beloochis. Dilalah fled, but Uttam was captured. He was rifled and released.

In Case A. the property stolen amounted to Rs. 42, in Case B. to Rs. 10. The robbers took a westerly direction, those in Case A. being followed up by Hargopal Das, Munshi of the Fazilpur Thanah, those in Case B. by Jallab Khan, Thanahdar of Rajanpur. In both cases without delay.

Suspecting the men to be Lusharis, and thinking that there might be some difficulty if the men reached the hills, I rode out to Harrand hoping to cut across the line taken by the thieves. Here I got information that the thieves had been tracked to Mirapur (near Harrand), where they had in the night set fire to a bunniah's shop. On the 3rd of December I got news that Jallab Khan had again hit off the track and carried it up to a place near the Chachar Nallah. On the morning of the 4th, in the company of Ganah, brother of Mir Khan Lushari, I went with Jallab Khan and the Chiefs of the Gurchanis and Drishaks to the Shalobah nullah. The tracks went down this for some distance and then turned off towards the Chachar. They were lost, however, about 200 yards from the Shalobah, their direction being towards some Lushari villages on the other side of the Chachar. We had now got among the low hills, and the ground was far too stony to allow of any further tracking. The Shalobah lies between the Mir-ullah and the Chachar, but the tracks had gone south of the Shalobah towards the Chachar, so that the responsibility lay with the custodians of that pass. Leaving this place I went to see if the Fazilpur Munshi had been successful in Case A. I found him near Fattehpur. He had tracked the robbers to the village of Taggu Lushari, but being new to the work and district, had been baffled and bullied by the Beloochis and was at a loss. I left Miran Khan, the chief of the Drishaks, Jallab Khan, Thanadar, and three trackers to help him, and with this assistance the tracks were carried on to the village of Taggu Lushari, four miles to the west of Fattehpur. Here they were lost. It was of course in both cases impossible to identify any person by his tracks, for they had only to change their chaplis to be secure. All eight robbers wore chaplis. I had and Ganah, the two headmen of the Lusharis (Mir Khan was at Jampur at the Horan time), seized, as well as all the men of Taggu's village. I have sent them to Derah Ghazi Khan on security. I trust that severe measures will be taken, as the Lusharis are getting perfectly unruly. This is the second time in the last three months that they have committed highway robbery. On the former occasion the robbers were followed up by Ghulam Muhammad, Thanadar of Jampur, into the Lushari hills, and an acknowledgment to that effect taken from the headmen of the Lusharis. In conclusion, I can speak in the highest terms of the indefatigable energy of Jallab Khan, Thanadar of Rajanpur, and Hargopal Das, Munshi of Fazilpur. The former especially, I believe, hardly rested during the pursuit.

No. 180.

No. 779, dated Lahore, 1st May 1874.

From Secretary to the Government of Punjab to Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In reply to your letter No. 722 P., dated 21st March, transmitting copy of a letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 136, dated 8th February, proposing certain measures for the punishment of the Murree tribe and desiring a very early expression of his Honour's opinion on the subject, I have the honour to forward herewith copy of the correspondence noted on the margin, containing the views of Lieutenant-Colonel Munro, Officiating Commissioner of the Derajat, and Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, together with the maps referred to in original.

From Commissioner of the Derajat, No. 101, dated 23rd April, and enclosures.

2. As the Lieutenant-Governor is on tour in the Kangra District, I have deemed it best (to save time) to forward the papers direct to the Government of India, as a week or more must elapse before his Honour's orders can be received. Meanwhile I am in a position to state generally his Honour's opinion upon the subject as follows:—

3. In the first place, I can assure the Government of India that if, after duly considering Captain Sandeman's objections to the adoption of the measures proposed by the Commissioner in Sind, his Excellency in Council thinks a blockade advisable, he may count on Mr. Davies' best co-operation in giving effect thereto.

4. At the same time his Honour is of opinion that before resorting to this or any other measure of coercion, it would be advisable that Captain Sandeman's great influence with and knowledge of the border tribes should be made use of in endeavouring to bring the Murree chief to terms.

5. The Lieutenant-Governor suggests therefore that Captain Sandeman be sent on the part of the Commissioner in Sind to Ghuzzun Khan with this object, and empowered if necessary to convey a formal ultimatum on the part of the British Government. In this way his Honour thinks the Murree chief will clearly understand that the Government is not divided, and that if he continues his present attitude he must expect united action against him both from the side of Sind and the Punjab.

6. The measures to be adopted in the event of a blockade being determined upon are being carefully considered in the Military Department, and the correspondence with the Brigadier-General Commanding the Frontier Force on the subject can be forwarded when required.

7. The matter discussed in Deputy Commissioner's letter No. 333 of the 8th April relating to the effect said to have been produced on certain clans of the Lugharee and Gurchanee tribes by a misconception of orders on the subject of "Batai" or division of the crop recently passed by the Lieutenant-Governor, has been dealt with by the Commissioner in his No. 489-1422, dated 15th April 1874, but you will find the orders of the Punjab Government on the subject in Foreign Proceedings of this Government for the month of January last.

Enclosure 1 in No. 180.

No. 101-1574, dated 23rd April 1874.

From Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, to Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

In acknowledgment of your No. 46C.-570A. of the 27th ultimo, and its enclosures, which is herewith returned, as directed, I have the honour to submit copies of reports received from Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, on the subject of Sir William Merewether's proposal to blockade the Murree tribe.

Submits Deputy Commissioner, Dhera Ghazee Khan's reports on proposed blockade of Murree tribe.

2. The Deputy Commissioner's reports are accompanied by an excellent map of the countries to be affected by the proposed measures, which is also forwarded under separate cover to your address.

Reports accompanied by a map.

The remark made in the concluding paragraph of Captain Sandeman's supplementary letter, No. 333 of the 8th instant, appearing to me to call for notice on my part, I enclose copy of my reply showing that if any misconception exists as to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's views and orders in regard to the system of "Batai" hitherto prevailing among some of the Belooch Tununans in the Dera Ghazee Khan District, the Deputy Commissioner and Settlement Officer should have guarded against the possibility of misunderstanding the principles laid down for guidance in paragraph 29 of the Government Proceedings No. 18 of 2nd January last having been very clearly enunciated.

Reply to supplementary letter.

3. Captain Sandeman's intimate knowledge of and influence over the hill tribes on his border are well known, and are acknowledged by the Commissioner in Sind in the 16th paragraph of the enclosure to your letter under reply. Moreover the Deputy Commissioner has recently made a tour in the tracts beyond his border, lying between the Murree and Boogtee possessions to the south, and those of the Khetrans, Musa Khels, and Luni Pathans to the north; he has been in personal communication with all the chiefs and leading men, including Ghuzzun Khan, the Murree chief himself, and he is therefore in a position to give the Government the freshest intelligence regarding the state of affairs on our southern border, and the present temper and feelings of the different tribes.

Deputy Commissioner's knowledge of and influence over tribes.

Facilitates his reporting with confidence.

4. After sketching the locations of the different clans and our border system of defence, including that of Sind, the Deputy Commissioner notes the marked difference between that established in Sind and the system of protection existing along the lower border of the Punjab from Dera Ghazee Khan downwards. A large tract of country from Chotee Bala to Drigri beyond the line of outposts is occupied by British subjects of the Lugharee and Gurchanee tribes, who are entirely exposed to raids from the westward. The outposts in Sind have been built on the frontier line, or even beyond it, in some parts, and these facts are adduced to show that a blockade of the Murrees from Sind is a matter of much easier accomplishment than from the Punjab under the circumstances described.

Differences between Sind and Punjab systems of frontier defence.

Punjab frontier much more exposed.

Murree blockade easier from Sind than from Punjab.

5. The Deputy Commissioner mentions instances in which the hostile action of the Murree tribe proved very serious on the Asni and Harrand borders, referring particularly to the great raids of 1857 and 1866, and he shows that the Shambhani Boogtees took but a small part, if any, in these incursions.

Former Murree raids.

6. The difference in the systems of frontier defence in Sind and on the lower border of the Punjab is stated by Captain Sandeman to arise from the fact that the Sind system was created by British officers, whilst we in the Punjab took over at annexation and continued that which had been established by the Sikhs. The first is founded upon strictly military principles, but the second leaves much to be effected through political management of border tribes tending to maintain peaceful relations, and a good understanding between Belooch subjects and the independent tribes beyond.

Causes of difference in system of defence.

7. It is, I think, not too much to say that no officer has devoted so much time and energy to the securing of these latter objects as Captain Sandeman himself; and the results in regard to the security of life and property on the Dera Ghazee Khan border cannot be better exemplified than by reference to the enclosure of my No. 92 of the 17th instant to your address.

Captain Sandeman's own exertions.

Their results.

8. The Deputy Commissioner does not recommend a blockade of the Murrees for the reason that they would scarcely be affected by it, whilst British subjects would be exposed by its establishment much harassment and loss, owing to the peculiarities and indefinite nature of the frontier border line from Dera Ghazee Khan to Sind. The difficulties from local circumstances are described that large bodies of the Lugharee and Gurchanee tribes especially would be roads by the Murrees unless entirely withdrawn within our line of outposts, ld be tantamount to an abandonment of a considerable part of their tribe whom we resolve to punish.

Deputy Commissioner does not recommend a blockade.

Reasons for opinion.

9. The arrangements approved at the Mittunkote conference in the beginning of 1871, by which the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan was placed qua the Murree and Boogtee tribes under the control of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, have since prevented the Commissioner of the Derajat from being so conversant as formerly with the particular doings and movements of these tribes, and I am, therefore, in a less favourable position for giving a confident opinion in regard to the proposed blockade than I should possibly have been under former system.

Results of Mittunkote conference.

Derajat Commissioner not required to superintend political relations with Murrees and Boogtees.

10. My knowledge of the Sind system is not so intimate as that of Captain Sandeman, who has been in contact with it for six or seven years, and has during the last three years served under Sind officers in conducting our relations from this side with the Boogtee and Murree tribes, referring only to me on occasions which may have pointed to a possible disturbance of the peace on his lower border. Captain Sandeman by carrying out subsidizing plan referred to in the 10th paragraph of Sir William Merewether's despatch has undoubtedly succeeded, as therein acknowledged, in hitherto preventing Murree raids on the Rajanpoor and Dera Ghazee Khan border.

Deputy Commissioner's contact with Sind system.

Serves under it.

Subsidizes the Murrees.

11. The position and relations of the Murree tribe with us appear to be very peculiar. Ever since annexation of the Punjab, and previously, I presume, since the conquest of Sind, it has been deemed advisable for reasons with which I have not had opportunities of becoming well acquainted to consider them as subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, but it is notorious that the tribe have generally behaved as if they owed no allegiance to the Khelat State, carrying on a system of marauding all round, often attended with much bloodshed, occasionally trenching upon British territory, and usually maintaining a state of chronic contention with the neighbouring hill tribes, north and south Belooch, and Pathan alike, without reference to any controlling authority whatever, that of the Khan of Khelat being the weakest and least influential that can be imagined.

Our relations with Murrees from Sind and the Punjab.

Murree subordination to Khan of Khelat a fiction.

Their independent action

Everywhere as it suits themselves.

Ignoring the Khan's authority.

12. In these circumstances the Murrees have ever been looked upon from the Punjab as a tribe really independent, and their more recent exploits against Khetrans and Lunis sufficiently demonstrate that they consider themselves to be so, and act accordingly when and where it suits them. Had his Highness the Khan of Khelat any control over them whatever, the descriptions of their sanguinary depredations both in "Kutchee," and amongst the hill tribes to the north of Kahan, with which the Political Diaries have been filled for one or two years past, could not have been written.

Murree late doings demonstrate their conscious independence.

Described in Political Diaries.

13. I gather from the papers before me that the object of the Sind policy is to show the Murrees that we do and shall continue to look upon the whole tribe as subjects of the Khelat State. The Commissioner in Sind, judging from the 14th paragraph of his despatch, is not disposed to acknowledge that Ghuzzun Khan, the Murree Chief, even possesses a quasi-independence, and the proposed blockade is intended to demonstrate that if he do not speedily present himself before the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad and submit to the terms to be declared to him there, he will forfeit British favour, cease to receive any subsidies, and be ultimately treated as an enemy of the British Government; he and his tribe being debarred from entering our territory, and ultimately punished in their own hill fastnesses by a military expedition to be organised and sent against them.

Apparent object of Sind policy.

14. Viewing these proposals from Captain Sandeman's point of view, which is that with which I have particularly to deal, I cannot disguise from myself and the Government that the results of carrying out the proposed measures may prove much more serious on this than the Sind side, for the reasons adduced by the Deputy Commissioner, and already touched upon above. It seems clear from the Deputy Commissioner's Report that no such state of things exists as yet on his lower border as would justify a blockade of the Murrees from the Punjab side, and a consequent cessation of the amicable relations hitherto maintained between him and the Murree Chief, partly, no doubt, owing to the subsidizing system, but very largely, I believe, to the friendly intercommunications kept up between the Belooch Chiefs, both within and beyond our border, under the indefatigable supervisions of the Deputy Commissioner himself.

Possible results on Punjab border.

Relations on Punjab side with Murrees do not call for a blockade.

Reasons why.

15. How two apparently opposite systems of dealing with the Boogtee and Murree tribes came to be pursued in Sind and Dera Ghazee Khan respectively, under the circumstances alluded to in paragraphs 9 and 10 of this letter, it is not for me to explain, but it has ever appeared to me to be a very anomalous result of the conference held at Mittunkote previously to my receiving charge of this division. As yet the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan has succeeded in upholding friendly relations with the Murree leaders, who have hitherto in passing and repassing on plundering expeditions elsewhere scrupulously avoided committing themselves on our border. The Deputy Commissioner does not seem very confident, however, that this state of things can be maintained much longer, owing to Murree successes in other directions, the consequent demoralization of the tribe, and the utter inability of the effete Government at Khelat to restrain them.

Two different modes of treating with Murrees pursued in Sind and Punjab.

Anomalous result of Mittunkote conference.

Deputy Commissioner's success with the Murrees.

His doubts as to the future.

16. Captain Sandeman proposes as an alternative that we should revert to the recommendations made in 1869, when the Government of India sanctioned an expedition to the Shum plain, but afterwards recalled that sanction under circumstances explained in the correspondence which then took place. The scope and objects of that expedition are described in letter No. 1622, dated 12th November 1869, to your address, from the then Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, Colonel Phayre.

Deputy Commissioner's alternative proposal.

17. I cannot suppose that the Deputy Commissioner's alternative proposition will find much favour with the Commissioner in Sind, judging from the general tenor of his despatch, but it is my duty to draw to draw particular attention to Captain Sandeman's anticipation as to the probable results on the border of his district of a blockade of the Murree clan. He considers a rupture to be inevitable, calculated to frustrate the objects of many years' labour. It would necessitate a strengthening of our border defence from Chotee Bala to Sind, with regular troops, at the most unfavourable season of the year now just setting in. He does not expect that a mere blockade would be effective, and the following it up by such an expedition as Sir William Merewether appears to anticipate or recommend would be inevitable.

Not likely to accord with view of Commissioner in Sind.

Probable results of Sind proposals as regards Punjab.

Ineffective nature of a mere blockade.

Military expedition to follow.

18. I feel myself rather at a disadvantage in dealing with a subject of such importance as that under report, for reasons already given, but I would, in conclusion, express my opinion to the effect that if considerations of imperial policy or of the maintenance of a system in Sind, which is shown to have differed considerably from that pursued on the Lower Punjab border, demand that a strict blockade of the Murree tribe be carried out, to be followed in all probability by a military expedition to punish a tribe nominally under the rule of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, but really independent, the local Government must prepare for eventualities of a harassing and troublesome nature on the Dera Ghazee Khan border, the defence of which will require strengthening in proportion to the dangers to be guarded against.

Commissioner rather at a disadvantage in treating of the subject.

Necessity of a blockade from this side only demonstrated at present from considerations of imperial policy.

Probable eventualities of a blockade, and measures required to meet them.

Enclosure 2 in No. 180.

No. 329, dated 6th April 1874.

From Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, to Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your No. 432–1247, dated 2nd instant, and its enclosures as per margin, on the subject of the late conduct of the Murree clan, directing me at an early date to furnish a comprehensive report on the very important subject treated of therein. I will do this as briefly as possible consistent with a fair discussion of the question at issue.

No. 46C., dated 27th March 1874, from Secretary to Government, Punjab, to Commissioner, Derajat Division.
No. 722P., dated 21st March 1874, from Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, to Secretary to Government, Punjab.
No. 136; dated 8th February 1874, from Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department.
Submits under separate cover sketch map showing position of Boogtee and Murree clans.

2. In order to help towards a clear understanding of what I desire to place before the Government, I submit a sketch map giving the position of the Murree and Boogtee clans on this and the Sind borders.

3. A reference to the map will show that the Boogtee clan occupy the country right in front of Sind and the lower Derajat borders. The Murree country on the other hand lies just beyond it and rests on Kutchee (Khelat territory) and on the Punjab, hence it happens that these two borders are so subject to Murree raids. The entire Punjab borders from the Sabzil-ke-Kot post in the Dirshak country to Chotee Bala, a border village in front of Dera Ghazee Khan in the Lugharee country, is open to the raids of the Murrees. The position of the military posts on the Sind and Punjab borders can also be seen from a glance at the map. The Sind posts are Guranari, Sunri, Sooee, and Gundooee. The three first named are occupied by the regular troops of Sind. The Gundooee outpost in the Boogtee hills is entirely held by Boogtees (fifty I believe) who are retained there under the chief of that tribe, and forms a part of the Sind border defence. All these outposts are either on the immediate Sind border line or just beyond it, while the Gundooee outpost is situated about 16 miles by the map within Khelat territory.

Describes the geographical position of the posts on the Sind and Punjab borders.

4. The Punjab posts are Shaikhwali, Bandawali, Sabzil-ki-Kot, Drigri, Harrand, Ganair, and Choti, but only Drigri, Harrand, and Bandowali are occupied by regular troops. The other posts like Gundooee are occupied for purposes of defence and for police purposes by the tribes of the country in which each is situated. It will be observed, however, that while the Sind posts are pushed right on to the frontier, and beyond it, and cover Sind, such is not the case with the Punjab posts. A considerable tract of country from Drigri to Chotee Bala is occupied by our revenue-paying subjects who are entirely exposed and unprotected from Murree raids, and it is this fact, as well as the geographical position of the Murree clan itself, that makes a blockade of that tribe so very much more serious a business for the Punjab than for Sind. Indeed on account of the position of the Boogtees and the hold the Sind posts maintain over them they serve as "buffers," so to speak, between the Murrees and Sind, who can only with difficulty get into Sind. On the other hand the Punjab like Kutchee is open to their every depredation.

Describes the garrison occupying the Sind and Punjab posts, and how their retentive positions affect a blockade of the Punjab.

5. Before coming to the immediate subject of your letter under reply, I will now briefly allude to the contents of the Commissioner in Sind's No. 136, dated Camp Bakrah, the 8th February 1874, to the Secretary to the Government of India. There are one or two points in it connected with this frontier regarding which explanation here may be of value and not be out of place. I therefore submit it.

Alludes to Commissioner in Sind's letter and explains it.

6. The Commissioner in Sind does not, he remarks in paragraph 3, understand why I have this year so prominently brought forward the raids of the Murrees on the Khetrans and the Musa Khel, but he concludes that I anticipate for reasons he gives that the Murree tribe is fast getting beyond all control. It is perfectly true as remarked by the Commissioner that the Khetrans have all along been annoyed by the Murrees, at the same time until this year it never occurred before that Ghuzzun Khan himself headed an army of 1,200 men and took an active part in Khetran's quarrels. The story is as follows :—

Explains the attack by Ghuzzun Khan on the Khetrans.

7. The Chief of the Khetran Babal Khan has been recognised by us since annexation as the head of the Khetran tribe. During the last year a nephew of his by name Kadir Buksh tried to depose Babal Khan from power, and he went off to Ghuzzun Khan to Kahan, the Murree chief town, for assistance. This Ghuzzun Khan, for reasons unnecessary to relate, gave by raiding with an army on the Khetrans, and in doing so came with his force quite on to the British border, in front of Dera Ghazee Khan, a thing never known before : one result of this was that two kafilas proceeding to Dera Ghazee Khan from Tull and the Zerkan Pathan country were immediately looted, Babal Khan complaining, which was quite true, that his power to maintain security along the trade route from Tull Chotiali to this had been well nigh broken by the action of Ghuzzun Khan, against whose interference he asked for my protection.

Ghuzzun Khan's reasons for attacking Khetrans.

Ghuzzun Khan's attack on Khetrans results in the plunder of two kafilas.

8. Regarding attacks on the Musa Khel by the Murrees, there is nothing in the annals of my office to show that they ever took place before this year. At least I never heard before of 2,000 Murrees going against them, which was the case this year. I myself have been along the route the Murree army took. The Musa Khel, as you know, reside above the Kasranis, whose country borders the Sanghar pergunnah of this district, and certainly 150 miles distant from the Murree country proper. The raid I complained of was one of the most determined ever made by the Murree clan. The chief who conducted it acknowledged to me during my late tour in the hills that they killed 32 Musa Khels and carried off 16,000 cows, sheep, and goats. I saw the place where the spoil was divided, which is situated at the mouth of the Hun Pass leading from the Khetran country to Tull Chotiali. This raid of the Murrees on the Musa Khel, like the one on the Khetrans, resulted in still more firmly closing all the trade routes into the Punjab; hence I represented it. Before the Murrees can get to the Musa Khel they must cross our own Lugharee chief's country of Barkhan and pass along the Tull Chotiali route for some distance. Jamal Khan, like the Khetran chief, is now perfectly helpless to prevent their invading his country when they like, and he has, to enable him to at all cultivate his valuable lands, to pay the Murree chief black-mail.

Describes the nature of the Murree raid on the Musa Khel Pathans, and gives it serious character.

9. In paragraph 10 of the Commissioner in Sind's letter he relates what led to my giving service to the Murrees, and says it was given to prevent their raiding on the Punjab border, "a thing they had never done on any large scale." I feel sure you will agree with me that the Commissioner in Sind is misinformed regarding this. I could name several raids made by them in force. One you yourself can remember, when the Drishak chief, Bijar Khan, his eldest son, and a number of his tribe were killed. The main body of the raiders were Murrees, although led by Boogtee spies. There were also 500 Murrees concerned in the great raids on Harrand, when the villages along that exposed tract were set on fire and much damage done to property. Nearly 50 Murrees were killed on that occasion, and 23, and a nephew of the Loharani Murrees chief, were made prisoners.

Gives the character of the late Murree raids into the Punjab.

The Commissioner in Sind is mistaken in supposing that the Shambanis had anything to do with this raid. Gholam Hossein, who led it, and was then killed, was not a Shambani but a Mussuri Boogtee. I could also point to raids by the Bijarani Murrees when a party of them actually got within a very few miles of Rajanpoor, placing in imminent danger the life of the present chief of the Drishaks. A detachment of the 5th Punjab Cavalry and the Mazari clan moved out against them, and the Mazaris did succeed in killing a few of the Murrees on their way back to the hills. I will not increase the length of this explanation by showing that the position of the Murrees and Boogtees with regard to Sind is vastly different in every point of view from what it is with regard to the Punjab. Suffice it to say that I can demonstrate by facts, which a glance at the map even ought to some extent to substantiate, that in no one way can that position be compared, with anything like justice, with the one they hold on the Punjab frontier, and this I am sure no one would sooner admit than Sir William Merewether himself, had he the knowledge of the difficulties there are to encounter on this frontier which you possess. One very evident reason is, that after the conquest of Sind British officers created the Sind system of border defence according to their own ideas of what it should be. On the Punjab border we accepted Runjeet Sing's system of defence, as far as there was one, and have maintained it. No post was advanced to cover British territory, but some were withdrawn; hence it is that even to the present day many of our subjects are unprotected either by our posts or by their fellow clansmen. During the Sikh rule they had the help of the latter, but our system does not permit this, and the result is that now many of our subjects are worse off than they were in the days of Runjeet Sing; more especially is this the case with the Gurchanee clan, who were formerly subjects of the Khelat State.

States that the Shambani Boogtees did not take part in the raid led by Gholam Hossein, who was a Mussuri Boogtee.

10. In the 18th paragraph of the Commissioner in Sind's letter he proposes (1) a blockade from the Punjab and Sind; (2) in the event of its not succeeding, that troops be sent to punish Ghuzzun and his tribe.

Proposed blockade.

That some measures of a repressive nature are necessary to restrain Ghuzzun Khan I am fully convinced. I was for long in hopes that this could be taken by his Highness the Khan of Khelat, whose subject he is. All my writings, if examined, will bear ample testimony to the fact that any recommendations made by me in connexion with the management of Khelat affairs, the object which I had in view, and the end at which I aimed, was to see the Khan's Government in a strong enough position to enable it to control all its subjects, and amongst them the Murree clan, and be responsible for the peace of the border, according to treaty. This apparently the Commissioner in Sind does not deem possible, judging from his letter, as he does not name or propose such a measure.

Object of Deputy Commissioner's previous communications was the establishment of the Khelat Government on a proper footing in order to control the Murrees.

I do not recommend a blockade, because it would hardly affect the Murrees at all, and whatever result it did have would fall indiscriminately on all, but no party would suffer from its evils half so much as our subjects, who from their position would be almost entirely at the mercy of the hillmen, for although we might to a limited extent cover the border like the Sind one with troops, the position is nevertheless from local circumstances very different.

Blockade not recommended, and reasons for the same.

As you are aware, only lately I had Ghuzzun Khan, the Murree Tomandar, in my camp for nearly a week; I had to send for him regarding several important matters. As reported in this office, No. 261, dated 19th ultimo, I had to call him in about three highway robberies which had been committed just at the close of the year by the Lusharis, who had, as in former days, after committing these sought and obtained a refuge with the Murrees. I also had to discuss with Ghuzzun Khan his invasion of the Khetrans described above. At first I had much difficulty with Ghuzzun Khan. He was very stubborn as to his right to invade any country not under British rule, such as Kutchee and the Khetran country.

In reply I pointed out to him how displeased the Sind authorities were with him in regard to Murree depredations in Khelat, and I showed him that his action in Khetran affairs would, I felt sure, be viewed by the Punjab Government with grave displeasure also. I pointed the unfriendliness of the act, and all the minor Murree chiefs joined me, and we together forced Ghuzzun Khan to yield, and he promised no longer to attack the Khetrans without at all events first giving me notice.

Personal conference with Ghuzzun Khan relative to his late raids.

13. But for all this I did not at the time, and do not now, conceal from myself the fact that Murree affairs in regard to this border have assumed during the past year a very different aspect to what they have of late years done. There are several causes for this which I do not consider it necessary to enter upon; they will readily occur to you; but one is the defeat of the Khan's troops and the capture of his guns by the Murrees. This has caused not only a great change in Ghuzzun Khan's conduct, but also in his policy. He is much more difficult to deal with than heretofore, and several of his chiefs gave the late victory as the reason for the change, and told me that now his immediate followers termed him by the title of the "Nawab of the Hills." I was enabled in the present instance to arrange matters with Ghuzzun because the service I gave the tribe included all the chiefs, and not merely Ghuzzun Khan himself. It has been my invariable custom, when an important question like the Khetran one had to be decided, to assemble all the chiefs in our pay, and not leave the settlement to Ghuzzun Khan alone. The chiefs, as a whole, have, as on the occasion named, invariably stood by me and forced Ghuzzun to do what was right. I remember explaining to Sir William Merewether, during my visit to Jacobabad last year, that this was the mode I had adopted in giving service to the Murree clan. I mentioned that my reason for so acting was on account of Ghuzzun Khan's well-known character.

'Change in Ghuzzun Khan's conduct,' and reasons for the same.

14. To blockade the tribe, therefore, would be, as explained above, not only to bring, on account of the exposed position of our own subjects, very great hardship and severe distress on them, but it would also force me to break with all the friendly chiefs of the Murree clan, several of whom, I believe, I can depend on.

Hardships likely to result to our own subjects rom a blockade.

15. The only alternative measure, then, as we cannot get aid from the Khelat Government, is to employ force, but I believe, from what I know of the Murree country, doing so need neither create a rupture of our relation with the Murrees as a whole, or a "little war." I believe a demonstration of the regular troops in force would have the desired effect of bringing Ghuzzun Khan to his senses, while it would enable us to maintain our friendly relations with his clan.

Captain Sandeman's proposed measures would not cause war with the Murrees.

16. As my opinion is asked on this very important question, in which not only the peace of this frontier is concerned, but I firmly believe its future progress and prosperity also, I would respectfully and with diffidence recommend that similar orders, only allowing for change of circumstances, to those contained in W. S. Seton-Karr's letter No. 879, dated Simla, the 28th June 1869, to T. H. Thornton, Esquire, should be issued. I believe that were an expedition like the one sanctioned in that letter properly conducted, and the tribes made fully to understand that we had the power, and intended in the public interest to use it, to decide that Ghuzzun Khan must behave, and, if necessary, give hostages for his future good conduct, either to our Government or to his sovereign the Khan, it would have a far better effect than any openly hostile expedition we could send against the entire clan. The one would assuredly end in bloodshed, with the certain result of our destroying both friends and enemies indiscriminately, for we would treat both alike; the other would, I am persuaded, have the contrary result. It would strike terror into the hearts of our enemies, but at the same time it would reassure our friends and demonstrate how truly we realised the position of affairs by not treating friend and foe alike. I believe a blockade of this frontier must end in a hostile expedition before we would obtain our desired end, and I am not sure that to order it would not be the very thing Ghuzzun Khan at present desires and has lately aimed at, for it would bring about an entire rupture with the clan and at one blow destroy the result of years. Furthermore, if a blockade is ordered, it will be absolutely necessary to reinforce by troops the border from Chotee Bala to Rajhan. The season is now far advanced, and is very unhealthy for troops on the Harrand frontier for several months towards the end of the hot weather.

Captain Sandeman recommends an expedition to be sent against the Murrees of a nature similar to the one sanctioned by Government of India in June 1869.

17. An expedition of the nature recommended by me would be viewed with the utmost satisfaction by the Belooch and Pathan tribes, who are without a single exception inimical to the Murrees, and have one and all suffered severely from their depredations. I believe that directly the object of the expedition was made known that every chief of note would, if invited, join it, and that Ghuzzun himself, through force of circumstances alone, would gladly submit to any terms offered him. A blockade, on the other hand, would harass every one, especially our own subjects, and do infinite harm along this border, while my local knowledge of the true position of Murree affairs tells me it would not in itself have a successful issue, but would again rouse the fierce and bitter blood feuds between the Murree clan and our own subjects, which have to a great extent, on account of the friendships and intermarriages which have of late years taken place between them, been healed and are now to some degree almost forgotten.

Believes such an expedition would be joined by all the chiefs and other tribes.

The enclosures of your letter are herewith returned.

Enclosure 3 in No. 180.

No. 333, dated 8th April 1874.

From Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, to Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

WITH reference to this office No. 329, dated 6th instant, and in continuation of it, on the subject of the proposed blockade of the Murree tribe, I have thought it desirable to represent to you separately from my reply to the recommendations of the Commissioner in Sind, that there are several other reasons besides those given by me in the above-named letter why a blockade of this frontier would at the present time have a very disturbing effect.

2. I find on the Chotee and Gurchanee borders that on account of the recent inquiries directed regarding the continuance or not of the system of batai, there is very serious tribal disorganisation, and I doubt if we could enforce the responsibility hitherto required of the chiefs of these two tribes with the same prospect of success hitherto obtained, because some of the villages about Chotee and Harrand and their neighbourhood have regularly risen in opposition to their chiefs, and I consider the defalcations of the Chungwani and Barmani sections of the Lugharee tribe is with a view to such operations.

3. It is only just to Jamal Khan and Gholam Haidar, the Tomandars of these tribes, to say that I don't consider, and I have inquired into the matter with the co-operation of the Settlement Officer on the spot, that they are in any way responsible for the existing state of affairs between them and these discontented sections of their tribes. The feeling has got abroad amongst their people that petitioning against the chiefs will ultimately free them from his control, and the minor chiefs of at least one or two sections having been lately employed entirely separately from the chief in canal and other matters, have had engendered in them a desire for perfect independence. This feeling is spreading, and I believe to a dangerous extent, supposing it is the desire of Government to maintain, as hitherto, the responsibility of the chiefs on the frontier.

4. Since the visit of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor to this district I have noticed a great change in the temperament of the clans towards their chiefs, simply, I believe, because his Honour's orders have been misunderstood, and the clans not made clearly to understand what these orders really are and what they aim at.

Enclosure 4 in No. 180.

No. 489–1422, dated 15th April 1874.

From Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, to Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan.

Referring to paragraph 4 of his No. 333 of the 8th instant, in which it is stated that his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's orders, as contained in paragraph 29 of Government Proceedings No. 18 of 2nd January last, "have been misunderstood, and the clans not made clearly to understand what these orders really are, and what they aim at," the undersigned conceives that it was the duty both of the Deputy Commissioner and Settlement Officer, when in communication with the Lugharee and Gurchanee chiefs and their tribesmen on the subject of the continuation of the partial system previously in force in some of the Tummun villages of levying by batai, to satisfy themselves that no misunderstanding should prevail on the subject.

2. The orders of the head of the Government are very explicit, and no misunderstanding in regard to them should be allowed to exist. Whilst admitting the claims of the chiefs to liberal and generous treatment, his Honour deemed it of equal, if not greater, importance, that this liberal treatment should not be provided at the expense of the cultivating proprietors, and to prevent this in future principles were laid down for guidance. Possibly the change of temperament towards the Tomundars which is stated in the letter under acknowledgment to have been observed since his Honour's visit to the district by some of the clans, may be caused by the fact of their discovering that their rights as cultivating proprietors cannot be ignored by the State, and that they are exempted by this authoritative recognition from anything like servile submission to the chiefs henceforward in regard to the assertion of these rights.

No. 181.

No. 722, dated Kurrachee, 19th May 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In accordance with the instructions contained in your letter No. 863 P., dated 13th ultimo, Captain Sandeman was called upon through the Political Superintendent on the Frontier to submit report on the two points set forth in that letter, and I have now the honour to forward Captain Sandeman's reply.

2. I do not consider Captain Sandeman's letter as at all satisfactory or conveying the information required by his Excellency the Viceroy, and I should have directed a further reference to be made to him for more direct and clear answers to the questions put, but that it would cause great delay, and as Captain Sandeman does not appear to have anything more to adduce than is already on record, a few remarks from me will perhaps suffice to explain what needs clearing up.

3. Captain Sandeman quotes from a letter written by him on the 13th August 1872, from which I conclude it is intended to be conveyed that the Murrees of Kahun, where Guzzun the principal Sirdar resides, had little to do with the plunder of the kafilahs passing through the Bolan in January and April 1872. Now it was distinctly shown at the time, and should be as well known to Captain Sandeman as it is to every one on the frontier, that a body of Murrees first joined the rebellious Sirdars in January 1872 and engaged in the plunder of the kafilahs attacked by the Sirdars, and a portion of the Kahun Murrees also joined Shere Dil Muzzaranee Murree in his onslaught on the kafilahs in April of the same year. The correspondence forwarded under my endorsement No. 713 of 23rd July 1872, as well as much other, will show the relations between the Muzzaranees, Murrees, and those under the Chief Guzzun at Kahun. But there is one point which bears most materially on the question, which I would mention here, and that is, no matter what had happened before between the various sections of the Murrees, it is well known not only that a lot of property was taken to Kahun, but that Guzzun himself received his share of it as chief of the clan, and this will doubtless be part of the riches referred to by Captain Sandeman in his report No. 18 of 6th January last, as being the cause of the chief becoming unreliable.

4. In spite of what had occurred, and of my having said at Jacobabad in March previously, that in consequence of the misconduct of the Murrees in joining in plundering in the Bolan I could have nothing to say to them, nor would carry out the arrangements come to at Mittunkote until all property plundered from the merchants was given up, Captain Sandeman in June 1872 telegraphed, proposing to send a kafilah to Candahar through the Murree country, because the Kafilabashi feared Bolan. I replied—"After the way the Murrees have behaved lately in plundering kafilahs in "the Bolan, I neither can nor will have anything to say to them until the plundered "property is given up. I consider it, therefore, very inadvisable that the Murrees "should be treated with as if nothing had happened, or that kafilahs should be allowed "to enter their country from ours. The Moolla is quite safe and open to the kafilahs, "and so would the Bolan be but for the misconduct of these Murrees." Captain Sandeman replied—"I have issued instructions to send kafilahs to Jacobabad. I will "attend willingly to any instructions you send. My demi-official of 4th explains the "necessity for moving troops to Hurrund if I break off relations with Murrees. By "unity of action I believe it is quite possible to coerce Murrees into surrendering "plundered kafilah property." On the 12th June Captain Sandeman proposed having a friendly interview with Murree Tomandars about his own border affairs, but after above referred for orders. The following telegram was sent to him :—

"I consider it most desirable that Murree Chief should be made to understand that "late conduct of tribe in regard to kafilahs in Bolan cannot be put up with, and pressure "should be brought to bear on them to give up plundered property. I certainly will "not enter into any arrangements with Murree chiefs until the property is given up, "and you are authorised so to inform the head. Under these circumstances it would, "I think, be better that you should put off your interview with Chief if your work can "wait, giving above also as reason." Captain Sandeman replied on 13th—"I will at "once attend to your instructions. If you determine that tribe must restore property, "I suggest that coercive measures be taken from Punjab, Sind, and Khelat. The "Murree country is quite open and accessible from Hurrund. I know every road "leading to it, and believe strict military blockade would result in the surrender of "plunder. Shall I submit my view for approval? I will cordially co-operate in "any measure you decide on taking, but these ought not to be delayed if you are to "recover the property, which under any circumstances must be matter of difficulty. "Murree chiefs are now assembled at Kahun in council "*probably to consider how to dispose of plunder."

5. On the 20th June Captain Sandeman asked if I would approve his meeting Tomandar to negotiate surrender of property, offering to go to Kahun for that purpose. I replied that arrangements were under consideration, and I did not think it either necessary or right he should go to Kahun.

6. On 1st July Captain Sandeman telegraphed—"Murree Vakeel has arrived with "letter from Murree Tomandar. He asserts that Shere Dil's encampment at Murrol "was without any provocation attacked by the Khan's people, his son and 11 "Murrees killed. Five thousand sheep and 200 donkeys, besides all household property, "carried off. Shere Dil retaliated by attacking kafilahs, &c. Particulars by post." I replied on the 3rd—"I know all circumstances of attack on Shere Dil's camp by "Summalanee Minguls, Khan's subjects, but that is no justification for outrages on "kafilahs. Khan has been moved and is working to restore cattle, &c., taken from "Shere Dil's people. Shere Dil and all Murrees concerned in late raid on kafilahs "should at once collect and have ready to give over all the property taken from "kafilahs. If they will do this, I shall be ready to receive Murrees with favour, and "will then arrange according to Mittunkote correspondence, but not before, also will "use influence with Khan to do exact justice in Summalanee outrage case. You "may inform Murree Vakeel so." His answer on 4th July was—"It will be my "anxious desire to carry out your instructions to the best of my ability. Government "has instructed me to summon Murree chiefs. I trust you will not object." I replied—"I have of course no objection to offer to your carrying out the orders of "your Government to summon Murree chiefs. The Political Superintendent will "communicate with you from Jacobabad my views regarding them and plunder of "kafilahs." On the same date Captain Sandeman telegraphed—"I have explained to "Vakeel your telegram of yesterday. He says that after plunder of kafilah the "Minguls followed raiders and overtook them; Minguls and Murrees dividing the "property, Minguls getting largest share. Kindly say if this is true." I replied same day—"Minguls were nowhere near when kafilah was plundered by Murrees. At last "attack near Seeree Bolan, Alladina Khoord was said to be a spectator and to have "shared in plunder, for which he will have to answer."

7. On the 6th August Political Superintendent telegraphed—"Sandeman telegraphs "as under :—Please inform Commissioner that Tomandar Guzzun is with me. Guzzun

" will make any arrangements and pay any compensation Commissioner considers pro" per after hearing explanation. Can I continue my friendly arrangements with tribe ?
" I believe chiefs in earnest. I have recovered cattle
" plundered at Chota Bala.* Please reply sharp." I answered—" Inform Sandeman I never intended friendly relations to be taken off
" unless conduct of Murree tribe with reference to plundered property proved unsatis" factory. I am quite ready to receive and consider any representation Guzzun has " to make, and Sandeman should receive and immediately forward it through you.
" At same time he should tell Guzzun that to show he is in earnest he should at once " deliver up all plundered property recoverable, and the manner of compensation for " the remainder will then be decided on."

8. On the 9th came a further telegram from Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier:—" Sandeman telegraphs—Guzzun pleads that because of division of " property he is unable to do more than surrender plunder in Kahun. He will send " you fifteen camels at once, all there is. For the rest, as approved by Commissioner,
" he agrees to give money compensation, if held to be responsible." My reply was—
" Inform Sandeman his report is very satisfactory and creditable to his management."
On the 12th September the Political Superintendent reported the arrival of fifteen camels sent in by Guzzun, of which two shortly after died; but nothing more came of the arrangement reported by Captain Sandeman on the 9th August.

9. Captain Sandeman's report, No. 707 of the 13th August, was received and forwarded by me to the Bombay Government with my letter No. 950 of 5th October, and both submitted to the Government of India under endorsement No. 951 of 7th idem. In the 4th paragraph of his letter now transmitted, Captain Sandeman mentions my recorded intention of visiting Jacobabad in the coming cold season, and alludes to what the Murree chiefs had agreed to, but he does not explain why they did not carry out their promises, which is really the important point. No further attempts were made by the Murrees towards restitution beyond the delivery up of the camels, which were a small item in the amount plundered; I considered it therefore absolutely necessary that if the Murrees were to be received at all, they must come to me straight through his Highness the Khan of Khelat and the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, not through the Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, and ordered accordingly. This Captain Sandeman would seem to adduce as a reason why his arrangements for restitution had not been carried out. I do not see how this affected it, but at the time I know I was quite convinced that if ever we wished to have any effectual and lasting control over these Murrees, it must be by bringing them to understand clearly that they were regarded solely as subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and that they must obey his orders, and look only to the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Sind for instructions as regarded matters affecting the interests of British territory. The telegram of the 16th April 1873 was long after I had visited the Khan of Khelat, and the Murree Sirdars had failed to attend as directed. The orders that had been issued to them in January 1873 were plain and explicit and admitted of no misunderstanding, and their action was a deliberate evasion, for which they are, and must be, made responsible. Guzzun had ample time to carry out the arrangement for the restitution of the plundered property, or its equivalent, before those orders were issued, but did not do so. It is not clear therefore why the chief's subsequent disobedience of orders should be regarded as a reason for his not adhering to his compact, unless it is intended to show that the normal condition of the tribe is disobedience, and that must be taken as justification for all they do wrong.

10. Captain Sandeman in the 8th paragraph of his letter does not answer directly the question as to the amount of plunder still in the hands of the Murrees, but refers generally to their lawless acts for any time past, and says—" But as the Murree clan " for years have made depredations on kafilahs, and as it is notorious that they have
" respected no trade route whatever when in the pursuit of plunder, I think I may fairly say that many lakhs of rupees would be required to cover the loss that trade
" in general has sustained by their depredations on all the trade routes leading from " Afghanistan and Central Asia in this direction into the Punjab and Sind, and for " the protection of which by treaty his Highness the Khan was in a degree respon" sible." In the first place, this is not the question at issue. What was required of Captain Sandeman was to state the amount of the property in the hands of the Murrees that was plundered in the Bolan from kafilahs in January and April 1872, and this was plain enough. Next I am not aware of such extensive plundering of merchants on trade routes by the Murrees as to amount to lakhs of rupees. As far as they are concerned and the Bolan route, I can speak positively from personal knowledge that the only occasions on which they plundered kafilahs since the beginning of 1868 were once in April of that year, near Hajee-ka-sher in Kutchee they attacked a kafilah, and the Khan of Khelat compensated the merchants to the extent of some Rupees 8,000, which was all that was claimed, and the only other occasions were in January and April 1872, as before stated. But from this statement of Captain Sandeman's arises the very grave question of how it was he has continued to support the payments to, and subsidizing of, a tribe who have thus been deliberately compromising their ruler, our ally, with whom we have treaty engagements, and by their lawless acts causing direct breaches of that treaty.

11. In his last paragraph I consider Captain Sandeman begs the question as to whether the contumacious portion of the tribe are in receipt of any payment from the British authorities, and states he does not consider the Murrees contumacious as far as he is concerned, because they have acted up to their agreements with him; yet in the previous paragraph he had stated that the Murrees have for long past harried every trade route from Afghanistan and Central Asia into Sind and the Punjab, for the safety of which our ally, the Khan of Khelat, was in a great degree responsible. It has been repeatedly shown to him on various occasions that the conduct of the Murrees and their raiding in the Khan's district of Kutchee, while they were in receipt of British pay from the Punjab side, was most unjustifiable, so he should have had no difficulty in understanding who were meant as the "contumacious." Recent correspondence should also have led him to see clearly what was intended. But to learn exactly who he actually had in his pay I telegraphed to the Political Superintendent to call on Captain Sandeman for exact number of Murrees in Government pay on Punjab border, names of Jemadars and of their sections, and number of men entertained from each section. The reply is, Captain Sandeman reports, "total number "of Murrees employed—two Jemadars, Mehuroolla and Sher Mahomed; one Duffadar, "Jallee Khan; one Vakeel, Shahan; and fifty-three "sowars. All three sections* supply sowars when re-"quired. General arrangements left to Guzzun Khan; but if he does not behave, "I act according to necessity. The arrangement is purely a political one."

* 1. Guzzun section. 2. Bijaranees. 3. Loharanees.

12. The jemadars, sowars, &c., are entertained from all three sections, but as a rule I believe the amount of the whole pay is handed over either to the principal chief, Guzzun, or portions to the heads of the other two sections. It is therefore a subsidy given to the whole, not payment to individual sowars, and the entire clan have been more or less concerned in the plunderings that have taken place. Guzzun has further deliberately disobeyed the orders of the Khan and of the Political Superintendent on the Frontier, and ought not to be received with favour, or at all by a subordinate authority. Captain Sandeman lately pointed out he, Guzzun, was getting so elated with the plunder he had gained of late that he had ceased to be trustworthy, and thought danger might approach the Punjab border in consequence; very natural it should, when such misconduct as that of the Murrees is not noticed from that side. But even more is at stake, our name for justice suffers, when it is observed that we continue to treat with favour in one place men who commit bloodthirsty outrages in another, and are constantly rendering the homes of poor people desolate close to our very doors. I would therefore again urge that vigorous and prompt measures should be adopted against the Murrees to bring them to order once for all, and to teach them that there is a power that can and will enforce good behaviour, peace, and order.

Enclosure in No. 181.

No. 598, dated Dera Ghazee Khan, 2nd May 1874.

From Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, to Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your No. 1161, dated 27th ultimo, and its enclosures as per margin,* directing me to report, for the information of his Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on several points connected with the late conduct of the Murree clan. I will do so seriatim.

* Secretary to Government of India, No. 863P., dated 13th April 1874; No. 501, dated 22nd April 1874, from Commissioner in Sind to Political Superintendent, Jacobabad.

Reports on several points connected with the late conduct of the Murree clan.

2. The first point his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council requires information regarding is what led to my reported failure to procure entire restitution of the plunder carried off by the Murree clan during the disturbances of 1872.

Information required regarding failure to procure entire restitution of property plundered by Murrees.

3. In reply to his question I have the honour to refer you to this office No. 707, dated Dera Ghazee Khan, the 13th August 1872, to the address of the Commissioner in Sind. That letter gives a very full account of my meeting with the Murree Chief, and what was arranged between us; therefore before a fair understanding of the question at issue can be arrived at, a great deal of what I then wrote ought to be repeated here. I, in that letter, endeavoured to show what property I then understood the Murree Chiefs had in their possession, and for the surrender of which I believed them to be responsible. For easy reference I will here quote the entire 4th paragraph of that letter, as it gives the pith of my inquiry and demonstrates in as far as I could the connexion the Murree tribe had with the plundering of the kafilahs then being inquired into in the Bolan Pass and elsewhere. It runs as follows :—

Explanation of the reasons for the failure.

" From the above extract from the statement of the Murree Tomandar, as well from conversations which I have held with him, I am able to assert that his wishes and those of his Chief are—

" (1.) That if it suits the purpose of his Highness the Khan of Khelat to employ the Muzzaranee section of the Murree clan in the protection of kafilahs passing through the Bolan Pass, they cannot accept any responsibility in the matter.

" (2.) That the Bijaranee section of the Murrees has no longer any feud with the Muzzaranees, or jealous feeling regarding their employment in the pass.

" (3.) That the protection of the pass should rest with, and be undertaken without reference to, the Murree clan by the Khan of Khelat in whose country it is.

" (4.) That if his Highness employs the Muzzaranees, they should be for the future considered as the Khan's servants and not as a part of the Murree tribe.

" (5.) That with the aid of Government they can prevent the Bijaranee Murrees from plundering kafilahs, and would under certain circumstances (to be named hereafter) undertake the responsibility of this.

" (6.) That on account of circumstances arising out of the late war, and because they considered they had a right to share in the kafilah fees, the Minguls (subjects of his Highness the Khan) attacked the Muzzaranee Murrees, who were at the time loyally performing the Khan's service.

" (7.) That on account of similar circumstances the Khan was unable to right the Muzzaranees, which led to their attacking the kafilahs.

" (8.) That from circumstances over which they had no control a few of the Khan Murrees did join in the plunder of the kafilahs; therefore they are prepared to be held responsible in as far as is considered fair, but they desire it to be understood as an undoubted fact that the Muzzaranees were employed for the protection of kafilahs entirely by the Khan and on his responsibility, and at the time they were attacked by the Minguls (the Khan's subjects) they were not at feud with the Murree tribe; they did not pay them any portion of the kafilah fee, and were acting independently of the Murree tribe under the protection of the Khan himself and Bungulzai Brahooees.

" (9.) That they will do their best to meet the wishes of Government in whatever way it is considered to be advantageous."

4. In submitting the letter above referred to which contained my proposal about the surrender of the property, and of which the foregoing is an extract, the Commissioner in Sind, in his transmitting letter No. 950, dated 5th October 1872, to Government of Bombay, decided to proceed himself to Jacobabad in the ensuing cold weather, and there in consultation with the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, the Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, and the Khelat authorities, to make arrangements for the future. I had myself, previously to the Commissioner's decision to go himself to Jacobabad, informed him by telegram that I believed the Murree Chiefs, in consequence of what I had explained to them, would pay up all the plundered kafilah property they could collect at the time, and that an equivalent for the remainder could be arranged for in cash.

Commissioner's intention of visiting Jacobabad to settle matters.

Deputy Commissioner explained in 1872 that he could arrange with Murree Chief satisfactorily for the recovery of the property, or its equivalent.

5. In pursuance of the above resolution of the Commissioner in Sind, I was summoned in the ensuing cold weather to Jacobabad to meet Sir William Merewether. The Murree Chiefs, as you are aware, I had been directed not to summon. They were told to join the Khan of Khelat in Kutchee, and this I understood from you, when at Jacobabad, they had declined to do, which for the time being brought all negotiations to a close.

The Murree Chiefs directed to attend at Jacobabad, and their disregarding these instructions.

6. But for easy reference I will again quote here your two telegrams on this subject conveying to me your orders and the Commissioner's wishes :—

"Dated 21st January 1873.

"From Political Superintendent of Jacobabad to Deputy Commissioner.

"Murree Chiefs will be summoned from Jacobabad through Harrison to meet Commissioner on 3rd February. Karam Khan and Shere Dil will be included. All will come here direct."

Deputy Commissioner again in 1873 proposed to arrange matters with Murree Chiefs, and requested Commissioner's instructions.

I again on the 16th of April 1873, by telegram from Dera Ghazee Khan, referred the point to you in the following words :—

"Murree Chiefs are here. Their late conduct seems more the result of misunderstanding our intentions regarding them than from any other cause. Can I do or say anything to bring about a proper understanding? I have told them I am entirely subordinate to Commissioner, and can do nothing without his permission."

To this you answered :—

"There should have been no misunderstanding on the part of the Murree Chiefs. They had clear orders to attend at Jacobabad through his Highness the Khan and deliberately disobeyed those. If they wish for consideration, they should at once of themselves and by themselves present themselves to me at Jacobabad. No intervention is required. These people must be made to understand that they are to do what they are told and obey orders properly. The Commissioner has no objection to my receiving the Murree Chief, but Guzzun Khan and his brothers must come alone. Neither Imam Buksh Mazaree, nor anyone else from Gazee Khan's side, should accompany them."

Commissioner's reply.

7. I have recorded the above telegrams with the object of making it clear that the failure of my endeavours to procure restitution of the entire amount of plunder carried off by the Murree clan, in accordance with their original agreement with me contained in the letter already referred to above, may be fairly attributed to the fact that Guzzun Khan, the Murree Tomandar, did not obey the orders of the Commissioner in Sind conveyed to him by you as described in the foregoing telegrams.

Failure of obtaining restitution due to disobedience of Commissioner's orders by Murree Chief.

8. The next point I have to reply to is the amount of plunder I consider still in the hands of the Murrees. This question perhaps I ought not to attempt to answer, as the kafilahs of the greatest value were plundered in the Bolan Pass and Kutchee in Khelat itself, and you are in a better position than I am to do so. But as the Murree clan for years have made depredations on kafilahs, and as it is notorious that they have respected no trade route whatever when in the pursuit of plunder, I think I may fairly say that many lakhs of rupees would be required to cover the loss that trade in general has sustained by their depredations on all the trade routes leading from Afghanistan and Central Asia in this direction into the Punjab and Sind, and for the protection of which by treaty his Highness the Khan was in a great degree responsible.

Value of property not restored.

9. In regard to the question as to whether the contumacious portion of the Murrees are in receipt of any payment from the British authorities, with every respect I would beg to say in reply that I am somewhat at a loss to interpret the word "contumacious" as now applied. From the first, a fact I can if necessary prove, my agreement and arrangements with the Murree clan, as reported at the time, and most fully approved by your predecessors, and subsequently sanctioned by the Government of India and Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, were entirely separate from and were never intended when entered upon to have anything to do with Khelat affairs or matters in which his Highness was concerned; on the contrary, it was especially required that they were to be distinct and concerned the Punjab alone. In as far, therefore, as the tribes arrangements with me are concerned, I can honestly say no contumacious portion of the clan is in my pay.

Reply to the inquiry as to whether contumacious portions of the Murrees are in receipt of pay from British authorities.

No: 182.

No. 930, dated Kurrachee, 25th July 1874.

From Commissioner in Sind to Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

REFERRING to my letter No. 462, of the 10th April last, I have the honour to recommend that I may be authorised to give compensation to the members of the kafilas plundered in their passage through Lus Beyla, in accordance with the list submitted with the above quoted letter, and the amount be charged against the subsidy now withheld from the Khan of Khelat.

2. Under the present state of affairs in Beloochistan it is useless expecting his Highness the Khan to make or enforce restitution, and as all the other kafilas have been reimbursed for their losses, I think it would be fair and politic to extend the same consideration to these.

3. I regret to say I know of nothing to show that his Highness the Khan has more power in his country than has previously been described. The recent flight from Hydrabad of Ali Khan, son of Sirdar Meer Khan, formerly Jam of Lus Beyla, is of no very great political importance as regards the general state of Beloochistan, as the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan still appear to work only for their own, not for united interests. But the presence of this young Sirdar in Beyla will make it more difficult for the Khan to reassert his power in that portion of his dominion.

4. The young Sirdar, Ali Khan, with his wife and two sons, also Ibrahim Khan Mingul with two followers, escaped from Hydrabad on Saturday the 4th instant, and reached Beyla the following day. Further report will be submitted on receipt of result of investigation now going on.

5. There were two wives of Sirdar Meer Khan residing at Hydrabad, one the sister of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, the other, sister of Sirdar Khan, chief of the Noomrias, residing at Kokee in Sind. The former of these ladies died at Hydrabad on the 17th instant from exhaustion consequent on severe attack of fever. Her remains were brought down to Kurrachee, and I permitted them to be taken at once to Lus Beyla, a party of police seeing them safely to, and across, the border. The latter is still at Hydrabad. I have given orders that the many followers of the ex-Jam who have been hanging about at Hydrabad for so long should be told they are at liberty to go where they like.

6. Information of the flight of Sirdar Ali Khan was immediately communicated to the Government of Bombay, with suggestion that his father, Sirdar Meer Khan, should be more than ever carefully watched, as it was probable he might attempt to escape also; and I had information that endeavours would be made to assist his flight, two men having left Kurrachee for that purpose. Meer Khan's presence in Jalawan just now would greatly complicate matters, as he is ambitious and most intriguing. It is desirable, therefore, he should be kept where he is in the Deccan.

No. 183.

No. 1857 P., dated Fort William, 27th August 1874.

From Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Commissioner in Sind.

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 930, dated the 25th ultimo, recommending that compensation should be paid to the owners of the kafilas plundered in Lus Beyla in 1873, and that the amount should be charged against the subsidy, the payment of which is now withheld from the Khan of Khelat.

2. In reply, I am directed by the Hon. the President in Council to state that as these caravans were plundered before the withdrawal of the subsidy, the Government of India consents to their case being treated as special and exceptional, and to the compensation being paid and adjusted in the manner recommended by you. It must, however, be clearly understood that the subsidy formerly paid by the Government of India in order to secure protection to trade through the territories of the Khan of Khelat, and now withheld because the conditions on which it was granted are not fulfilled, is not to be considered a fund from which compensation is to be drawn for merchants (more especially for merchants who are not British subjects) plundered in those territories. You should therefore make it generally known that the British Government does not accept any liability for losses from outrages which may hereafter occur within the dominions of his Highness, and that caravans must in future proceed at their own risk.

3. Regarding the escape of the son of the ex-Jam of Lus Beyla and others from Hydrabad, his Honour the President of the Council awaits the further report promised in paragraph 4 of your letter under reply.

No. 184.

No. 2214 P., dated Fort William, 9th October 1874.

From Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Commissioner in Sind.

I AM now directed by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council to address you on the subject of Khelat affairs with more special advertence to your letters noted in the margin.

No. 136, dated 8th February 1874.
„ 336, „ 10th March „
„ 722, „ 19th May „

2. In your letter of 10th March you reported the occurrence on 11th February of a raid on British territory, committed by a party of 200 armed men of the Sassoolee Brahooee tribe, who carried off some of their fugitive slaves who had taken refuge in the Shikarpoor district. Being of opinion that, unless the outrage were promptly and severely met, the example of the Sassoolees might be followed by other petty chiefs on the border, and a strong force would have to be stationed along the whole frontier line to the sea, and believing that the Khan of Khelat had now no restraining power over the action of his subjects, you recommended that two light columns should be despatched, one from Kurrachee viâ Lus Beyla and Khozdar to Khelat, the other from Jacobabad viâ the Bolan; that a proclamation should be issued pointing out the exact reasons which rendered the expedition necessary; and showing that the operations were intended solely to ensure the observance of the Khelat Treaty, to re-establish order and proper rule in the country, and to provide that the rights and privileges of all should be guaranteed for the future. You were further of opinion that the district of Kutch Gundava should be occupied till the expedition should be concluded, and the revenues taken by us till reparation should be gained.

3. The other letters quoted refer to the contumacious proceedings of the Murrees whom you proposed to exclude from the Punjab and Sind, informing their Chief Ghuzzun Khan that—unless he should present himself at Jacobabad within a given time, crave forgiveness, and show himself prepared to restore the property plundered by the Murrees—he and his tribe would be considered to have forfeited the favour of the British Government, all payments for service of any kind hitherto made, whether from the Punjab or elsewhere, would be stopped, all members of the tribe would be debarred from entering British territory, and any who did attempt to cross the border line would be seized and treated as enemies of the State. Should these measures fail it would then in your opinion become absolutely necessary that a well-selected force should be sent into the Murree Hills to punish the tribe and enforce conditions which they would be unable to break in future.

4. Having given long and anxious consideration to these proposals and to the circumstances in which they originated, and having communicated with his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab on the subject of the proposed blockade of the Murrees, his Excellency in Council has come to the conclusion that it is not advisable to have recourse to armed intervention with a view to the settlement of the affairs of Khelat.

5. His Excellency in Council has long ceased to expect from the Khan any efficient action towards the establishment of even a respectable administration. During the last seventeen years the British Government has done everything in its power to strengthen his hands and enable him to fulfil his treaty obligations. Extra subsidies have been given him; he has received from us presents of money; we have by friendly mediation adjusted the quarrels between him and his Sirdars; he has had moral support from the presence and advice of a British Agent; he has been received by the Viceroy with distinction; in short, everything has been done by the British Government that could have been done to raise him in the estimation of his subjects, and to enable him to discharge the duties which devolve upon him as the ruler of the Khelat State. But all has been of no avail, and his Excellency in Council has at last been compelled most reluctantly to enforce the 7th Article of the Treaty of 1854 and withhold the subsidy of Rupees 50,000.

6. His Excellency in Council, however, is not convinced that matters would be permanently improved by an invasion of Khelat in the manner proposed. The attitude assumed by the Khan appears to result more from want of power to control his subjects, than from hostility to the British Government. If we were to intervene in force to support his authority, it would be necessary to inquire into and guarantee the rights of those whose alleged grievances have driven them into what may possibly be a justifiable rebellion. On the other hand, if the Khan were removed from power, there appears to be no one in Khelat who has any prospect of ruling with greater success. Even the Sirdars are divided among themselves, and appear to have no aim in common, except raiding and plundering. There seems to be no recognised or dominant party in the State on whose influence we can reckon in re-establishing order. Under these circumstances, armed interference in the affairs of Khelat would commit Government to a military occupation of the country for a period indefinitely prolonged, and to the virtual assumption of the Government, and might possibly produce ulterior results of a serious kind.

7. It cannot be too distinctly understood that his Excellency in Council does not consider it to be the duty of the British Government by armed intervention to settle the administration of Khelat, or to adjust the quarrels between the Khan and his nobles, or to help the Khan to assert a nominal suzerainty over tribes who refuse to acknowledge his authority and over whom he has not been able to establish his power. Moral and material support have been freely accorded to the Khan. Further than this his Excellency in Council is not prepared to go.

8. The objects which the Government of India chiefly desire to secure are, first, the prevention of plundering and outrage within or near the British frontier; and, second, the safe transit of trade. The latter object can scarcely be looked for while anarchy is so universally rampant as at present in Khelat; it may, however, to some extent follow the re-establishment of peace and order on the frontier. When the raid of 11th February occurred, there was some reason to fear that it might be the commencement of a series of similar outrages, under pressure of which his Excellency in Council might possibly have been compelled to have recourse to armed force. Fortunately these anticipations have proved unfounded, and the raid of February last, which was not in itself a serious matter, and did not in its attendant circumstances indicate any general disposition on the part of the raiders to violate British territory, remains the solitary raid on record. His Excellency in Council therefore does not see in the present state of things on the frontier any necessity for an armed demonstration to deter the tribes from committing outrages within the British border.

9. The policy of endeavouring to deal with the frontier tribes entirely through the Khan, and of giving them to understand that they are regarded solely as subjects of his Highness, has failed after long and patient trial. His Excellency in Council is therefore of opinion that the time has now arrived for having recourse to the alternative measure, which has more than once been pointed out,* but which has been deferred from time to time solely out of consideration for his Highness—the alternative, namely, of making our own arrangements direct with the frontier tribes and without reference to the Khan.

* See letters Nos. 1546P., dated 11th July 1873, and 679P., dated 17th March 1874.

10. His Excellency in Council does not consider that our present relations even with the Murree tribe, which appears to be the most turbulent of all, are such as to preclude the adoption of such measures. Their quarrel is rather with the Khan than with us. It is true that their chief, Ghuzzun Khan, has not disgorged all his plunder and has evaded appearing in person at Jacobabad; but his restoration of a portion of the booty and the deputation of his nephew to Jacobabad indicate a certain deference to authority which leads his Excellency in Council to believe that matters may still be satisfactorily settled with him, if we do not make too severe a tax upon his pride, and if we dissociate our demands from the enforcement of an unpalatable allegiance to the Khan. At any rate his Excellency in Council does not consider our differences with Ghuzzun Khan to be so serious as to necessitate a blockade, which in the opinion of officers acquainted with the Punjab frontier would entail more hardship upon our own subjects than upon the Murrees, would involve a rupture with some of the minor chiefs of the Murree tribe who are by no means unfriendly to us, and would necessitate a strong reinforcement of the troops on our border.

11. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is of opinion that before resorting to a blockade or other measures of coercion we should endeavour to bring about an amicable settlement with Ghuzzun Khan and the Murrees. It has been suggested that the country should be visited by a party of Sind and Punjab officials in the manner proposed in 1869, and that those officers should be empowered to arrange the necessary measures with Ghuzzun Khan, to explain to the tribes our desire for peace on the frontier and protection to trade, to carry out the details of the arrangements sanctioned* for the entertainment of tribal levies, and generally to endeavour to effect an adjustment of inter-tribal quarrels, and arrangements for the safe transit of caravans. His Excellency in Council approves of these suggestions, and desires that you will place yourself in direct communication with the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, with a view to arranging the details of the composition of the party, the route they should take, the escort by which they should be accompanied, and the instructions to be given to them. When you have come to an understanding on these matters with the Lieutenant-Governor, I am to request that a full report may be submitted for the consideration and orders of the Governor-General in Council.

With reference to my docket No. 2216 P., dated 9th instant, forwarding, for the information of the Government of Bombay, a copy of instruction sent to the Commissioner of Sind in regard to Khelat affairs, I am directed by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council to inquire whether, under the circumstances therein described, it is not desirable that for the present at least the appointment of Political Agent in Khelat should be abolished and the establishments in connexion therewith broken up.

2. It is now a year and a half since the Political Agent left Khelat. In the interval he appears to have remained at Jacobabad, and to have been employed mainly in collecting information regarding affairs beyond the frontier, a duty which could apparently be equally well discharged by the Political Superintendent in Upper Sind.

3. Unless there be strong reason, of which the Governor-General in Council is not aware, for maintaining the appointment on its present footing, his Excellency in Council is of opinion that, under the altered circumstances referred to in paragraph 1, it might with advantage be abolished.

I am directed by his Excellency the Governor in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated 15th instant, No. 2270 P., inquiring whether, under present circumstances, it is not desirable that the appointment of Political Agent in Khelat should be abolished.

2. In reply, I am to state that this Government does not feel itself in a position to offer an opinion of value on the propriety of retaining in employment the Political Agent in Khelat, which must depend on the probability of restoring satisfactory relations with the Khan. His Excellency in Council hopes that if the abolition of the office be decided upon, it will be in the power of his Excellency the Viceroy in Council to make some other provision for Major Harrison, whose conduct has always won the approval of Government.

CANDAHAR NEWS-LETTER.

NUZUR ALI KHAN, son of Sirdar Sher Ali Khan, has, through the instrumentality of his Highness' son, Abdoolla Jan, received a cheque on Government Treasury for Rupees 50,000; a letter from Abdoolla Ján accompanied the cheque directing the officials to lose no time in paying the same. Sirdar Sher Ali Khan has written to his son and friends as follows: that this sum had been simply given him to purchase camels, horses, mules, and tents, and begged them to lose no time in making these purchases. Sirdar Sher Ali Khan has also directed that his tents should be sent to Cabul.

2. Dilawar Khan, son of Sirdar Sultan Mahomed Khan, Peshawaree, who is now at Candahar, has heard from his brothers at Cabul that at first his Highness the Ameer had so reduced their pay that they could scarcely exist upon it, and told them that if dissatisfied they might go where they liked; now, however, his Highness had kindly increased their pay to the old rates which they had always received. It was our right to marry into Mahomed Aslum Khan's wife's family, but we could not arrange this. Now his Highness the Ameer has directed one of us to marry into the family. The kindness of his Highness the Ameer to us, as also to Sirdar Sher Ali Khan, is attributable to Sirdar Yakoob Khan refusing to come to Cabul. Should the Sirdar go to Cabul all this kindness would be discoutinued.

3. Shikarpoor bunniahs have written to their Candahar agents that the Commissioner in Sind had issued the following proclamation, viz., "whatever merchants or "people went to and from Beloochistan and suffered loss of any kind, the loss would "rest with them and not with the British Government." The Collector of Shikarpoor sent for all the leading merchants and informed them as above, and took a signed paper from them stating that they had been duly warned. The Shikarpoor bunniahs have written to their agents saying that as the responsibility and loss has been placed on their shoulders they must write and petition his Highness the Ameer. All the merchants and bunniahs assembled at the Zunjeer Serai. Sultan Mahomed, Collector of Revenue, went at once to your correspondent, who has since died, and asked him for the written order he had received on the subject; he took a copy of the same and sent it with a representation from the merchants to Cabul for his Highness the Ameer's information.

4. A post has just arrived from Herat; it was sent on at once unopened to Cabul; no one knows what was written. Should I hear I will let you know.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copies forwarded to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, for information.

2. The Commissioner in Sind would respectfully observe that the Khan of Khelat not being longer compelled to adhere strictly to his treaty engagements, and the merchants having all risk thrown on them for outrages on their kafilas in Beloochistan, in accordance with the instructions contained in Government of India letter No. 1857 P., dated 27th August 1874, the effect cannot but be most injurious to the prestige of the British Government, while the result will be most serious on the commerce of Sind and the adjacent frontier countries.

No. 1145 of 1874. Political Department.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, Calcutta.

Commissioner's Office, Kurrachee,
5th November 1874.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 2214 P., dated the 9th ultimo, and with reference to the subjects thereof, would respectfully venture to make the following observations for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council.

2. In recommending that the outrage committed by the Sassoolee tribe should be promptly and severely met, I had in view that, unless such a gross outrage was taken proper notice of, not only every petty chief along the border but the followers of all such would not be afraid to enter British territory to plunder or avenge supposed wrongs as they pleased, while the small body of policemen which had hitherto maintained peace would no longer be equal to the task, and disorder would prevail along the whole line, leading to the necessity of having a strong line of military outposts instead of only a few men.

3. Though nothing on so extensive a scale as the Sassoolee inroad has occurred since last March, repeated acts of violence have been committed on British by Khelat subjects, and not only is no redress obtainable from the ruler of the country, but the heads of villages, and the villagers themselves in Khelat territory, have begun to adopt a most insolent tone, refuse to aid our police in the capture of thieves, and on several occasions have used threatening language to our people, police, and owners of stolen property, all proving that what was anticipated is steadily and assuredly coming on, and that serious injury to the interests of the British Government must follow on the increasing state of disorder the Khelat State has fallen into.

4. Were it not for this, I should consider the decision arrived at by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, as conveyed in the 4th paragraph of your letter, final, but under the circumstances I feel it my duty to bring the matter again before his Excellency, and to respectfully urge reconsideration.

5. While watching events and awaiting reply to my letter of the 10th of March, I drew up a memorandum on the state of affairs in Khelat, and collected all the information that could be obtained about routes, supplies, arrangements for the force, if one were sent, &c., and beg now to submit these papers for his Excellency's perusal.

6. The career of the present Khan of Khelat has been a very unfortunate one throughout. At the very outset his liberty of action, if not of person, was threatened by a serious outbreak of the chief Sirdars of the country, and endeavours on their part to get him into their power. This caused a division between him and his nobles, which has been kept alive by repeated differences, due it must in justice be said to faults on both sides. The Khan, though by no means a pattern ruler, is equal to the average of general Native princes, and had his worst qualities, suspicion and vindictiveness, not been early worked upon, he would probably have made a fairly decent sovereign. There was one clear point in his character which I can certify to, that for the greater part of his reign he was most earnest in his attachment to the British Government, and to do all that was required of him. Change only occurred when he found support was so ill-advisedly being given to his rebellious barons, which encouraged them in their factious opposition to him.

7. During the past two to three years he has avoided his good advisers and given himself to the guidance of bad counsellors. He has maintained a dogged passiveness, promising largely but doing nothing, indeed not attempting to do anything, just allowing matters to glide on as they would. This of itself is bad enough, and could only bring about disorder and misrule, but of late he appears to have become somewhat desperate, fearing the result of his inaction, and has gone the length of deliberately breaking the treaty by corresponding direct with the ruler of Cabul on the subject of the disposal of his (the Khan's) country.

8. This shows a growing opposition to the interests of the British Government, and a want of faith, which would lead him to any other act adverse to the Government of India. To support his authority now would therefore be a fault, and I consider that the first object of moving a force to Khelat would be to depose him for his breaches of faith and of treaty engagements. There would then be no need to inquire into the differences between him and his nobles, a thing I have always been of opinion we should never have engaged in. All that would be required would be to state that the British force had solely been sent to punish the Khan for his misdeeds towards the British Government. On his removal from power, the custom (Brahooee) would be followed of calling on the Sirdars to elect their sovereign. This choice would most probably fall on the eldest son of the Khan, for they will have one of the reigning family. He being a minor could not assume the powers of sovereignty, but these would be managed by a well-qualified Wuzeer, with a regent or council of regency as found most advisable. All proper rights and privileges would be confirmed to the Sirdars, and they would be allowed to remain in possession of their hereditary estates. The whole of these latter points are perfectly well known and would be most easily settled. The Sirdars would be perfectly satisfied, and would most gladly settle down to the rest and quiet which has been absent from them for so many years.

9. The Sirdars are divided amongst themselves because there is nothing to keep them together. It is, however, a mistake to suppose that they have no other aim than raiding and plundering. Such is the nature of the Belooch, the Murrees, Boogtees, &c., but though prominent just now, they are only a very small portion of the people of Beloochistan, occupying one comparatively little corner of the Khanate. The Brahooee Sirdars who possess the greater part of the country are very different. They are quite content, indeed most anxious, to remain at peace with each other, and until the unfortunate circumstances of 1871–72, had for years engaged in no raiding or tribal fighting; their only exhibitions of violence were directed against their ruler the Khan. When they did commence outrages in 1872, one of their main objects was to try and force the British Government to interfere in their affairs, for which reason they attacked the kafilahs in the Bolan, and it was openly stated at the time they had been advised to do this to call in British intervention. The attack of the Summalani Minguls (Brahooees) on the Muzzarani section of the Murrees was a very questionable transaction, and was generally believed then to have been brought about by some of the people about the Khan (indeed some said by the Khan himself) out of spite to the Muzzaranis and their chief Shere Ali.

Living in the Bolan, apart and quite distinct from the other portion of the Murree tribe.

10. Unless something is speedily done the Sirdars will become desperate. They will adopt their own measures for their individual interests, totally regardless of each other and the general Government of the country. Their followers, who are yet under their control, will break loose, and anarchy and the wildest confusion will fill the land. They can be used in a legitimate manner now to support a Government, and if they are told that the elected Khan would be staunchly supported by the British Government, fair treatment being guaranteed to them, I am certain they would join in supporting the rule. A few years hence this even will be impossible, and then for the safety of the British possessions occupation of Beloochistan will become inevitable. The only way left to prevent entire occupation is to see to the establishment of a real Government again, and with proper management it should be stronger than any that has been for a long time. It should grow under the protecting influence of the British Government. Moral aid should be freely and heartily given, but there should be after the change had been established no further armed intervention. The Political Agent should be re-established, and have with him a suitable escort but no more, and that should be considered simply for his protection, and to assert the dignity of his position.

11. If anarchy and absence of all governing power—such as is the state now in Beloochistan—is allowed to continue, there will be no limit to plundering and outrage near the British border, and trade will be utterly unprotected as it passes through that country. It will not then be merely that we shall have to provide against the comparatively contemptible action of a small body like the Murrees, affecting merely a portion of the border, but the whole will be injured, and the people harassed by the incessant plundering of petty bands from all the Brahooee tribes down to the sea. The impunity enjoyed by some will be envied and sought after by others, and there will be no one to be held specially responsible. The insolence of the Murrees is getting excessive, and unless it is properly controlled, and some punishment speedily inflicted on them, the other tribes will find they are losing instead of gaining by behaving well, and will return to the old pursuits, which they cannot help seeing are the means of giving great wealth to the Murrees, and enable the latter really to defy the British power. Such is their attitude now certainly, though for convenience sake they pretend deference to the authorities on the Punjab side, it suiting them best at present to do so.

12. With regard to the "policy of endeavouring to deal with the frontier tribes

" entirely through the Khan, and of giving them to understand that they are regarded " solely as subjects of his Highness," that argument has only been used in reference to the Murrees, and I would deferentially observe can scarcely be said to have failed, because it has never been properly carried out. While it has been acknowledged that such policy was right and just, what support has been given in maintaining it? The Murrees have been told that they must respect the territories of the Khan, but when they have deliberately disregarded this injunction, has any real notice been taken of this disobedience? Have they not, on the contrary, been treated with exactly the same consideration as before, and received the same favour as if they had been perfectly well behaved the whole time? They obtained immense plunder from the kafilahs in 1872, which the Khan of Khelat was compelled by us to make good to the owners. But what compulsion was brought to bear on the Murrees to compel them to disgorge their large share? They were called upon to make restitution, and at one time I was led to believe that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan's demands on the Chief Ghuzzun were going to be complied with, but it only ended in the delivery of a few camels and some insignificant goods; the bulk of the booty is with the tribe still, and yet there is no diminution of the favour with which they continue to be treated. It is impossible to enforce obedience unless some penalty is attached to deliberate disregard of orders, and the policy above alluded to could certainly not be carried out unless its observance was enforced on all parties.

13. The Murrees have no grievances against the Khan, and never had. This Captain Sandemen at last acknowledged after personal inquiry from them, and after he had fancied for some time that they had. Their quarrel is so far with the Khan that they have persistently plundered his country, and killed poor unoffending people where and as they pleased. The Khan has been unable to punish them as they deserved, and we, who might have helped to punish all this, have really done nothing. The Khan of Khelat, our ally hitherto, and still, is the aggrieved party, and the people who have so injured him are high in our favour and treated as if they had done no ill.

14. It is certainly quite time that this mode of procedure should be changed, and it was with this object I proposed the blockade. The success and impunity enjoyed by the Murrees are not only rendering them most insolent and bold, but they are causing demoralization among the adjacent tribes, especially the Boogtees, who are breaking up into factions which join the Murrees and assist them in their plunderings. I recommended blockade in 1868–69, but it was then not thought feasible, and the system of negotiation, adjustment, and payment tried. This it is that has really failed. It of course suited the Murrees admirably. They had only to be a little careful as regards the Punjab border, to have as much license as they chose on the Kutchee side. Such a plan will, I am well assured, never answer with such people as these wild mountaineers. They do not understand forbearance. They regard it as weakness, and increase in audacity and insolence in proportion. They must be taught obedience to ensure any permanent peace and security, and must be made to understand that the British power is to be unhesitatingly feared.

15. This cannot be obtained by presents or payments, conciliation now will only make matters worse, confirming the Murrees in the belief that their power is feared. The persistent refusal of the Murree Chief to go into Jacobabad to pay his respects is a significant proof of what he thinks he may do and the lengths he may go. His restoration of the very small portion of the booty was merely to gain time, he hoping that the delivery of the remainder would not in the end be enforced, and the deputation of his nephew was a mere evasion, which should not be accepted. There will no satisfactory settlement come I am convinced from yielding to this chief's views, most unwarrantable as they are. It will be a victory to him which cannot but be most lowering to our power over him, his tribe, and others about.

16. The allegiance to the Khan is a thing they don't really object to, indeed they have always said they wish for a Khan, and to be acknowledged as his subjects. What they do object to is being prevented plundering in his country of Kutchee, which they know would be put a stop to if their real allegiance was enforced. I hold we are bound not to recognise their independence when such an act carries with it the license to harry the Khan's country and subjects as the Murrees like.

17. The blockade would not entail much greater display of military force, and it would be over in one year, or further punitive measures would be adopted, and there would be no difficulty in inflicting the fullest punishment on the tribe in their own hills if the Murrees succeeded in holding out, and such were found necessary. There should be no hardship on our own subjects, when the British possessions were properly protected and all attempts at injury promptly and severely punished. And as regards the rupture with the minor chiefs, I know of none that are not in the same boat as Ghuzzun, and require equally being brought under proper control. Better, however, far that there should be some little temporary inconvenience, than that years of disorder and disasters should follow from the want of timely firmness and due enforcement of authority. Such an opportunity as at present offers will probably never occur again.

18. My proposals may be briefly stated to be these: that as Beloochistan, which includes the whole tract of country from the Murree Hills and the valley north of the Bolan Pass to the sea-coast below Lus Beyla, is fast drifting into a state of anarchy and general disorder from the absence of proper ruling power, measures should be adopted to establish a new Government in accordance with the customs of the people, and that to ensure the peaceable carrying out of this design, a suitable force should be despatched to Khelat in the month of March next.

That the troops should spend the summer above the passes so as to allow of the new arrangements being well introduced, and that they return to the plains in the autumn.

That in consequence of the outrageous acts of the Murree tribe during the past few years; of the total disregard the chief has shown for all orders conveyed to him by the Political Superintendent, Frontier of Upper Sind, and his failing to pay his respects to that officer, the tribe should be denied all access to, or communication with, British territory, either on the Punjab or Sind side, until such time as the Murree Chief makes suitable amends for his misconduct and restores all the plundered property, or its equivalent, captured from kafilahs in 1872, or since, from subjects of the Khan or of the British Government.

That should the blockade thus instituted not prove sufficient, the troops returning from Khelat in the autumn should proceed through the Murree Hills and bring that tribe into thorough subjection.

19. Meanwhile the instructions conveyed in the 10th paragraph of your letter will be at once carried out, and the report called for duly forwarded. I have been in communication with his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and it has been arranged that Captain Sandeman should join Colonel Loch at Jacobabad, that the required report may be drawn up and submitted by them.

20. In writing the remarks which I have considered it my duty to lay before his Excellency the Viceroy in Council, if I appear to have written too strongly, I trust that the very great importance of the subject may be accepted as excuse, and allowance made accordingly. No one I feel sure can dispute the absolute necessity that exists for having one front as safe and secure as it can possibly be made, and no one can gainsay the fact that the present state of affairs in Beloochistan is exactly opposed to that condition.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. L. Merewether, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind.

Enclosure 1 in No. 189.

Memorandum.

In April 1873 the Political Agent at the Court of his Highness the Khan of Khelat was withdrawn, and the annual subsidy of Rupees 50,000, which had up to that date been regularly paid, was stopped, because his Highness failed to carry out the provisions of the treaty entered into in 1854, and had latterly shown a studied disinclination to act cordially in accordance with the wishes of the Government of India, as communicated to him by the Political Agent. The excellent Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, accompanied the Political Agent, not thinking it safe to remain with his master since the latter had so changed his views.

2. From the above date it may be said that there has been practically no governing management in the Khelat dominions. The Khan leaving Gundava immediately returned to Khelat, and all the Brahooee Sirdars, with one exception, followed his example, retiring to their homes above the passes. The exception was Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, who fearing the hostility of the Khan, considered it safest to resort to his old retreat in the Afghan province of Seebee, where he still remains.

3. The Khan has allowed matters to drift on as they may, following the advice of three men who have always shown strong feelings against the British Government, and who have throughout endeavoured, for their own present advantage, to encourage the Khan in the adverse course he has lately adopted, and to further increase the complications between the two Governments which have so unfortunately been brought about. Those men are—

I.—Abdool Uzeez, an inferior official, appointed Naib of Kutchee, when the *Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, retired into British territory with the Political Agent.

* The custom is that the Wuzeer is ex-officio Naib of Kutchee, and he usually appoints a deputy to transact business there while he is in attendance on the Khan of Khelat or elsewhere.

II.—Mahomed Hyat, the Kazee of Bagh, a determined enemy to British interests.

III.—Mahomed Khan, ex-Wukkeel at Jacobabad, who was removed from his post for his pusillanimous and treacherous conduct during the disturbances in 1871–72.

These men, as the records will have shown, lost no opportunity of acting insolently towards the British officials on the frontier, and prompting their sovereign to maintain the dogged obstructiveness he had so foolishly entered upon. It is even reported that the Naib, Abdool Azeez, on one occasion went the length of speaking in open Durbar in most disrespectful terms of the British officials. His conduct was brought to the notice of the Khan, but the latter took no measures to correct or punish him, but on the contrary, by saying he considered the Naib had done no wrong, he accepted that official's acts as his own.

4. No Wuzeer was appointed on the departure of Wullee Mahomed. The post was several times offered to Daroga Atta Mahomed (the son of Daroga Gool Mahomed, an old staunch upholder of the Khanate, and famous in the revolution of 1840), but Atta Mahomed persistently declined, disapproving entirely of the present action of the Khan.

5. Though the Political Agent had been recalled, relations were not entirely broken off with the Khan, it being necessary to maintain them in reference to any border differences that might occur. Representations have had to be repeatedly made concerning such, but have only been met by the stereotyped reply from the Khan that he was about to make arrangements for the restoration of order in those parts where the occurrences had happened, and with the blessing of Providence the culprits demanded would be punished and the property claimed restored. But nothing whatever has been done up to this day, commencing as the occurrences did with the plunder of kafilahs in the Lus Beyla territory in April 1872. Appended is a list of the outrages represented, for none of which has any reparation been made, and attention is specially called to it.

6. On the 17th February last letters were addressed to his Highness commenting on the indifference and supineness displayed by him in regard to these outrages, and the non-fulfilment of the many promises of redress he had made, and he was told then that "the only conclusion that can be drawn is that your Highness has become "wholly forgetful of the assurances you have given, of your responsibilities as ruler "of the country, and of your obligations under treaty engagements; also that you "have become utterly indifferent to the retention of your good name, as well as to "the establishment of peace and good order in your country." His Highness' attention was also drawn to the insecurity for travellers passing through his country, and to certain modes of uncourteous address which had been used both by himself and his officials in writing to British officers, and he was in conclusion informed plainly and distinctly as follows:—"That the obligations your Highness lies under according "to the treaty of 1854, to protect trade and secure the peace of the frontier, remain "unaffected by recent events. That the subsidies will continue to be withheld until "such time as your Highness complies wholly and completely with the terms of "the treaty. That in the event of any disturbances occurring on the frontier, the "British Government will be compelled to take its own measures for preserving "order, and further, that if satisfaction is not afforded by your Highness for the "outrages committed in Lus Beyla, it will be necessary to exact reparation in such "manner as the British Government deem most suitable."

7. The replies were received in March and forwarded to Government. They were thoroughly unsatisfactory, full of mis-statements and empty promises, and making no proper amende for the disrespectful style of writing that had been complained of. It was currently reported that his three advisers had counselled him that he had only to write letters full of promises and nothing would be done to him. He certainly appeared to be acting under this view, and it was urged that immediate measures of a stringent order should be adopted to undeceive him on this point.

8. A little previously a letter came from the Khan through Kurrachee direct to the Commissioner. This was quite contrary to correct rule and custom. This letter likewise was replete with untruths and remarks disparaging to the late Wuzeer, to Colonel Loch the Political Superintendent, and Major Harrison the Political Agent. The letter was therefore immediately returned to the Khan through the Political Superintendent.

9. Before the Khan's replies to the letters of the 17th February arrived, intelligence was received of a most gross outrage having been attempted on the western border in the lower part of the Shikarpoor Collectorate such as had never before been committed in British territory. Some 200 armed Brahooees of the Sassoolee tribe, headed by the Chief Pahur Khan and his brother, entered the village of Khubbur Pahur, well within the British boundary, at 8 o'clock on the evening of the 10th February, and carried off the families of certain slaves who had fled from their masters the Sassoolees, in consequence of the way in which they, the slaves, had been ill-treated. A policeman on the spot attempted to check the Sassoolees, but he was not listened to, being kept in charge of a portion of the invaders, while the others collected the slave females, their children and property, and carried the whole off into the territory of the Khan. Thus British territory was entered by a large body of armed men, and people who had sought refuge therein were forcibly carried off. Such an act could only be considered as a most insolent and gross outrage, for which the ruler of the country whose subjects could dare to act in such a manner must be held responsible.

10. A demand was at once sent to his Highness the Khan for the immediate arrest and delivery up of the leaders of this outrage, as also of the women, children, and property carried off by them. His Highness the Khan replied that Pahur Khan and his brother were about to be ordered to Jacobabad, and having arrived there without delay, will themselves answer the charges brought against them. Up to this day, however, they have not been sent, and no sign has been shown of the Khan intending to act up to his promise. No mention either was made of the restitution of the families and property, and though a second demand was made for them, nothing has been done by the Khan in the matter.

11. The occurrence of this outrage showed clearly that the subjects of the Khan had no longer any fear of his power to control them, or that if he had the will to do so, he did not choose to exert it. Every endeavour had been previously made to support him in his Government, and to enable him to maintain order in his dominions. This having failed, and he being the person really to blame, it became necessary to recommend that active measures should be adopted without delay to compel him to carry out the engagements he was bound to by treaty. It was shown that if the above outrage was not promptly and severely met, any of the numerous petty chieftains along the extensive border from Upper Sind to the sea, a distance of some 300 miles, might at any time follow the example of the Sassoolees, and so it would become necessary for the protection of British subjects that a strong force should be located along the whole line.

12. It was therefore proposed that a military force should be sent against the Khan, to consist of two columns of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, one to advance from Kurrachee through Lus Beyla, Wudd, and Khozdar on Khelat, the other to the same final destination, but starting from Jacobabad and proceeding by the Bolan Pass to Quetta and Moostung. The first would in its passage restore order and rule in the lower portion of the Khelat dominions, the latter the same in the northern part, and the two meeting at Khelat would compel better arrangements to be made for the future good government of the country. The troops would then be withdrawn to Sind, only leaving sufficient to form a suitable escort for the Political Agent, who would then be re-installed at the Court of Khelat.

13. No decision was arrived at in time for these operations to be carried out before the hot summer months rendered movement of troops impracticable, and the subject is still under the consideration of the Government of India. Though it was unfortunate that owing to the shortness of the time nothing could then be done, and on such occasions prompt measures render action and success so very much more easy, it is now most earnestly urged that the next spring should not be allowed to pass without the required notice being taken of the state of utter misrule that now exists in the Khanate, and full reparation exacted for the above-mentioned outrage, and for the many wrongdoings of late by subjects of his Highness the Khan.

14. There are two seasons during which operations can be carried on above the passes in Beloochistan—spring and autumn. The latter, however, gives too short a time, owing to the severity of the winter, making it inexpedient to keep troops in the highlands. Supplies are scarce, and forage for cavalry and cattle generally very difficult to procure. The spring is followed by a most temperate summer, when all supplies are more easily obtained, and the troops could without inconvenience remain there, returning to the plains in the autumn before the excessive cold sets in.

15. During the interval that has passed since the recommendations submitted in March last, the fullest information has been collected regarding best information of the force to be employed, routes, provisions, and extent of carriage required, and Brigadier-General Addison, C.B., Commanding the Sind district, has placed at the disposal of the Commissioner some very creditable papers drawn up by Captain F. Adam, Assistant Quartermaster-General, entering fully into all the necessary details and wants connected with the movement of such a force as is deemed necessary to ensure the successful execution of the object in view. Copies of these papers are appended, and attention is respectfully drawn to them. Almost all the necessary arrangements can be made in Sind itself, the requisite carriage can be obtained without any difficulty. A regiment of European and one of Native Infantry would have to be sent up from Bombay, to replace those that would be employed, but nothing more. For the general idea, reference is asked to letter No. 336, of the 10th March last.

16. Though there has been nothing similar in extent to the Sassoolee inroad in February last, much has taken place along the border, showing that great injury has happened to the British influence and prestige from no reparation having been yet exacted for that glaring contempt of British power, and nothing being done to compel the ruler of Beloochistan to enforce his authority over his subjects and to maintain proper sovereignty in his country. Formerly, in ordinary cases of cattle-stealing, when animals were carried off into Khelat territory, the Sind police would follow up the thieves and stolen property across the border to the nearest village, and always received ready assistance from the authorities, thus recovering the cattle at once and getting the thieves arrested at first, or they were afterwards delivered up. Now the police meet with opposition, and often armed intimidation, only occasionally regain the property, never obtain the thieves, and on requisition being made to the Khan, the only reply is, that he is going to send some one in authority to that part of the country when the culprits shall be seized and given up. Nothing, however, has been done up to the present time, and the thieves are getting confident and more bold from the impunity they enjoy.

17. Appended is a statement of cases referred to his Highness the Khan of Khelat during the past two years which still remain undisposed of, and appear likely to remain so. In one case of murder in March 1874, the perpetrator is well known, as also his residence; but not only is he still at large, but he is known to have boasted that he owes a grudge to another person in British territory, which he will pay off by killing the man when he chooses. He had no fear of anything being done to him, for had not the proceedings of the Sassoolees been passed by unnoticed? This murderer lives near the Sassoolees, but others more distant reason much in the same way.

18. Unless something is soon done to remedy the present state of affairs, crime will so increase on the western borders of Sind, that the small police force stationed along it will be utterly unable to cope with its extent. Appended is a list of the number of police employed at the different posts from the sea up to where the Upper Sind Frontier line ends at Khyree Ghurree, 34 miles south-south-west of Jacobabad. Such a small body has been only able to give security to the people of that part of Sind by means of the aid they received from the Khelat authorities, and the moral power which the name of the British Government carried with it. Let this latter be found to have no longer existence or effect, and so few policemen will be utterly useless.

19. The Sirdars of Sarawan prepared at the usual time in the spring to return to their lands in the higher country. They all assembled at Dadur, with the exception of Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, who would not leave Seebee, and at one time it was thought they intended recommencing hostilities against the Khan. Naib Abdool Azeez, on hearing this, promptly went to the spot from Bagh, and by means of promises, with judicious distribution of money, he succeeded in sowing dissension amongst them and they dispersed to their homes. They have remained quiet there during the summer, and will shortly now be again returning to Kutchee.

20. The Jalawans, with the exception of Meer Noordeen Mingul, have kept aloof from his Highness the Khan. Noordeen thought that by pretending submission he might induce the Khan to make him "Premier Noble" in the south of Beloochistan, and get him to apply for the release of his relative the ex-Jam of Beyla. Neither of these have come to pass as yet, but Noordeen was desired by the Khan to go to Beyla to restore order there, and seize the people whose arrest had been demanded. He went, but all he did was to collect what revenue the people would give him, which he appropriated to his own uses and retired to his lands at Wudd.

21. A disturbance took place in the Zehree country which at first promised to be rather serious. A party of the Khan's regular troops that had been despatched from Khelat to collect revenue from the Zehrees, found themselves cut off from return by the routes being closed by the Zehrees in force. The predicament was an awkward one, but after a while the troops were extricated, it is supposed by means of bribery, and nothing whatever came of it, as is so often the case with any attempted movement in Beloochistan.

22. The son of the ex-Jam of Beyla, who since his father's removal to the Deccan had been allowed to remain at Hyderabad under the surveillance of the police, managed to elude the vigilance of the latter and escape to his old home in Beyla. He is, however, not a person of any political importance, being quite young, inexperienced, and without any influence. There is a rupture between him and his uncle, Noordeen, on account of the latter's appropriation of the Beyla revenue and refusing to give any account. The Beyla people will most of them probably pay their dues to this son of Meer Khan, it being a matter of little consequence to them who receives the revenue, and the young man will endeavour to send funds to his father. The latter should not be allowed to receive them, or anything more than the sum fixed for his maintenance. Careful watch should also be kept over him more than ever, for he will take the first opportunity of trying to re-enter his old country, and would then at once recommence his intrigues and endeavour to promote disturbances.

23. In Mekran there is considerable danger of frontier disturbances from the Rhinds of Mund having committed inroads into Persian territory. Fukkeer Mahomed, the Khan's Naib at Kedj, was called upon to restrain the Rhinds and direct them to restore the plundered property, but he replied he was quite unable to do so, that he had no troops placed at his disposal, and the Rhinds would take no notice of what he said.

24. Azaad Khan of Kharan is restless, and threatening again to interfere with Khelat affairs. He has written to Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Noordeen Mingul urging them to raise the standard of revolt once more and he would join them. The former is said to have declined, the latter's reply is not certainly known.

25. The Murree Chief Guzzun has continued to maintain his insolent attitude towards the Sind Frontier authorities. He has made no attempt to restore the large amount of plunder he and his tribe gained from the kafilahs in the Bolan, and he persistently neglects to obey the summons of the Political Superintendent to come into Jacobabad and pay his respects. This latter is a point that most assuredly should be insisted upon. It is simply a trial on the part of Guzzun to assert his importance and superior strength above the other Belooch tribes, which if once recognised, there would be no bounds to his arrogance, and no real check on the lawless proceedings of himself and tribe. The Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan stated it had been reported to him that the Chief Guzzun was getting quite rich in plunder, and was in consequence becoming very unreliable, while the tribe itself was more and more demoralized, and no wonder, when they found that their raiding practices could be carried on with perfect impunity, and that as long as they showed a tolerably decent observance of their engagements with the authorities on the Punjab Frontier, they could plunder elsewhere, especially in the Khan's territory—rich hunting grounds for them—whenever and as much as they pleased.

26. It is full time that this was put a stop to and with a strong hand, or others will follow their example, seeing how well it pays. Already the Boogtees, who have for some years past been behaving remarkably well, have shown signs of similar demoralization. The tribe is breaking up into parties, leaving the Chief, Goolam Moorteza, on any trifling difference, and going off to join the Murrees, where there is more to be gained. Only recently a mixed body of Murrees and Boogtees perpetrated a raid just outside the Sind line of outposts and carried off a large number of cattle, and unless such proceedings are speedily checked, similar ones will repeatedly recur, and the border be harassed along the whole length.

27. It is a great mistake to suppose that these wild tribes can be kept in order by simple arrangements and negotiations. They regard them as signs of weakness, and only become more bold and insolent each time that their lawless acts do not meet with the punishment they deserve. Soft measures will never answer. They must be made to feel the strength of the paramount power, and then anything may be done with them. Above all, the two systems in vogue on the Punjab and Khelat side are acting most prejudicially to the interests of both. Of course the Murrees will try to keep in with the Punjab authorities as long as they get regular pay and presents from them, and nothing is done to prevent their malpractices elsewhere.

28. It has been recommended that a blockade of the Murrees should be established, both from the Sind and Punjab side, to compel their obedience. This could be most easily carried out without calling for the employment of much additional force, and it should be done before matters become worse, and the main portion of the Boogtees have to be dealt with as well as the Murrees. Should it not succeed, a force should be sent into and through the Murree country, to enforce thorough submission once and for all. With the knowledge now possessed of that country, there would be no difficulty whatever in this, the more especially as the Murrees by their continued acts of hostility against the surrounding tribes, have made them nearly all most deadly enemies, so that they could gain no asylum out of their own country, but must stand or fall where they are.

29. In conclusion, it may be briefly stated that the point to be considered is this. Is it wise to allow the present state of affairs in Beloochistan to slide on as it now is, until the whole society falls entirely to pieces, and the British border, extending nearly 600 miles in length from Dehra Ghazee Khan to the sea, becomes liable to aggression from a large number of independent chiefs, over whom there is no control whatever, and against the individual attack of every one of whom sufficient provision will have to be made? Or is it better that, before it is too late, measures should be adopted to restore real and good government throughout the country, and revise the arrangements between the two Governments, that in future security for all, especially for trade, may be maintained? Is it wise, too, considering the progress of events in Central Asia, the country immediately before us should be torn by factions, and be the prey of the first strong power that should choose to seize it? It is already known that the present Khan, driven to despair, and ready to cling to any straw, offered his country and allegiance to the Ameer of Cabul, writing, in direct contravention of the Treaty of 1854, to that potentate, if he has not done the same to others, and it is strongly suspected he has.

30. As long as the Khan was not turned from us by unfortunate direct interference in his State affairs, he was willing and ready to do all that was required of him to the best of his ability. He is now, however, completely, alienated from us, and his late procedure has rendered it quite impossible that any future arrangements could be carried on through him. The main object of the despatch of the force to Khelat would be to remove him from the throne, and then allow the Sirdars of the country, as is the custom, to elect a new sovereign, explaining to them that the elect would receive the fullest support of the British Government—peace, order, and good government being insisted upon.

31. With the object of the movement fully explained by proclamation, and the Sirdars fairly told that if they remain quiet on their estates and afford all assistance asked of them they will have all their rights and privileges strictly recognised and confirmed, there would be little or no opposition. The mass of the people are sick and tired of uncertainty and misrule, and would cordially welcome the chance of change for the better. The troops the Khan has collected about him seeing that resistance was hopeless, and that their occupation would be gone with the removal of their employer, would be only too glad to make the best terms they could. The force that was used to bring this about would, after spending the summer above the passes, return to the plains in the autumn without having added a rood to British territory or involved ourselves one whit more in external affairs than we are now. Unless this is done it requires little of the prophet to foretell that on the complications occurring in Central Asia, which most people now are obliged to allow must come before long, we shall be compelled to advance into Beloochistan, and make our frontier on the sandy desolate line of Mekran to Seistan, instead of retaining the present far more secure and suitable one of Sind.

W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind.

P.S.—Since the above was written, Darogha Atta Mahomed has accepted the appointment of Wuzeer, and was ordered by the Khan to proceed to Beyla to restore order there, but he had not left Khelat by last advices, and there seemed no probability of his doing so. His heart is not in the work, and the Khan does not appear to like to press him.

Statement of Cases referred to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, &c.—continued.

No.	Date of Offence.	Name of Complainant.	Place where the Offence was committed.	Nature of Offence	Value of Property.	Name of Offender.	Number and Date of Commissioner's Reference to the Political Superintendent.	Nature of reply received from his Highness the Khan of Khelat.
	1873.				Rs.
6	About 23rd April -	Shamdass Goverdandass, on behalf of Mahomed Deen, a Kandahar merchant.	About 40 miles from the Hubb river, in Nowsherwan Choota and Oomed Ali's District.	Plundering a kafilah, merchandize, &c. - 13 camels - - -	4,921 0 0 1,300 0 0	About 40 or 60 followers of Nowsherwan Choota.	385, April 29th - 379, April 26th. 397, May 5th.	The reply to Nos. 1, 2, and 3 include this also.
7	About 23rd April -	Sher Dilshah, son of Boorahukshah, resident of Shalkot, on behalf of his deceased brother, Jinda Shah.	About 40 miles away from the Hubb, in Nowsherwan Choota and Oomed Ali's District.	Plundering a kafilah, and killing Syud Jinda Shah. Merchandize, &c.	5,380 0 0	About 40 or 60 followers of Nowsherwan Choota.	427, May 8th - -	Reply received with the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind's letter, No. 1837, dated the 3rd July 1873, stated that 70 cavalry and 200 infantry had been sent on detachment to Kozdar on the 9th May, and directly they arrived, Ali Khan Jamote, Sahib Khan, and Nowsherwan Chootas were alarmed, and they were consulting about giving up the property and offenders. Should they not do so, for the sake of his reputation he would coerce them.
8	2nd or 3rd May -	A report from the District Superintendent of Kurrachee Police, No. 357, dated the 6th May 1874.	A place called Augutakdina, about 1½ koss beyond the Hubb.	Assaulting and plundering band of mendicants proceeding on a pilgrimage to Hinglaj.	300 0 0	Thirty thieves, servants of Chooto and Dewria Bundejo.	446, May 13th - -	Reply received with the Political Superintendent's letter, No. 1602, dated the 10th June 1874, stating that the unsatisfactory state of the Lus Beyla district had been brought to his notice on previous occasions, and that it was well known he had no authority in the province, as the people were in rebellion and had no Sirdar. His Highness attributed the bad conduct of the people in Lus Beyla to his having been obliged to compensate merchants plundered by the Brahooees and Murrees, as also to want of kindness and consideration towards himself by the British Government.
9	19th May -	Vide report from the District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, No. 600, dated 30th June 1873.	Bahudooree, near Mukan Kai, within the British territory. W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel, Commissioner in Sind.

No. 190.

No. 2543 P., dated Fort William, 24th November 1874.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letters Nos. 1145 and 1156, dated respectively the 5th and 9th instant.

2. Your suggestions for the re-establishment of order in Khelat will be discussed by the Governor-General in Council on your arrival at Calcutta. With regard, however, to the violation of British territory by Zaroor, Brahooee, with an armed band on 14th August last, his Excellency in Council observes that some explanation should be submitted of the reason why the case was not reported to this office until the 9th instant. I am further to inquire what steps were taken by the local authorities on the occurrence of this outrage.

3. The Governor General in Council desires also to be furnished with full details of the "repeated acts of violence" committed on British by Khelat subjects alluded to in paragraph 3 of your letter No. 1145, dated the 5th instant, and of the measures thereon adopted.

No. 191.

No. 1213, dated Camp Saidabad, 28th November 1874.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Honourable Sir R. H. Davies, K.C.S.I., Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

COLONEL LOCH, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, having submitted to me his report drawn up in accordance with Government of India letter No. 2214 P. of 9th October 1874, also that of Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, I have the honour to forward them both to you, together with a memorandum drawn up by me on the subject under discussion. I believe this course will best meet the views of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council, as it allows of your passing any remarks you may wish to make before the whole is laid before Government, and I hope be satisfactory to you.

2. Colonel Loch, in forwarding to me copy of Captain Sandeman's report, states he did so without that officer being aware of it, and that if this was irregular Captain Sandeman was in no way to blame.

Enclosure 1 in No. 191.

No. 1212, dated Camp Saidabad, 28th November 1874.

Memorandum by Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

AFTER careful perusal of the two reports annexed hereto, especially of the one by the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, Captain Sandeman, I can only repeat what is stated in my letter No. 1145, dated 5th November last, especially paragraphs 11 to 17 inclusive, and with even greater emphasis.

2. In parts of paragraphs 14 and 15 I said of the Murrees :—

"They do not understand forbearance. They regard it as weakness, and increase in audacity and insolence in proportion. They must be taught obedience to ensure any permanent peace or security, and must be made to understand that the British power is to be unhesitatingly feared.

"This cannot be obtained by presents or payments; conciliation now will only make matters worse, confirming the Murrees in their belief that their power is feared."

This is my firm opinion formed after an acquaintance with these people of nearly thirty years, and one which I think all experience will prove is the true and sound one.

3. Captain Sandeman's arguments are based mostly on wrong premises, or his conclusions are incorrectly drawn from his being unacquainted with all collateral circumstances, and not having been on the frontier at the time when some of the facts he alludes to took place. He also, naturally enough,—considering his deficiency in knowledge of the most important parts of the questions at issue, and his regard is firstly and most strongly directed to the advantages to be derived for his own charge—attaches too much importance to the idea of settling the Murrees only by any means—everything and everyone else may be left alone to come right or not as it or they please. This might answer for a time for the frontier in the Lower Derajat, but not for the British border as a whole. It would, as Colonel Loch justly observes, only make matters worse. Others would follow the lawless example of the Murrees, seeing the advantages the latter had gained, and the Murrees themselves would after a while become more exacting than ever.

4. As I propose sending this memorandum with the two reports direct to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab for his perusal, and any remarks he may desire to add in their transmission to the Government of India, I will make brief comments on those parts of Captain Sandeman's report in which I consider he has been adopting a line of argument which might lead to very erroneous conclusions.

In paragraph 11 appears—

"To be successful in our dealings with the tribes, we must bear in mind that their chieftains are independent of us, and not subject to our rules and orders." This is a very wrong and dangerous position to take up. It is giving the Murrees and other tribes that seem to be alluded to—but which are intended I do not know—suddenly a status they never had, never dreamed of having, and such as they ought never to be allowed to have. It is making them completely independent, and placing them on a par even with the Government that begins to treat with, not command them. The Murrees are properly subjects of the Khelat Government, and this they have never denied, neither have they really ever objected to being so, on the contrary they still adhere to the old feudal feeling towards their legitimate sovereign, though they are regardless of strict obedience. If we ignore the Khelat Government, and assume the position it formerly held towards the Murrees, we must inevitably lose character and power unless we also assume the right of exacting and commanding obedience; and unless we do bring them under our rule and orders, we had better leave them alone and treat them as they show themselves, lawless thieves and robbers. Half-and-half measures will never answer with any Asiatics, still less with such wild reckless people as these. To have any real influence over them we must order and they must obey. If they do the latter thoroughly, treat them with every consideration and favour, but if they are disobedient in the least, punish them immediately and severely. It was this course that brought the Boogtees to order.

5. The quotation from Sir Henry Green's letter shows that the Khan of Khelat was ruler over the hill tribes, but had difficulty in controlling them. It no way proves that these tribes were independent, or that they were ever regarded or treated as such. The second extract is suggestive of the Murrees being treated simply as robbers, whose evil deeds should be met by alertness and the strong hand. That if caught in flagrante delicto they would be punished. If they escaped for the time with plunder, the responsibility of the Khan in regard to them as his subjects would be enforced, and their responsibility to him. This is the first time I ever heard attributed to Sir Henry Green that he did not hold the Murrees or any other tribes responsible for plundering British subjects, and his words certainly do not bear out such a view. The Murree chief knows perfectly well what "orders" mean, and that he is presuming greatly when he disobeys them. Treaty would certainly be out of place. But when the chief receives payment and favour from a superior power, it surely is not unreasonable to suppose that he will be at least obedient to what is commanded by that power. As for his not having the power to restore the plunder, Captain Sandeman must know as well as everyone else does, that the whole or its equivalent could and would have been restored had proper pressure been enforced. But when excuses were accepted he would have been silly to yield.

6. I most certainly consider that if any order is to be maintained on the border, the public avowal of the Murree Chief's submission and his personal appearance before the Political Superintendent should be firmly insisted upon before any idea of negotiations is entertained, and that then we should dictate the future terms, and if he refuses make him stand the consequences. I do not concur in any part of Captain Sandeman's 14th and 15th paragraphs. There are no people so keen to detect and take advantage of a temporising and mild course as these wild chieftains, and none at the same time better appreciate bold and determined demeanour towards them. If Guzzun Khan's pride from successful plunder and long impunity has reached that extent that he dares to refuse obedience and redress for a series of misdeeds, and when demanded direct from him, it must be curbed, and by a good thrashing if his persistence renders it necessary. We must compel them to respect our power. Then all present difficulties will vanish. Not to insist on this is only deferring the issue for a time with constantly recurring disturbance, which he will again say he is unable to put a stop to. Confidence will not be secured unless firm strength is clearly shown.

7. Any experiment must fail that commences with a display of weakness, and as regards Guzzun's letters, those addressed of late to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and all relating to affairs on the frontier of Upper Sind, have been most insolent and unbecoming. As before often stated by me, he chose to behave loyally enough to the Punjab side, because it suited his purpose well to do so, but that is no justification for his disloyalty and lawless acts in all other directions, and the sooner he is made to understand this the better. The fact of his having lately given back two camels to Sirdar Imam Buksh is mentioned in his favour. It is not a very hard thing for him to return two camels, when by doing so he has every reason to expect he may retain hundreds.*

* The present conduct of the Murrees, and the success to them which has attended it, is also rapidly demoralizing the Boogtees, who lie between them and the British border.
(Sd.) W.L.M.

8. Colonel Loch is perfectly right in considering that simply taking the Murrees into pay will have no real or lasting effect now in protecting trade through the Bolan and Kutchee. Circumstances have changed greatly since the Mittunkote Conference, and what was admitted by me then to be possible has ceased to be so. Through untoward events the breach between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars has been widened, past closing, and the power of the Khan to enforce his authority, as well as unfortunately his wish to act cordially with us, has sunk to the lowest ebb.

9. The conditions of that conference were to have been carried out in conjunction with and in the name of the Khan. This cannot now be done as the Government of Khelat is at present constituted. The Brahooee tribes on the line of the Bolan, such as the Summalani Minguls, Khoords, and others, also the Kakurs, would immediately follow the example of the Murrees to get the same reward, and the Murrees would only have to remain quiet to be regarded as perfectly loyal, while the trade would be molested as much as ever. If the Murrees attempted to act it would only increase inter-tribal feuds, with no security to merchants, and no clear responsibility on anyone.

10. Khelat politics were carefully excluded at the Conference after consultation between his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and myself, because his Honour considered, I believe I am correct in saying so, that they were beyond his control and province. The proposal to take the Sarawans into pay and Shere Dil Muzzeranee Murree was an after arrangement consequent on the continued misconduct of the main portion of the Murrees. But it was only to have been carried out in communication with the Khan of Khelat, and as his assent was not given the thing fell to the ground. It would have strengthened his hands in that quarter, and have permitted of his using all his power to keep Jalawan, the southern portion, in order. But as he did not accept it, and his power has since decreased, it is manifest that Colonel Loch's view of the Jalawans likewise requiring subsidizing is a true one, and the infallible result of such a course being followed while there is no working Government in the country.

11. Whether the Murrees behaved ill or well has never had any material effect one way or the other on the differences between the Khan and his barons. So Captain Sandeman's plan would be no assistance to him. On the other hand, subsidizing them notwithstanding the injury they have of late done to his country and people, and publicly withdrawing them from the allegiance which they never themselves denied, must act injuriously on his position and that of any subsequent ruler. It would have all the other bad effects noted above, inducing his Sirdars to fly more and more away from his control, and to join a system which is manifestly more paying than obedience.

12. The course pursued by General Jacob, as quoted by Captain Sandeman, does not resemble that arranged for at the Mittunkote Conference. The Jakranees and Dhoombkees were Belooch tribes residing within the British border, south of Jacobabad. They were entertained as scouts and guides to be attached to the regiments of Sind Horse, and collected intelligence or accompanied detachments on patrolling duty. They do so still. The outpost of Gundava was from the first, and until Colonel Phayre inadvisably altered it, occupied solely by Boogtee sowars under the famous Alum Khan, Kalpoor. They were only placed there after the tribe had received most severe punishment and fully tendered their submission. Their duty was to watch and send in early intelligence of intended forays, not for the protection of the Sind frontier. That was well cared for by the regular troops, the regiments of Sind Horse. This arrangement was most materially different to that spoken of by Captain Sandeman. If the Murrees were brought to their senses equally with the Boogtees, I have no doubt they would do equally good work as the Boogtees under Alum Khan and others did. That very fine specimen of a border Lootoo, Alum Khan, Kalpoor, unfortunately after some 20 years of excellent service allowed himself to fall into a trap, and be led astray by the machinations of those who were jealous of him, and had to be removed from his post. He died a few years ago, but before that fully acknowledged the grave fault he had committed, and his regret at having been so foolish as to allow himself to be taken in, as he undoubtedly was.

13. As to the force to be used, I quite agree that should such an expedition be sent into the hills ever, it should be of such strength as to overcome any opposition that might be offered, and to enforce whatever was demanded if compulsion became necessary. The troops mentioned would answer the purpose well. Full powers should, however, be given to the head of the expedition to use his own judgment and act as he considered best to carry out the instructions he may receive. He should certainly not have to wait passive until a reference can be made if active measures must be taken. It would be a most dangerous thing to do. I would not advocate burning and destroying, carrying fire and sword through the country. If the Murrees proved obstinate and had to be coerced they should be followed wherever they go until they fight or surrender. They could not get away as all around now are deadly hostile to them, and they must stand. After defeat or surrender a heavy penalty should be laid on the tribe, which should be scrupulously exacted and hostages taken for future good conduct. Beyond the above, property should be respected, and especially all crops be carefully left untouched. It is most cruel as well as highly impolitic to destroy the little food these people might possess, thereby driving families into starvation or desperation. This proper forbearance, so different to what they would do themselves, would have a much more telling effect than the other style of lenity.

14. We know the country well and there would be no difficulty in conducting operations to a successful issue. Captain Sandeman is not quite right in supposing that hill campaigns have always failed in their object. Major Billamore's in 1839 was a great success. Sir Charles Napier went into the Boogtee Hills, not after the Boogtees, but in pursuit of the Jakranees and Dhoombkees who had fled there from the plains of Kutchee. They were captured and located in Sind. On that occasion the Boogtees were passive. The Murrees were in close communication with us and gave useful assistance. The Dhoombkees and Jakranees being at last driven into a corner and unable to retire into the Murree Hills, surrendered. It was after this in 1846, and only because the Dhoombkees and Jakranees were taken out of the way, that the Boogtees commenced plundering in Sind. The heavy punishment they received in 1847 and 1848 brought them to order.

15. Sir Henry Green's expedition with the Khan against the Murrees was most successful. They submitted entirely and gave in hostages. But the good effect was nullified afterwards by political intrigues at Khelat, which led to the flight of the hostages back to their own hills.

16. In respect to the route to be taken and the places to be visited, that may well be left to the commander of the expedition after the first object of settling the Murrees has been gained. But under any circumstances I should not be prepared to recommend too extensive a parade, and would not advise its being carried into Tull Chooteallee, and certainly not to the Khakur country, which is most difficult and would involve us with subjects properly belonging to his Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

17. In conclusion it only remains for me to add that, in the present state of affairs in Khelat, I consider it will be little use dealing with the Murree question alone, unless it is intended to bring that tribe into thorough obedience, and to substitute a dominant power over them in place of that of his Highness the Khan's, and strictly maintain it. From all, however, that I have written and advocated, I think it will be understood that I consider the treatment of this tribe separately as wrong in policy and quite contrary to the principles that should be held in view in arranging for peace and security on the western border of Sind. It might answer for the Lower Punjab Frontier, but it must inevitably cause greater disorders and more difficult complications in Beloochistan. It cannot possibly improve safety to merchants passing from Afghanistan through Kutchee in Sind, and it is almost certain to make that line of route even more dangerous that it is now. To my mind the control of the Murrees and the rearrangement of the Khelat Government are and must be inseparable, and that the former should follow rather than precede the latter. I would, therefore, most strongly urge that no expedition into the Murree Hills should be attempted until decision has been arrived at in reference to the proposals I have had the honour to submit regarding the course which should be adopted to bring about more satisfactory management in the Khelat Government, and a sounder state of affairs in Beloochistan generally.

Enclosure 2 in No. 191.

No. 20–3, dated Jacobabad, 20th November 1874.

From Colonel F. Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your endorsement No. 1146, dated 5th November 1874, forwarding for my information copy of letter No. 2214, dated 9th October 1874, from the Secretary to the Government of India, and of your reply thereto, No. 1145, dated 5th November 1874; and with regard to the former, I trust I may be forgiven for expressing my opinions regarding the treatment I would recommend being now adopted towards the Murree tribe, as they are opposed to those of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council and the Punjab Government.

2. I feel it would be wrong in me if I did not, with the greatest deference, point out that I much fear any leniency and forbearance shown to the Murrees in their present proud and arrogant state of mind will be altogether misunderstood by them, and unless their Sirdar, Guzzun Khan, is first of all made to obey orders, and thus prove to all the other chiefs that the orders given by the British authorities are to be strictly adhered to, that the line of policy adopted on the Punjab, and which his Excellency the Viceroy would desire to be introduced on the Sind Frontier, if now put in force towards the Murrees, would in the end only lead to disappointment, as it would be weakening the position and power of the Political Superintendent on the Frontier, lowering to the prestige of the British Government, and must in my opinion slowly but surely lead to the worst results, for having thus evaded carrying out the orders issued through me in February 1872 and since, and not being obliged to keep his promise made to Captain Sandeman relative to the restoration of the plundered booty, would not only make the Murree chief more contumacious, insolent, and difficult to manage, but the fact of a deputation of European officers being sent to settle the Murree differences and to arrange for subsidizing them, when it was well known that he, Guzzun Khan, refused to come to Jacobabad for this purpose, would have the very worst effect, not only on him and the Kahun Murrees, but I greatly fear that the other chiefs seeing that Guzzun Khan had by obstinate persistency and steady neglect and disobedience of all orders had at last gained his end and object, and had been treated as a prince instead of a petty chief, would be induced to follow in his footsteps, and thus we should have to treat with each successive chief, commencing from the Seree Bolan to the Mekran coast to the south, and all along the Sind Frontier to the Punjab in the east, as every one of the chiefs, however small, would consider he had a right to some share of the subsidy for keeping quiet, never mind how trifling his position might be, and this, I think, I am borne out in saying by the speech made by his Highness the Khan to Major Harrison, quoted in his letter No. 39 of 5th March 1872, viz., "that he, the Khan, had written regarding the "Sarawans with the best intentions, as the Jalawans would also expect money and "behave badly if they did not get it," thus showing the then prevalent feeling throughout the tribes.

3. If a deputation of European officers were sent to arrange matters with the Murree chief, no one sooner than his Highness the Khan of Khelat would become aware of the fact, and it would be an incentive for him to pay still less heed to the requests of the British officers for the extradition of certain chiefs, thieves, and blackguards of sorts than he even now does, if that is possible, and his officials naturally would take their tone from their sovereign, and thus the present state of affairs in Kutchee, Lus Beyla, and which is bad enough now, would it appears to me become worse instead of better, and in the end lead to greater complications and more bloodshed than if an armed force was now sent to coerce both his Highness and his refractory subjects, the Kahan Murrees, into subjection.

4. I am aware it is Captain Sandeman's opinion, and I believe that of many others, that it would be cruelly murdering a number of inoffensive persons if an armed force was sent against the Murrees, as we would not only have to fight those of the Kahan section, but the Loharanees, Gurchanee, and others, but this I disagree to, for if the treatment which has been followed so long on the Punjab frontier has had a proper effect, those tribes who have benefited by the peace and tranquillity on the border, and others who wish for the same benefits, will, or ought to, if they wish for peace and tranquillity, force Guzzun and his followers to give in and to obey orders; or in the event of coercive measures being adopted, they would assist us against the Kahan Murrees, and attempt to prevent them from escaping, instead of opposing us, and thus bringing punishment on themselves. Moreover, the fact of our not having forced the Murree Sirdar into obedience would spread far and wide, being magnified as it was repeated, and would thus not only lead those who are now constantly committing depredations on our border to carry them on to a still greater extent, but others at present peaceably disposed, having heard of the treatment the refractory Murree chief received at the hands of the British Government, would feel that they like him had only to continue persistently in their bad ways, and have the same amount of punishment meted out to them.

5. I altogether concur in the opinion expressed by you in your reply to the Secretary to the Government of India, and feel convinced that the end predicted by you will eventually come to pass, if the Murree Chief and others situated like him are permitted to set the orders of the British officers at defiance as he has done; and should his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council still desire the instructions conveyed in paragraph 11 of letter No. 2214 of the Secretary to the Foreign Department, dated 9th October 1874, carried into effect, I would, with all due respect, suggest that the Murree Sirdar, as set forth in letter No. 1546 of the 11th July, from the Secretary to the Government of India, be directed to apologize for his conduct within a certain time, and that he be required to make restitution of the plundered booty and return all cattle carried off from Kuttun in August last, and when this was done any orders and instructions Government might deem fit to issue relative to the subsidizing of the various tribes could be carried into effect.

6. I am well aware that my predecessor, Colonel Phayre, C.B., strongly advocated the Punjab policy, that of subsidizing being introduced into the frontier, and it was so far carried out during his tenure of office, that 15 Murrees and 16 Boogtee sowars were taken into Government pay, but I would ask with what effect? None as far as I can see; for in February 1872, as you are well aware, it was with the greatest difficulty that the Boogtee Sirdar, Gholam Moorteza, was prevailed on to meet the Commissioner in Sind, and as already stated the Murree Chief never has come to Jacobabad, putting off his attendance with all sorts of equivocal excuses, although I personally at Shahpoor told his Vakeel, Syud Fazal Shah, that he had better go back to his Sirdar and tell Guzzun that now is the time, come at once, make your obeisance to your Khan, get his permission to pay your respects to the Political Superintendent and the Commissioner in Sind, and return with them to Jacobabad; but even this kindly advice was neglected, and the only reply was a letter full of excuses similar to many already received. It is true until lately the Boogtee have been behaving very well, little or no cattle-lifting has been carried on by them, and on almost every occasion of cattle having been taken from Sind the Boogtee Sirdar has managed to cause their restoration. This, however, I do not entirely ascribe to the beneficial effect of subsidizing, but to the great moral effect taught them by General Jacob and his officers, viz., that if they followed their own wild desires, and disobeyed the Sirdar's orders by plundering on the frontier, they not only could but would be punished. Had the Murrees ever been treated with this forcible description of argument and advice, I believe Guzzun Khan and his followers would now understand their position with regard to us better than they do, and that they would consequently be more obedient and amenable.

7. The Murrees have for some years past, it is true, given up plundering on the Punjab border, because it suits their interest to be friends with some of the British officers, in the hopes, I believe, that in the event of their at length getting into extremes with us, they may have some one to intercede for them, and thus assist in warding off the punishment they feel they deserve at our hands. But has subsidizing the Murrees ever in any way prevented their plundering in Kutchee, or wreaking their vengeance on their neighbours and carrying off their flocks and herds. I answer no, and I am borne out in this by the following words made use of in Captain Sandeman's letter No. 18, dated 6th January 1874:—

"I have the honour to report that during the past few weeks the Murree clan have made two very serious raids on tribes residing just beyond the British border, which have caused much uneasiness amongst our own frontier tribes.

"2. The first raid was led by the Tomandar Guzzun Khan himself, and was made on the Khetrans. The Murree force came quite close to the British border in front of Dehra Ghazee Khan itself. It numbered 700 footmen and 500 horse. The Khetrans lost seven killed, and a large number of cattle, sheep, and goats, besides a few mares. The Murrees lost two men killed.

"3. To-day a second raid is reported by the Murrees on the Musa Kheyl, a Pathan tribe, also raiding just beyond our border. The Murrees are said to have numbered 2,000 fighting men and to have killed 16 Pathans. Their loss is said to be only two killed. The booty carried off is said to be very large.

"4. I have thought it necessary to report these two raids, more especially because this is the first time I have ever heard of the Murree Tomundar Guzzun taking the field in person. It is reported to me that he is getting quite rich on plunder, and is in consequence becoming very unreliable, and the tribe itself more and more demoralized; moreover, this is the first time I have known the Murree army come so near to the Dehra Ghazee border in force. Hitherto they have, when making their raids, confined themselves beyond and on the Rajunpoor border.

"5. A copy of this report will be submitted to Colonel Loch for the information of the Commissioner in Sind."

And as will be seen on reference to letter forwarded under my endorsement, No. 3170, dated 11th instant, they have just committed another great raid on the Kakur Pathans, killing no less than 60 of them. This surely does not say much for any moral improvement on the wild and lawless Murrees, and the late raid committed on this border by a combined party of Murrees and Boogtees, referred to in paragraph 23 of Captain Sandeman's report accompanying, still further proves the force and correctness of my arguments.

8. The Murrees are getting more wealthy every month I believe, and as they attain wealth so they increase in pride, arrogance, and lawlessness, and I very much fear that, until they are taught to feel that they are not the wonderfully brave and invincible clan that they now think themselves, we shall have no real or lasting peace on the border. Subsidizing a people of this description will to my mind only increase instead of diminishing their present exalted ideas, and lead to worse raiding and more bloodshed than now, for if these tribes or sections which suffer so much at their hands and wish for peace will not now assist us to prevent their dreaded neighbours, the Murrees, gaining power, it is not likely they will do so hereafter when the Murrees have become still more powerful.

9. The Boogtee Sirdar, I fully believe, is faithful to the British Government, and tries his best to keep his tribe from plundering or in any way injuring any British subjects, and until lately has succeeded well. Of late, however, from some cause which I cannot at present fathom, many of his Mottabars, elders, are dissatisfied with him and have left him, some of them joining the Murrees. I cannot help feeling that there is some underhand influence being carried on by his enemies, to the end that Gholam Moorteza may be induced to give up the position of ruler of the Boogtee tribe, in order that his son Shabaz Khan, a young man apparently of strong passions and desires, but of a malleable disposition in the hands of a clever and wily man, may be elected their ruler or chief, in the hopes that he might by bad advice be drawn into some foolish act such as he was lately guilty of, and which if repeated would by degrees lead to the disgrace and possibly in the end to the utter ruin of the tribe.

10. By advocating the foregoing line of policy, I am aware I may be accused of aiming at the eventual annexation of Beloochistan and the occupation of Quettah, but such is not the reason for my recommending coercive measures now being adopted. All I desire is to see a strong and lasting peace established along the whole of this border, and our connexions again on a proper and healthy footing with his Highness the Khan of Khelat and his turbulent subjects; but until some strong and severe measures are adopted I fear no lasting peace can be looked for.

11. I again respectfully hope that I may be forgiven for writing this much, knowing it to be opposed to the opinions expressed by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, but at the same time should his Excellency still desire the line of policy proposed at the Mittunkote Conference in 1869 to be carried into effect, I will, in conjunction with Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, strive with my utmost endeavours to meet with his Excellency the Viceroy's wishes, and give the new policy at least a fair chance of succeeding.

12. Having said this much, I will now proceed to state what I conceive would be the best means for attaining the object aimed at, viz., that of establishing peace on this as well as on the Punjab frontier by means of subsidizing or taking into our pay a certain number of each of the tribes. If this merely referred to the Murrees and these tribes on our frontier, there would be little or no difficulty attending its adoption, as I presume the Murree Sirdar, Guzzun Khan, Kurrum Khan, Bijaranee, and the other chiefs, on being informed of our desire to make peace on certain conditions, would readily accept our terms so long as the duty to be performed met with their approval. But this would only be carrying into effect a very small portion of the grand scheme, and consequently would be liable at any moment to collapse. If this arrangement is to be carried out at all, I would recommend that the terms decided on at the Mittunkote Conference be adhered to so far as our altered attitude towards his Highness the Khan of Khelat will admit of it, and that if it is considered necessary to exclude his Highness from this new line of policy, his nobles the Sarawan and Jalawan chiefs be taken into our pay, as well as the other minor chiefs through whose country the kafilas pass; but this would again lead to further difficulties and complications, as we should have to treat with the Bezunjaos and Jamotees under Ali Khan, who has only lately made his escape from Hyderabad in Sind, where he had been under surveillance since 1870.

13. In paragraph 11 of the Foreign Secretary's letter, to which my particular attention has been directed, there are three points Captain Sandeman and I are called to report on: first, the composition of the party forming the expedition; secondly, the route they should take; and thirdly, the instructions to be given to them.

14. With regard to the first, that is the composition of the party, Captain Sandeman and I are quite of one opinion regarding the officers to form it, and the strength of the escort to accompany it, viz., Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier; Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat; Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, and the two officers in command of the troops. The escort to consist of one regiment Sind Horse, one wing Jacob's Rifles and Jacobabad mountain train, one regiment Punjab Cavalry, and one regiment Punjab Infantry, and we are induced to recommend such a large force to overawe the tribes, and make them feel that we have the power to coerce them if it was the object or intention of Government to do so.

15. The route to be taken will depend much on the final orders of Government as to how far they intend the arrangements for the safe transit of caravans and traders being now carried into effect. If it is the intention of Government that the present party should only settle the Murree question, then the plan proposed by Captain Sandeman should be adopted, viz., that he and the troops from the Punjab, and I and the troops from this, should start so that we could join forces on the Shum Plain on a certain date. From there we should march together to and encamp on the large plain near Barkan Lugari, at which place all the chiefs of the Murrees and other tribes inhabiting this part of the country should be invited to meet us on a certain date. In the event of an amicable arrangement being come to, the party should then visit all the large Murree and Pathan towns, taking the escort with them, as I am inclined to think that a display of troops amongst these wild people might have a good effect, and if necessary, the party could then proceed viâ the Hunn Pass through the Looni Pathan country, and then get on Captain Sandeman's road which goes from the Lookee Surwah Pass to the head of the Bolan, where they would meet with the Dhoomur, Kakur, and Muzaranee chiefs. Unless it should be considered desirable that, after having finally arranged with the Murree chiefs, the party should proceed by the shortest route, viz., by Khott Moondai into Kutchee, where the Sarawan, Jalawan, and Khoord Sirdars with the smaller chiefs already mentioned should be assembled. In which case the Punjab portion of the force could return at once from Barkan Lugari, or so soon as we considered it desirable to sanction its departure, and another regiment of Sind Horse, if necessary, could join the party in Kutchee.

16. The instructions to be given to party, I would respectfully urge, should, in my opinion, be most explicit and unmistakeable on all points, more especially regarding the course to be adopted towards his Highness the Khan and his nobles, which appears to me the most difficult question we have now to deal with, more especially as this question was not discussed at the Mittunkote Conference. As the aspect of political affairs on this border has considerably altered since then, I do not well see how the Khan and his Sirdars can now be left out of the proposed arrangement, if peace and tranquility are expected on our western frontier. It is well known to Government that at present a state of lawlessness bordering on anarchy pervades the whole of his Highness' country, extending from the head of the Bolan to the sea coast, and therefore to produce a different state of affairs, whereby plundering and outrage within or near the British western frontier may be prevented, one of two measures must be adopted, viz., that of using armed force or a persuasive policy, and the Government have declared their intention to follow the latter course.

17. The position now assumed by his Highness the Khan towards the British Government has been so frequently reported on by the Commissioner in Sind that it is needless my touching on it, excepting expressing my opinion that unless some agreement or treaty is entered into with his Highness, I fear that any arrangements which we might make for the protection of trade and tranquillity of our frontier could be upset by his Highness, and it will therefore be necessary to determine whether the Khan should be permitted to join the conference with his nobles and the minor chiefs, should he desire to do so, and under what terms and conditions the Government would accord their sanction to such a proposal if made by his Highness the Khan.

18. It is very evident that to ensure the end aimed at by Government, the measures to bring about such a state of affairs must be worked either through his Highness the Khan or his nobles, but if the latter, it must in time increase instead of lessen the bitter feeling which now exists. I therefore do not see how his Highness could well be excluded from taking a part in the meeting of his nobles and chiefs should he intimate his anxious desire to do so.

19. Another matter regarding which some specific instructions will be required is the sum Government would consider sufficient to complete the proposed arrangements. At the Mittunkote Conference it was suggested, and afterwards approved of by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, that a sum of Rupees 32,040 per annum should be sanctioned for the entertainment of certain horsemen of the Murree and Boogtee tribes; but if the Brahooee Sirdars and the chiefs of the various tribes along our western frontier are to be taken into our pay in the same way that the Murrees and Boogtees have been, a much larger sum than this will be required. The Commissioner in Sind in his letter No. 171, dated 25th February 1873, proposed as follows: that the Sher Dil Muzaranee Murrees should receive Rupees 6,000, the Sarawans Rupees 1,200, Boogtees Rupees 5,520, and the Murrees Rupees 8,000 per annum, but only that portion of it relative to the Boogtees and Sher Dil Murree has been carried out, and the latter only partly so. As already stated, the sum proposed to be allotted to the Sarawan chief did not meet with his Highness the Khan's approval, and he informed the Political Agent, Khelat, that if the sum of Rupees 30,000 per annum was paid to the Sarawans, Jalawans, and Muzaranees, satisfactory arrangements might be made; a similar amount therefore to that paid to the Sarawan chiefs, viz., Rupees 12,000 per annum, would, I presume, have to be paid to the Jalawan chief to ensure his aid and assistance. It therefore becomes necessary for the Government to decide as to whether they consider the benefits to be derived authorise the expenditure of such a large yearly subsidy. In the event of his Highness the Khan's subsidy of Rupees 50,000 not being restored to him, there would be no difficulty in granting the amount required I presume, but I feel that if such an arrangement was made it would lead to further ruptures between his Highness and the Sirdars, which would not only widen the breach now between them, but would in the end defeat the present object of the British Government; and in letter No. 3167, dated 15th July 1871, his Excellency the Governor of Bombay stated his disapproval of his Highness' subsidy being reduced for this purpose.

20. The course we have to pursue towards the Murree tribe is, I understand, as follows:—First, to explain to the chiefs and their headmen most fully the desire of the British Government for peace on the frontier and protection to trade; to listen to all they may have to bring forward regarding their supposed or alleged grievances; to inquire into the rights and privileges formerly enjoyed by the various tribes as to the receipts of certain fees for the protection of trade down the Bolan Pass through Kutchee and to the Punjab frontier; to determine what sums should be paid them now according to ancient custom; to settle the number of sowars to be entertained, and the duty required of each tribe in return.

21. The Kahun and Bijaranee Murrees should also be obliged to depute some one of standing amongst them, if possible connected with the chiefs, with from eight to ten sowars each, to remain as security for their future good behaviour, and the chiefs on the Punjab frontier should be required to furnish similar security. The subsidy to be paid as now by the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to the tribes on his border, and by the Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, to those along his frontier.

22. I am of opinion that the political officers should meddle as little as they possibly ean with the inter-tribal quarrels, and that no interference should be attempted excepting in cases of extensive raids or serious feuds likely to endanger the tranquillity of the border. The chiefs should be taught to feel and understand that the peace and quiet of each tribe depended almost entirely on that of their neighbours, so that in time, in the event of one tribe proving unruly, those in their immediate neighbourhood, if necessary, might be employed to coerce the tribe behaving thus into subjection.

23. My predecessor, Colonel Phayre, C.B., recommended that Murree and Boogtee posts should be stationed at certain points in the Murrow and Sangseela valleys, but this I do not consider in any way necessary, as I do not believe the fact of stationing a certain number of armed men between the Murrees and Boogtees, or between them and the other tribes, would prevent either raiding or inter-tribal quarrels. I am of opinion that we should merely explain most fully and clearly what the wishes and instructions of the British Government are, what remuneration the tribes will receive if they act up to them, leaving the details of how the proposed arrangements are to be completed to the chiefs and their tribes.

24. In the event of any cattle or other property being plundered from British territory, the chiefs should be obliged to hold themselves responsible for the restoration of the same and the punishment of the offender.

25. If any arrangements for the protection of kafilas coming through the Bolan, and prevention of plundering and outrage on our western border, are now to be made, it will be necessary to summon the Sarawan and Jalawan and Koord Sirdars, as well as all the minor chiefs of the Dhoormurs and Kakurs, Muzarees, Rhinds, Dhoombkees, Mugzees, Jamotees, Bezunjaos, and Chootas, to meet the expedition either at Barkan, Lugari or Kutchee, and I am inclined to consider it would be better if this was to take place at Bagh in Kutchee, more especially so in the event of his Highness the Khan desiring to attend and being permitted to.

26. After the desire and intentions of the British Government had been fully explained and entered into with all the chiefs, the duties and obligations required of them, and the remuneration they would receive in return for their service put forcibly before them, if they agreed to the terms, all the details of placing posts for the protection of trade and the payment of the various tribes, as well as the settlement of petty quarrels, could easily be left to the Sirdars and their chiefs.

27. With regard to the date of the party starting, Captain Sandeman and I are at issue, as he is of opinion that the expedition should start at once. I, on the other hand, consider if Government should decide to send a party it would be better to let the chiefs and their tribes know some time beforehand that on a certain date it is the intention of Government to depute certain officers with an armed escort to proceed into the Murree country to make arrangements for the peace of the border and protection of trade, and that this party will visit some of the large towns belonging to the Murrees and Pathans, if necessary, proceed either by the Bolan, Khott Moondai, or through Kahun into Kutchee. If this is not done, and time given to the chiefs fully to realise what is intended, I fear that they may take alarm, and simply through fear absent themselves from the meeting, and thus at the outset nullify the object of the expedition.

28. After this last most severe inundation I consider it is most necessary that I should be at Jacobabad during your whole stay here, as there are many most essential points which can only be brought forward and discussed by myself regarding my civil duties, and on which the prosperity of the people, the increase of revenue, as well as the suppression of crime in this district, depend. His Excellency Sir C. Staveley having intimated his intention of paying Jacobabad a visit in the end of January, I am sure you will agree with me that I, as Commandant on this important frontier, ought to be present to meet him, there being many subjects of great importance connected with the military portion of my duties which I feel ought to be discussed with the new Bombay Commander-in-Chief.

Enclosure 3 in No. 191.

No. 2, dated Camp Jacobabad, 16th November 1874.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, on Special Duty, Jacobabad, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

I HAVE the honour to reply to your letter No. 1858, dated Lahore, the 30th October last, forwarding for my information and guidance the correspondence noted in the margin. My particular attention was directed to paragraph 11 of the Foreign Secretary's letter No. 2214, dated Fort William, the 9th October 1874, to the address of the Commissioner in Sind. It conveyed the sanction of his Excellency the Viceroy in Council to a friendly expedition proceeding into the hills west of and beyond the border, of the nature of the one proposed in 1869. The officers composing the expedition are to be empowered to arrange the terms of peace with the Murree clan, and to explain to the tribes generally the desire of our Government for peace on our frontier and protection to trade. They are to put in force the arrangements sanctioned in the letters noted in the margin, and generally to effect an adjustment of inter-tribal quarrels for the safe transit of kafilahs.

To Bombay Government, No. 2336P., dated 27th October 1871.
To Commissioner in Sind, No. 1546, dated 11th July 1873.

2. But before permitting the expedition to start, his Excellency the Viceroy in Council required from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Commissioner in Sind certain information of the nature named in the Foreign Secretary's letter quoted above, to enable the Government of India to issue detailed instructions for the guidance of those composing the expedition. This information you directed me to obtain in concert and consultation with Colonel Loch, the Political Superintendent on the Frontier, and to proceed to Jacobabad for the purpose. I at once did as directed, as already reported, and having fully consulted Colonel Loch regarding the information called for, I have the honour to submit herewith the result of our deliberations.

3. The points regarding which the Government of India require detailed information are :—

I. The composition of the party and the escort to accompany it.
II. The route it is proposed the expedition should take and the places it should visit.
III. The instructions which should be issued to the officers composing the expedition.

4. After fully discussing with Colonel Loch point No. I., we are of opinion that the escort should consist of a small but efficient body of troops of all arms. We would recommend its being composed of the troops given in the margin. Our reasons for considering so many troops to be necessary will be placed before you when I come to discuss point No. III. Regarding the composition of the party, we consider it should consist of Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent and Commandant, Sind Frontier Force; Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat; Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, and the officers commanding the Sind and Punjab troops.

Sind Mountain Battery.
1st Regiment Sind Horse.
1st Punjab Cavalry.
350 Jacob's Rifles.
1st Regiment Punjab Infantry.

5. The next point regarding which our opinion is required is the route the expedition should take, and the places it ought to be authorised to visit did circumstances permit of its doing so. We consider that the rendezvous to be named where the Sind and Punjab troops should assemble on the date fixed should be the Shum Plain. It is easy of access from Jacobabad and from Rajunpoor. From the Shum Plain the expedition should march westward to Lugari Barkan, a distance of from 40 to 45 miles. It belongs to our own Lugari chief, Jamal Khan, and is therefore neutral ground. In other respects it is very favourably situated. It commands the approaches to the Murree chief townships of Kahan, Khott Mundai, and Mahomed. Direct and easy routes reach it from the Khetran country, which adjoins it from Bora Lall Chobuli, the countries of the Musa Kheyl Zirbar Patans, Luni Patans, and Bozdars. It possesses a very large plain from 20 to 30 miles in extent, through which a perennial stream flows, from which an abundant supply of fodder for the troops and baggage animals can be obtained. Altogether it is admirably situated from which to carry on negotiations with the tribes, whether they belong to Khelat, the Punjab, or Sind.

6. At Lugari Barkan the expedition should be joined by the heads of the tribes as per margin and their leading men. Here the Murree and other political questions should be disposed of. This accomplished, the troops, or at least the Punjab portion of them, should return to British territory, and the expedition escorted by the chiefs, hill and plain, each with a few of his followers, should proceed to visit Tull Chotiali viâ the Hurm Pass. After this should political difficulties not arise, Bora might be visited. When at Lull some of the party might inspect the routes leading towards Pesheen and Shawl Kot (Quetta).

Independent Pathan tribes, Khetrans, Luni Pathans, Musa Kheyl, Sarain Pathans from Lall, Hill Belooch tribes, Murree, Boogtee, Dhoombkee, Bozdars, Kuzranees, Hudranees, Dorkanees, Belooch tribes, Muzzarees, Lugarees, Gurdenees, Dishalees, Kosahs, Lunds, Tibbee, Londum.

7. From Lull the expedition should return viâ the Bijaranee Murree country through the Kotee valley belonging to the Zorhan Patans to the Bijaranee townships of Mahomed and Khott Mundai. From this latter place circumstances might render it desirable for the expedition, or a portion of it, to visit the points near the Bolan Pass and Kutchee, where the Murrees assemble before making descents on kafilas en route through the Bolan Pass, Kutch Gundava.

8. But as the necessity for doing this must greatly depend on the result of our negotiations with the tribes and the scope of our instructions regarding these, we are of opinion that the matter ought to be left an open question to be decided at the discretion of the Political Superintendent, who would act as circumstances seemed to render necessary.

9. But should it not be necessary to visit these places last named with the object of placing there Murree police posts, should the tribe so desire it, the expedition would return home from Khott Mundai viâ Kahan, or by the direct route, as may appear at the time most desirable.

10. I now come to point No. III, viz., the instructions for guidance to be issued to the political officers entrusted with the negotiations. These should be of as comprehensive a nature as possible, having for their basis the policy agreed to at the Mittunkote conference by the Sind and Punjab Local Governments, and in the spirit contemplated in paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 of the Foreign Secretary's letter No. 2214 P., dated the 9th October 1874, to the address of the Commissioner in Sind, sanctioning the expedition.

11. I have discussed very fully with Colonel Loch the conduct of the Murree Tomundar Guzzun Khan, and while concurring generally with him in considering that our Government must deal firmly with him and his tribe, at the same time I am as clearly of opinion that in negotiating with the Murrees as a clan we must be conciliatory also. To be successful in our dealings with the tribes we must bear in mind that their chieftains are independent of us, and not subject to our rule and orders.

12. To establish that this reasoning applies at the present time with peculiar force to Guzzun Khan and the Murree tribe generally, I will here record Sir Henry Green's reply to me when I submitted claims for compensation made by British subjects on account of losses caused by the Boogtees and Murrees in the great raid on Hurrund in 1866. Regarding the position of these tribes to the Khan of Khelat on the 6th December 1866, Sir Henry Green thus describes it:—"I have to acknowledge receipt "of yours of the 10th instant regarding a Murree raid and other frontier matters. "With regard to the raid, the Murrees being Belooch are certainly nominally subjects "of the Khan of Khelat, and are held by him under the same control as the "Afreedees of the hills surrounding the Peshawur valley are by the ruler of Cabul, "and any complaint to the Khan would be of about as much use as the Commissioner "of Peshawur bringing to the notice of the Ameer of Cabul the conduct of the said "Afreedees." In the same letter Sir Henry Green described the political position of the highland clans of Khelat towards the Khan and the British authorities in the following words:—"The Murrees now and then try and raid on my frontier, and I "trust to the alertness and activity of my frontier posts for their defeat, and to the "influence of the Khan of Khelat if they succeed in carrying off my cattle. My "native officials suffer, but I should certainly not complain to the Khan on account "of the want of activity of my own people." These words speak for themselves, and show that at all events during Sir H. Green's term of office on this frontier it was never contemplated to hold such tribes as the Murrees responsible even for plundering British subjects. By what course of reasoning then can we now hold men such as Guzzun Khan responsible, not only for plundered property carried off in Khelat, for the restoration of which we have no contract or treaty with him, but even for what in these days we are pleased to regard as disobedience to orders, because the chief in reply to demands made on him by our Government declines to comply, urging as a reason that he has not the power to do so.

13. But to return, Colonel Loch is of opinion that the Murree Tomundar's conduct to the Sind authorities has been so contumacious that a public avowal of his submission to Government ought to precede our entering upon negotiations with him and his tribe after we have all met at Lugari Burkan.

14. I am quite willing, and trust anxious, to do my best to influence the Murree Tomundar to comply with Colonel Loch's wishes, and no effort on my part will be wanting to obtain for the Sind authorities the redress expected and asked for. At the same time, in dealing with a man of Guzzun Khan's known character in such a matter, we must be careful so to frame our request that our negotiations at the outset are not brought to an end by his refusal to comply with our request. In short, in the words of the Foreign Secretary's letter directing the nature of the policy to be adopted in our dealings towards Guzzun Khan, "we must not make too great a tax on his pride."

15. I feel convinced that at the coming negotiations with the tribes, if we are only guided in our dealings with them by the spirit pervading the Foreign Secretary's letter No. 879, dated Simla, the 25th February 1869, to the Secretary to Government, Punjab, they will end successfully. But if, on the other hand, we issue orders we have not the power to enforce without resorting to arms, then our peaceful proceedings must fail; while desiring most fully to endorse Colonel Loch's wishes as to the mode according to which we should deal with Guzzun Khan, I feel I can best do this by here stating that even in obtaining his apologies for past misconduct, we should do it in such a way as to avoid all irritation or offence. Our efforts should be directed to win the confidence of himself and his minor chiefs, without whose aid an experiment like the one we desire to introduce must fail.

16. That such an experiment is capable, if only prudently conducted, of a successful issue is proved by the two annexures to this letter which I forward with that object. The one is a letter from Guzzun Khan to me pointing to the fact of the pay of his sowars, regarding which I will address you separately, being in arrears, and calling my attention to the loyal way he was held to his agreement, and offering to send to me Kader Buksh Khetran with his own brother, Meer Oolla, in order that I may settle the Khetran quarrel which so seriously affects the safety of the kafilah routes leading into Dehra Ghazee Khan. The other is a letter to Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, telling him of the return of two Muzzaree camels which had been stolen by Boogtee thieves and sold to the Bijaranee Murrees.

17. But while admitting the success of our arrangements with the Murree clan, Colonel Loch is inclined to dread the effect the taking of Murrees into our service for the protection of Kutch Gundava and the safety of kafilahs en route through the Bolan Pass will have on the Brahooee clans of Sarawan and Jalawan. A reference to the Mittunkote correspondence will show that the arrangements then agreed upon at the Commissioner in Sind's request did not contemplate taking these clans into our service; they were purposely excluded for reasons then given. But notwithstanding that this was so, I think it is right for me to state here, now that Government are considering the entire question, that I do not in any degree share Colonel Loch's fears on this head. Keeping the Murrees out of the plains of Kutchee and enlisting them on the side of order, if we do indeed succeed in effecting this desirable end, must in any case be of advantage to his Highness the Khan, and render the solution of the difficulty between him and his chiefs, should the opportunity ever offer of doing so as a whole, more easy of accomplishment.

18. The plan accepted at the Mittunkote conference of employing Murree sowars for the protection of Kutch Gundava and the Bolan Pass does not seem to me materially to differ from the course pursued by General Jacob when he enlisted the Jakranees and Dhoombkees in our service and established the Boogtee post of Gundoee in the Khelat Hills, garrisoning it with Boogtee sowars with the avowed object of protecting the Sind Frontier.

19. In naming the troops we consider should form the escort as far as Lugari Burkan, Colonel Loch and I have had regard to the present position of affairs on the frontier generally. I am quite of Colonel Loch's opinion that the employment of so large a body of troops on the duty is desirable; their presence will give primness and dignity to our negotiations, which without them they would want, and will materially aid us in bringing them to a peaceful issue. They will demonstrate to the tribes that while our Government desires peace through the means employed, it has the power, if willing, to enforce its own demands. It should, however, clearly be understood by the officers responsible that these are the objects aimed at, and that on no account without special permission from Government is armed interference to be permitted.

20. I concur heartily with Colonel Loch in thinking that there is nothing in our present relations with his Highness the Khan of Khelat or his Sirdars to prevent our admitting them if desirous of coming to the conference at Lugari Barkan. I think we should invite the Sirdars, and intimate to the Khan that if he desired to come himself, or preferred to send an agent, we would be glad to see either. Our avowed object is simply, through the means we propose to adopt, to ensure peace on our own frontier, and obtain in as far as we can protection to traffic passing along the kafilah routes. I would not, however, hold out to the Khan and his Sirdars that through attending they will thus obtain service for the Brahooee clans also. Men of their clans have never been employed by our Government for the protection of our frontier or to secure the safety of kafilas, nor do I believe that there is the smallest necessity for so employing them. On the other hand, it is an undeniable fact that we have had Belooch service such as those we propose entertaining in our service from the Murree clan since the first days after the annexation of Sind and the Punjab to the British Empire: the status and position of the Belooch clans are wholly different from that of the Brahooee clans, and so is the position of Guzzun Khan Murree and Goolam Moorteza Boogtee when placed in juxtaposition with that of the Khelat Sirdars. In this Colonel Loch does not concur, and considers that we should protect the kafila routes by giving service to the Sirdars and their tribes independently of the Khan, unless he is able to become responsible himself for the safety of kafilas passing through his country. To do this would widen the breach between the two parties in the State, and would, in my opinion, probably prevent our ever healing it, while it would certainly not ensure the object we aim at, viz., safety to life and property of those employed in traffic, simply because it would place authoritatively the Sirdars in opposition to the Khan, which I see no excuse for our doing. In support of this view see Commissioner in Sind's letter No. 340, dated Camp Jacobabad, 5th April 1872, paragraph 33, forwarded to Government of India under cover of Bombay Government letter No. 2343, dated 29th April 1872.

21. The last but by no means the least important point to be decided by Government is the date on which the expedition should start. I fully concur with Colonel Loch in considering that the present position of affairs fully demonstrates that evil influences are at work somewhere to disturb the peace of the country and frontier; the sooner therefore that we commence to counteract those the more probable will be the ultimate success of our efforts to do so. We think therefore, holding this view of the state of affairs, that the expedition should start as soon as possible, but we feel that without special orders there is a real difficulty in the way of its doing so. Colonel Loch finds that it is most desirable and important that he should meet the Commissioner, who is expected here next month, to discuss with him administrative matters connected with his civil duties. The Bombay Commander-in-Chief is also expected here in January, and as Colonel Loch commands the Sind Frontier Force, he feels he could not without special permission absent himself during his Excellency's inspection of the troops and outposts.

22. Doubtless these are sound reasons for delaying the expedition, but I consider that those I am about to advance are of so cogent and urgent a nature for not doing so, but rather for adopting the opposite course, that I trust when Government comes to consider them it will be clear that at the present time and in the present state of affairs further delay can be permitted in putting in force the orders issued in 1869.

23. Since the Mittunkote conference took place the position of affairs in Khelat and on the Sind frontier has altered greatly for the worse, so much so in fact as to necessitate the entire cessation of the Sind authorities of all political relations with the Khelat State and the Khan's nominal subjects, the Murree clan. Grave complications have arisen on the Sind frontier itself in consequence of recent depredations by the Murree and Boogtee clans on Sind cattle, which, contrary to standing orders on the subject, were taken in large numbers beyond the line of regular posts, and in consequence they were lifted by hill robbers to the number of from 1,500 to 2,000 head. A quarrel of a somewhat bitter kind has been formented between the Chief of the Mazarees, Imam Buksh Khan, and the Chief of the Boogtees, Gholam Moorteza Khan; the correspondence which took place between Colonel Loch and myself regarding it was sent for some time ago. The young Chief of the Boogtees, Shabaz Khan, was captured in attempting to lift cattle on the Sind frontier, and he is now a political prisoner in Sukkur. He committed the act, it is believed, in retaliation, because he was not permitted to have his own way in a domestic matter which came before the Political Superintendent.

24. Taking then the occurrence named in the last paragraph to demonstrate a very serious state of affairs on this frontier (including that of the Punjab), and having consideration to the fact that this is by no means the first time that I have visited Jacobabad with the avowed and well-known intention of taking part in peaceful negotiations with the tribes as laid down at the Mittunkote conference, but which ended, through force of circumstances which I had no power to control, in the returning to my district without anything having been done to accomplish the object for which I came, if on this still another occasion of my visiting Jacobabad with a like purpose I again return to Dehra Ghazee Khan, with apparent results similar to those already stated in that case, I deferentially submit that my trip here this time will have a very bad effect on my own frontier especially, and probably lead to results of such a nature that the success of our peaceful negotiations with the Murrees, when they do take place, will be far more doubtful and rendered far more difficult than they are at present.

25. At the present moment I can, I believe, if permitted to adopt the treatment towards the Murree clan recommended in this letter, command their horsemen either at Lugari Barkan, or wherever it may be decided we are to meet the tribe, and I see no reason to dread the success of our measures if they are carried out at once in the spirit of the Foreign Secretary's letter sanctioning the expenditure. But if the matters are to remain on this frontier in status quo as at present, or until Colonel Loch is ready and has leisure to accompany the expedition, which he says cannot be until February, I should fear greatly that by that time, considering the present aspect of affairs as described by me, something of a still more serious nature may occur and prevent a peaceful expedition starting at all. I would with much deference point to the great delay which has already occurred in putting in force the provisions of the Mittunkote conference come to by the highest local authorities, and apparently by the Government of India, with the object of securing, in as far as our efforts could obtain it, peace from Murree depredations on the frontier of Khelat, the Punjab, and Sind, and I would urge that on account of what has occurred since then, the putting of them in force without further delay is more urgently necessary than it was at the time they were first agreed to.

26. Before leaving the subject of the danger of further delay in putting in force the policy resolved on in 1869, it appears to me only right to place before you what would probably result were a warlike expedition sent against the Murrees to dictate to them our own terms of peace. They are very differently situated towards us in comparison with the Bozdar tribe, on whom such an expedition had an excellent effect. Let us suppose that in our anger at the Murrees an expedition did go out carrying fire and sword into their country. We had destroyed Kahun, Mamund, and Mundai, and scattered the Murree clan over the face of the country; let us ask ourselves how we are to arrange for the future? How are we to protect the kafila routes which traverse their country, the Bolan Pass, and the plains of Kutch Gundava? Next to peace on our own frontier this is the object Government desires to accomplish. Has the object of civilising the Boogtee been obtained by Sir Charles Napier's campaign which took place shortly after the conquest of Sind? Did they carry off less cattle from Sind in the recent depredations? the reverse is the fact, for they conducted the Murrees to make depredations, and it is said they have now the greater portion of the spoil. A similar course of reasoning applied to Sir Henry Green's campaigns against the Murrees. In no way can I discover that it has had a civilising effect, or make the tribe after it was withdrawn more easy of management.

27. With the concurrence of the Commissioner in Sind, Colonel Loch starts with me in a few days with the object of meeting Gholam Moorteza, the Boogtee Chief, and Imam Buksh Khan, the Chief of the Muzzarees, to endeavour to arrange their dispute amicably. Thus a beginning will have been made to peaceful negotiations. I trust, after considering the representations now made, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor may be pleased to recommend to the Viceroy in Council that there should now be no interruption, but that the expedition should start with as little delay as practicable, and accomplish as soon as it conveniently can the object for which it has been sanctioned.

28. Regarding my own future movements, I have the honour to solicit your instructions by telegram. I would suggest for his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's consideration that in the event of further delay being unavoidable, whether in that case it might not be a good plan in the interest of peace and the success of the measure sanctioned at the Mittunkote conference for me to employ the interval with the tribes and in their country itself with the object of ascertaining after patient inquiry the true causes which have led to these continued disturbances. Were such a course sanctioned, it would be necessary for me to have free intercourse wherever and with whom I desired; this, at the present juncture of affairs, could not do harm, as all political relations with the Khan of Khelat have ceased.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

WITH reference to your endorsement No. 1140, dated the 5th ultimo, I am instructed by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council to state that the orders conveyed in my letter No. 1857 P., dated 27th August last, do not in any way absolve the Khan of Khelat from his treaty engagements.

2. The Government of India never has accepted and cannot now accept responsibility for the safety of caravans in Khelat territory. The compensation recently paid by the Government of India, in certain cases, from the suspended subsidy, was quite an exceptional measure.

3. In consequence of the failure of his Highness to carry into effect the obligation which is contained in the 5th Article of the Treaty of the 14th of May 1854, the annual subsidy of Rupees 50,000 which the British Government undertook to pay year by year on condition of a faithful performance of the conditions of the treaty has been withdrawn.

4. The British Government lies under no obligation by treaty to maintain the security of the communication through the Bolan Pass, or to take any further steps for that purpose.

5. The question of the course to be followed in the present condition of the affairs of Khelat will be discussed in communication with you on your visit to Calcutta, but in the meantime it is essential that there should be no misconception as to the position and obligations of the Government of India, and as to the entire freedom of action which they possess in dealing with the present condition of Khelat and the Bolan Pass.

SIR, Dated Lahore, 9th December 1874.

WITH reference to your letter marginally noted, I am directed to transmit the annexed communication* from Captain Sandeman regarding the measures to be taken in dealing with the Murree tribe. Although the Lieutenant-Governor is not yet in possession of the views of Sir W. Merewether, he thinks it unadvisable to delay passing on Captain Sandeman's letter, on which he desires to record the following observations :—

2. Since the receipt of your letter above noted fresh complications have occured. The Boogtee tribe, aided by some Murrees have committed a serious outrage in the Sind territory, and have carried off some 2,000 head of cattle, Shahbaz Khan, the son of the Boogtee Chief, dissatisfied with a decision adverse to himself pronounced by Colonel Loch, was concerned in this outrage, arrested, and is now detained as a prisoner at Jacobabad. The effect of these complications is to embroil the two tribes directly with the British Government; whereas previous to their occurrence there was no complaint against the Boogtees, and the culpability of the Murrees consisted in the contumacious attitude assumed by the chief and tribe towards their superior, the Khan of Khelat.

3. Consequently, while Captain Sandeman and Colonel Loch are agreed on the strength of the military force to be taken into the hills, and on the routes to be selected, they are at variance as to the tone to be held with the Murree tribe—Colonel Loch insisting on some reparation at the hands of the Chief, Ghuzzun Khan, and, in default, on his coercion—Captain Sandeman, confident in his personal influence, deprecating the assertion of demands likely to prevent all negotiation.

4. The exact degree in which Ghuzzun and his tribe are committed is nowhere specified, but the Lieutenant-Governor gathers that they have played a secondary part to the Boogtees. If this surmise be correct, it is desirable, in his Honour's opinion, to uphold the view taken by Captain Sandeman. Apart from the avowed objections, except in the last extreme, to the employment of military force against the hill tribes, the excessive poverty of the Murrees gives reason to fear that any damages inflicted on them would only force them into fresh raids and alienate them still further from our influence. Nor can the Lieutenant-Governor entirely forget their former good conduct in keeping faith with the British detachment which evacuated Kahan, and in offering to restore the British guns lost at Nifusk. Hence, in his opinion, the better course is to regard their participation in the late Boogtee raid as a minor point to be adjusted in the progress of the negotiations, but not to be put forward as the head and front of their offending, for which atonement must be exacted preliminary to their reception.

5. There can be little doubt but that the cause of Ghuzzun Khan's line of conduct hitherto was the facility existing for playing off the Sind and Punjab authorities one against the other. Comparatively tractable to the latter, he has rendered himself justly obnoxious to the former by violating openly and repeatedly his nominal subjection to the Khan of Khelat. The opportunity has come to put an end to this double dealing. The determination arrived at by the Government of India to deal directly with his tribe in future should render it impossible for him to evade his responsibilities. When these are distinctly defined his failure to fulfil them can always be sufficiently met by deprivation of the remuneration accompanying them.

6. The serious divergence represented by Captain Sandeman to exist between his own and Colonel Loch's views may give rise to some anxiety, and the Lieutenant-Governor is now inclined to think that negotiation having for its object the binding of Ghuzzun Khan and his tribe to future peace and quiet, is perhaps more likely to be brought to a successful issue by the former alone than jointly with the Political Superintendent of the Sind Frontier. Captain Sandeman is himself well known in the hills; but the Deputy Commissioner of Derah Ghazi Khan must, exclusive of personal qualifications, exercise therein a preponderant influence on account of the subordination to him of the Belooch Chiefs within the district, and more especially those of the Mazari and Lugari tribes. Through their instrumentality and counsel he is able to bring to bear on the tribes inside the hill tribal ideas and opinions to which they are at most times more or less amenable. This is an advantage the Lieutenant-Governor believes not possessed by the Sind authorities, and it appears to him that there must follow upon the settlement of the Murree difficulty an abolition of the double system of management and the committal to a single authority of the conduct of our relations with all Belooch tribes conterminous with the Punjab border.

7. Both Captain Sandeman and Colonel Loch, though for different reasons, consider the entry of regular troops into the hills necessary—Captain Sandeman on the ground that their presence will lend weight to the negotiations, Colonel Loch on the ground that military coercion is advisable. In the last paragraph of his letter Captain Sandeman makes the proposal that he should go by himself into the hills, pending the dispatch of the military expedition, "with the object of ascertaining by patient inquiry the true causes which have led to these continued disturbances." In paragraph 21 he says—"I fully concur with Colonel Loch in considering that the present position of "affairs fully demonstrates that evil influences are at work somewhere to disturb the "peace of the country and frontier."

8. Again, there is a difference of opinion as to the time at which the troops should move, Captain Sandeman being in favour of an early march, Colonel Loch wishing it deferred until February next. As, however, it is not possible for the regiments of the Punjab Frontier Force named by Captain Sandeman to reach Derah Ghazi Khan in course of the relief for several weeks to come, it is not probable that any advance can be made before the middle of January.

9. Under these circumstances, then, the Lieutenant-Governor thinks that Captain Sandeman's preceding the expedition would be advantageous. He would be accompanied by the subject Belooch chiefs and their followers, under whose pressure it might be easier for Ghuzzun Khan to yield than if in the presence of British troops, nor would there be the same risk of creating excitement among the neighbouring tribes. Captain Sandeman has been several times previously into the hills under the guidance of the Belooch chiefs, and in the present case his position would be stronger, inasmuch as he would be acting under the orders of the Government.

10. If his deputation met with the sanction of his Excellency the Viceroy in Council, and he succeeded in dictating satisfactory terms to Ghuzzun Khan, there would be no immediate necessity for the assembly of troops; and the question by what authorities the terms are to be enforced, and the subsequent relations of the tribe to the British Government controlled, may be left for future consideration.

11. But Captain Sandeman has referred to a matter distinct from the terms to be made with the Murree tribe, namely, the treatment to be extended to the Brahooees. Colonel Loch (if rightly understood by Captain Sandeman) "considers that we should "protect the kafila routes by giving service to the Sirdars and their tribes indepen- "dently of the Khan, unless he is able to become responsible himself for the safety of "kafilas passing through his country." This course does not recommend itself to Captain Sandeman's judgment. The Lieutenant-Governor does not feel called upon to give any opinion on this point.

12. As regards the Murrees, so long as it was deemed expedient to respect their nominal subjection to the Khan of Khelat the relations towards them of the Punjab authorities were extremely anomalous. To ensure the safety of the long frontier of the Derah Ghazi Khan district, the Deputy Commissioner found it necessary to conciliate the chiefs, which he did in various ways, and especially by entertaining and paying horsemen from the tribe. His end was attained; unwonted quiet was established along the border; intercourse beyond became more frequent; but all this was done independently of the Khan of Khelat, and the Sind authorities, with reason, complained that the Murrees harried his Highness' country all the more. The Mittunkote conference was designed to set this to rights. The Deputy Commissioner of Derah Ghazi Khan was in respect of his dealings with the Murrees and Boogtees placed under the control of the Commissioner in Sind, who on his part was to employ and pay the Murrees on the part of the Khan. No benefit, however, actually accrued to the tribe, and the conduct of the Khan was such as ultimately to cause the Government of India to set aside his nominal superiority and authorise direct dealings with the Belooch Chiefs. The Lieutenant-Governor considers that an escape is thus opened from a position of embarrassment, and the real circumstances are made available as the basis of a new and simpler connexion between ourselves and this isolated tribe.

13. But with the Brahooee tribes and their relations with the Khan of Khelat the Punjab is not concerned, and the Lieutenant-Governor is inclined to think that in the present state of affairs they should be dealt with entirely by the Sind authorities, and that in entering the hills Captain Sandeman should have nothing to say to them, and should merely report any information he may gather regarding them. It is not impossible that Colonel Loch may have in view the payment of the Brahooees directly for the security of the Bolan Pass. The Lieutenant-Governor is not able to say whether this measure, which is strongly deprecated by Captain Sandeman, is feasible and expedient or not. But in the event of its being adopted, and of any share of the subsidy falling to the portion of the Murree tribe acting in obedience to Ghuzzun Khan, his Honour is of opinion that it should be paid through the Punjab authorities, and that the responsibility of the chief to them should not be infringed upon. It would no doubt facilitate the restoration of safety to the Bolan Pass if Captain Sandeman could succeed in opening the alternative route by Tull Chotiali up to Pashin, where it joins the Kandahar route. The Murrees have always commanded and infested this route, and their abstinence from plunder might go far to revive the traffic. But some eighty miles or so lie outside their country, and the Kakars and Dumars, nominally subjects of the Amir of Kabul, who command a long portion of it, are notorious robbers and under no sort of control.

14. In conclusion, the Lieutenant-Governor would recommend the Government of India to sanction Captain Sandeman's proceeding to Lagari Barkan in the hills, or to such other place as he may deem convenient, with an adequate escort of the subject Beloochees, there to assemble the tribes, and to discuss, and, if possible, settle the terms on which the Murrees shall be allowed to enter into engagements with the British Government; such terms to be of no effect until sanctioned by the Government of India, and to embrace—

1. The obligations imposed on the Murrees in respect of the Punjab, Sind, and Khelat frontiers:
2. The consideration to be granted to the chief and tribe so long as the above obligations are fulfilled:
3. The obligations imposed on account of keeping open the Tull and Chotiali route.

(It is possible that if this article be approved some additional considerations may have to be provided for.)

The Lieutenant-Governor would give Captain Sandeman no authority to promise the Murree tribe any consideration on account of the Bolan Pass, reserving that question for settlement by the Sind authorities.

15. In the event of Captain Sandeman failing to obtain the acquiescence of the Murrees in his terms, the question will remain whether the military expedition should not move against them in February next for the purpose of punishing them in accordance with the recommendations of the Commissioner in Sind.

SIR, Dated Lahore, 14th December 1874.

COPIES of Sir W. Merewether's and Colonel Loch's letters on the Khelat and Murree questions only reached the Lieutenant-Governor on the 12th instant, when he also had an opportunity of conversing with Captain Sandeman on these subjects.

2. As regards Khelat affairs, the Lieutenant-Governor is not in a position to acquire reliable information or to offer any opinion which could be equally weighed with that derived from Sir W. Merewether's long and intimate knowledge of the State and his personal superintendence of its politics.

3. As regards the Murree question his Honour does not find much to add to what he has previously written. It still appears to him that the resolution of the Government of India (announced in paragraph 9 of your letter No. 2214 P., dated 9th October last) "to make arrangements direct with the frontier tribes and without reference to the Khan," has greatly simplified the situation, and he is strongly of opinion that it should be firmly adhered to.

4. The points in which we are most interested are—

1st. Safety of Punjab border.

2nd. Safety of Kutchee.

3rd. Safety of Bolan and Tull Chotiali routes.

In consideration of these objects, and in payment of services towards their attainment, the sanction of the Government was given to the grant of Rupees 32,040 between the Boogtee and Murree tribes. Delays and misunderstandings have since occurred, mainly owing, in his Honour's belief, to the tribes not being dealt with by one representative of the British power. The resolution above referred to should terminate this dual management. It was a necessity so long as the impracticable theory of the Khan's inviolable sovereignty was maintained, but with that it should cease. There then remains the real problem how most effectually to restrain these poor and predatory tribes. Now the Sind border can, and has always been, as his Honour understands, well protected by the strip of desert intervening between the cultivated country and the foot of the hills. Pursuit of marauders over this is so imminent that they very rarely venture to pass it. On the other hand, in the Punjab, flocks and herds, and even hamlets, are found at the very mouth of the passes, far in front of the military posts, and fall an easy prey to robbers from the hills. The border, too, is of great length, penetrable at numerous points, and occupied by cognate Beloochee clans. Local circumstances have therefore suggested a conciliatory line of action. Boogtees and Murrees have been taken into the service of the Government as guides and horsemen, and the tribes have shown their appreciation of this treatment not only by abstaining from outrages, but by tolerating the visits of British officials to their country.

5. The interests at stake in the Punjab are greater than those in Sind, and the friendly influence which has been acquired should not lightly be thrown away. The contrast between the sustained jealousy of the Pathan tribes from the Black Mountain down to Vihoa with the comparative hospitality of the Beloochees should sufficiently assure us that such influence, as it has not been easily gained, might be lost for ever by reversing prematurely the policy which has produced it. When, indeed. the little success our efforts to inspire confidence have met with on other parts of the frontier is remembered, it would be matter of serious regret were our better relations with these Beloochees, and the effects which may follow on their improvement, without absolute necessity, interrupted.

6. Let then the Sind authorities continue to take advantage of their topographical advantages and use their excellent cavalry in repelling raids. But let all intercourse and negotiations be conducted by the Deputy Commissioner of Derah Ghazi Khan, who should also be the sole source of benefits and privileges and the instrument of enforcing all responsibilities to the British Government, in which would be included all obligations undertaken in respect of Kutchee or the Bolan Pass.

7. It is not the intention of the Lieutenant-Governor at present to enter upon details, and, in particular, he has not enough information to say confidently whether the Murrees, especially the Mazarani section of them, ought or ought not to have any share in the custody of the Bolan Pass, though for any act of plunder therein an account would be strictly exacted. Again, while his Honour believes that the opening of the route from Pishin to the Sakhi Sarwar Pass would tend more than anything else to the restoration of the security of the Bolan, the accomplishment of this design can only be effected by communication with the tribes concerned, and possibly with the Amir of Kabul. But his Honour adheres to the proposal made in my previous letter that Captain Sandeman should proceed into the hills on an early date and bring the Murrees to a settlement, and that no military expedition should start prior to the receipt of his report.

I have, &c.

No. 195.

No. 16 P., dated Fort William, 5th January 1875.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B., K.C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind.

I AM directed by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your No. 1145, dated 5th November 1874, in which you repeat the proposals made in your former letters for the despatch of an armed expedition to Khelat to settle the affairs of that State and to coerce the Murrees; and further explain the grounds on which your proposals are based.

2. His Excellency in Council has considered your proposals with the care and attention due to the importance of the subject, to your position, and to the special knowledge which you are able to bring to bear upon the question. He has also had the advantage of personal communication with yourself in Calcutta; and the instructions I am now to convey to you are to be understood as containing the deliberate conclusion of the Government of India on the subject of the general policy which is, under present circumstances, to be pursued by all the officers on the Sind and Punjab frontiers who have dealings with the Khelat State or with the tribes that have hitherto been understood to owe allegiance to the Khan.

3. Paragraphs 4 to 8 of my letter No. 2214 P., dated 9th October 1874, set forth at length the reasons why his Excellency in Council did not then consider it advisable to resort to armed interference in the affairs of Khelat, and explain the principal objects which his Excellency in Council desires to secure in our dealings with the tribes beyond the border. Your subsequent letter and the communications which his Excellency has personally had with you have failed to convince the Government of India of the expediency of modifying those views, which I am instructed here to repeat. His Excellency in Council by no means wishes it to be understood that Government will under no circumstances send an armed force into Khelat. On the contrary, the state of affairs may at any time become such as to render it expedient that Government should exercise the general powers it possesses under the Treaty of 1854 of stationing troops in Khelat territory in addition to the posts already located there; or the condition of Khelat itself might become so dangerous to the peace and security of our own territories as to make an armed expedition unavoidable. But his Excellency in Council would consider it a cause of deep regret if armed intervention in Khelat had to be resorted to, and he is of opinion that, although the relations between the British Government and the Khan are at present not without gravity, nothing has occurred in Khelat to render such a course necessary or expedient. He therefore desires that, while on the one hand every precaution should be taken within our own frontier that may be necessary to secure our territories and subjects from outrage, and while reasonable endeavours are made to render the trade routes safe and to cultivate friendly intercourse with the tribes and States on our border, on the other hand, any measures calculated to embroil us with the tribes and precipitate armed intervention, should, as far as possible, be on our part avoided.

4. As under present circumstances his Excellency in Council is not prepared to adopt the general policy advocated in your letter under reply, he has not thought it necessary to enter on the details of the proposal submitted for the expedition to Khelat. He has satisfied himself, however, that had such an expedition unfortunately been necessary, it must have been framed upon a scale considerably in excess of that which you have drawn up for consideration.

5. The chief objects which the Government of India desire to secure are, as already observed, two, viz., (1) the prevention of plundering and outrage within or near the British frontier, and (2) the safe transit of trade; in connexion with which the principal difficulty appears to be the settlement of the Murree tribe.

6. With respect to the former object, the returns enclosed in your letter show that a considerable number of offences have been committed within the last two years on that portion of the Sind frontier which lies between the 27th parallel of north latitude and the sea. These cases have occurred both on the Sind and Khelat side of the border. They have been committed by Khelat subjects, and although the cases (with one exception) are not of a serious nature, still they have remained unredressed, and you report that the heads of Khelat villages are becoming insolent, that they refuse to aid our police, and that serious injury to the interests of the British Government must follow on the increasing disorder into which the Khelat State has fallen.

7. His Excellency in Council considers that as the Khan of Khelat has failed to prevent these crimes, or to give satisfaction for them, and there is no reasonable expectation at present that the attitude of the Khan will be changed for the better, it has now become incumbent on the British Government to take its own measures for the prevention of such offences in future, and the exaction of reparation for such as may hereafter occur. I am therefore to request that the Khan may be addressed by you in a letter setting forth the cases in which he has failed to grant redress for outrages committed within British territory or upon British subjects. He should be informed that until such time as he manifests both a willingness and an ability to perform the duties of a good neighbour, we shall take our own measures without reference to him to protect our territories and the lives and property of our subjects; that any of his subjects who may commit offences in British territory and be apprehended there will receive the utmost penalty of the law; and that if they succeed in escaping back into Khelat territory, they will, whenever this may be practicable, be followed and punished, and satisfaction will be exacted from those who may shelter and aid them.

8. A draft of the letter to be sent to the Khan should be submitted for the approval of the Governor-General in Council. After its despatch all further communications with the Khan should, if possible, be avoided till such time as he comes to a better mind. Under these circumstances Major Harrison should for the present be employed on other duty, and the appointment of Political Agent in Khelat held in abeyance pending further orders. The services of the Agency surgeon and the establishments of the Agency may be temporarily utilized on such other duty as you think fit.

9. His Excellency in Council understood from you that it will not be necessary at present to reinforce the troops in Sind; and that as outrages have been confined to that portion of the border referred to in paragraph 6, a police force of about 100 men, in addition to the existing force, would be sufficient to enable you to carry out the measures described above. You are apprehensive, however, that disturbances may spread further north, in which case a considerably larger force would be needed. His Excellency in Council desires me to request that you will submit through the Bombay Government, for the consideration of his Excellency in Council, with the least possible delay, a statement of the strength and cost of the additional police force immediately required. The cost will be borne as an Imperial political charge. Should more men be needed for the protection of the upper part of the frontier line, you are authorised to entertain them in case of urgency, reporting in detail in due course for the consideration of the Bombay Government and the Governor-General in Council. I am also to suggest that the frontier police might with advantage be placed under a special officer, whose duty it would be to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the frontier tribes and their chief men, and to work through influence with them whenever practicable. On these subjects the Bombay Government will be communicated with.

10. The second object of our policy relates to the protection of trade and the settlement of the Murrees and other tribes concerned in the plunder of the caravans and in raids near our border and in Kutchee. His Excellency in Council understands that as yet no raids have been committed by these tribes in British territory, although the property of British subjects temporarily located beyond our frontier has on various occasions been carried off,

11. So long as the Government of Khelat remains in its present unsatisfactory state, it would be hopeless to expect complete security on the trade routes. At the same time much may, in the opinion of his Excellency in Council, be secured if our relations with the frontier tribes are on a satisfactory footing. With this object various proposals were made at a conference between yourself and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab at Mittunkote in March 1870, and sanctioned by Government. The principal measures then arranged for were the subordination of the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan to the Political Superintendent of the Sind Frontier in all matters of policy relating to the Murrees and Boogtees, and the employment of members of the tribe in our service at a cost of Rupees 32,040 a year. Owing to the unsatisfactory behaviour of the Murrees, and the general confusion into which the affairs of Khelat have fallen, the latter suggestion has not been acted upon; but, in accordance with former arrangements, certain men of the tribes have been continued in service on the Punjab side; and this policy has been successful in securing the peace of that portion of our frontier.

12. You have remarked, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab concurs in your view, that the reason for the line of conduct adopted by the Murrees has been to a considerable extent the dual system of management. While the Murrees have been comparatively tractable on the Punjab side, owing to the advantages they derive from the British Government, they have rendered themselves justly obnoxious to the Sind authorities by disregarding the policy of Government and raiding in the Kutchee plains. His Excellency in Council considers it necessary that this double management should absolutely cease. It is essential to any proper dealings with these tribes that the question as it affects the Punjab and Sind should be treated as one. If their behaviour is such as to justify their punishment on the Sind side, they cannot continue to receive favour from the side of the Punjab.

13. For this reason his Excellency in Council considers that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan should be the medium of all intercourse and communications with the Murree and Boogtee tribes in all their branches, but that he should be under the orders of the Commissioner in Sind, to whom he should report through the Political Superintendent all matters affecting those tribes, and from whom he should receive his instructions, copies of all such reports and instructions being sent to the Punjab Government for information.

14. With reference to other tribes than the Murrees and Boogtees, that is to say, tribes whose proceedings mainly affect Sind, and who have no direct intercourse with the Punjab, the Deputy Commissioner should take no action without previous reference to the Commissioner in Sind; and such action as may be ordered in respect to them should be undertaken jointly by the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan and the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier. Unity of policy and action is absolutely necessary, and no deviation from the policy prescribed should be permitted by the officers on either side without previous instructions from the Government of India.

15. With these precautions his Excellency in Council is sanguine that the system of service which has already been partially tried with some success on the Punjab border may produce good results with respect to the Murree and Boogtee tribes generally. The plan at all events deserves to be tried, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is of opinion that matters have already been greatly simplified by the instructions contained in my letter No. 2214 P., dated 9th October last.

16. Accordingly his Excellency in Council is of opinion that Captain Sandeman should be instructed in the first place to use all his influence to effect a settlement of existing inter-tribal quarrels, and that the arrangements agreed on at Mittunkote should be carried out in their entirety, subject to the modifications above prescribed in respect to the duties and position of the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan. The separate payments to the tribes on the Punjab side for service must, however, now be treated as part of the general arrangement, and misconduct on the part of the Murrees and Boogtees in respect to matters for which the additional service is now sanctioned will be visited when necessary with cessation of service and payment on the Punjab side as well as on the side of Sind. The engagements and responsibilities of the tribes will be treated as a whole, as also will the service and the benefits they receive. These responsibilities will be enforced, and those benefits will be conferred, through the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan under the orders of the Commissioner in Sind in the manner already described.

17. Before proceeding to give effect to these measures, however, there are certain preliminary conditions to which Ghuzzun Khan, the chief of the Murrees, must submit. The chief has not yet surrendered the share his tribe obtained of the property plundered from a caravan in the Bolan in 1872, which he was required by the Commissioner's orders to give up. Nor has he presented himself to the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier as required. From a letter dated 10th Shewal [20th November 1874], however, which he has recently sent to Colonel Loch, it would appear that he is anxious to make his submission, and his Excellency in Council understands that Captain Sandeman does not anticipate any difficulty in making him submit on both points. Unless Ghuzzun Khan does so, friendly relations with him will be broken off, a result which his Excellency in Council would much regret.

18. Captain Sandeman should accordingly proceed into the hills at an early date as proposed by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. He should there explain to Ghuzzun Khan and other chiefs the policy and resolution of Government, and should require Ghuzzun Khan to make proper arrangements for the payment of the value of the plunder which he has unjustly withheld, and to pay his respects to Colonel Loch, the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier, at a time and place to be agreed upon. Should these preliminary conditions be fulfilled, Captain Sandeman may at once proceed to arrange the details of the measures now resolved upon.

19. His Excellency in Council expects and requires that the local officers, laying aside individual views which interfere with unity of action, will cordially co-operate to ensure the success of the policy now prescribed. While his Excellency in Council will not permit outrages to be perpetrated in British territory or upon British subjects with impunity, he is desirous that the tribes should be gradually taught that it is their own interest and for their own advantage to live on good terms with us. For this end patient, considerate, and conciliatory treatment is necessary. His Excellency in Council would deeply regret if the conduct of the tribes should render necessary a display of force on our part, and he enjoins all officers, both on the Sind and the Dehra Ghazee Khan Frontier, to abstain from any harsh or precipitate action calculated to bring about so undesirable a result, and rather to endeavour by all practicable measures to win the confidence of the tribes.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

I AM directed to forward, for the information of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council, the enclosed correspondence† relative to the affairs of Khelat.

† From Punjab Government, Nos. 2047, 2063, and 2078, dated respectively the 9th, 11th, and 14th of December 1874.
To Commissioner in Sind, dated 5th January 1875, No. 16P.

2. His Excellency the Governor-General in Council desires me to direct attention to paragraph 9 of my letter to the Commissioner of Sind, No. 16 P., of this date, and to request that his Excellency the Governor of Bombay will give early consideration to the measures which the Commissioner in Sind may submit for strengthening the police on the southern portion of the boundary between Sind and Khelat. These proposals should be submitted to the Government of India with the recommendations of the Government of Bombay. The cost of the extra police will be an Imperial political charge.

3. With reference to your letter No. 6306, dated 30th October 1874, you will observe that his Excellency in Council has decided to hold the appointment of Political Agent in Khelat in abeyance. The Governor-General in Council will therefore be glad if other employment can for the present be found for Major Harrison.

No. 13 of 1875.

Government of India, Foreign Department. Political.

To the Most Honourable the MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

MY LORD MARQUIS, Fort William, the 22nd January 1875.

IN continuation of our despatch, No. 129 P, dated 28th July 1873, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers* regarding the policy to be observed towards the Khan of Khelat and the tribes beyond our frontier which owe him allegiance more or less real.

2. The occurrence on the 11th February 1874 of a raid on British territory by subjects of the Khan of Khelat in pursuit of their fugitive slaves, considered in connexion with the general disorder into which the affairs of Khelat had fallen, induced the Commissioner in Sind to propose to us the grave measure of armed interference in the affairs of that State. He also suggested that advantage should be taken of the presence of British troops to enforce the obedience of the Murree tribe, whose frequent attacks upon Khelat subjects and whose raids in the plains of Kutchee in Khelat had prompted him in a previous communication to recommend their isolation from Sind and the Punjab by a blockading force.

3. After careful consideration of Sir William Merewether's proposals we decided† that it was neither expedient to intervene by force of arms in order to settle the affairs of the Khelat State, nor necessary to blockade the Murrees. The distracted state of Khelat appeared to us to be due more to the inability of the Khan to control his subjects than to any hostile feelings on his part towards the British Government. We had freely given him our moral and material support for a series of years, and had endeavoured by every means in our power to strengthen his hands, but without success. It did not appear to us probable that a change of rulers in Khelat would give any promise of better results, and in the absence of any dominant party in the State, military intervention would, in our opinion, have committed us to the occupation of the country for an indefinite period, and the virtual assumption of the Government, while it might possibly have produced ulterior results of a serious kind. Moreover, as the raid of 11th February, although grave in itself, when considered as a violation of British territory, had neither been attended with circumstances of aggravation, nor followed by other outrages in our frontier, we did not see in the existing state of things any necessity for an armed demonstration for the purpose of preventing raids.

† Letter to Commissioner in Sind, No. 2214 P, dated 9th October 1874.

4. On the other hand, we did not feel ourselves called upon to assist the Khan in enforcing a nominal suzerainty over tribes who refused to acknowledge his authority; and as the policy of endeavouring to deal through him with the frontier tribes as his subjects had failed, we determined to make arrangements with them for the preservation of peace on our frontier without reference to his Highness. We were satisfied from the information received from the Punjab Government that our differences with the Murrees are not so serious as either to preclude the adoption of such a course, or to necessitate a blockade, which would entail greater hardships on our own subjects than on the Murrees, and would oblige us to add a considerable reinforcement to the troops on our border. At all events we were of opinion that before resorting to measures of coercion, an endeavour should be made as proposed by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab to bring about an amicable settlement with the Murrees.

5. We accordingly approved of the proposal of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab that the Murree country should be visited by a party of Sind and Punjab officers, who should explain to the tribes our desire for the maintenance of peace and order, and should endeavour generally to effect an adjustment of inter-tribal quarrels, and arrange for the safe transit of caravans. The Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier and the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan were instructed to report on the details for giving effect to these orders.

6. In the meantime the Commissioner in Sind reported that crime on the frontier of Sind south of Jacobabad was increasing, that the people in Khelat were exhibiting a bad spirit, that disorder in Khelat was extending, and that the Khan was showing more and more opposition to the interests of the British Government. He was of opinion that the measures we had ordered would be insufficient, and he repeated his proposals for armed intervention as the only effectual means of dealing with the difficulties that had arisen.

7. We have now had the advantage of perusing the reports of Colonel Loch and Captain Sandeman, together with the opinions of Sir W. Merewether and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and the question has been further discussed in personal conferences with Sir W. Merewether at Calcutta. These discussions have failed to convince us of the expediency of modifying our views at present. The situation, though not without gravity, does not at present render it necessary or expedient that we should resort to armed intervention, or even that we should exercise the general powers we possess under the treaty of 1854 of stationing troops in Khelat territory in addition to the posts already located there. Apart from the immediate objections to the Commissioner's proposals which we have already described, we are unwilling at present to adopt measures which might have the effect of arousing suspicions in Afghanistan as to our intentions, and which, with reference to the present aspect of affairs in Central Asia, would be liable to misconstruction.

* Nos. 171 to 196.

8. The chief objects we desire to secure are the prevention of plundering within or near the British frontier and the safe transit of trade. As the Khan of Khelat has failed to prevent or give satisfaction for the offences reported by the Commissioner to have occurred on the south-west frontier of Sind, we have determined to take our own measures for their prevention in future. We have accordingly directed the Commissioner to submit for our approval the draft of a letter to be addressed to the Khan, in which his Highness will be informed that any of his subjects who may commit offences in British territory will, if apprehended there, receive the utmost penalty of the law, and if they escape into the Khelat territory will be followed and punished, and that satisfaction will be exacted from those who aid and shelter them. To carry out these measures an additional body of frontier police will be required, and we have directed the Commissioner in Sind to prepare detailed statements of the increase he would propose, the whole frontier police being placed under the command of a special officer.

9. With regard to the second object we have in view, while we are most anxious to secure the safety of trade routes, and shall use all legitimate efforts for that purpose, we must be careful to accept no direct responsibility for the safety of caravans in Khelat territory. Under present circumstances we consider that the most expedient course is to improve our relations with the frontier tribes, and give them a direct interest in maintaining good order and abstaining from the plunder of caravans. The recent misconduct of the Murrees may in part be attributed to the dual system of management from the Punjab and Sind which has hitherto prevailed. It is essential that the question as it affects the Punjab and Sind should be treated as one. We have therefore determined that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan shall be the medium of communication with the Murrees and Boogtees under the orders of the Commissioner in Sind, to whom also will be referred any action proposed to be taken as regards the tribes whose proceedings mainly affect the Sind frontier.

10. With these precautions we are sanguine that the system of service partially tried with some measure of success on the Punjab frontier may produce good results. We have accordingly directed the arrangements agreed upon at the Mittunkote conference in March 1870, between the Commissioner in Sind and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, to be carried out. The engagements and responsibilities of the tribes, as also the services and benefits they receive, will be treated as a whole, and misconduct on the part of the Murrees and Boogtees will be visited, when necessary, with cessation of service on the Punjab side as well as on the side of Sind.

11. Before proceeding to give effect to these measures, we have directed Captain Sandeman to proceed to the hills at an early date, and explain to Guzzun Khan the Chief of the Murrees, and to others, our policy; to require him in conformity with the orders of the Commissioner in Sind to make restitution of the property plundered by him from a caravan in the Bolan in 1872, and to pay his respects to the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier; these conditions fulfilled the Deputy Commissioner will at once arrange the details of the measures now resolved upon.

12. Finally, we have impressed upon all officials on the Sind and Punjab frontier the necessity for united and cordial action in ensuring the success of the policy we have prescribed, and for patient, considerate, and conciliatory treatment of the frontier tribes. This policy has been settled in personal communication with Sir W. Merewether, who, while expressing a decided preference for the stronger measures advocated in his written communications, is satisfied that short of armed intervention the course we have authorised is the one best suited to secure the ends we have in view.

We have, &c.

Political, No. 91.

To his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council.

MY LORD, India Office, London, 8th July 1875.

Para. 1. I HAVE received and considered in Council the letter of your Excellency's Government in this Department, No. 13, dated the 22nd January last, forwarding, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, papers regarding the policy which you have decided to observe towards the Khan of Khelat, and the tribes beyond the British frontier which owe him allegiance.

2. Her Majesty's Government approve of the decision arrived at by your Excellency in Council in regard to the inexpediency, under present circumstances, of acceding to the recommendation of the Commissioner of Sind in favour of armed intervention in the affairs of the Khelat State. The difficulties, present and prospective, in the way of such a measure are of so grave a character that it could only be justified as a last resource, when all other means of remedying the evils endangering British interests have been proved to be ineffectual.

3. Much as Her Majesty's Government regret the distracted state of affairs in Khelat, they see no reason to question the justice of your opinion that it is due more to the inability of the Khan to control his subjects than to any hostile feeling on his part towards the British Government. In this view, armed intervention would appear an unfriendly act towards a State with which our relations have, until recently, been cordial, while it would possibly entail a prolonged occupation of the country, and might involve ulterior results of a serious kind in other quarters.

4. It is to be hoped that the result of the measures adopted by your Excellency in Council, with a view of improving the state of affairs on the Sind frontier, may meet with the success which you anticipate. What may be the effect of withdrawing the subsidy from the Khan, and the establishment of direct relations with tribes which have hitherto been treated as nominally, if not really, under the suzerainty of his Highness, must be uncertain, but Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt that those measures are the result of mature consideration on your part of all the details of the situation. Your orders in regard to a good understanding between our officers in the Punjab and in Sind, and the conciliatory treatment of the border tribes, can scarcely fail to produce good results. It is essential, however, that such co-operation should be insisted on, and Her Majesty's Government feel assured that you will visit with your severe displeasure any deviation from it.

5. Should the measures now reported produce their anticipated results, Her Majesty's Government trust that an early opportunity may be taken of again placing the relations between the Government of India and the Khan of Khelat on the friendly footing provided for by the Treaty of 1854, and thereby re-establishing a position of affairs desirable in the interests of the British Government, and essential to the continued existence of Khelat as an independent State.

6. If, on the other hand, failure should attend your well-considered efforts, it will be for your Excellency's Government to determine whether it may not be necessary to reconsider the whole question of the best mode of conducting your future relations with the Khelat State. I hope to take an early opportunity of addressing you more generally upon the changes which, under existing circumstances, seem necessary for the purpose of ensuring unity of policy in the Government of the most important Indian frontier.

I have, &c.

PAPERS

RELATING TO

The Treaty concluded between the Government of India and the Khan of Khelat, on the 8th December 1876.

No. 1.

No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Foreign Department.

RESOLUTION.—As the time is approaching when, under the instructions conveyed in the letter to the Punjab Government, No. 1460P., dated 14th May 1875, Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, is to proceed into the Murree Hills and endeavour to effect a settlement of some of the disputes which of late years have distracted the country, it is advisable to review the recent correspondence regarding Khelat and Murree affairs, so as to set forth clearly the policy of the Government, and the objects which Captain Sandeman should keep in view in his proceedings.

2. On the 3rd February 1871 a conference of high officials of the Punjab and Sind was held at Mittunkote, with the view of securing unanimity of action in the management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes. In accordance with the suggestions then made, it was determined*—

* Resolution No. 2248P., dated 19th October 1871.

1st. That the control of the relations of Government with those tribes should be placed in the hands of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, in respect of the said tribes, should be placed under the Political Superintendent.

2nd. That in addition to the sum that had previously been paid to the Murree and Boogtee tribes for service on the border of the Punjab, Rupees 32,040 should be annually paid for the entertainment of certain horsemen of those tribes, with the view of maintaining the tranquillity of the Sind as well as of the Punjab frontier and of Khelat† territory. The amount thus sanctioned was to be handed over to the Chiefs in the name of the Khan, whose subsidy of Rupees 50,000 a year, which is paid to his Highness under the Treaty of 1854 on condition of his preventing all plundering or other outrage by his subjects within or near British territory, his protecting the transit of merchants, and permitting no exactions on traffic beyond a fixed duty, was not diminished. The payment of Rupees 32,040 was sanctioned for one year only, on the understanding that the whole question would be taken up shortly and discussed in all its bearings.

† Paragraph 13, letter from Punjab, dated 4th February 1871.

3. This measure proved ineffectual. In October 1871 a rebellion broke out in Khelat. Merchants were plundered in the Bolan Pass. Disorder spread into Kutchee. The attitude of the Murrees and Boogtees was uncertain, and the Murrees of the Bolan made no effort to oppose the progress of the rebels through the Pass, while their brethren under the Tomandar Guzzun Khan [illegible] to join the insurgent Brahoee Sirdars in their inroads upon Kutchee. At [illegible] placed himself in the hands of the Commissioner in Sind, who med[illegible] contending parties, and effected a settlement, one of the terms of w[illegible] plundered from kafilas during the disturbances should be given u[illegible] owners. The Khan received a lakh of rupees from the British Governmen[illegible] him in meeting urgent demands on his resources.

4. Matters, however, did [illegible] improve. In April 1872 the Brahooee Minguls, instigated as some supposed [illegible] Khan, attacked the Muzzeranee section of the Murree tribe, to whom had be[illegible] trusted the protection of the Bolan Pass. Shere Dil Khan, head of the Muzzeran[illegible] summoned the other Murrees to his aid, and retaliated by plundering kafilas o[illegible]eir way through the Pass. These proceedings produced a chronic state of di[illegible]d on the border of the Khelat and Murree country; and the Murrees made fre[illegible]nt raids on the low lands of Kutchee. The Khan attempted to evade his respo[illegible]ility for recovering the bulk of the plundered property from the Muzzeranees. [illegible]e was severely taken to task by Sir William Merewether, and informed that Governm[illegible]ent held him responsible under Treaty for the safety of traffic.

5. The subsequent conduct of his Highness was not such as to give confidence in this administration. He declined to look after the Government of the country; would not send a Governor to restore order in Lus Beyla; would not exert himself to procure compensation for plundered merchants, and threw himself into the hands of favourites, who encouraged him in his dislike of his Minister Shahghassee Wullee Mahomed, and in opposition to the British Government, and this conduct was notwithstanding the warning he received from the Viceroy at a personal interview at Sukker in the autumn of 1872.

6. On the 31st March 1873, the Commissioner in Sind at last withdrew from Khelat territory the Political Agent, who was accompanied by the ex-Minister. This action was approved by the Government of India, who directed that the Khelat subsidy should be withheld, and the Khan informed that if disturbances occurred on the frontier, the British Government would be forced to take its own measures for preserving order.

7. In the winter of 1873 certain outrages were committed on British messengers in and near the Bolan Pass; nothing was done by the Khan to exact reparation. Numerous petty offences were committed by Khelat subjects on the border, and on the 11th February 1874, 200 armed Brahoees entered British territory and carried off the families of certain of their slaves who had shortly before made their escape.

8. In the meantime little progress had been made in carrying out the scheme of the Mittunkote Conference in regard to the Murree and Boogtee tribes. It had been the intention of the Commissioner in Sind to subsidize Shere Dil Khan Muzzeranee and the Chief of the Sarawans for the protection of the Bolan Pass, and to increase the service both of the Murrees and Boogtees. The contumacy of the Murree Chieftain Guzzun Khan in declining to attend upon the Political Superintendent of Upper Sind at Jacobabad defeated this intention regarding the Murrees; the failure of the Khan of Khelat to enter into the plan rendered abortive any attempt to make arrangements for securing the tranquillity of the Bolan; and the only part of the proposals of Sir William Merewether which was carried into effect was the payment of a small sum to the Boogtees whose behaviour had been good.

9. Before the irruption of the Brahoees into British territory took place, the Commissioner in Sind had sent to the Khan a grave remonstrance, to which an unsatisfactory reply was received. Sir William Merewether thereupon recommended that an expedition should be sent to Khelat to exact reparation for the outrage upon British territory, as well as for recent attacks on merchants proceeding through the province of Lus Beyla. He also proposed that the contumacy of the Murrees should be punished by the stoppage of all payments for service, whether from the Punjab or Sind, and by a blockade, or in the event of these measures failing, by a punitive expedition into the hills.

10. The Government of India did not consider that the condition of Khelat affairs, although grave, was such as to justify hostilities against the Khan, or that it was desirable at once to proceed to extremities against the Murrees. At the same time, the failure of the attempt to deal with the frontier tribes through the Khan made it necessary to revise the arrangements agreed upon at Mittunkote, and it was determined that a party of Sind and Punjab officers should visit the hills, explain to the tribes the desire of the British Government for the maintenance of peace and, order, and, if possible, make arrangements with them with that object.

11. Sir William Merewether made a second representation on the subject. He considered that the people of Khelat were exhibiting a bad spirit, that disorder in Khelat was spreading, and that the Khan was showing still greater opposition to the interests of the British Government than before; he represented that the Murrees persevered in their contumacy, and that the Murrees and Boogtees combined had descended upon the plains, and carried off numbers of Sind cattle that were grazing beyond the line of British posts, and recommendation for a military expedition. Before finally deciding upon the course to be pursued, Sir William Merewether was summoned to Calcutta, and the condition of affairs was fully discussed. The result was to confirm the opinion before expressed that the circumstances did not justify a resort to hostilities. The orders of the Government of India were contained in the letter of this Department, No. 16P., dated 5th January 1875. It was laid down that the Government of India desired to secure two principal objects,—(1) the prevention of plundering and outrage within or near the British frontier; (2), the safe transit of trade.

12. With respect to the first object, the returns submitted showed that a considerable number of offences, most of them trivial, had been committed by Khelat subjects on the Khelat and Sind border between Jacobabad and the Bolan, and had remained unpunished. The Commissioner was directed to address a letter to the Khan, setting forth the cases in which he had failed to grant redress for injuries committed within British territory and on British subjects; he was to be informed that until he manifested both a willingness and an ability to perform the duties of a good neighbour, the British Government would take its own measures to protect its territories and subjects; subjects of Khelat committing offences in British territory, if apprehended there, would receive the utmost penalty of the law, and if they succeeded in escaping into Khelat territory, they would be followed and punished. For the purpose of carrying out this policy the police force on the Sind frontier between Jacobabad and the sea was strengthened in accordance with Sir William Merewether's recommendations.

13. A letter to the Khan, written in the sense of the above-mentioned instructions, was despatched by Sir William Merewether towards the close of March 1875. No reply to this communication has reached the Government, but signs are not wanting that the Khan has at last somewhat realized the gravity of the situation. In September 1874, his Highness called to his Councils a new Wuzeer, Moolla Atta Mahomed. This officer was deputed in the spring of 1875 to chastise the marauders on the southern portion of the Khelat and Sind frontier. He placed himself in communication with the Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, and proceeded to take energetic measures against the offenders, one of whose leading men, Nowsherwan Choota, he arrested and imprisoned. Although the Khan of Khelat has not complied with the demands of the British authorities for the restitution of plundered property, the action of his Wuzeer has had a beneficial effect.

14. So far as regards the portion of the British frontier from the sea up to Jacobabad, the measures taken under the instructions of 5th January 1875 have been completely successful, and no such offences as those formerly complained of have since been reported.

15. The second object which Government had in view, viz., the safe transit of the trade with Afghanistan, seemed to depend mainly on the possibility of securing the services of the Murrees and other neighbouring tribes. As regards the Murrees and Boogtees, it was decided that the dual system of management from the Punjab and Sind should cease; the conduct of the tribes was to be considered as a whole, whether in reference to Sind or the Punjab; the Deputy Commissioner of Debra Ghazee Khan was to be the medium of intercourse and communication with the Murrees and Boogtees in all their branches, but he was to be under the orders of the Commissioner in Sind. Captain Sandeman was to use all his influence with the view of effecting a settlement of intertribal quarrels, and the arrangements of Mittunkote were to be carried out in their entirety, subject to the modification prescribed regarding the duties and position of the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan; but it was added that the separate payments to the tribes on the Punjab side must be treated as part of the general arrangements, and that the submission of Guzzun Khan, his attendance at Jacobabad, and restoration of the booty received by him in 1872, must precede the re-opening of friendly relations with him.

16. The orders given by the Government of India received the full approval of Her Majesty's Government.

17. It is now necessary to examine how far they have succeeded in improving the condition of affairs in Khelat and on the frontier. Captain Sandeman's communications with the Murrees resulted in the submission of Guzzun Khan who visited Jacobabad, paid his respects to the Political Superintendent, restored his share of the plunder obtained in the raid of 1872, and recovered from the tribesmen of Kahun, as well as certain Sanganis and Bijeranis, their portion of the booty. Captain Sandeman also succeeded in tracing and recovering the cattle stolen from British subjects and from the people of Seebee by the Murree and Boogtee raiders. These results are not only creditable to Captain Sandeman, but give reason to hope that the arrangement by which the conduct of our relations with the frontier tribes has been entrusted to that officer will in time produce more substantial effects.

18. At the same time, although since the beginning of the present year no disturbance has occurred within the British frontier north of Jacobabad, and none of any importance near it, the Murrees have continued their raids in Kutchee, and there still remains the dispute between the Murrees and the Government of Khelat, which is closely connected with long standing intertribal quarrels, and which has not been touched by the engagements concluded under Captain Sandeman's auspices.

19. Captain Sandeman is of opinion that, under present complications in Khelat, which he believes to be, and which the Commissioner in Sind admits may possibly be, fomented by the Khan or his immediate officers, any attempt to prevent the Murrees from raiding in Kutchee by giving them service in the manner proposed in the orders of 5th January 1875 would prove ineffectual, and that such arrangements must be preceded by a meeting in Kutchee with the Chiefs of the tribes, at which an endeavour should be made by him to adjust the differences out of which the present troubles have arisen. To such a meeting the Commissioner in Sind is opposed, as he considers it would be unwarrantable, when political relations with the Khan have been suspended, to enter his country and hold council with his Chiefs as to the part he is taking in the disturbances going on in his own country. Sir William Merewether, moreover, is of opinion that for Captain Sandeman to have anything to say to political questions affecting the State of Khelat generally would be opposed to the spirit of his instructions, and must lead to serious complications; that the object of granting extra subsidy to the Murrees was to induce them to abstain from raiding in Kutchee, in the same way as they have been induced to keep quiet within their hills on the Punjab side; and that Captain Sandeman should confine himself to endeavouring to effect this, and to preventing the Murrees and Boogtees from raiding their neighbours either within or without British territory.

20. Under existing circumstances, his Excellency in Council entirely approves of Captain Sandeman having abstained from offering additional service to the Murrees on condition of their committing no raids in Kutchee. His Excellency agrees with Captain Sandeman that there is little, if any, probability at present of such a measure proving successful. When his Excellency in Council included abstinence from raids in Kutchee among the conditions on which the Murrees were to receive further service, he had every reason to believe that the only difficulties to be contended with arose from the weakness of the Khelat Government. The case is materially altered when there is ground to suspect that the action of the Khelat Government may, to some extent at any rate, cause the troubles which it is our desire to settle.

21. The Governor-General in Council wishes to bring every influence which he can exert to bear in promoting peace and good order in Kutchee, as in other territories bordering on the British possessions. The condition of neighbouring countries greatly affects the prosperity of Her Majesty's subjects, and his Excellency in Council cannot be indifferent to the condition of the State of Khelat. But the duties and responsibilities of the Government of India in reference to raids committed by the nominal subjects of the Khan of Khelat upon their neighbours in Khelat or other foreign territory are essentially different from their duties and responsibilities in the case of raids committed in British territory. His Excellency in Council does not consider that it would be right to terminate arrangements which have secured the peace of our own border, because our efforts to restore order in Kutchee have not been successful.

22. The Governor-General in Council is accordingly pleased to modify the instructions contained in paragraphs 12 and 14 of letter No. 16P., dated 5th January 1875, to the Commissioner in Sind. The existing system of service for the protection of the Punjab and Sind frontiers will be maintained, and this service, in so far as it affects both provinces, will be treated as one. If the tribes to whom service is given commit any outrages in British territory or on British subjects on the Sind frontier requiring the stoppage of their service on that side, the service of the offending tribes will also be stopped on the Punjab side, and vice versâ, besides any other measures of a severer kind which the Government of India may find it necessary to take by way of punishment. But those penalties will not necessarily be inflicted, either on the Sind or the Punjab side, upon the commission of raids or other offences in Kutchee or elsewhere out of British territory.

23. It remains then to consider what means shall be taken to restore peace in Kutchee and protect the transit of trade within the territories of the Khan of Khelat.

24. Irrespective of the general interest which the Government of India have in promoting the peace and prosperity of neighbouring countries, they have a special interest in Kutchee. The boundary between Kutchee and Sind runs through an open country, so that any serious disturbances in Kutchee may affect British territory very closely. The raids, however, which have actually occurred in Kutchee have not as yet been of a kind to endanger the general peace of the British districts in Sind; and as the posts of the Sind frontier force are in advanced positions beyond the frontier, there seems no reason to anticipate that outrages will be attempted to their rear. Should such outrages be attempted, they should be promptly and vigorously dealt with. The advanced outposts on the Sind border then may reasonably be expected to secure a fair degree of order in the southern portions of Kutchee over which their power of prompt action extends. Any armed aggression within the Kutchee territory thus commanded by the outposts may be forcibly suppressed by them.

25. Beyond the point to which the power of the force stationed in the outposts extends, his Excellency in Council declines to accept any direct responsibility for the protection of life and property, though he will continue to exercise such influence in the interests of peace as he may be able to command in those countries. While, on the one hand, the Khan of Khelat appears to be either unable or unwilling to enforce his authority in those districts, it is clear on the other hand that it is not the duty of the British Government to maintain peace and order in his Highness' territories. So far as the influence and good offices of frontier officers can be used to promote peace and good order, and settle disputes, whether among the tribes or between the tribes and the people of Seebee or the Government of the Khan, his Excellency in Council desires that they shall be freely exercised; but the responsibility for the government of the country and the maintenance of order does not devolve on the British Government.

26. At present the real causes of the quarrels and disturbances which prevail are but imperfectly known. Without fuller and more explicit information there is little prospect of the influence of the British Government being successfully applied to their settlement. His Excellency in Council therefore desires that Captain Sandeman shall proceed into the Murree Hills as early in the cold season as practicable, in order (1) to procure all the information he can respecting local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahoees; (2) to endeavour as far as he can to bring about an amicable settlement of these quarrels; (3) to report for the information of Government, through the Commissioner in Sind, his views on such as he cannot settle; and (4) to report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's Government. Sir William Merewether may, if he thinks fit, depute an officer from Sind to be associated with Captain Sandeman, but in subordination to him.

27. Captain Sandeman will also enquire and report whether anything, and if so what, can be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan, and whether a system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged for, the proceeds of which would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the route. In respect to all or any of these objects, Captain Sandeman will have discretion to make any arrangements he considers to be advisable, within the total sum sanctioned after the Mittunkote Conference, viz., Rupees 66,960 per annum.

28. At the same time, considering the importance of the Candahar trade, his Excellency in Council thinks it advisable that an alternative route should be opened up whereby the trade may be rendered to some extent independent of the Bolan, and may not be liable to interruption by the feuds in Khelat. For this purpose the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is authorised to take such measures as his Honour may think practicable to open up the old trade route from Candahar viâ Tull and Chotiali, and, if necessary, to communicate with his Highness the Ameer of Afghanistan with a view to enlist the co-operation of the Cabul authorities.

29. Should the measures now authorised be successful in affording reasonable security to trade through Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest desire to co-operate for this end, and to return to a proper sense of his duties, it will afford the Governor-General in Council great pleasure, on receiving an expression of regret for what has occurred, to restore the former subsidy, and re-establish the old friendly footing with his Highness' Government.

30. It is the determination of the Government of India not to permit outrages to be perpetrated in British territory or upon British subjects with impunity; but at the same time his Excellency in Council desires again to inculcate upon the Commissioner in Sind the duty of dealing patiently and considerately with the tribes, and of avoiding harsh and precipitate action, which was impressed upon him in the 19th paragraph of Mr. Aitchison's letter of the 5th of January last.

Order.—Ordered, that a copy of the foregoing Resolution be sent to the Commissioner in Sind for information and guidance, and for communication to Captain Sandeman, and to the Punjab Government, and to the Government of Bombay for information.

No. 2.

No. 816 of 1875, Political Department.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, Simla.

Commissioner's Office, Kurrachee,
21st October 1875.

SIR,

IN continuation of my letter No. 92 of the 9th February last (2nd and 3rd paras.), and No. 157 of the 5th March, I have now the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, on the measures adopted on the south-west frontier of Sind, by Captain Wise, Superintendent of Kurrachee Police, in accordance with the instructions given to him by me under the Government of India letter No. 16 P, dated 5th January 1875.

2. Captain Wise's proceedings have, I consider, been conducted throughout with great ability and judgment. Though new to the province and people he at once, by display of good sound sense and frank bearing, gained a wholesome influence over, and good footing amongst, the tribes on both sides of the border, and the success that attended his efforts is entirely due to his ready tact and judicious management. I trust that his proceedings will receive the high approval of his Excellency the Viceroy.

Protection of south-western frontier

3. The Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, acted throughout with an honest and sincere desire to effect the objects for which he was sent by his master, his Highness the Khan, and showed thorough cordiality in all his dealings with Captain Wise, as well as an unhesitating anxiety to carry out the wishes of the British Government. And had his Highness the Khan only confirmed the proceedings of his Wuzeer, and handed over the offenders who were taken back to Khelat, as was required of him, the success of the Wuzeer's deputation would have been complete. But I regret to state, as will presently be shown, that this has not been the case. On the contrary, since his return to Khelat the Wuzeer has been disgraced by his Highness, chiefly, it would seem, for having obeyed too well the instructions given him in the first instance at Khelat, and for having so closely conformed to the wishes of the British Government.

4. In his first report, dated 13th April, Captain Wise states:—

"In accordance with your instructions I reached this place ("Khar") on the bank of the Hubb River (which is the boundary line) on the 17th of last month, and found Moollah Atta Mahomed encamped with his force on the opposite or western bank. His force consists of about 200 Sowars, dressed in green tunics and armed with sabre and carbine, much the same as our own irregular horse, and they are fairly mounted; 400 of the Pathan Regiment armed with English muskets, two mountain train guns, which are carried on camels, and about 50 Sebundi Sowars, and 50 foot with their country weapons.

"On the morning after my arrival the Wuzeer and his principal officers visited me, and I had a long conversation with him regarding the work to be done on the frontier, and informed him what were your wishes, as communicated to me by you personally when I was summoned to your camp in February. I also demanded of him the surrender of the different offenders whose extradition had been required from his Highness the Khan during the last two years, and in the course of the day furnished him with a list, giving their names and particulars. At the same time I stated my willingness to assist him in every way, having been sent here by you for that purpose, and that I was prepared to apprehend and hand over to him all offenders who had taken refuge in our territority, on his satisfying me regarding their criminality.

"In reply, the Wuzeer stated that he fully understood what was required of him, namely, (1) to apprehend and punish those who had looted the Kafilas, (2) to arrest and hand over to me all the offenders whose extradition had been asked at different times, and (3) to make such arrangements as would ensure the safety of the Kafilas, and prevent cattle-lifting on our frontier in future. He said he hoped to carry out all these measures in such a way as to give you every satisfaction, that all the Sirdars had joined his camp, and had expressed their willingness to assist him in every way, and had done so up to the present time.

"On the following day I visited the Wuzeer in his camp, and there met Sirdars Noordeen, Ali Khan, Jubal Khan and others whose acquaintance I wished to make. They all stated their desire to assist the Wuzeer, and that they would do their best to arrest the different offenders from their tribes, and had sent people out for that purpose.

"Since that day up to the present time I have received visits from all the Sirdars, and have had several interviews with Wuzeer Atta Mahomed (he speaks Hindustani, so we have no difficulty in conversing together), and all has been going on satisfactorily. A few days after our first meeting he sent me a list, similar to one I had supplied to him, of all the people living in our territory that should be given up to him. On going through this list I found it included offences of six and nine years ago, and so returned it to him, saying he should confine himself to the last two years only, as I had done, for it would be impossible to do the work if we both went back so far. An amended list was accordingly submitted.

"I attach statements of the number of offenders that have been apprehended and handed over by both sides, and every exertion is being made to seize the remainder; but some have fled to long distances, or are hiding away; they will, however, all be seized and handed over by their Sirdars whenever they return. Besides those named in the list, Sirdar

Pahar Khan, Zaroor Brahoee, and Nowsherwan are in the Wuzeer's camp. The two former have committed offences in our territory, but will not be handed over at present.

"As regards the cattle stealers that are given up to me, I find it almost impossible to obtain such evidence against them as would ensure a conviction in a magistrate's court. In nearly every case the stolen animal was restored at the time it was traced, and the complainant having got his property back all right does not care now to come forward and prosecute. In most cases the cattle were handed back to our police by a third party, who told them that such and such persons were the thieves, but there is no evidence beyond this man's statement, and one magistrate to whom a case was sent up has ruled that he cannot punish a man charged with being a receiver of stolen property in foreign territory. The people, therefore, from whom our stolen animals are recovered cannot be punished unless we can prove they actually stole them in our territory.

"Such offenders as I cannot convict in our magistrates' courts I hand over to the Wuzeer for punishment. There they are asked on the oath of their caste whether they committed the offence or not, and if they admit it, are fined or security taken. You are aware that all offences in Khelat, even murder, are punished by fine, and accordingly heavy sums have been demanded from those who looted the Kafilas, and the Wuzeer has been busy seizing property of all kinds to collect it. Yesterday I was informed that Sirdar Noordeen had given security that he would collect and pay up the full amount in six months. This is a good arrangement, as the people's cattle that were seized were being sold at great sacrifice.

"As regards future arrangements, I have demanded that as there are no police in Khelat to assist us, each Sirdar shall be answerable for the thefts committed by the people, and shall give up the offenders for punishment, with such evidence as is forthcoming. I fear, however, that so long as witnesses have to go to Kotri, Kurrachee, and such places, very few will be obtained, even with the help of their Sirdars, as we cannot summon them. All the Sirdars have agreed to the above, and state that on a crime being traced to one of their tribe, they will give me every assistance in bringing him to justice. If they keep their promise in this, we shall have little frontier crime in future.

Captain Wise was afterwards invested with Magisterial powers, so that we might try and decide cases on the spot.—W. L. M.

"Before leaving this, the Wuzeer will give me in writing the arrangements made for the future prevention and detection of crime on the frontier. The names of the different Sirdars who are to be held responsible will be stated, and their signed agreement attached. All promise well at this time, and I trust now that I know them, to be able to work with them in a friendly way, and get every assistance in future."

5. On the 26th April, Captain Wise further reported from his camp at Khar as follows:—

"The Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, started from this place, on his return for Khelat, yesterday evening. In accordance with your orders, I have been altogether nearly six weeks on frontier duty in connection with the above officer, and I trust that the work done may be considered satisfactory, and that the arrangements made for the future security of the frontier are such as will meet with your approval, and the results may prove all you could wish. I myself have every confidence in their doing so.

"In all some 42 criminals have been brought to justice, and a statement showing names, offences, and punishments awarded is attached for your information. There are still many accused persons at large, but they have fled to long distances, or are hiding away in the hills, and cannot at present be apprehended. The duty of arresting them has, however, been made over to their different Sirdars, and a statement of the same given to me in writing, a translation of which is appended for perusal. Putting these men aside, I am of opinion that enough has been done to give these frontier tribes a satisfactory lesson which they will not forget in a hurry.

"In addition to the men shown in the statement of punishments, Nowsherwan, Jan Mahomed, Belooch Khan, Pahar Khan, and Zaroor Brahoee have been taken away as prisoners to Khelat. The former, as you are aware, has been the chief mover in all the looting and frontier outrages, and I trust he will be kept in confinement until such time as you may think right to sanction his release; the two latter are guilty of having forcibly carried off some slaves who had taken refuge in British territory, and the Wuzeer promises they shall eventually be handed over to you.

"Jan Mahomed and Belooch Khan were concerned in the attacking and looting of the Kafilas. The former was formerly well behaved, and has on more than one occasion given us assistance in getting back animals that were stolen from our territory, but owing to his brother Sahib Khan Choota refusing to give him any allowance or share whatever of his raj, he of late years became the friend and companion of Nowsherwan, and went to the bad. I consider that Sahib Khan is to blame for the course he has taken with regard to his brother, but this is a family affair with which we have nothing to do.

"During the time I have been engaged on this frontier duty, I have kept before me the views expressed in Government of India Despatch No. 16 P., of the 5th January last (a copy of which you furnished me with for guidance), and have endeavoured to make the most of this opportunity to cultivate friendly intercourse with the frontier Sirdars, and their followers, and I trust with some success.

"On my arrival here I had a meeting with the principal Sirdars at the Wuzeer's camp, as already reported, and I then gave them to understand I should be glad to see them at all times, and accordingly they all visited me on several occasions, and last evening when they came to take leave, before starting with the Wuzeer, they expressed a desire to keep up the friendly relations here begun, and to assist me in every way to keep down crime on the frontier and bring criminals to justice, and to this effect they have each given me a signed agreement, translations of which accompany this report.

Appended, marked F.—W. L. M.

"In organizing the extra frontier force lately sanctioned, I have paid attention to the measures referred to in para. 11 of the Despatch above quoted, and with your permission have offered the Chief Inspectorship of the Frontier Police to Sirdar Sahib Khan Choota, and one of the Deputy Inspectorships to Sirdar Jubal Khan Brahoee, which they have accepted, and have also given places among the Sowars and foot police to several of their relations and followers, and those of other tribes also, and expect good results from this arrangement.

"Sirdar Sahib Khan Choota has always been well inclined towards us, and on all occasions given assistance when asked. His village is within a few miles of our frontier, and the Choota tribe inhabit the country on both sides of the boundary for nearly the whole length of our frontier line, that is, from Ghathi on the north to within a few miles of the sea. The Bundujos and Bikkuks, very lawless and troublesome tribes, also obey Sahib Khan, so that his services should prove of great assistance to us.

"Sirdar Jubal Khan is a Brahoee, and his tribe and those of other Brahoees occupy the country on the Khelat side of the boundary on the northern end of my frontier, that is, from Ghathi to the Gaj, for which portion he is willing to be answerable. Belooch Khan, the father of Jubul Khan, received a Jageer of Rs. 250 a year from the British Government, granted for services rendered to the police in cases of crime near the border (vide Government Resolution No. 2000, of 22nd June 1869), which on his death was continued to the son, who will, I think, do us good service.

"In conclusion, I have to remark that during such time as Wuzeer Atta Mahomed was working with me, I have every reason to believe he did his best to give me every assistance, and was honest in his desire to apprehend and make over for punishment all criminals, and to make good arrangements for the future."

6. Nowsherwan Choota (uncle of Sahib Khan, the Chief of that tribe,) who was the principal in all the attacks on the Kafilas, as also the chief disturber of the peace for years past, also Jan Mahomed Choota (his nephew, and younger brother to Sahib Khan), who has of late joined in with Nowsherwan, were made prisoners and taken away by the Wuzeer to Khelat. The Khan has imposed a heavy fine on Nowsherwan and keeps him confined to Khelat, but nothing more. Pahar Khan Sassoolee, the leader of the inroad into the Shikarpur district in February 1874, when [redacted] slave refugees were forcibly carried off by him, and Zazoor Brahoee, charged with the murder in British territory of a police constable named Shabak, and a woman Gowree, were also taken away prisoners.

Nowsherwan Choota and other offenders.

7. I have waited up to the present time in the expectation that some action would be taken by his Highness the Khan in respect to the punishment or delivery of the above to the British authorities, but I regret to say nothing has yet been done by him. He has fined Pahar Khan Sassoolee Rs. 3,000 for the murder of the latter's brother in a family quarrel, but has made no sign whatever of complying with the request made to him by me for the surrender of this and the other offenders. They are still at Khelat, with the exception of Jan Mahomed Choota, who has been allowed to return to his country.

Non-delivery by the Khan.

8. With regard to Jan Mahomed, the Khan has also adopted a more objectionable course even than the mere release, for he has appointed him Sirdar of the Choota tribe in place of his elder brother, Sahib Khan, and has written me a letter informing me of this. The reason assigned in Appointment of Jan Mahomed by the Khan to be Chief of the Chootas.

* Translation appended. I have not considered it advisable to send any reply to this letter.—W. L. M.

this letter is, that Sahib Khan had failed to pay his respects to the Khan at Khelat, but this is not the true one, and it is so given out by Jan Mahomed since his return to his native place. The real cause is Sahib Khan having taken service under Captain Wise without permission of the Khan, and engaging with Captain Wise to check crime and arrest offenders.

9. This procedure of the Khan's is most deliberately disrespectful, but other can scarcely be expected with such advisers as the Khan at present has about him, and in his present frame of mind. It is also a natural consequence of our dealing with and employing Chiefs of his clans, when friendly relations and communications on our part with him no longer exist. Jubal Brahoee, who is likewise in Captain Wise's employ, has also been threatened with trouble for having taken service with us.

10. Jan Mahomed has come too near his brother's village, accompanied by a Chobdar and three Sowars of the Khan's. He gives out that he has been appointed Chief, which the Chobdar's presence confirms, and, with the aid of the latter, is engaged in forcing money and property from the people to meet the fine the Khan has imposed on Nowsherwan. This is causing great distress, and irritation, and is very likely to bring about disturbances, while it is not improbable that the people mulcted by Jan Mahomed will try to recoup themselves by attempting to lift cattle from within our border.

Success of Captain Wise's arrangement so far.

11. I am glad to be able to report that, up to this, Captain Wise's excellent arrangements have proved most successful, and there has been an almost total absence of acts of violence on the border in his charge since the departure of the Wuzeer. But I am afraid this will not long continue to be the case, now that this element of disorder has come in the supersession of Sahib Khan by his younger brother. Sahib Khan asks for protection, and assistance in obtaining reversal of his removal from the Sirdarship, but nothing under present circumstances can be done beyond to tell him, as I have, that we still recognise him, and him only, as Chief of the Chootas.

Khelat affairs generally.

12. On Khelat affairs generally I have the honour to forward a very complete and full report by Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind, also another by Major Harrison, the Political Agent at Khelat. The Khelat Agency was placed in abeyance from the first April last, in accordance with the instructions contained in Government of India letter No. 16P., of the 5th January, and the Political Agent, Major Harrison, with Dr. Bowman, Surgeon in charge of the Agency, both proceeded to England on medical certificate to recruit their health, which had suffered greatly from the trials of circumstances and climate they had undergone during the past years. The establishment of the Political Agency was broken up, part being discharged, and the remainder transferred to the office of the Political Superintendent.

Letter from his Highness the Khan. Copy of translation appended.

13. A reply was received from his Highness the Khan to my letter dated 26th March 1875. It is most unsatisfactory, and mainly an evasive one. In reference to the demand for the arrest and punishment of offenders against the peace, residing in the Province of Jalawan, he states that he has deputed Moollah Atta Mahomed, the Wuzeer, with troops to that Province, "to settle "these affairs, and he having reached that place is engaged in carrying out the duty "entrusted to him. God willing, under any circumstances, he will seize the robbers "and punish them, and recover the stolen property, or its equivalent." Moollah Atta Mahomed did perform the duty excellently well, and returned to Khelat with the prisoners, as well as a considerable sum of money which he had collected on account of the property plundered; but though some time has elapsed since the Wuzeer's return, the prisoners have been neither punished nor surrendered to me, nor has the value of the property been handed over, though his Highness is in possession of a list showing the amount. The tone of the letter is very objectionable, especially when he adverts to the escape from Hyderabad of Sirdar Ali Khan, the son of the Ex-Jam of Beyla, and to certain men of his, "who managed and held charge of the revenues of the Kutchee, "Jalawan, and Beyla Districts, and had to account for lakhs of rupees, who carried "away all my wealth and account books, and have settled free of all anxiety in British "territory." The people alluded to are the late Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and his nephew, Gulam Jan, who were permitted to accompany Major Harrison on his withdrawal from the Khelat Court. The letter he refers to is one which was sent direct to me at Kurrachee last year, and was returned because it had not been forwarded through the usual channel, and moreover it contained unjustifiable reflections on British officers, as well as statements regarding what had passed, quite contrary to what had really occurred, and such as should not have been addressed to me by his Highness the Khan. The latter being returned was sufficient reply to his Highness, so his statement that he had received no acknowledgment is incorrect. The demand of the arrest and extradition of the Shahgassee and others who had been allowed to accompany the British Political Agent, on the latter's leaving the Khelat Court, is a most unjustifiable one. His Highness' statement also that he has observed the duties of a good and really friendly neighbouring Sovereign, and has firmly adhered himself to Treaty engagements, is, I need hardly say, not borne out by the circumstances that have occurred during the past few years. He again refers to the subject of the confinement of his three servants in Sind, and claims their release in fulfilment of a promise made by his Excellency the Viceroy at Sukker. What passed, as quoted from the memorandum of conversation recorded at the time, was as follows:—"He (his Highness) then asked for the sanction of the reinstatement of his favourites, owing to whose intrigues much of the recent complications was to be attributed, and whose dismissal had only been very recently secured. To this request his Excellency replied, that to reverse the dismissal of these men at present would only have the effect of weakening the Khan's authority, and would afford encouragement to other evil-doers. Under these circumstances, therefore, it was quite impossible for the British Government to countenance their restoration, though at some future time, if events proved favourable, it might be found possible to re-open the question. Notwithstanding the above refusal, the Khan continued to press the matter of his favourites' restoration, urging the insignificance of these men, and the loss of dignity he would suffer if their dismissal was insisted on. His Excellency replied, that it was impossible to reply to the Khan in any other sense than he had already done, and that the decision given could not be altered." I venture to say that the Khan's conduct since that time in no way would justify the re-opening of the question, or his Excellency taking into consideration the conditional promise then made. His Highness the Khan, following the advice of evil councillors, has shown himself to be very far from a friendly neighbouring Sovereign, and has deliberately broken his promises of punishing or surrendering offenders against the British Government, whose apprehension had been required of him, notwithstanding that his Highness' Wuzeer Atta Mahomed had faithfully performed the duty of seizing the persons claimed. Neither has his Highness shown any sign of restoring the equivalent of property plundered from travellers which he was called upon to cause to be made good. He has also neglected to make any suitable attempts to restore order in his country, to the absence of which, and to the general discontent existing, his attention had in a friendly manner been drawn. In conclusion, his Highness refers to the withdrawal of the annual subsidy of Rs. 50,000, as if this was unreasonable, and an act of unkindness on the part of the British Government. His Highness is well aware that this money was paid to him under the stipulation that he should protect traders passing through his country. His failure in this respect was a breach of the treaty between the two Governments, and necessitated the withdrawal of the subsidy.

Reasons for not sending a reply to his Highness' letter.

14. At first I was disposed to draft a reply to this letter for the approval of his Excellency the Viceroy, but on more mature consideration, I do not see that one is required, or that any good will come of continuing correspondence under present circumstances, or holding further communication with the head of a State who so totally ignores his responsibilities, and persists in putting everything in an incorrect light. The wishes and intentions of Government have been clearly expressed to his Highness, and until he adopts a different course of action, or it is the desire of his Excellency and of Government to speak in more decided terms, it will, I think, be better to avoid any further interchange of letters.

State of affairs above the Passes.

15. There is, I regret to say, no improvement since the date of Colonel Loch's report in the state of affairs in the Khelat Districts above the Passes. His Highness the Khan, apparently hard pressed for money, has been inflicting heavy fines wherever he saw even the slightest pretext offered for his doing so. This has greatly increased the feelings of discontent that previously existed, and brought affairs to a very critical state, causing rumours to be very common of a probable general outbreak against his authority. At Khelat there are two parties, each striving for power and influence with the Khan. The one, said to be strongest, consists of Naib Mahomed Khan Ex-Wukeel, Abdoolla Jan, a merchant, Mahomed Hyat Kazi of Bagh, and Mohsim commanding the Wuffadar Pultun. With them was the Wuzeer Atta Mahomed, but he is now in disgrace, and it is said the Khan publicly turned him out of the Durbar, on the Wuzeer refusing to give in his accounts to an inferior subordinate, who belongs to the other party. The latter is formed of Fukkeer Mahomed, commanding the Jungee Pultun, Abdool Azeez Naib of Bagh, his son Fukkeer Mahomed, and Shekh Faiz Mahomed Mustowfee Naib of Mustoong. There is great jealousy and enmity between these two parties. They are all working more for their own selfish ends than for the good of their country and their ruler, with the exception of Atta Mahomed, who showed himself really sincere in his endeavour to see the wishes of the British Government carried out, and to faithfully discharge the duties entrusted to him. For this he has been disgraced. He is the son of the old Darogah Gool Mahomed, who was in former times and to the last day of his life the most bitter opponent of the British, so that the enlightened and friendly action of the son is all the more creditable to him. Almost all the others are men of indifferent stamp and origin, and they know that were good government re-established, they would not hold their present places for a day. It is their object, therefore, to prevent the Khan becoming reconciled with the British Government.

Jalawan.

16. In Jalawan, the southern portion of Beloochistan, the Sirdars continue to hold aloof from the Khan, though they, nearly all, including Sirdar Ali Khan of Lus Beyla, paid their respects to the Wuzeer Atta Mahomed when he was in their country in the spring. Meer Noordeen, the head of the Minguls, and the most unsettled character in the whole country, positively refuses to visit Khelat, though repeatedly summoned by the Khan, and tempted by offers of recognition of him as chief Sirdar of Jalawan. Ali Khan, son of the Ex-Jam of Beyla, holds possession of the territory his father possessed, but not strongly. He is very far from popular, and has quarrelled with his uncle Meer Noordeen Mingul. He agreed to pay a small tribute to his Highness the Khan, but I have not heard of any having been actually forwarded to Khelat. Meer Gohur Zehri still remains in open rebellion, and harasses people passing up and down the Moollah Pass. Fukkeer Mahomed Bezunjo, Naib of Kedj, governs that province for the Khan, but sends him as little of the revenue as he can. There is deadly feud between the Bezunjos and the Minguls. This the Khan tried to work in hopes of weakening one or both, but neither of the tribes agreed to his proposals.

Sarawan.

17. In Sarawan there is grave discontent. The Khan's openly displayed hostility to the Summalani Minguls, who in 1872 he had himself employed against the Muzzeranee Murrees, has thoroughly estranged them from him. While the harsh conduct of the Naib of Moostung towards the several tribes living in that neighbourhood has raised a feeling of discontent, which only needs opportunity and a determined leader to turn into open rebellion.

Sirdar Moollah Mahomed Raisani.

18. Moollah Mahomed Raisani, the premier Sirdar of Sarawan, has never left his place of voluntary exile in Seebee, and has of late been very harshly treated by the Khan. The latter has confiscated all but 80 bunds* of this Sirdar's estates at Kunnuk, near Moostung. The Sirdar, deeply chagrined at this, has refused to keep the 80. This action of the Khan is directly opposed to the terms concluded by me on his behalf with the Sirdars at Jacobabad in 1872, but the Khan justifies it on the plea that the Sirdar obstinately refuses to resume his position at his Highness' Court, or to return to his hereditary estates. The Sirdar, on the other hand, excuses himself on the ground that he can place no faith in the Khan's sincerity, or in his protestations of revived friendly feeling.

* A bund means a piece of ground, varying in area from one to three or four acres, enclosed by raised mounds, within which the water is confined after rainfall. The water is thus made to soak into the ground, and directly the surface of the latter is dry, it is ploughed and seed sown. One supply of water thus given is sufficient to produce a moderate crop; second rain before maturity ensures a hurry one.

19. The Sirdar has written two piteous appeals to me on the subject of the hardships he has to endure owing to the Khan's disregard of the terms of the agreement entered into at Jacobabad, and which he (the Sirdar) states with a good show of justice were guaranteed by the British Government, but, in accordance with the letter I addressed to Moollah Mahomed on my return from Calcutta, I have not considered myself justified in sending any reply to either, and await his Excellency's instructions on the subject.

20. One of the Sirdar's appeals to Colonel Loch is so well worded, and so properly put, that I append it to this report. In justice to him I must state that everything he says is perfectly correct. He was warned, as has been reported to his Excellency on former occasions, to abstain from promoting disorders in Kutchee, immediately adjacent to the British border, as well as to prevent his followers from engaging in any. To this advice he has scrupulously adhered. But no benefit has accrued to him, because the changed relations with the Government of Khelat prevent any efforts being made in his behalf, or his representations being recognised.

21. Sirdar Guzzun Khan duly paid his respects to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, at Jacobabad, in February. This had been brought about by Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Gazee Khan, in accordance with the instructions laid down in Government of India letter No. 16 P., of the 5th January. He also arranged for restitution by the Murrees and Boogtees of the cattle plundered from near Kuttun in August last, or for equivalent in money. Mr. Gladstone, Assistant Commissioner of Rajanpoor, to whom this duty was entrusted, carried out Captain Sandeman's instructions patiently and carefully, and on the whole treated the case very judiciously. The award was perhaps more liberal than the Murrees deserved, and it seemed almost a humorous view to take of the question when, as justification for the lowness of the compensation fixed, it was alleged that a number of the cattle originally stolen were again plundered from the robbers; many were in a poor state at the time of the robbery, and died in the hills; some were calves, and some were eaten by the robbers at the time. I do not see that any of the reasons above assigned lessen the loss to the owners of the cattle, or that the fact of the robbers not having realised the full value of the property stolen takes off from their responsibility for the acts of violence they had committed. I did not, however, wish to be too hypercritical, and bearing in mind the desire of his Excellency that all previously existing differences and difficulties should be smoothed away as soon as possible, I accepted and approved the award, requesting Captain Sandeman to convey my thanks to Mr. Gladstone for the care and pains he had taken in the matter.

Murree tribe.

22. I had pointed out to Captain Sandeman, both when that officer joined me at Jacobabad, and afterwards by letter, that the Murree Sirdar Guzzun Khan having made the amende required of him, to Colonel Loch, and the restoration of the cattle plundered from near the Sind border being disposed of, he (Captain Sandeman) was at liberty to carry out the remainder of the course laid down by the Government of India, viz., to make such arrangements as would seem best to induce the Murrees and Boogtees to abstain from predatory inroads into the district of Kutchee, in the same manner as they had been doing towards the Punjab, and to employ the money assigned at the Conference at Mittunkote in making those tribes remain quiet in their hills, and on friendly terms with their neighbours. Captain Sandeman held that to enable him to do this, it was necessary that the tribes between which at that time there were interchanges of hostilities should meet together in some selected place, and that Colonel Loch and he should endeavour to settle their differences. Without entirely assenting to the principle of this, I pointed out that the only two tribes with which the Murrees were then at issue were the Summulani Minguls* and the Dhoombkees at Lehree, in Kutchee; and that I would cause them to be summoned to come to Phat, in the Boogtee Hills, where he and Colonel Loch would meet them. The season, however, was so far advanced that the Summalani Minguls were on the move to the highlands, and for that and other reasons which they adduced, they respectfully asked to be excused; the meeting had therefore to be deferred. The Dhoombkee question was of the least importance, and could easily be settled at any time, so that was not entertained either.

Arrangements to be made with the Murrees.

* These reside during the summer above the Passes, but descend in the winter to feed their flocks in Kutchee.

23. As the Khelat diaries told of Murree raids in Kutchee, and further intended ones on a large scale, I on the 20th May called on Captain Sandeman to report what measures he had adopted to keep the Murrees within their own hills, and from such unwarrantable acts of violence as had been described. Captain Sandeman, in his reply No. 70, dated 29th May (submitted to Government with my letter No. 468, dated 22nd June), stated that he never understood that Government contemplated my (his) giving "the Murrees "a large sum of money merely to keep quiet," and further on—"I understand the Government of India, in the last-"named letter (No. 16 P., dated 5th January) to dis-"tinctly rule that, in extending service to the Murree "clan for the protection of Khelat† from Murree inroads, "it was to be given on the same understanding and on "the same principle as the service given to the clan for the Punjab border; in short, that the entire service was to be amalgamated."

† Sic. in orig.—This should have been "Kutchee" or "Khelat territory, adjacent "to the Murree Hills." Captain Sandeman is certainly not required to bring about the protection of Khelat, or to engage in any of the affairs of that State; indeed, he is specially to deal with the Murrees and Boogtees direct, irrespective of, and entirely apart from, the Khan or Government of Khelat.

24. Captain Sandeman quite misunderstood my meaning. I did not intend to convey that he was merely to give a large sum of money to the Murrees to keep them quiet, but that he was to use the large sum of money placed at his disposal in subsidising that clan, and employing them in such manner as he deemed best adapted for the object in view, which I maintain is to make them abstain from plundering in the plains of Kutchee and parts of Khelat territory adjoining their hills, in the same manner as they abstained from plundering and acts of violence on the Punjab frontier.

25. This is plain and clear, and will lead to no other complications; and if the Murrees can withhold their hands from outrage on the Punjab side for a very much smaller amount of subsidy than that proposed to be given to them for the other side of their hills, it is intended that the extra sum allotted should be devoted to that object.

26. But Captain Sandeman goes further, and, according to his view, he is to have communication and dealings with all and every of the tribes of Beloochistan, Brahoee, or other, and hold councils in whatever part of that country he deems necessary, citing the procedure of the late General Jacob years ago as the grounds on which he would propose to act. I need hardly say that this appears to me to be directly opposed to the wishes of Government. The circumstances are totally changed. In the times quoted, friendly relations and open communication existed with the ruler of Khelat, and the Murrees were regarded then as amenable to that Sovereign's rule. Now relations have been broken off with the Khelat Government, and it has been decided to deal with the Murree and Boogtee tribes entirely apart from the Khan.

27. If Captain Sandeman's view were adopted it would lead to most embarrassing complications with the Khelat State, and endless difficulties and differences with the numerous tribes of Beloochistan, many of whom spend half the year above the Passes, far out of reach, and over whom we can have no possible control as matters now stand.

28. I addressed Captain Sandeman in the spirit of the above remarks in my letter No. 460 A, dated 18th June, which is before Government, and I have recently heard from him by telegram that he has not up to the present time expended a rupee of the extra subsidy on the Murrees.

29. The conduct of that tribe throughout the past summer has been most outrageous and insolent as regards Kutchee. They have repeatedly raided in that district, killing unoffending people, and carrying off large quantities of cattle. This has been done as if in open contempt of the British Government, for it must be, and was well known to them, that it was intended to deal favourably with them. It would go to show that they don't care for the favour of, and payments from, the British Government, as long as they can command rich booty from their immediate neighbours. These are not the results of any intertribal quarrels, but simply arise from the insatiate love of plundering possessing these people, and the assurance they feel they may carry it on with comparative impunity. The principal actors in these raids are the Bijarani Murrees, under their Chief Kurrum Khan; but some of almost all the other sections have joined, and even Boogtees have been reported to be engaged. The Chief of all the Murrees, Guzzun Khan, who is in our pay, is said to receive his regular share of all the booty but this at present has not been absolutely confirmed.

Conduct of the Murrees.

30. The reckless daring they display is almost incredible. One of the raids committed by them was on the Juttoees near Shoorun, a place on the opposite side of Kutchee, so that they had to cross and recross that broad plain. Fortunately the Khan's troops were more active than usual, and interrupted them on their return, punishing them fairly. But this, having been mainly from their own carelessness, has only made them more determined, and very recently five thousand of them cleared off immense numbers of cattle from the immediate neighbourhood of Dadur, returning to their hills scatheless. The people in Kutchee, dreading these onslaughts, are begging foran asylum in Sind, and if this state of affairs continues much longer the country will assuredly be deserted. One party of Murrees ventured as far south as to come between Bagh and Bushoree, and as this is approaching the Sind border, I have been compelled to direct the Commandant of the frontier to send patrols in that direction, in the hope that some of the bands may be fallen in with, to meet the punishment they deserve, and that they may be taught to keep clear of the British frontier.

31. The Boogtees are in an unfortunate state, broken up, and dismembered as a clan, quarrelling and traducing each other. It is thought by Captain Sandeman that this is due to the incompetency of the Chief Goolam Murteza. But knowing him and his people so well as I do, I am confident this is not the case. It is more correctly owing to differences having been fostered in his clan, and the minor Chiefs having been set against him, while, whenever they choose to dispute his authority, they are given ready refuge by the Murrees, whose object it is to make the Boogtees as weak as possible. Goolam Murteza is undoubtedly suffering greatly from mental disorder, but this is simply disquietude brought on by the knowledge of the powerful intrigues being worked against him. So far from encouraging the idea of his abandoning the Sirdarship, we should do everything we can to encourage and support him. His disquietude would then rapidly disappear; he would soon become again the man he was a short time ago; and his tribe would once more rally round him. If disregard of his authority involved loss of our favour there would very shortly be less of it shown. He is a young man yet. I can recollect him without a hair on his face, and is naturally a fine manly one to boot (sic). But at present he hesitates to speak out boldly. If he would only do so all would soon be set to rights, and could he but feel confident of full and thorough support I am sure he would.

32. His condition and that of his tribe will have my first and most careful attention on my visit to the frontier in December next, and I trust that, with Captain Sandeman's assistance, a more healthy state of affairs both for Goolam Murteza and the tribe may be brought about. His eldest son, Shabaz Khan, is a prisoner in Bukkur Fort for a grave outrage committed by him near one of the Sind frontier outposts. Captain Sandeman has asked that he may be forgiven and released, with a view to his installation as Chief in place of his father. But I am confident this would be a very grave mistake. Goolam Murteza did ask for the release of Shabaz Khan, but this was under pressure, and without his seeing the evils to himself that would follow. Islam Khan, father of Goolam Murteza, abdicated in favour of his son more than twenty-five years ago, and living with the tribe unemployed and irresponsible, has never ceased to be a serious element of mischief amongst them. With two so situated, the prospects of restoration of unity and concord would be poor indeed. The removal of Islam Khan, who is a most restless intriguer, and most of all against his own son, would be the most fortunate thing that could happen to the tribe.

33. I have just received his Excellency's instructions to release Shabaz Khan, but I have to-day telegraphed earnestly begging that these orders may be allowed to remain in abeyance until I reach the frontier and make further enquiries. It is, I consider, a matter of the greatest importance just now that Goolam Murteza should not be removed, and I trust that my recommendations may meet with his Excellency the Viceroy's approval.

I have, &c.
W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind.

P.S.—The following later news, dated 5th October 1875, has been received from Seebee.

* Moollah Mahomed Raisani.

All the Murree Muccadums sent a messenger to the great* man living here, with the following message: —"We, "Muccadums, have heard that Khodadad Khan has confiscated your lands at Mehem. "We looked upon you as far superior to our own Sirdar; if you order us we will get "ready to fight. It is necessary that you should assemble all the Sarawans, so that "we and the Sarawans may with one accord ("ek ittafak se") create a disturbance; if, "however, the Brahoees will not act in this way, we are with you, and we are ready to "set fire to the country in such a way that it will tire the people to quench it.

Enclosure 6 in No. 2.

F.—Translations of written Agreements given to me by the Sirdars of the Khelat Frontier.

I.

I, Jam Ali Khan, son of Jam Meer Khan, ruler of Lus Beyla, here give under my hand the following:—

That all men inhabiting the territory of Lus Beyla, of whatever caste, shall not in future commit robbery and other crimes in British territory, or in the Khelat territory, or on the roads by which the Kafila merchants travel. If by chance any person should commit such an offence I will without delay seize him, and if the offence has been committed in British territory, hand him over to that Government, and if it should have been committed in the Khan Sahib's territory, will hand him over to the Khan Sahib. Should I not carry out what I have above written, I will be answerable to both Governments.

Dated 13th Rubbee Oolawal 1292. □ Seal of Ali Khan.

II.

I, Sirdar Meer Noordeen Mingul, declare that the Mingul Brahoees shall not in future commit crime and robbery in British territory, or on the roads by which the Kafilas and traders travel, and in the Khelat territory. Should any Mingul Brahoee commit any such robbery or other offence I will apprehend him without delay, and hand him over to the Government in whose territory the crime was committed. Should I fail in carrying out the above, I hereby declare I will be answerable to both Governments.

Dated 17th Rubbee Oolawal 1292. □ Seal of Noordeen.

III.

I, Wuddera Sahib Khan Chootta, declare that no Chootta shall in future commit crime and robbery in the British territory, on the Kafila roads, or in Khelat, and should it so happen that any such offence be committed I will apprehend the offender without delay, and hand him over to the Government in which the crime was committed. Should I fail in carrying out the above, I will be answerable to both Governments.

Dated 17th Rubbee Oolawal 1292. □ Seal of Sahib Khan Chootta.

IV.

We, Shuffee Mahomed, Jubal Oomed Ali, Durya Khan, Abdool Aziz, and other principal Kiddranees, declare that no Kiddranee Brahoee shall in future commit robbery and other crimes in British territory, on the Kafila roads, or in Kelat, and should it happen that any Kiddranee commit such offence we will apprehend the offender, and hand him over to the Government in whose territory the crime was committed. Should we fail in this, we may be held answerable by both Governments.

Enclosure 7 in No. 2.

Translation of letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to Colonel Sir W. L. Mereweather, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, dated 18th Janiadival Sani 1292.

After Compliments.—Sahib Khan Chootta who, after the death of his father, was appointed the Chief of his tribe in the Lus Beyla district, having failed to preserve peace on the Kafila route, and to prevent outrages being committed on traders, has been informed that since bloodshed and violence on the merchants are daily increasing, Jan Muhammad Chootta wulud Wadero Umed Ali has been elected Sirdar of the tribe. Jan Muhammad will attend to his duties on return to the Lus Beyla district. If he happens to address you on any subject concerning the Chootas, be so kind as to receive his petitions and to give orders to the police to make over to him any criminal who may escape into British territory. All else is well.

Enclosure 8 in No. 2.

Translation of letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 7th Rabiool Awul, 1292, A.D. 12th April 1875.

After Compliments.—Your letter regarding the property of Kafilas and British subjects plundered by the malefactors during the last two years, reminding me that in spite of repeated references made to me the robbers have not been arrested and punished, nor has the plundered property been recovered, reached me at a happy moment, accompanied by a statement of the cases of robbery. Its contents were fully impressed on my mind. My generous friend, it is quite true that letters have from time to time been received from you, and for the last six months I have deputed Moollah Atta Mahomed with troops to Jalawan to settle these affairs, and he having reached that place is engaged in carrying out the duty entrusted to him. God willing, under any circumstances, he will seize the robbers and punish them, and recover the stolen property, or its equivalent. The above events have been occasioned by the following circumstances, i.e, of the amount, "fixed in your presence in the year 1872," to be paid on account of losses sustained by Kafilas, a portion has been recovered, and the balance remains with the "budmashes" unpaid up to this day. In order to meet the wishes of the British Government, I gave all my wealth in adjustment of merchants' claims: when the "budmashes" plunder the Kaffilas, and I have to pay for the losses, why should not this class of people feel emboldened and encouraged? The British Government, from a consideration and regard for me, imprisoned the son of Mir Khan Jamote, my great enemy. Although he was under custody sufficiently strict to make escape improbable, he deserted with his family, children, and followers, and is settled again at Lus Beyla. Since then the robbers have become more mischievous. It is now two years that some men who managed and held charge of the revenues of Kutchee, Jalawan, and the Beyla districts, and had to account for lacs of rupees, carried away all my wealth and account books, and have settled free of all anxiety in British territory. From a regard for the British Government, I have been unable to seize them and bring them here. Once before I communicated to you all the particulars of my case, and however anxiously I awaited for a reply. I was not gladdened with one. When I have always considered the British Government as my Sovereign, and under all circumstances made myself humble to them, I do not know what should have prevented an answer being sent to me. With these few lines, therefore, I write to state that you are my friend, my ally, and one upon whom I depend, so it behoves you to address* his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India about the affairs and requirements of my country, and to arrest and send to me the above-named officials in possession of my wealth. Such a course will not fail to be kindly entertained by me. You have been pleased to write that until such time as a real desire and ability is shown by me to manage the duties of a good and really friendly neighbouring Sovereign the British Government, without communicating with me, will make its own arrangements for the protection of its territories, and the lives and property of its subjects. My friend, from the day I have been connected with the British Government as their subordinate, I have observed the same course and policy, and have firmly adhered myself to the Treaty engagements, and I consider myself more friendly and obedient to the British Government than all the other neighbours and friends do, and from this line of conduct I have never departed, nor will ever do so hereafter. Besides this, three of my servants are in custody there, and at the interview at Sukker, I reminded his Excellency the Viceroy, when his Excellency observed that after some time arrangements would be made on the subject, but up to this time I am anxiously awaiting for the fulfilment of that promise. No sign, however, has yet been visible tending to their release. 50,000

* In the original "Mootaraz," to "entreat or beg."

Rupees were annually paid to me from the British Treasury in return for transit dues. At Shahpoor I told you that by this allowance I suffered a loss of Rs. 90,000. It is now three years that nothing has been settled about this matter. You might then judge whether such a state of things is due to kindness, or want of kindness on the part of the British Government. All else is well, &c.

Enclosure 9 in No. 2.

No. 1246 of 1875, Political Department.

From the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to the Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

Political Superintendent's Office, Jacobabad,
13th April 1875.

SIR,

IN submitting the accompanying report from Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, for the past year, I think it will be best to give a short résumé of all that has taken place during that period on the frontier.

2. It will be remembered that at the close of my report for 1873–74, his Highness the Khan's representatives in Kutchee had by various means managed to cause such dissension amongst the Rhinds that they finally divided into two parties, one supporting Taj Mahomed, and the other Wuderah Imaum Buksh, and that his Highness' officials giving their support to the former, made Imaum Buksh act in having put his slave Dattoo to death, the ostensible reason for marching a force to Shorun, and carrying the old Sirdar off to Bagh a State prisoner. The policy of his Highness' officials and the Ex-Wukeel Mahomed Khan at that time being to alienate one section of the tribe from the other. Extreme measures could not well have been taken against the Sirdar without disgracing the Bungulzaies, who were then in the Ex-Wukeel's pay, as their Sirdar's cousin was the wife of Imaum Buksh Khan, and mother of the young Rhind Chief. The Wuderah, shortly after his arrival at Bagh, sent 2,000 Rupees and a horse as a present to his Highness' officials, but not satisfied with this, they fined the Wuderah Rs. 10,000, and on his refusing to pay, they announced their intention of levying the fine on the Rhinds and Lusharees, who were well disposed to Sirdar Imaum Buksh, and in consequence of this threat, as shown in my last year's report, many of the former left Shorun under their Chiefs Wahidad and Goolab Khan, and requested an asylum in British territory; this being refused them, they wrote to the Boogtee Sirdar, Goolam Murtaza, to allow them to settle in the Sungseela Valley, but this at my advice was also denied them, and they eventually pitched their tents near Dhoor Mahomed Jumali's fort close to the British border. It would appear, however, that before the Rhinds left Shorun, Wahidad and some of the other Chiefs had gone to Khelat, and had had an interview with his Highness the Khan, when Wahidad acknowledged to his Highness that he (Wahidad) had been the instigator of the slave Dattoo's death, and that he had come purposely to request his Highness to do what he pleased with him (Wahidad), but to release his Sirdar, Imaum Buksh, and not to allow his officials in Kutchee to oppress his tribe as they were then doing. His Highness replied that as Wahidad had given himself up he would not punish him, but that he would attach all the slave Dattoo's property, and his Highness gave Wahidad a letter to the Naib of Bagh purporting to contain instructions that he and the other officials were to refrain from oppressing the Rhinds, but how far these instructions, if they were ever given, were carried out, will be understood from the fact that after the receipt of this letter Ruza Mahomed, by order of the Kazi of Bagh, turned all the people, who were looking after the Rhinds' wheat fields near Shorun, out of them, had the crops reaped, and appropriated the grain, the value of which amounted to about 6,000 Rupees.

3. During the time the Rhinds lived near Dhoor Mahomed Jumali's fort, it was reported to me that Wahidad, the Rhind Chief, and a son of Sunjar Ramazaies, intended attacking the Mugzees in Kutchee and thus create a disturbance, but on my remonstrating with the Chiefs, and explaining to them what the consequences of such a step would be, they gave up the idea and put a stop to all further proceedings.

4. On one occasion the Rhinds attacked a Kafila of grain consigned to Buniahs in British territory, on the plea that the grain which was being brought from Shorun was that which had been taken from them by Ruza Mahomed, and that therefore it belonged to them, and they had a right to it. On being informed of this, an armed party was at once despatched with orders to arrest the Chiefs; this was done, and they were brought into Jacobabad and detained there until full restitution of the plundered property was made to the Buniahs.

5. His Highness, having a very old grudge against Dhoor Mahomed Jumali Sirdar, tried to prove that he was the instigator of this raid, but such was not the case, as he and Aitabar Khan Rhind, Ressaldar of the Belooch Guides, were the first persons to give me intimation of what had taken place.

6. The old Rhind Sirdar, Imaum Buksh, was released in May and allowed to return to Shorun after having promised to pay a fine of Rupees 15,000, and having paid up the first instalment and promising to pay the remainder after the first wheat harvest.

7. In August, Wahidad, the Rhind Chief, attacked Ruza Mahomed, and severely wounded him, also a woman named Cowrah, a "Jutnee," whose husband was arrested at Larkana on a charge of robbery; she managed to escape with Ruza Mahomed, with whom she is now living. A relative of Ruza Mahomed's shot Wahidad, who almost immediately died of his wounds, and on his death the Rhinds lost by far the best and boldest of their leaders. Ruza Mahomed (who now holds some post under the Kazi of Bagh) and the woman Cowrah were implicated in the above-mentioned theft committed in the Larkana district, and their extradition was demanded, but up to the present no notice has been taken of it.

8. In July, Ali Khan, son of Meer Khan, Ex-Jam of Lus Beyla, and Ibrahim Khan made their escape from Hyderabad, and reached Lus Beyla, where they were joyously received both by Ali Khan's uncle, Noordeen Mingul, the Jalawan Sirdar, and by the people, and it was supposed at one time that this might have been made a fitting opportunity for a general rising of the tribes, but such proved entirely without foundation. Shortly after the escape of Ali Khan, Ashiat, wife of the Ex-Jam, and sister of Noordeen, died in Hyderabad from fever.

9. On his Highness the Khan hearing of the arrival of Jam Ali in Lus Beyla, he sent for Darogah Atta Mahomed, and ordered him to start at once for Lus Beyla, but the Darogah declined to do so, saying he could put no faith in his Highness' intentions, as his Highness did not trust any of his officials. For this his Highness deprived Atta Mahomed of his Naibship and allowances.

10. In September his Highness wrote to Sirdar Noordeen, asking him to come to Khelat, but the Sirdar declined going unless he was permitted by the Khan to be accompanied by the other Chiefs of his tribe. This his Highness did not approve of, and in the same month his Highness appointed Attah Mahomed Wuzeer, and ordered him to proceed to the Jalawan country with a force of 600 infantry and cavalry, also two small hill guns, in addition to irregular levies, for the purpose of making arrangements for the safe transit of Kafilas through the Raj route; also to arrest and hand over to the British authorities a certain number of criminals whose extradition had been requested at various times; the new Wuzeer was also to proceed into the Zehree and Kozdar districts. On his being appointed Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed wrote to all the Belooch and Brahoee Sirdars, telling them that the future government of the country would be conducted in the same manner as in the reign of the late Nusseer Khan, and to be re-assured. He then proceeded into the Zehree country as far as Sohrab, where he halted, and sent to the Zurukzai Chief, Gohur Khan, to come and make his obeisance to his Highness, but Gohur Khan declined until he saw how the other Chiefs would behave.

11. In October his Highness wrote and ordered Noordeen Mingul to make good the balance of the Kafila plundered in 1872 by the Minguls whilst passing through the Raj route, but the Sirdar sent no reply to this. His Highness then invited Noordeen to come to Khelat and to bring the Ex-Jam's son, Ali Khan, with him, and that they would both receive dresses of honour and would be allowed to return; but if the Sirdars could not come, then his Highness would send Atta Mahomed his Wuzeer to Kozdar to pay Noordeen a visit of condolence after the death of his sister. Noordeen wrote in reply that when your Highness's Wuzeer arrives I will come with Azaad Khan Nowsherwani, Youssuf Khan Mahomed Hussein, the Bijonjaos and Shahezaies and visit him, relative to the visit of the Jam's son. His Highness on this ordered Atta Mahomed, Meer Kaira, and Mosum, commanding the Nurwai Regiment, to march with a force to Kozdar, to make arrangements for the safe transit of Kafilas by the Raj route, and to recover the money due by Noordeen, and if the Sirdar refused to pay he was to attack him.

12. Darogah Atta Mahomed proceeded to Kozdar on the 2nd October with the Nurwai Regiment, cavalry and artillery, and sent to Sirdar Noordeen to make his salaam; the Sirdar replied that if the Wuzeer would send his son and the commandant of the forces as hostages he would come, but not otherwise, and at the same time the Sirdar wrote to Jam Ali Khan of Lus Beyla for assistance in case of his being attacked.

13. After this, Sirdar Noordeen and the Chiefs, having heard that under the guise of friendly settlement treachery would be used, collected their forces, and Noordeen asked Gohur Khan Zurukzai to join him, but the latter, not trusting the former, declined to leave his strong position at Meer Ghul, andsuggested that if he (Meer Noordeen) was really in earnest, he had better join him with what forces he could collect. In October Pahur Khan Sassoolee, who entered British territory in the beginning of last year with 200 armed followers, and whose extradition was demanded from his Highness the Khan, made his salaam to the new Wuzeer, and joined his camp, but up to the present, so far as I can learn, no notice has been taken by his Highness or his officials of the outrage committed by Pahar Khan and his tribe, and it is not believed that his Highness will attempt to arrest and hand over to the British this or any other equally influential Chief. It was even reported on reliable authority that when the Sassoolee Chief's extradition was demanded, his Highness instructed Aitabar Khan, the Naib of Kozdar, to give them the following message:—" You Brahoees think the British Government kind and just; " they insisted upon my surrendering my most trusted and confidential servants; your " extradition is now demanded, and this will be followed up by the British Government " insisting in my giving up Chiefs of the highest rank, such as Fukkeer Mahomed and " others; if you want to save yourselves look to me and do as I direct."

14. Darogah Atta Mahomed on his arrival at Kozdar sent people of position to offer his condolence to Meer Noordeen Mingul on the death of his sister. They remained at Wudh, whilst Noordeen himself proceeded and met the Darogah seven miles from Kozdar, who asked Noordeen to pay his respects to his Highness the Khan, and to assist him in making arrangements for the safe passage of Kafilas by the Raj route. Noordeen replied that he had committed no act against the Khan for which he required to make his salaam, that if his Highness would settle the grievances of the Sarawans, Hussanees, and Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan, he would do what was required of him. The Darogah did his utmost to induce Noordeen to visit Khelat, but he declined. On being asked why he declined, Noordeen produced a letter from Fukkeer Mahomed Bezonjao, Sirdar, advising him not to go, as he would be arrested, and this letter was sent by Atta Mahomed to his Highness the Khan, who in reply desired the Wuzeer and Noordeen to demand Mekran revenue from Fukkeer Mahomed, and if he declined payment, they were to attack the Bezonjaos. The Minguls have always been inimical to the Bezonjaos, and would doubtless assist Atta Mahomed, but it is supposed the Ex-Wukeel, Naib Mahomed Khan, now at Khelat, will do his utmost to prevent any hostile demonstrations in Kutchee, and thus support a statement lately circulated that the Khan and his Sirdars are much attached to each other, but that misunderstandings were originated and are still encouraged by the old Wuzeer, Wullee Mahomed, now residing in Jacobabad.

15. In January, Sirdar Noordeen Mingul wrote to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani stating that he had got what he wanted from the Khan through Darogah Atta Mahomed, and advised Moolla Mahomed to visit the Darogah when he comes to Kutchee. It is supposed, however, that Moolah Mahomed will not act on this advice.

16. The last that has been heard of Darogah Atta Mahomed was that he was near the Hubb River. Meer Noordeen Mingul is with him, and it is mainly through his support that the Khan's troops have been able to proceed into the Choota country.

17. The Bezunjaos were asked by Darogah Atta Mahomed to accompany him, but they declined, unless the Darogah agreed to attack the Minguls at Wudh. The Darogah refused, and has been able to utilize the Minguls in carrying out what he has been ordered to do. After this, Darogah Atta Mahomed wrote to his Highness that he has made Nowsherwan Choota and other prisoners, and had thus performed the duty he had been sent on, and solicited permission to return to Khelat. In reply to this his Highness wrote that his real motive and desire was to repossess himself of Lus Beyla, and that when he (the Wuzeer) had done this he would have carried out all his heart's desire. It is rumoured that, through Sirdar Noordeen's instrumentality, Jam Ali of Lus Beyla has made his salaam to Darogah Atta Mahomed, and that there were great rejoicings at Khelat on these tidings being received.

18. The Wuzeer has fined the Chootas, Bundijos, and other tribes Rupees 80,000 to cover expenses of the force sent to coerce them, and compensation for plundered property. This money has not yet been paid, and will be most difficult to realise.

19. It will thus be seen that the new Wuzeer has been doing his very best to carry out his Highness' orders, and to restore quiet and order throughout the country; but considering the dislike all the Chiefs, both of the Sarawans and Jalawans, have to his Highness, and how they distrust every act of his, also the avaricious disposition of the Khan, who will stop at no act of injustice or cruelty to obtain money, it is not for a moment to be believed that any thing like order or good government can be found in a country with such a ruler.

20. It is only in January last (1875) that 30 of his Highness' regiment at Baghwana deserted to Lus Beyla, and 30 others were confined to prevent them deserting. The troops in Kutchee were also much disaffected, not having received pay for six months A disturbance also took place in his Highness the Khan's regiment at Khelat. This was. brought about by half the regiment of Affghans refusing to serve under Mahomed Yar Khan, a Native of Moostoong, and appointing Meer Bux Khan of Shoawah to command them. His Highness wished to disband the regiment, and ordered them to give up their arms and accoutrements, but the mutineers took up a position on a hill and refused to give up their arms until they had received the arrears of pay due to them, and his Highness finally compromised the matter by paying the troops the pay due to them.

21. The Commandant of the troops in Kutchee, Fukkeer Mahomed, and the other officials are not on the best of terms. Some months ago he (Fukkeer Mahomed) charged Kazi Mahomed Hyat, Taj Mahomed Rhind, and Abdool Azeez, Naib, with having embezzled 8,000 Rupees of the fine inflicted on Sirdar Imaum Buksh Rhind, placing the two first under close surveillance, and taking over charge of Kutchee himself, and the Kazi was eventually fined Rs. 50,000, which his Highness made him pay. Many complaints have been made to his Highness against his officials in Kutchee having taken bribes. Fukkeer Mahomed has been directed to tell every one who has been fined to send in their petitions, each case will then be carefully investigated, and if the fine has not been credited to his Highness' Treasury, the official who ordered the fine will be called upon to make the amount good.

22. It has also been reported to his Highness that although about 80,000 or 90,000 Rupees have been collected at various times in Kutchee during the past year and sent to Khelat, that his Highness' officials and the Buniahs who took the contracts for the revenue of Kutchee embezzled the revenue to a great extent, and it is stated the Ex-Wukeel, Mahomed Khan, and Naib Peer Jan, his son, are implicated in this charge, and that Nur Khan, who was formerly the Head Munshi in the Political Superintendent's Office at Jacobabad, and afterwards entered the service of his Highness, has informed against them.

23. In April 1874, the Zurukzaies, being joined by the Sallanees and Lotanees, attempted to organize a rebellion, and invited Noordeen Mingul Sirdar to join them, in the hope that if he did so there would be a general rising all over the country; the Mingul Sirdar however held aloof. The principal cause of complaint existing amongst the Zurukzaies has been brought about by his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in this way. Gohur Khan Zehree Zurukzai considers that he has a right to be elected Chief of the Jalawans in place of Sadaat Khan, who has been nominated as such by Mai Noor Beebee, mother of the late Chief Taj Mahomed, with the sanction and approval of his Highness the Khan. Both of these Chiefs are cousins of the late Chief Taj Mahomed. On the death of Taj Mahomed, some eight years ago, it will be recollected that his Highness was persuaded by many of his councillors to appoint Mustapha Khan, Chief of the Jalawans, and was only dissuaded from doing so by the good advice given him by the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. When Mustapha Khan died, some four years ago, his Highness approved of Mai Noor Beebee nominating Sadaat Khan, Chief, although his Highness was well aware that he was incapable, and in every way unfitted for the position, and that the Zurukzaies wished for Gohur Khan to be elected Chief, because his Highness knew that Sadaat Khan being nominated Chief of the Jalawans would cause dissatisfaction amongst the tribes, which in the end might lead to further ill-feeling and severance, and thus prevent the Jalawans uniting together in the event of any attempt being made by the Sarawan Chiefs to create a general rebellion. In consequence of the bad feeling existing on account of this disputed claim, Gohur Khan and his followers in May last seized the Sohnida Ghat, and allowed no one to pass, he and his forces subsisting on grain taken from his Highness' granaries. Gohur Khan then took up a position at Hussoon in the Moolah Pass, and actually started to close the Pass against Peer Buksh Turazai, Naib of Gundava, who being on his way down the Moolah and hearing of Gohur Khan's movements, promised Chakur Khan Guttuck, Chief, 1,000 Rupees to escort him safely through the Pass. When they reached Seer Lukka, hearing that Gohur Khan had closed the Pass, the Naib sent to Khelat for 200 infantry, and Gohur Khan was then joined by Pahar Khan with 300 Sassoolees, but on hearing that 200 of his Highness' infantry had left Khelat to attack him, he with 600 men took up a position at Guzun. His Highness' infantry encamped at Noogranah in the Zehree Valley, and were joined by the Moolah detachment. A skirmish took place between Gohur Khan's forces and his Highness' troops in June, in which 11 of his Highness' Sepahis were killed and 16 wounded. Reinforcements were sent for, and the Brahoees then retired on the Lohinda Ghat, which they held.

24. Jungul Khan Mingul (of Meer Noordeen's Kuliffa) collected the tribe in Baghwan-Valley to assist Gohur Khan, and Syud Khan, Chakur Khan's brother, with 200 Sassoor lees, also joined the Zurukzaies. After this the Brahoees attacked a detachment of his Highness' the Khan's troops at Noogranah, and killed eight of them, with a loss of four on their own side, and the escort being defeated, returned to Khelat; this detachment was escorting supplies to the troops at Noogranah. The Brahoees then blocked the roads leading to Khelat, and so cut off all communication between them and the troops at Noogranah. In June, Hybut Khan Summalani Mingul with 100 men also joined Gohur Khan's forces, and Chakur Khan Juttuck, not having been paid the Rs. 1,000 promised him by Naib Peer Buksh, also aided the Zurukzaies.

25. Naib Peer Buksh Turukzai and Mosum, commanding the Nurwin regiments, endeavoured to enter into negociations, but Gohur Khan and his people would not accept any terms; after this his Highness' officials, assisted by Kaiser Khan Moosanee, Sirdar, and Mai Noor, Beebee, so arranged that a truce should take place, and a number of the Chiefs went to Sultan Arrafeen to meet the Naib, with the intention of tendering their allegiance to his Highness and receive "killuts"; in the evening, however, after partaking of the meal prepared for them, Mosum, the commanding officer of his Highness' troops surrounded the tent and made prisoners of the under-mentioned Chiefs, notwithstanding both parties had made solemn affirmation on the "Koran" not to attempt treachery:—Muddut Khan Panderhanee, Sirdar, Chakur Khan Juttuck, Sirdar, Khyr Mahomed Barunzai, Rummul Khan Lotani, a son of Budai Juttuck, Abdool Rufsack Nechari, and 21 other persons of lesser note, and they were informed that they would not be released until the Brahoees had dispersed and returned to their homes, but Gohur Khan and Syud Khan, Chakur Khan's brother declined these terms. The Brahoee prisoners were then taken to Khelat, and his Highness wished to punish them severely, but Mosum remonstrated with his Highness, as he said the Sirdars had only been brought to make their obeisance to his Highness. They were, however, detained as prisoners. Gohur Khan then took up a position near Peer Kullunder on the Suddow Hill Truck, and he and the leading men wrote to Noordeen saying that his Highness had through treachery made many of the minor Jalawan Chiefs prisoners, and requested Noordeen as the principal Chief to assist them, but Noordeen was not disposed to espouse their quarrel.

26. Moolla Atta Mahomed's first act after he was appointed Wuzeer was to advise his Highness to release all the Jalawan Chiefs and other political prisoners, with the exception of Murrum Khan Summalani Mingul. This advice his Highness eventually accepted, and released the Chiefs. The Wuzeer also invited Gohur Khan to come and make his salaam to his Highness the Khan, but this Gohur refused to do, until he saw how the Brahoee Chiefs would act. Gohur Khan after this plundered a Kafila going to his Highness, as well as some presents which were being sent to his Highness by the Mugzee Chief. In November, Atta Mahomed sent a force to attack the Zurukzaies, who had taken to exacting transit fees from all the Kafilas passing through their country, but the position the Zurukzaies held at the Meer Ghat being almost inaccessible, the troops did not get beyond Paisht Khana, where they plundered all the property belonging to Nutwanees and the poorer tribes proceeding to Kutchee, and in retaliation for this the Brahoees plundered all bonâ fide Khelat Kafilas which fell into their hands. Gohur Khan and his people are still in rebellion.

27. It will be remembered that in March last, by order of his Highness the Khan, on a complaint made to him by Sher Dil Muzzaranee Murree against the Summalani Minguls, the whole of the latter's flocks, amounting to about 8,000 to 10,000 sheep, were seized by the Naib of Bagh, 2,000 of them being handed over to Sher Dil Murree, and the remainder confiscated. The Summalanis remonstrated, pointing out that the feud was originally brought about by his Highness himself having ordered them to attack the Muzzaranee Murrees, and it is said his Highness offered to restore the confiscated flocks if the Chiefs would come and make their salaams to him; they, however, fearing treachery, refused and replied they would sooner leave their own country and live with the Doomurs Nawab Summalani Mingul carried off the sheep which had been seized from him by his Highness' orders, also four belonging to his Highness from Cupota,* they were followed by Mosum with the Nurwani regiment and Naib Abdool Luteef without success, and the Summalanis settled down near Shorawak in Affghan territory, and from there they made a raid on Zehree and carried off 1,000 sheep and 50 camels, the property of his Highness, amongst the latter were 20 double-humped camels, which had cost his Highness about 300 rupees each. His Highness' infantry refused to leave the fort to attack the Minguls, or to go in pursuit. The Minguls continued to raid in the vicinity of Moostoong, and two merchants proceeding to Quetta were robbed of Rupees 700 in cash, and other property near Bund Mobee. After this the Summalani Minguls carried off some flocks of sheep from Koh Maran, about two miles from the town of Kelat; in August last the Minguls returned from Kharan, Nooshky, and Sarawak, and were joined by the Doomurs, and passing through Quetta settled on the Dusht near the Siri Bolan and the Koorluk Pass. His Highness then despatched a strong detachment to Moostoong, and sent a message to Sher Dil Muzzaranee Murree, and the other Murrees residing at Badra, to attack the Summalanis and Doomurs in front, whilst his troops were acting against them in the rear, but Sher Dil did not feel inclined to assist his Highness' troops on this occasion. The Summalani Minguls continued to give much annoyance to his Highness' officials by raiding daily in the direction of Quetta and Moostoong. About 1,500 Brahoees, chiefly Sassoolees and Summalanis, assembled in the beginning of September and came down the Bolan, but owing to the intervention of Azam Shah and other Syuds at Dadur, they did not attack his Highness' troops at Dadur, but passed quietly down the Sunnee and Mull with their families and flocks. In the same month some Rufsool Summalani Minguls attacked and plundered some pilgrims coming down the Bolan, they complained to the Naib of Quetta, who wrote to his Highness the Khan for instructions, and his Highness ordered Abdool Luteef, his Naib, to go with 600 infantry and punish the robbers; the troops came up with the Summalani Minguls close to Dozan, near the Khar Lukka Pass, and in the fight which ensued four Sepahies were killed and six wounded. The Brahoees took up a position on a hill, and the Khan's troops could not touch them. The same Minguls carried off 50 or 60 of his Highness' mares whilst passing down to Kutchee.

28. In January of this year the Murrees killed three of the Summalani Minguls at Mull, and carried off 40 of their sheep, this raid as well as similar ones, which have occurred since the Summalanis came to Kutchee, have been carried out by the Murrees at the instigation of Sher Dil Muzzaranee Murree, who now resides at Mahmoond or Kote Moondai, with Sirdar Kurrum Khan's purah, the Bijaranis, and who has still the old animosity and grudge to pay off. Rahoo Summalani went in pursuit, and did not overtake the raiding party, but by chance came across some Murrees and Dhoombkees near Lehree, and killed one Murree and two Dhoombkees, wounding a third of the latter tribe. The Murrees in retaliation killed four Brahoees, and the Summalanis then under Meer Begh wulud Kadur Buksh, with 450 footmen and 50 Sowars, plundered in the Murree Hills, carrying off 120 sheep, 20 goats and donkeys, and 12 bullocks, besides a koorun of grain. In this raid one Murree was killed. They then took possession of the different passes—Jahee, Gazee, Sarode and Goorak, leading into the Murree Hills, and plundered 13 donkey loads of merchandise going from Lehree to Kahun, about four miles from the latter place. After this the Summalanis carried off 300 sheep from near Tarkote, the property of the Notain Boogtees, who live at Surtag, and are on friendly terms with the Murrees. They after this raided the Murrees at Kote Moondai, carrying off six flocks of sheep and killing one Murree on the first occasion, and carrying off their flocks of sheep on the second. An influential Summalani Mingul, by name Hybutan, was arrested in Kutchee by Naib Abdool Azeez, but he has since been released. When near Bibi Nani on their way home, they were attacked by 1,200 Murrees, who carried off all their clothing, camels, and everything they had, killing 15 of their men. When the Murrees had marched and had got into a narrow gorge in the hills, the Summalanis collected their forces and followed the Murrees, killing 50 of them and recovering all their property, besides all the mares and other property left by the Murrees, who took to flight. It is reported that the last attack on the Summalanis was made without their Sirdar Guzzun Khan's knowledge. The Summalani Minguls and the other Brahoee tribes have not returned to the grazing grounds near Quettah, Moostoong, &c., but are all collected near the Siri Bolan and on the Dusht, and his Highness fearing that a general disturbance amongst the Brahoees may take place, has ordered Fukkeer Mahomed at Bagh to leave a sufficient number of troops in Cutchi and to proceed and join his Highness forthwith; this Fukkeer Mahomed will do, so soon as the Naib of Bagh, Abdool Azeez, who is now collecting the revenue from his Highness' cultivators on the border of the Upper Sind Frontier District, returns to Bagh.

29. Last month, by direction of his Highness, Hazaar Khan Chotai, a Mull Chief, residing near Dadur, and who had aided the Brahoees in the last rebellion against the Khan, was hanged at Bagh. Moolah Jumah was sent to him to tell him that his Highness required his services, and that the assistance he had given the Sarawan Chiefs in the rebellion in 1872 was forgiven him, and that he was to be appointed Thannadar of Haji-ki-Shehr. Hazaar Khan, not suspecting treachery, went with Moolah Jumah to Bagh, where he was received by his Highness' officers with the greatest cordiality, and the next day he was hanged. This act of treachery has enraged the Sarawan Chiefs very much, Alla Dina Khoord, Wuderah, Kadur Buksh Bungulzai, and other Chiefs have sent to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani to take protective measures, stating that if the Khan would not allow a person who had merely aided in the last rebellion to escape, it was self-evident that they (the Sirdars) would not be spared. Moolla Mahomed, however, replied he would not trust Alla Dina Khoord, as no reliance could be placed in him.

30. I have mentioned all these facts seriatim—trivial though they are in themselves,—for by a perusal of this short condensed narrative it will at once be seen how estranged the Khan is from all his Sirdars and people, and that the acts of treachery, such as that last described and which are not unfrequent, widen the breach and increase the bad feeling which has existed for so long between his Highness and his nobles. It is true that by the aid and advice of the new Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, affairs in the Jalawan country appear to have assumed a quieter aspect, but it still remains to be seen whether his Highness will hand over to the British authorities his subjects whose extradition has been demanded on no less than 50 distinct and separate charges, commencing in February 1873, none of which up to the present have met with any attention, and whether the new Wuzeer has sufficient influence and energy to induce the Chiefs to proceed to Khelat and there make their obeisance to his Highness the Khan.

31. About the usual number of Kafilas passed through the various Passes during the year under review, but this was owing to the Kafilas collecting together and coming down in large numbers, and not to any arrangements made by his Highness or his officials for their safe transit.

32. During the last hot season, rain such as has not been known by the oldest persons living fell in the hills, and in Kutchee, swamping many villages and damaging others, and destroying life and property to a very great extent. In July it was reported that 15 men of the Khoords and Dinagani tribes had been killed by hail. The villages of Jellal Khan, Toonda, and Sallzai near Bagh were swept away by the River Gybee, a branch of the Naree, and the villages of Nowrah and Bursheree have been severely damaged. In July a Kafila, consisting of 140 camels laden with grain coming from Kutchee, was caught in a heavy storm, and being unable to proceed for some days, the grain was utterly ruined, and the owners had some difficulty in saving the camels. On the Direct route from Gundava to Khelat.

Larkari Hill, in consequence of incessant rain, large masses of rocks were detached and rolled down, blocking up the Pass. At Shorun a large portion of the town was washed down, killing four persons. The villages of Runja Mooche, and Hya were washed away, eight persons being drowned. The villages of Abad, Nusseerabad, and Manotee were also destroyed by the floods, and his Highness' residence at Bagh is a heap of ruins. The number of flocks and herds, as wells as of camels, washed away and destroyed during the months of July and August is very great, causing great loss and consequent suffering amongst the poorer classes in Kutchee.

33. In November last Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, was ordered to proceed to Jacobabad, and there, in conjunction with the Political Superintendent Upper Sind Frontier, to draw up a report as to the advisability of the Murree country being visited by a party of Sind and Punjab Officials in the manner proposed in 1869. The strength of the party and the route it should take, &c. &c.

34. Captain Sandeman accordingly arrived at Jacobabad on the 3rd November, and the required reports were submitted to the Commissioner in Sind on the 20th of the same month.

35. After this, in accordance with instructions contained in letter No. R. P. from the Secretary to the Government of India to the address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated 5th January 1875, Captain Sandeman was ordered to proceed into the hills and report all circumstances relating to the state of the hill tribes, and when Guzzun Khan, the Murree Chief, could visit the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad. On the 11th of February Captain Sandeman reported that Guzzun Khan was willing to visit Jacobabad and pay his respects to the Political Superintendent, and the Commissioner in Sind's sanction having been accorded on the 28th February, Guzzun Khan, accompanied by 185 Murrees, Imaum Buksh Mazari, Sirdar, and 32 followers, and Jumal Khan Lagari and 30 followers, arrived at Jacobabad; they paid their respects to the Political Superintendent Upper Sind Frontier the following day, and next day they all took their departure for the hills. Captain Sandeman visited the Commissioner in Sind at Jacobabad on the 7th March, when it was arranged that the instructions in paragraph 13 of the above quoted letter should at once, as far as practicable, be carried out, viz., that the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan should be the medium of all intercourse and communication with the Murrees and Boogtee tribes in all their branches, but that he should be under the orders of the Commissioner in Sind, to whom he should report through the Political Superintendent all matters affecting these tribes, and from whom he should receive his instructions, copies of all such reports and instructions being sent to the Punjab Government for information.

36. It was also settled by the Commissioner in Sind that when Guzzun Khan Sirdar had visited the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad, refunded the equivalent plundered from the Kafilas in 1872, and restored the cattle plundered at Kuttun, near the Sind frontier, last August, an arrangement would be made to pay over to the Murrees and Boogtees the subsidy of Rs. 32,000 per annum, recommended at the Mittunkote Conference in March 1870, through Captain Sandeman, with the exception of a sum of Rs. 240 per mensem, which would be paid to the Boogtee Sirdar on account of the 16 Boogtees enrolled in the Belooch Guides by the Political Superintendent.

37. The Boogtees, I regret to say, have not been behaving so well during the past year as they did in 1873–74; this is owing to many of the different sections, such as Futteh Khan and Mewah Khan (Notaees) Roga, Kulpar Hyder, and Hybuttan (Mussoorees), and their followers, being still at variance with their Chief, Goolam Murteza. In the beginning of last year Roga Kulpur, in consequence of a misunderstanding he had with his Sirdar, left the Mutt plain, and he and some of his section went and resided with Futteh Khan Notani. Some time after this, Roga was coming with an armed party to raid some Sind camels, who had gone to Gundoee to collect "peesh," where they were met by the Sirdar's son, Shabaz Khan, who fired on Roga's people, killing one and wounding five of them; this caused an ill-feeling to spring up between Roga and Futtoohul Kulpur, as the latter and his followers were with the Chief's son when the former's people were attacked, and has led to frequent retaliations between these two. This quarrel has, however, been made up by Captain Sandeman, as well as the differences between Goolam Murteza and his Muccadams.

38. Shabaz Khan, the Chief's son, in May last wished to marry a Pathan woman of known bad character, living in the town of Jacobabad, and asked my advice. I explained to him that it was very unbecoming and imprudent of him (a Chief's son) to think of making such an alliance, and I refused to allow it, and wrote to his father accordingly, and received a letter of thanks from him for putting a stop to the marriage. After this, however, and in the face of my order, Shabaz Khan betrothed himself to the woman and paid her father Rs. 3,000 for her, and then requested my sanction to take her to the hills with him, and for permission for her father, two brothers, and her two sisters, children of about eight and ten years of age, to accompany her. This I, of course, refused, and in retaliation for this, I regret to say, Sirdar Shabaz Khan headed a raid on a herd of cattle belonging to the people of Sind, when they were grazing about Goo, in August, and was driving them off, when he was overtaken by a detachment of the Sind Horse from Sooee, who captured the Sirdar and the other Boogtees with him, and recovered all the property. The Sirdar and his companions were all sent to the Bukkur Fort, were they now are in confinement.

39. The old feud between Goolam Murteza and Imam Buksh Mazari Sirdar, still exists, the former accusing the latter of doing everything in his power to alienate his tribe from him and to ruin him, and I confess I think with some reason, although Captain Sandeman puts the whole of the accusations brought by the Boogtee Sirdar down to a diseased brain.

40. When Captain Sandeman and I left Jacobabad in November last we visited Kashmor, where the Mazari and Boogtee Chiefs (the latter accompanied by as many of his Muccadums and Moottaburs as he could bring with him) had been ordered to attend, in the hope of being able to carry out your instructions, and after due inquiry and investigation to settle this long-standing quarrel. Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, was also directed to meet Captain Sandeman and myself there, but unfortunately, owing to Goolam Murteza not being well, he could not meet us, although we waited for him from the 3rd to the 6th December 1874, when Captain Sandeman, in accordance with instructions received, returned to Dera Ghazee Khan, and Major Harrison and I marched to Drukkun on our way to Jacobabad.

41. The evening before we started I was told that the Boogtee Sirdar was on his way to meet me, but owing to indisposition he could only march by very easy stages, and he joined my camp at Kundkote on the 8th December 1874. The Sirdar then looked well in bodily health, but was depressed in spirits, and seemed as if something was preying on his mind, but he would give me no distinct cause for his being in this state, excepting that every one was against him, excepting myself, and that he looked to me for protection from those who were trying to do him harm. He did not openly accuse Imaum Buksh Mazari of attempting to do him harm, but he hinted at it in various ways.

42. When at Kashmor I was informed by one or two reliable persons that Goolam Murteza was afraid to come in, and that none of his Muccadums would, as orders had been sent them by Imam Buksh that they were not to attend, unless they were summoned through him; and the Mazari Chief himself distinctly told me that neither the Boogtee Sirdar nor his Muccadums would come.

43. After this, I was informed that when Imaum Buksh Mazari returned to Rojan from Kashmor he was visited by the Mussoree Muccadums, Hyder and Hybuttan, also Futteh Khan Notanee, and that he presented them with "loongees," and this the Mazari Sirdar owned to me had really taken place, although he was well aware these Muccadums had been directed to accompany their Sirdar to Kashmor to meet Captain Sandeman and myself. It therefore seems to me, to say the least of it, very odd and anything but proper conduct on the part of the Mazari Chief, to have allowed Futteh Khan and the Mussooree chiefs to have visited him, and to have openly rewarded them for their disobedience of their Sirdar's orders, for this act can be looked on in no other light, however the Mazari Sirdar may try to explain it away.

44. I have endeavoured, but in vain, to obtain any documentary proof that the Boogtee Chief's statement regarding Imaum Buksh's intentions against him are correct, but no evidence of a documentary kind can be found, although it is generally felt and believed that there is truth in Goolam Murteza's statements.

45. I have given this detailed account of the Boogtee Sirdar's present condition, as I fear that ere long he may on some pretence or other be deposed, and some one else, who is of a less firm disposition, and possibly better inclined towards the Mazari Sirdar, elected Chief in his place. Captain Sandeman, I am aware, is of opinion that the Boogtee Sirdar is suffering from some mental derangement, but I cannot agree in this idea. The Sirdar's father, Islam Khan, I look on as one of the worst enemies the Boogtee Chief has. A man of cowardly disposition, very avaricious, and a confirmed intriguer, he would, I believe, if paid, be very glad to assist in deposing his son, not caring who succeeded him, so long as he (Islam Khan) benefitted by it at the time, and consequently he is a cat's-paw in the hands of any wily and ambitious man who has the means to satisfy his greed for money.

46. Should it so happen that Goolam Murteza is deposed it will be a most difficult matter to find any one to succeed him, as all his sons, with the exception of Shabaz Khan, now in the Bukkur Fort, are too young to be able to control or advise the tribe, and it certainly would not be advisable to release Shabaz Khan from confinement for the purpose of taking up the position of head of the Boogtee tribe.

47. Owing to the unusually high floods which covered the whole of this district the owners of cattle, camels, and sheep had nowhere left to graze their herds and flocks. Permission had consequently to be given them to take their cattle to the foot of the hills north of the Desert Canal for the purpose of grazing, with most stringent orders that they were on no account to go into the hills for this purpose, but were to feed their herds and flocks within view of the outposts.

48. However, disregarding this order, many of the owners took their cattle into the hills and grazed them with the Mundrees, near the Mutt plain. This, as may be supposed, was too great a temptation, and too good an opportunity for persons possessing the insatiable love of plunder the Murrees and Boogtees have, to allow to slip, so together they formed a raiding party, headed by Futteh Khan Notani's brother, Rogah Kulpar's son, I believe, and a few Muccadums of no note, and carried off about 1,500 head of cattle belonging to the Sind Zemindars, killing one man and wounding another. Unfortunately, the outposts did not receive intimation of this raid until some time after it had occurred, and although they followed up the plunderers as quickly as they could, the raiders with the plunder had got so far into the hills by the time the first detachment reached Gundoee, that further pursuit was useless. No doubt of it that Goolam Murteza's Sowars at Gundoee were implicated, otherwise they would have given earlier intimation to the outposts. Most of the cattle were, I believe, taken to Kahun, the Boogtee Sirdar received a few, amounting to 70 or 80, which he restored to the owners, and Captain Sandeman has arranged with me for the owners of the plundered cattle to be present at Rojan on the 20th of this month, when I trust some arrangement will be made by which either the stolen cattle themselves, or others (if these are not forthcoming) given, or an equivalent in money will be paid.

The restoration of the cattle or payment of the equivalent in money has since been arranged by Captain Sandeman.

The terms agreed to were very favourable to the Murrees and Boogtees concerned in the raid, but under the peculiar circumstances of the case, and the desire to adjust this matter without delay, they were agreed to and approved by me.—W. L. M.

49. Batel Mussooree, Muccadum, with some of his followers and a few Murrees, committed a raid near Seebee at Thulli, carrying off 227 camels belonging to Moolla Mahomed, the Raisani Chief, and Sher Zuman, the Burozai Sirdar; 60 of these were given to the Murrees as their share, and 167 were retained by Batel and his followers. Captain Sandeman has induced Guzzun Khan, Murree Sirdar, to restore those in the possession of the Murrees, and he hopes to be able in a few days to induce Batel to restore those now in the possession of the Mussoorees. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's and Sher Zuman's agents are now at Rojan, at which place Batel is also, with Mr. Gladstone, Deputy Commissioner of Rajanpoor, trying to arrange matters.*

* This question has also been disposed of by restoration of the cattle arranged for by Captain Sandeman.—W. L. M.

50. The Murree and Boogtee Sirdars†, I believe, had nothing to do with this raid, but it is supposed that it was carried out through Kurrum Khan Bijirani at the instigation of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and Captain Sandeman is also of this opinion, see his letter No. 30, dated 21st March 1875.

† Guzzun Khan and Goolam Murteza. —W. L. M.

51. There is a very bad feeling between the Murrees and the Boogtees at present, which probably will end in a fight on a large scale‡ when the crops are reaped in the Murrow plain about a fortnight or three weeks hence. Lately two Rahejas belonging to the Sirdar's own section of the tribe were murdered by the Murrees, which has caused a very bitter spirit between the two tribes.

‡ Has not yet occurred.—W. L. M.

52. In April, Sohrab Khan Dhoombkee, Sirdar at Lehree, at the request of the Ex-Wukeel, Naib Mahomed Khan, offered the Murrees a share of the revenue of the Lehree District if they would abstain from plundering; the Murrees refused, and his Highness' officials after this agreed to give the Murrees Rs. 300 per mensem and the village of Tooneeija,§ if they gave up raiding in Kutchee; this, however, was not accepted. In May the Kazi of Bagh, Hyat Khan, and the Ex-Wukeel, Mahomed Khan, presented Doostrai-Soomrani Bijirani Murree, with a dress of honour and Rs. 80, and sent him to Kurrum Khan Bijirani with a request that he would take service with his Highness, and if so to station his brother Futteh Khan with 27 Sowars at Haji-ki-Shehr. This arrangement, however, was never carried into effect. Fresh arrangements were afterwards made with the Murrees, Kurrum Khan Bijirani undertaking to protect Kutchee with his section of the tribe from small raiding parties for Rs. 560 per mensem, but not against raiding parties of any strength.

§ Toonea was the village given to the Murrees some years ago by his Highness the Khan, on condition that they abstained from plundering. On their breaking this compact it was resumed.—W. L. M.

53. In September a small body of Murrees carried off from Seebee some cattle belonging to the Barozai Chief, Sher Zaman Khan, which were not recovered. Another raid was made by 15 Murrees and 10 Kujjuks, who carried off 80 head of cattle from between the towns of Jannoo and Chutter. A large number of cattle have also been carried off by the Murrees from near Haji-ki-Shehr. In December, eight Murrees carried off 12 camels belonging to the Barozaies and Brahoees from the Lehree River, and on another occasion they plundered four flocks of sheep in the Gegh Pass, close to Milk, belonging to the Pahderhanis, and killed two men, and again plundered five flocks of sheep at Kote Shawanee, close to Dadur, and killed one Shawanee.

54. During the time the Summalani Minguls were in Kutchee, there were constant raids and counter-raids commenced by the Murrees, and carried on until the Minguls had got through the Pass and above the hills. By your direction the Summalani Muccadums were summoned in March last to come to Jacobabad to meet me, and to proceed with me to the Putt plain, where they would be joined by Captain Sandeman and the Murree Chiefs, for the purpose of settling their present feuds, and making peace between them, but they civilly declined, giving as their reasons for so doing, that they were then above the Passes and could not return, and that they could not trust their Sovereign, and consequently they could not leave their tribe without leaders.

55. On the Summalanis returning to the plains next cold season, endeavours will again be made, I trust, to bring about a friendly understanding between them and the Murrees, but from what I hear, I have no hopes of a meeting, if it does take place, ending in such a happy result. The Murrees have been behaving in the same way as they did in 1872, 1873, and 1874, that is raiding where and when they can, never minding who the people are, or what the property is. It is only a few days ago there was a report of their having raided in Kutchee, and I do not believe that subsidizing, unless to an enormous extent, will induce the Murrees to keep their hands from cattle lifting so long as they have the chance. At present the Dhoombkees and Khyberees pay the Murrees black-mail, and yet they carry off these peoples' flocks and herds as often as they possibly can, without taking into consideration any agreements entered into the previous week, or possibly only the previous day. From all I know of the Murrees, I do not think any faith can be placed in them, and therefore I much fear that the arrangements now being entered into with them cannot last for long. I trust, however, that my ideas on this matter may be wrong, and that Captain Sandeman's endeavours may succeed.

56. Sher Dil Muzzaranee Murree's subsidy of Rs. 175 per mensem was stopped by your orders in February last, as he had not for months past furnished me with any information of what was going on in the hills, and on which account alone he received this sum.

57. Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan visited Candahar in April last, and after his return, having quarrelled with Belooch Khan Nowsherwan, who had also quarrelled with Ibrahim Khan about some land near Kohuk, and regarding which there was so much discussion when the Perso-Belooch mission was in Mekran, and at Ibrahim Khan's instigation sent a force to aid him, Belooch Khan's son also having quarrelled with his father, joined Azaad Khan, Meer Morad Ibrahim Khan, and Shah Nawaz went with Azaad Khan's force. Belooch Khan having received intelligence of this, took the opportunity when Azaad Khan's forces were asleep and surprised them, killing his own son, Morad Khan, Meer Lalla, and 24 of their men. In November it was reported that Azaad Khan and Ibrahim Khan Nowsherwanees proceeded against Kohuk, where they fought two days and nights, carrying off many sheep and cattle, and some of the residents as slaves, amongst the latter, a man of position and influence and position, by name Yar Mahomed from Kohuk. Azaad Khan and Ibrahim Khan then proceeded against Bumpusht, where they plundered a number of cattle and sheep. Yar Mahomed having induced Azaad Khan to believe that the fort of Kohuk would be given up to him, if he asked the people, they returned to Kohuk. Yar Mahomed was sent into the fort to negotiate about its surrender, but never returned. Azaad Khan then marched on Kohanah, fought with Belooch Khan, and carried off 200 sheep. He then proceeded to the fort of Koodo Budan in Punchgoor, and having stayed there four days, returned to Kharan.

58. When Azaad Khan marched on Kohuk, Dilawur Khan was on the border, he collected a force and sent them with Meah Yar Mahomed Ruikhee and Moostuffa Khan Tomour, who plundered Azaad Khan's border. In March of this year (1875) some Seistan Belooch made a raid on Sirdar Azaad Khan's flocks, carrying off 60 camels. Nao Roza, Azaad Khan's son, was sent in pursuit with 200 camel Sowars, who overtook the raiders, killing 16 men and seizing 30 camels with loads. On the 13th March it was reported that by the order of Mahmood Bakur Khan, late Governor of Seistan, Meer Hoosain Alli raided in Azaad Khan's country, carrying off 60 or 70 camels. Nothing has been heard since of Azaad Khan's movements.

59. All continues quiet in Seebee, the peace made last year by Mirza Hyder Khoolio Khan being still in force. The Mirza paid his annual visit to Seebee, when he collected all the revenue due by the Burozaies, but the Kujjuks not being able to pay theirs, two of the leading men, named Azaad and Mahomed Khan, had to accompany the Mirza, and will remain in Candahar until the arrears due are recovered, and he has left Gulam Mahomed with five Sowars in Seebee to collect the amount now outstanding by the Kujjuks.

60. Moolla Mahomed Raisani, Sirdar, is still a refugee in Seebee, and has apparently been acting up to the line of policy recommended by you, by keeping himself aloof from all intrigues or attempts to create disturbances.* In May last he was in such terror of his life, however, that he asked to be given an asylum in British territory, if necessary, and this was sanctioned on the full understanding only that the Sirdar was to abstain from intriguing or intermeddling with the affairs of Kelat so long as he was in British soil. Moolla Mahomet's fears, however, proved false, and he had not to leave Seebee.

* This he has faithfully continued to do.—W. L. M.

61. In September it was reported that as soon as a large body of Brahoees (chiefly Summalani Minguls) had entered the plains, it was expected on the arrival of the other tribes that disturbances would take place on account of the very discontented feeling amongst the majority of the Brahoee tribes towards his Highness the Khan. Nothing, however, took place.

62. It was also reported that Mahomed Hyat, Kazi of Bagh, on his way to Khelat in June last, stopped at Nurmuck and tried to induce the Sarawan Chiefs to accompany him to Khelat to make arrangements for them with his Highness; he also proposed that the daughter of Kadurdina, brother of Alla Dina Khoord, Sirdar, should marry his Highness' eldest son, Meer Mahomed Khan; to both of these proposals the Chiefs sent a decided refusal. His Highness, after the Kazi's arrival at Khelat, sent Sumunder

Khan Lehree to the Sarawan Chiefs asking them to come and visit him. Alla Dina Khoord and Shadee Khan Bungulzai, the principal Chiefs above the Passes, declined going.

Enclosure 10 in No. 2.

No. 23 of 1875. Political Department.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

Political Agent's Office, Jacobabad,
24 March 1875.

SIR,

IN submitting my report for the year 1874 and 1875, I fear that our position with the ruler of Khelat will make it even briefer and less interesting than that for the previous year.

2. At the close of the last official year his Highness' representatives, by a judicious expenditure of money, caused division and party feeling amongst the Sarawan Chiefs, and thereby averted a rising in Kutchee. After the tribes had left the plains, his Highness seemed to have no policy, and quite unable to exercise any power or authority, until Darogah Atta Mahomed accepted the position of Wuzeer, which he had repeatedly declined.

3. The new Wuzeer at once attempted to initiate the policy his Highness himself had attempted on my withdrawal from his Court, but failed in a great measure in Sarawan from his Highness' insincerity. In what manner, will be shown in the succeeding para., when briefly reviewing events in Sarawan during the past year.

4. In diary No. 13 of 1874, dated 30th March, it was noted that Shere Dil Muzzaranee, Murree, had complained to his Highness of the treatment received at the hands of the Summalani Minguls, who then ordered the Naib of Moostoong to seize their flocks, this he did to the number of 8,000 or 10,000, and his Highness presented 2,000 to Shere Dil. The Summalanis sent to remonstrate with his Highness, saying the feud with the Muzzaranees had been originated by his Highness himself having ordered them to attack the above tribe. His Higness offered to return the sheep if all the leading men of the tribe would tender their submission. This they refused to do, saying treachery was intended. In diary No. 13, dated 3rd May 1874, para. 4, it was reported that Rawut, one of the boldest of the Muccadums of the Summalani tribe, went to Cupota, close to Khelat, and recovered the sheep confiscated, as also others belonging to his Highness. From this time the Summalanis made their head-quarters at Shorawak, but raided so frequently, all the country from Quettah to Khelat, that people did not dare to venture far from their houses to cut firewood, &c. On the 12th August (diary No. 34 of 1874) it was reported that his Highness sent troops from Moostoong to attack the Summalanis who were then at Siriab, and wrote to Shere Dil Muzzaranee and the Budrah Murrees to attack them in front, whilst he took them in rear. On the 20th September (vide diary) No. 38 of 1874) the Khan's troops, 600 strong, again attacked the Summalanis at Dozan below the Khur Lakhee Pass for having attacked some pilgrims; about this time Darogah Atta Mahomed was appointed Wuzeer, and he at once wrote to the chief men of the tribe saying their grievances would be redressed if they would keep quiet. Believing in this, they deputed most of the fighting men on a retaliatory expedition against the Pathans, leaving only eight or nine men in charge of the families. It is reported, and currently believed, that his Highness the Khan's mother and sister (with sanction) wrote to the Naibs of Quettah and Moostoong to unite their forces and attack the Summalani Camp. The nine men held a narrow pass until they were reinforced by 80 of their own tribe; they then made a night attack on the Khan's force, and utterly defeated them, killing 29 Sepoys.

5. Since the Summalanis have been in Kutchee, the old enmity between them and Shere Dil has been kept alive by the latter, supported by the Bijirani Murrees. On the 7th January three of the Summalani tribe were murdered at Mull (vide diary No. 2 of 1875), and they retaliated, as reported in paras. 3, 6, and 7 of diary No. 3, as also para. 1 of diary No. 7 of 1875.

6. The old Summalani Mingul Sirdar, who has been a prisoner at Khelat, died a few days ago, the tribe insist that he has met with foul play at his Highness' hands, and letters, it is said, have been sent by the tribe to the branch Muccadums at Shorawuk and Nooshky to collect and take revenge.

7. The above facts exhaust all that there is to narrate about the boldest and most powerful tribe in Sarawan, and the account would not have been so full had it not been for recent enquiry why this tribe was on bad terms with the Murrees.

8. Regarding the rest of the tribes little can be said, the Chief Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is still a political refugee in Seebee. The other minor Chiefs when in the hills were quiet and not interfered with, and when it was time for them to descend into the plains, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed arranged with the Murree Towandar that they should graze their flocks unmolested at Mull. This arrangement was broken by the foolish conduct of the Peer Khanees, who were instigated by the Ex-Wukeel and Kazi of Bagh to plunder 500 sheep from the Shiranee Murrees,—vide diary No. 47, para. 7. Before Sirdar Moolla Mahomed could arrange to return these sheep, the Murrees retaliated by carrying off 60 camels,—vide diary No. 28, para. 5. Yar Mahomed Khoord also headed a large raid against the Pathans, but not with any remarkable success,—vide diary No. 8, para. 3, and diary No. 49, para. 5. The action of his Highness the Khan's officials towards Huzaro Chootai has caused great excitement, owing to his connexion with the Khoord tribe, through Sirdar Ala Dina's wife. In diary No. 8 of 1875 it was reported that the minor Chiefs had gone to consult their Sirdar; it is doubtful whether anything will result from this. I think, however, after the way the Summalanis and Huzaro Chootai were treated, the Sarawans will put no faith in any promises made by his Highness or his subordinates.

9. Early in April, the Tullanees, Zurukzais, and Lotanees broke into rebellion, as Mustee Khan, mace-bearer, had seized Bhowdeen Tullanee's property and burnt his house. Six hundred men took up a position at the Sohinda Ghat, between Pundram and Lehree. Troops were sent from Kutchi and Khelat against them, but could not effect a union, and as the Commandant felt far from certain as to the result, he got Sirdar Maisah Khan Moosanee and Noor Mai Beebee to go into the rebel camp, and persuade some of them not to fight, and to allow the Khan's troops to effect a junction at Noogranah. The Chiefs were invited to a friendly conference, and the following Sirdars, Syud Khan and Chakur Khan Jullucks, Muddut Khan Pundranee, Kumal Khan, and Subzul Khan Lotanees, Kheir Mahomed Baranzai, Bhowdeen Tulanee, went and were at once arrested and taken prisoners to Khelat, where they remained until Darogah Atta Mahomed was appointed Wuzeer and insisted upon their release. Gohur Khan Zurukzai, a near relative of the late Sirdar Taj Mahomed, was the ringleader of this rebellion, and on leaving the Sohinda Ghat proceeded to the hills in the neighbourhood of Pundram, expecting to be joined by Sirdar Noordeen. In this, however, he was disappointed, but managed to pick up a precarious existence by taking any caravans that passed through the Moolah. On the new Wuzeer's arrival at Bagwanah, Gohur Khan was invited to tender his submission, but declined, and is still in rebellion with a few followers.

10. The new Wuzeer delayed some days at Bagwanah until Sirdar Noordeen and some of the minor Chiefs make their salaam. The Bezunjaos, as also the Minguls, were asked to co-operate with him in re-opening the Raj route, and punishing those who had caused the obstruction.

11. The Bezunjaos wanted hostile action taken against their hereditary enemies, the Minguls, as the price of their service. This, Wuzeer Atta Mahomed was too wise to undertake, and felt able with the force at his disposal, with Mir Noordeen's co-operation, to do what was required in the Chootа country. Recent accounts lead me to hope that he may be successful, and put an end to the disorder that has prevailed on the Hubb and in Lus Beyla, it is, however, premature to offer an opinion. Pahar Khan, the Sassoolee Chief, who entered British territory with 200 armed men, is in the Wuzeer's camp, as also several other minor Chiefs. That the Minguls and other tribes did not support Gohur Khan is in a great measure due to Sirdar Noordeen, whose sole attention was devoted to Lus Beyla affairs, where he was the temporary administrator, hoping to effect the release of his brother-in-law, the Ex-Jam, as also of his sister and nephew; the latter managed to effect his escape from Hyderabad in Sind, but his mother, Meer Noordeen's sister, was unable to leave, and died shortly after from fever and subsequent exhaustion. The Ex-Jam's son, as far as I can learn, very soon quarrelled with his uncle about refunding the revenue the latter had appropriated, and has also made himself very unpopular with Jamotes and Roonjahs. The Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, has been very anxious that he should make his salaam, but he has refused at the instigation of the Bezunjaos.

12. At the end of the last official year great excitement was caused by the arrest of the Rhind Sirdar, who was taken a prisoner to Bagh, he was, however, released during the current year on payment of a heavy fine. To realize this, the Ex-Wukeel, Mahomed Khan, and the Kazi of Bagh exercised such tyranny on all the natives of Shorun that about 2,000 Rhinds and Lusharees left and encamped closed to Khyree Gurree, on the Sind Frontier, hoping to be allowed to settle in British territory; eventually they returned (diary No. 14 of 1874). Frequent references have been made to his Highness' officials in Kutchee for the extradition of criminals, and on other matters, but with no result. Peer Jam, his Highness' recognised agent at Nusseerabad, considered such references as mere opportunities to be rude and impertinent. Those whose influence with the Khan has been paramount for the last two or three years are evidently doubtful how long this favour may be continued. The Ex-Wukeel, Mahomed Khan, dare not leave the Khan, for fear anyone else might gain influence and effect his ruin. Kazi Mahomed Hyat is now a nonentity, and for the last cold season the only person who had power or influence in Kutchee was Fukkeer Mahomed, Commandant of the troops at Bagh.

13. Caravans and horse-dealers passed through Jacobabad from Candahar and Quettah, but not in very great numbers.

14. The Persians having expelled Meer Moorad and his family from Kohuk, was mentioned in diary No. 18 of 1874, as also a fight between Belooch Khan and Ibrahim Khan Nowsherwan, regarding some land at Kolewah, in which the former was victorious, though supported by Sirdar Azaad Khan.

15. A kossid sent from this to Punchgoor to collect information as to where Sirdar Azaad Khan had raided, returned at the latter end of November and gave the information reported in diary No. 47. Kolewah was plundered a second time by Azaad Khan's ghoolam Jamal, as noted in diary No. 50.

Enclosure 11 in No. 2.

No. 2656 of 1875, Political Department.

From the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to the Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

Political Superintendent's Office, Jacobabad,
7th September 1875.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to submit herewith a letter to your address, also one to myself, and translation of the same, from both of which it will be seen that Moolla Mahomed Raisani Sirdar, the writer of these letters, is in the last straits of despair, and from what I can learn privately has every intention of, if possible, creating a disturbance in Kutchee so soon as the Brahoees come down in any numbers.

2. It will be remembered that Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord has made peace between the Doomurs and the Summalani Minguls, and has arranged with the Murrees that, if requisite, the families and flocks of the Brahoees should be allowed to remain, without any molestation from them, on the Dusht plain and above the Passes.

3. I have now been informed that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has arranged with Sirdar Guzzun Khan that the families of the Sarawans living at Seebee should be given an asylum in the Murree hills, should they require one. It would therefore seem probable that the two Brahoee Sirdars are acting in union, and that it is their desire to avenge their wrongs, supposed or otherwise, this coming cold season. The news from Khelat that his Highness intends paying Kutchee a visit, further corroborates this supposition, for the fact of his Highness coming to Kutchee would entirely frustrate any intentions the Brahoee Sirdars may have of attempting a general rising throughout the country.

4. I have replied to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed that I have received his letter, and I have forwarded the one to your address to you, and that any reply you may be pleased to send to it will be duly forwarded. In reply to the letter to my address, I have advised him to weigh well the sound and friendly advice so frequently given him by you, to remain quiet, and to keep his people from molesting the people in Kutchee, or attacking and plundering Kafilas, and that no better advice can be given him now nor at any other time.

I have, &c.
FRANCIS LOCH, Colonel,
Political Superintendent, U.S.F.

Translati… …irdar … Mahomed Hosain …
Pol… …Superintendent, Upper Sin… …Frontier, dated Sehee the …
… 20th August 1875.

… compliments,—Since the time when the Commissioner in Sind and the British Government made peace, and an arrangement between his Highness the Khan and … on every occasion that his Highness either intended to, or has done me or my followers actual harm, I have made you acquainted with the same, or when his Highness … acted in opposition to the settlement made by the Commissioner in Sind, I have always informed you and always received the following reply from the Commissioner in Sind and yourself, "that it is necessary that you should endeavour by every means to "keep your people from creating any disturbances in his Highness the Khan's territory, "that you should on no account permit them to molest the cultivators and poor people, "and should restrain them from plundering any of the Kafilas, and that you should "assist his Highness to allow the people to live in comfort and safety, and that the "British Government will be pleased with such conduct, and good results will follow "consequent on your obeying those orders." Defender of the poor, since that time I have done nothing in any way in opposition to the Commissioner in Sind's or to your orders, but have remained staunch to your instructions, and have not deviated a hair's breadth from them. The property and cattle which were plundered from the Kafilas were, in accordance with the Commissioner in Sind's orders, restored to the merchants, although my followers were much annoyed with me for restoring the property. I did not attempt to act contrary to the Commissioner in Sind's orders, by whatever means I could, I took the plundered property from my people and restored it. I acted in such a manner that the British Government should have no cause to reproach me. Since that, no harm has been done either to the Khan's country or people by me, in order that on account of no harm having been done I should not be ashamed to meet the British Government. By obeying the orders given me, I have had some hopes from your Government, and have said in my heart that the Government and the English officers, after the manner of kings, would show some kindness to me and my people; that from seeing this treatment other people would become more staunch to the British Government, and that every one, bearing in mind my case, would obey orders and act in the same manner I have done. Up to the present, however, I have received no mark of kindness from your Government, but I am still hopeful that in the end your Government will recognise my good services and reward them. But for one reason, I am surprised that up to the present I have received no recognition of my services. His Highness Khodadad Khan has not acted justly regarding the arrangement made between us by the British Government. Every act of oppression which his Highness has committed I have reported to your Government, but your Government has never made any enquiry as to why his Highness has not acted up to his agreement. I have remarked that no notice has been taken of what I have represented, and that no explanations are required from his Highness the Khan. Now, without hope, I am quietly sitting and writing. I fully understand that if I write daily complaints against his Highness that the Government and its officers will believe that the reports are made from a spirit of enmity, and I have decided therefore that it would be better to wait and to explain at one time all the acts of oppression committed by the Khan, his breaking the agreements made by order of your Government, and the injustice done to me and my people. For the future I cannot stand his Highness' oppression, and I cannot wait any longer quiet; by writing as I have done my time has been wasted, and his Highness has determined to root every one of us out. It is now a year since the Khelat Agent was withdrawn from this country; since that time I will explain what his Highness has done to me and my people, and the reason for my rendering this explanation is, that hereafter your Government will not be able to say that they did not receive intimation of my intentions; had they done so I might have received justice, and the agreements ordered might have been fully acted up to. If the British Government, owing to the agreement which was made, or from a sense of honour, wishes to make any settlement, to inquire into the treatment I have received from his Highness the Khan since the agreement was made, either to make a strict investigation into the matter, or to carry it out by means of questions and answers, so that for the future his Highness will not act in opposition to the agreement entered into with the English Government, and that he will be kept from doing me harm—then, well. If, however, the Government will not prevent his Highness acting in the way he has lately done for the future, then, I trust that I, like many thousands of other persons who are given an asylum by the English, may be permitted to live under your protection, and that you will send for me and my family, and will provide for us. If your Government will not permit this, and say that there is no agreement between us and them, and that they will not interfere between his Highness and us, then I will fully explain my meaning to you, that I cannot longer remain quiet. His Highness daily acts in opposition to the agreement made by the British Government, but they do not protect me, nor do they require any explanation from his Highness. Defender of the poor—his Highness has deprived me of my annual income—I am only living in this place by the faith I place in God, and by the power of the British Government; if the Government will not show me any consideration, what is the use in my remaining here? but it is far from my wish or intention to reproach the British Government. In this hapless state I must go wherever my fancy leads me, and do whatever I can; it cannot be said that I have disobeyed orders. I have not committed any fault. I have acted up to all orders given me as far as lay in my power. I have given you all this information, now there is no remedy. Where can I go? but wherever I go there I will be a dependent of, and obey the orders of, your Government. Until I receive an answer from you I will, however, remain here, and as you order so will I act. I am hopeful that I may receive a full and clear reply from the Commissioner in Sind and yourself to my letters, and I will act on them; but in case I do not receive a reply, this is my final representation. No one can act with force against Kings, but it is proper to make representations to them. What I can do I will do, this I let you know.

In another letter, which is herewith sent, I give you a full written explanation of all his Highness' acts regarding his breaking the agreement entered into with us, his not acting up to instructions, and the harm he has done to me and to my people.

Translation of the second letter referred to in the concluding paragraph of the above.

The injury which his Highness the Khan has done to me is as follows:—It is now a year since traders have been prevented by his Highness the Khan from coming down the Bolan Pass. His Highness has given orders that they are to be forced to bring their merchandize by the Moolah route, and on this account I have not received a pie from the revenue drawn from this source, which I by rights am entitled to, his Highness receives it all. His Highness has sent an order to Abdool Azeez, Naib of Bagh, which the Naib forwarded to me with an order from himself. His Highness' order to the Naib is as follows:—" On the Jagir land of the village of Mehram, belonging to Sirdar " Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, Sirdar, there are 80 bunds, but he receives revenue from " more than 80. It is therefore necessary that he should not be allowed more than " the 80, all over this number must be confiscated, and the revenue made over to " Government." Now, in the Sunnud granted me by the great Nusseer Khan and Mirab Khan, and which is in my possession, I sent by the hand of my nephew, Mir Russul Buksh, for the inspection of the Naib of Bagh. My nephew went and showed the Sunnud to the Naib of Bagh, in which it is written that all the land belonging to the Town of Mehram, the land of the Machees is my Jagir land, my nephew explained to the Naib that it was so written in the Sunnud. If I had received more than my share from the Mehram lands for forty years, from Mir Nusseer Khan, Mirab Khan, and Khodadad Khan himself, and for four years agreement was made between his Highness and myself, how is it no one even said that I had been receiving more than my just share. If any one has now told his Highness that I receive more than the revenue due to me from the Town lands of Mehram, then, according to Mahomedan law and justice, according to the extent of cultivation, let him make the accusation. I did not receive this land as a lately granted gift, my father and I have been allowed this from his Highness' father, brother, and from his Highness himself. My nephew explained all this to the Naib, but the Naib would admit nothing. He only replied I had received orders from his Highness to confiscate certain land, and I have done so. I feel that his Highness has done this purposely without cause. I have sent for all my people from Mehram, and have given up the town of Mehram to his Highness. My nephew said before Naib Abdool Azeez that all this regarding the town of Mehram, and everything regarding the present state of the country, would be reported to the British Government, because I received the revenue derived from the lands of Mehram by an arrangement approved of by the British Government; and the Naib replied to him thus: " It is in your power to do so, why should you not report it?"

When the Commissioner in Sind made arrangements for us in Jacobabad, the agreements were as follows:—" That when the property belonging to his Highness himself " and the people of his Highness, which had been plundered by the Sarawans, had been " restored to him and his people, then for the future his Highness would have no claim

" or cause of complaint against the Sarawans, and the Sarawans would have no claim or " cause of complaint against his Highness."

In the days when I went to Ahmedshai, in Candahar, my people each sowed grain on his land, but his Highness reaped the whole of the grain. In the year when the Commissioner in Sind made peace and arrangement between us, it was so settled that every one was to be permitted to cultivate his own land. His Highness had sowed all the land with grain, which my people were permitted to cut in exchange for that formerly taken by his Highness, and his Highness never once laid claim to this grain before Major Harrison; now, however, his Highness has claimed this grain, and is trying to force my people in Khorasan to restore it, and his Highness says that the grain which my people sowed, and which his Highness reaped, is not to be taken into account or brought into calculation, but the grain which I sowed, that amount I will take from you. My people have written all this to me, and I have replied as follows:—" Do not give the grain " of your own accord; if any one takes it by force, do not prevent them, until I can " represent it to the British Government, so that the British Government may not be able " to reproach me." Since I sent this reply, I have heard nothing further. Besides this, his Highness has committed many acts on my people in opposition to the agreement entered into. His Highness has committed many similar acts, of which I only relate a few (literally I show these few acts, like a man shows a handful of grain, to prove that the whole Kurwar is of the same kind). His Highness has only acted in opposition to the arrangements made to try what the British Government will do, and to prove whether they will make any enquiry into his breaking his treaty with me. Take into consideration the following:—1st, collect my last year's revenue due on the Kafilas and pay them to me; 2nd, recover my land for me; and, 3rd, prevent my people having to give the grain. After this, if his Highness does me any injustice I will represent it. If the British Government are indifferent to the agreement entered into being broken, and will not make strict enquiries as to the cause of the same from his Highness the Khan, then God is all powerful. I have given you all this information as a wish to reproach is far from me. For the future you are master; order and I will obey. I have sent this by Moolah Yakoob, who will present it to you. For some little time past my son has not been well, I have done all I can in the way of giving him medicine, but he has derived no benefit from it. My son is now making ready to go to Larkana to visit a Peer there, or he will go to Shikapur to visit Peer Said Lenkui. Show kindness on me, and send me a safe conduct pass for him, and some Sowars, by the hand of Moolah Yakoob.

No. 3.

Dated at Sea, 29th October 1875.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, on the day of my departure from Sind for Bombay, of Government of India's Resolution No. 2819 P., dated 16th instant; and as I think it possible that after receipt of my letter No. 816, dated 21st instant, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General may wish to issue some additional instructions, I would beg respectfully to submit the following further observations elucidatory of the present state of affairs on the Sind and Punjab frontiers, and in the adjacent territory of Khelat.

2. As shown in my letter above quoted, the expectation that the Khan has at last somewhat realized the gravity of the situation has, I regret to say, not been realized. Though signs of his doing so were patiently awaited, none have been given by him up to the present time. On the contrary, the Khan has not only deliberately ignored the excellent proceedings of the Wuzeer Atta Mahomed, and pointedly abstained from confirming and completing them, but he has publicly disgraced the Wuzeer; and there can be little doubt this was done because the Wuzeer had too well carried out what would be acceptable to and be approved of by, the British Government. The Khan has also designedly attempted to subvert the good arrangements made by Captain Wise, Superintendent of Police on the south-west frontier of Sind, entered upon in conjunction with, and with the full concurrence of, the Wuzeer, viz., that certain Chiefs of the Khelat State, particularly Sahib Khan, the Chief of the large tribe of Chootas, should take service in the British Frontier Police, and assist in checking crime in that part of the country. In opposition to this the Khan has appointed Jan Mahomed, the younger brother of Sahib Khan, Chief of the tribe, with the object, evidently, of neutralizing the efforts of the Wuzeer and Captain Wise.

3. This has had no actual ill effect as yet, because it has been so recently done, but it unquestionably will have, and Sahib Khan naturally complains at his being made to suffer by deposition for having taken service with us. Captain Wise's arrangements have so far stopped the robberies which had become so frequent on the Kurrachee district border; but directly it becomes generally known that the Khan is opposed to them attempts at robbery will again occur, especially as the newly-appointed Chief of the Chootas is irritating the people by hard pressure to satisfy the demands of the Khan for a fine imposed on Noosheerwan Choota. All the above shows that the Khan still follows the advice of those who would keep him at variance with the British Government, and that he himself has no sincere wish for reconciliation.

4. As regards the Murree tribe, the Sirdar Guzzun Khan certainly made his submission at Jacobabad in February last, and Captain Sandeman procured restitution of plundered property, or its equivalent, under an award which I approved for reasons already stated; but the leniency and consideration then extended to this tribe has not had any of the effects desired. Their behaviour, excepting towards the Punjab frontier (against which they had not for long committed any offence), has shown no improvement; on the contrary, outrages by them in Kutchee, which has all along been one of the main charges against them, have been more frequently perpetrated, on a much larger scale and with greater audacity than has been ever known before. I would here again respectfully point out that these outrages have little or, indeed, nothing to do with intertribal quarrels, as is supposed. They have during the past summer been directed almost entirely against tribes with whom they had no quarrel—in fact, have been enacted in any part of Kutchee when good opportunity seem to offer them of successful loot. As stated by me before, the only two tribes with which they had a difference in the spring were the Summalani Minguls and the Dhoombhees of Lehree. The former went above the passes last March, and the latter have been only slightly troubled by a few Murree thieves.

5. These doings of the Murrees, to speak correctly, proceed almost wholly from the insatiate love of plunder possessing them, and the assurance they feel that they can carry it on with impunity. In my humble opinion, and I think recent events prove the correctness of it, nothing but severe measures and telling punishment will induce them to withhold from deeds of violence. And more even than that, I am convinced from my long experience of the character of these people that the impunity they enjoy in one quarter will only cause their arrogance and restlessness to increase, till they will cease to respect all obligations or to adhere to any limits.

6. The power of one head of the tribe will only last in as far as he joins in with the rest in their predatory excursions; and even now, though in our pay, and well aware that the lawless proceedings of the tribe are directly in opposition to the wishes and objects of the British Government, he regularly receives his share, as Chief, of every successful foray, and makes no effort to restrain them. It cannot, therefore, be hoped that any good results can follow the best peaceable arrangements, unless some check is put on this absorbing passion of violent acquisitiveness, and the wild possessors of it find it can no longer be indulged in.

7. I would also respectfully observe that there is really no dispute between the Murrees and the Khan of Khelat, unless the Summalani question is referred to, and that has only to do with the supposed action of the Khan in setting the Summalani Minguls on a section of the Murrees, the Muzzaranees, which at that time was living in the Bolan entirely separate from the remainder of the clan. The present action of the whole Murrees can hardly be said to be directed against the Khan on that account. Further, the Khan is himself pressing hard on the Summalanis; the two should be therefore "en accord" in that respect. The idea that the Murrees had any just claims on the Khan that had been disregarded by him has long ago been disposed of as groundless. And I know of nothing, as regards their possession towards the Khan, which could for a moment be held to warrant their present conduct towards the unoffending people of Kutchee. We are also now dealing direct with the Murrees and Boogtees, totally irrespective of the Khan, from whom we have severed, and his relations and dealings with them would not come within scope of present arrangements, unless we entered the Murree or Boogtee Hills, or unless Government again determined to re-open communications with the Khan, and to return to the old footing with him.

8. I certainly thought it possible that the Khan, or his officers using his name, might be intriguing with the Murrees to induce them to molest any bodies they (the Khan or his officers) might have a grudge against, for such is the way of Brahooees. But at the same time I considered it was not at all necessary it should be allowed to effect our proceedings. These are now direct with the Murrees, and they should elect whom they intend to serve. They cannot work truly with both. If they are to do our work faithfully and well they must have no engagements with others, and they need not have any, through which our arrangements may be in any way affected. I quite agree that, unless the above is provided for, any terms entered into with the Murrees will be perfectly useless. But if the Murrees are to be held in favourable consideration, I think that the above proviso is the least they should bind themselves to adhere to. If they choose they can easily avoid entering into such engagements. The Khelat Government is weak to a degree, and getting weaker every day. Its power to force the Murrees to do anything it wished was never less than it is now. The Khan's officers in Kutchee endeavoured during the summer to buy the Bijarani Murrees off from raiding there by paying Murreem Khan, the Chief, a small sum, but this failed through the pettiness of the amount and the officials not being able to increase it. The plains of Kutchee have been overrun by the Murrees since, and this is clearly the result of their own evil promptings, not from any on the part of the Khelat Government.

9. The main object of the Mittunkote Conference was to put an end to a system under which the Murrees, while respecting the Punjab frontier and being justly treated with favour by the authorities there, did not hesitate to harass the district of Kutchee belonging to our then ally, the Khan of Khelat, and immediately adjacent to the Sind borders. Their raids not only injured inoffensive people, disturbed the peace of the country, and disordered the minds of the wild tribes residing therein and within our own border, but it grievously affected the line of trade from Afghanistan, which, after leaving the Bolan, passed through the centre of that district. It was shown that, while such a system lasted, there was nothing to deter the Murrees from continuing their lawless acts in Kutchee. They received pay and favours from the British Government on one side, but utterly disregarded the wishes of that Government on the other, and became rapidly enriched by the valuable plunder they obtained. Unless, therefore, something is done to check them in their course of outrage, the state of affairs in Kutchee must become and is far worse than it was before the above conference was held.

10. It is true the Khan is no longer the friendly ally of the British Government he was, but all the other circumstances still exist, and have greater importance than before, owing to the increase of the Murrees' excesses. The people in Kutchee are becoming utterly demoralised, are losing heart altogether, and are begging to be given an asylum in Sind, or seeing the success the Murrees are gaining, state they must go and join them. If the present state of affairs lasts, Kutchee will be deserted, cultivation there will be none, and the kafilas will not dare to pass across it. Within our own border the spirit of adventure and love for plunder, which by years of steady management has been kept dormant amongst the old Lootoos, will be revived by their seeing the success the Murrees have ensured to them, and the difficulties that had to be encountered before 1847 will again arise. The Boogtees, who for so many years have behaved well, are fast losing the respect they had been taught to feel, indeed have already lost much, and in some of the recent raids have joined with the Murrees. The tribe is broken up by dissension, much of which is caused by their desire to share in the advantages the Murrees are now having.

11. Kutchee is the high road into Afghanistan. It is the best frequented by kafilas because it is the most direct—by far the easiest, brings travellers so much sooner clear of the hills than any other route, and until recently it had been for years perfectly safe. Now it has become more dangerous than any part of the route from Herat downwards. This will greatly perplex traders. Allowing Kutchee to be unsafe will force the kafilas to adopt the Moostoong, Khelat, and Moolla Pass, or Raj road through Jalawan routes to the sea. This will be exactly what the Khan of Khelat wishes. On that line he now takes all the duties to himself and allows no one else to levy, so he will be a gainer. The rule on the Bolan route was that each of the Brahooee Sirdars holding possessions on that line should receive a portion of the dues levied on traders, in return for which they were supposed to ensure safety to the travellers. The diversion of traffic from the Bolan will greatly injure the Sirdars, but not so much the Khan. When discussing the question of trade approach by the Bolan, it must be recollected that it is not merely that pass which is referred to but the whole distance from Quettah to Sind. It would be of little use to make the 72 miles of road from Quettah to Dadur safe, if the remaining 100 and odd from Dadur to Sind is overrun by robbers.

12. The Thull Chotiali route might possibly be re-opened, but I question very much the advantage of it, or any likelihood of its permanence. When Delhi was the centre of everything in India, a route from Afghanistan through Dhera Ghazee Khan to the large city of Multan was very useful; but now things are changed. Trade goes to the sea-board, and will look for the most direct route. Make the Bolan line safe, and so it must be some day; that will be the line generally adopted, and trade will return to it. The difficulties on the Thull Chotiali line are not confined to the exactions of the Murrees. The Kakar country is entered on leaving Pesheen, and this tribe is even more rapacious than the Murrees, and less amenable to control. Their country is very strong, and his Highness the Ameer of Cabul has no power over them.

13. Another thing with regard to Kutchee it is the best road, and the one that must be followed should it be necessary to move troops forward into Afghanistan. It will then be of the first importance that obstruction, irritation, and hindrance should not have to be encountered at the very outset, and that it should not be necessary to have strong posts along the whole line to keep the communication open. With Kutchee peaceable and quiet, it is calculated also that large supplies of grain and forage will be procurable throughout the length of it. Such would assuredly be the case, for it is naturally a very rich tract; but with the place deserted, or with cultivation suspended from fear, there will be nothing to be got.

14. I would beg respectfully to observe that the position of the Sind outposts beyond the frontier is not exactly that supposed in the 24th paragraph of the Government of India's Resolution. These posts, three, are Sooee, Sunree, and Goranaree. The first is 24 miles nearly north of Kusmore, close to the Punjab boundary; the next is about 30 miles south-west of Sooee, and the third six miles further west, and 38 miles east-north-east from Jacobabad, quite away from Kutchee. The object of placing these posts where they are was to get them in advance of the Sind cultivation, which had gone far in front of the old line of outposts, and to put them between it and the Boogtee Hills. Sooee was pushed a little further north, so as to hold a commanding position over any robbers who might venture to leave the Boogtee Hills to steal from Sind or the Punjab. Gundooee is not a real outpost. There are only a few Belooch sowars placed there as scouts to watch the movements of the hill people, and send intelligence to the Sind Horse outposts. None of the three posts above mentioned could in any way assist in maintaining order in the parts of Kutchee near the British borders. I have recently been compelled to direct that patrols should be sent from Jacobabad to the north and north-west, as the Murrees had actually dared to come as low down as between Bagh and Burshoree. This was necessary to allay somewhat the fears that were possessing all the people of lower Kutchee, and to make the Murrees keep a further distance.

15. This and my previous report will show his Excellency the Viceroy that there is really not much to be learned as to the causes of, and reasons for, the present state of affairs. They are patent now, and he who runs may read. There will be no safety for trade through Kutchee as long as the Murrees are allowed to plunder there at will, and the disorders that exist there cannot fail to very injuriously affect the adjacent British borders, and they will steadily increase. It would be of little use making arrangements by the levy of tolls in the Bolan for the protection of convoys through that pass if the latter are to be plundered by the Murrees directly they enter the plains; and expenditure on others of the money sanctioned for subsidising the Murrees will have no effect as long as the Murrees behave as they are now doing. If the Murrees won't conform to the wishes of the British Government it would be better to apply the money which was intended to purchase their compliance in some other way, which would, at all events, produce some result. At present it is not used.

16. I would respectfully recommend that I may be authorised this cold season to protect Kutchee with the force at Jacobabad against the inroads of the Murrees. This would most easily be done by placing along the front of the Murree Hills, from Chuttur to Mull, the cavalry, with a few infantry at certain points, to allow of all the cavalry going out when called. The Bolan, having to do with the political charge of the Superintendent on the frontier of Sind, might then be arranged for, and the money intended for the Murrees, and which they won't take, might be appropriated and placed at the disposal of the Political Superintendent for such wants as might appear requisite for the security of the Bolan. The Murrees would have to be informed that their outrageous proceedings in Kutchee cannot be tolerated any longer. It had been intended to take them into employ, and pay them handsomely; but as they do not show themselves willing to act as required of them, and do not withhold from most unjustifiably lawless practices, that plan was abandoned, and measures would be taken to prevent the tribe committing outrages in Kutchee. As long as they abstained from such no notice would be taken of them, but any portion of the tribe daring to enter the plains for the purpose of plunder would be immediately pursued and punished as they deserved. The arrangement on the Punjab side might still remain in force as long as the Murrees respected that border, and Captain Sandeman would be able to use his influence with Guzzun Khan, who certainly seems quite sincere in his desire to remain on good terms with us. When the other portions of the tribe found Kutchee was barred to them they would become more inclined to listen to reason, and to try to behave themselves more peaceably towards their neighbours.

17. I would beg to assure his Excellency that I have always been most anxious to deal patiently and considerately with the tribes, and am always most ready to accept anything that can be said in their favour. I am truly desirous to be on most friendly terms with them. But I would most respectfully submit that there is a limit to patience, and that when a tribe acts near the British border in so outrageous a manner as the Murrees, and shows such contemptuous defiance of the power of the British Government, I should be neglecting my duty if I did not bring all the circumstances to the notice of his Excellency in Council, and urge, in every way I could, the early adoption of final measures to put an end to such an unsatisfactory and most dangerous state of affairs.

Dated Camp Toj, 20th November 1875.

Jacobabad news-letters by Colonel F. Loch, Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

You must know that a certain person who always sends me news from Kutchee has given me the following information: That all the Brahooees have come from Khorasan to the low country and are pitched around Dadur. Shadee Khan, son of Allum Khan Bungulzai, and Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord allowed their cattle to graze in the fields belonging to the people of Dadur, and they destroyed all the jowaree and cotton fields near that place. When this news was known to Sirdar Moolla Muhammad Raisani, he sent his son and put a stop to it, and he sent a message to the effect that if you commit such damage to the poor people, it is possibly your intention to plunder Kutchee. The reply given to this was, when the Muhammadshais, whose Sirdar is Syud Khan, reaches Kutchee we will settle to plunder Kutchee. Noordeen Mingul has written to Sirdar Moolla Muhammad that he has closed the Moolla road, and that should any of his Highness' the Khan's troops attempt to come by this way that he will oppose them, and that he will not allow any one to pass, and that it is necessary that Moolla Muhammad should close the Bolan road. To this the following reply was given: When the Muhammadshais come arrangements will be made to close the Bolan road. Noordeen also sent another letter, in which it was stated that he intends placing the pugree on the head of Gohur Khan Zarukzai in place of Taj Muhammad.

No. 966, dated Camp Sukkur, 13th December 1875.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies of the following papers are forwarded to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, for information.

2. There is, unquestionably, active movement against the Khan contemplated by the Brahooee Sirdars, stirred by the energy displayed by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul. The desertion of the regular troops is very significant, showing certain failure in the Khan's power and influence, and if the Sarawan Sirdars only join thoroughly in the movement initiated by Noordeen Mingul, a short revolution with little bloodshed may bring about a change of rulers.

3. The Khan's prospects are most gloomy. He may manage to escape, but is more likely to be killed at the commencement of the outbreak. His son, Meer Mahomed Khan, would probably be set up.

4. Noordeen Mingul's recognition of Gohur Khan Zheree as Sirdar of Jalawan is directly flying in the face of the Khan. He, Noordeen, requested the Khan would send his son to the investiture of Gohur Khan. The Khan of course declined. Had Meer Mahomed Khan been sent, Noordeen Mingul would have proclaimed him Khan, and then marched on Khelat.

5. All interference with passing events will be carefully avoided, unless disturbances are caused in Kutchee by the Sarawan Sirdars, in which case measures will be adopted to prevent disorderly parties breaking the peace of the British border.

6. It would have been well had the Murrees been better in hand now, as they may add greatly to the disorders and misrule in Kutchee.

7. Orders have been sent to Captain Sandeman, now in the Murree Hills, to be most careful to avoid all communication with the Brahooee Sirdars or their people, and on no account to go beyond the Murree or Boogtee Hills towards the Bolan, Seebee, or Kutchee.

Enclosure 1 in No. 5.

From Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan, Baruzai, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated Koorkh, 2nd December 1875.

On the 1st Shawan, i.e., 1st November, a letter came to me from his Highness the Khan of Khelat; I sent his Highness a reply; and on the 1st Zulkad, i.e., 1st December, a second letter came to me, copies of the last letter and my reply are attached. I am hopeful that you may see them, and may learn all from them. The other news is, that on the 26th November Afizal Mingul brought a letter to Sirdar Moolla Muhammad from Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, and the messenger gave the following information: That Sirdar Noordeen Mingul was with a Jalawan force in Baghwana, and that he had presented Sirdar Gohur Khan Zarukzai with the Sirdari khillut, a dress of honour; the latter Sirdar is at Hurtorsah with 300 men. The Sowar said that when he left it was Noordeen Mingul's intention to proceed to Zehree. Ali Jan, son of Rohimdad, had been sent by his Highness the Khan to Noordeen, who had falsely agreed to go to Khelat; but, from what people say, he intends going there to create a disturbance. Jam Ali, son of Mir Khan Jamote, has entertained 500 infantry and 300 cavalry, and it is his intention to take part in the disturbances. A few of his Highness' Jungi Regiment have deserted and have taken service with Jam Ali Khan, about 100 men may have gone. His Highness called Fukkeer Mahomed, commanding, and said to him, the men of your regiment are always deserting; I believe that they desert with your permission. It so happened that that very night a Havildar and 12 men of the Nurwai Regiment were on guard over the Dildar Gate and deserted, taking their arms with them. Fukkeer Mahomed, commanding, said to his Highness, my men desert without taking their arms, but the Nurwai Regiment take their arms with them when they desert. People say that Jam Ali gives each of his sepoys Rupees 7 pay, besides one seer of flour and one-eighth of a seer of ghee and 2 pice daily, and for this reason every person is deserting and taking service with him.

Arab Khan Dewar was sent by his Highness to receive the property taken by Hybat Summalani who looted the kafila; the Summalanis refused to give it up, saying, that if his Highness would release our people who are in prison we will give up the property; but if not, without Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's order we will do nothing; he is our Sirdar and our ruler. Hybat has stationed 100 men in the Hurbooj Hill, and he has twice looted the people who were bringing wood from the hills to Khelat, and consequently no wood is brought to Khelat. The Shawani and the Muhammadshais, as well as the rest of the Sarawans, have left the hills and are now in Kutchee. These people who have come from Khorassan say that Rawul Khan and Russul Baksh Mingul carried off 11 flocks of goats from Quetta, Moostoong, and Mungchur.

On the 28th Shawal, i.e., 28th November, all the Sarawan Sirdars came to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani, and the Sowar who had come from Sirda Moolla Mahomed were sent to Sirdar Noordeen, and all the Sirdars remained with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed two nights and are all unanimous. They returned on the 30th November to their several stations, and their intention is to create a disturbance. Whatever happens I will let you know. Sirdar Sohrab Khan Dhoombkee has sided with the Sarawans. The Nari country is being plundered by the Brahooees. One night 20 Sowars cut the cultivation on two bands of a Chulgari village and carried it off. The Naib of Bagh will not allow his troops to go outside the town. All the Brahooees are living to the north of Bagh; none are farther south than Nari.

You are well aware of all the former news regarding his Highness the Khan. My reputation is on your neck. It will be comforted by whatever reply you send, so comfort my heart and make me glad by sending me a reply, so that I may be made a thousand times happy.

Enclosure 2 in No. 5.

Dated Burozai, 22nd Shawan 1292=22nd November 1875.

From his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Sirdar Sher Zuman Khan.

I have received your letter in which you write as follows:—That I am a dependent of his Highness the Ameer, and that I am not without some one to take care of me; it is true that this is so, but I have a greater opinion of his Highness the Ameer than you have. The Ameer's country and riches and my country and riches are as one, there is no difference between them, and one who is badly disposed to my Government will not be pardoned by his Highness, why do you allow evil-disposed persons to reside near you? you write that there has always been good faith and good feeling between you and my Government, that those who are friends of this Government are considered by you as friends, and the enemies of this Government you consider your enemies. The circumstances are really thus; this Government has always shown kindness to your forefathers and to you, those who are your evil-wishers I consider my enemies, and those who are your well-wishers I look on as my servants. If you permit people who are evil-disposed to my Government and disloyal to live near you, it is decidedly not good. Now you have written that I will not allow any evil-wishers of your Government to remain under my protection, very good, now that you intend to follow the old custom I will consider you my friend and well-wisher. If any person should create a disturbance in my country and go to you, or remain near you and intend creating a disturbance, do not believe that my country will suffer from my enemies or from you. It is necessary that you should follow the old customs and hope for the kindness of my Government. In every way be comforted and write to me of your welfare.

Enclosure 3 in No. 5.

Translation of a letter from Sirdar Sher Zuman Khan, Barozai, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

Defender of the poor, your letter which exalted me much was written after this manner. You write that the enemies of your Government are not pardoned by his Highness the Ameer, why have you given a place to evil-disposed persons and allow them to remain near you? if you allow my enemies to remain I will not suffer from the number of my enemies or from you. Defender of the poor, it is not proper for you to write such severe words to your well-wisher, nor is it proper for you to consider him your enemy from olden times. I have never done you any wrong, nor have I been an enemy of your Government, and will not be one, and I have no bad intentions; what I have done has not been done without the orders of his Highness the Ameer. I have received a letter from his Highness the Ameer, which I have in my possession, regarding giving Sirdar Moolla Mahomed refuge and showing him kindness. The contents of the perwanah are as follows:—

Give the Sirdar a place near you, give him land and water, and make him comfortable so long as the Sirdar is happy with you. Understand that I, the Ameer, am pleased with you, and always do the Sirdar's service as you do mine. You should take into consideration and ponder over these words. That when any master or officer gives his tenants or servants any order they must obey these orders. How can the tenants or servants act differently to the orders given. Besides this, the British Government have given me orders regarding Sirdar Moolla Mahomed being permitted to live here. Defender of the poor, when Sirdar Moolla Mahomed came to reside here, who is the head of the Sarawans, when the Sarawans came to their Sirdar, I have received no order from my master to stop them. Defender of the poor, since this Sirdar has come to live in my town he has done no harm to your country; when he had any intention of doing so he did so amongst his own people, and none of my people joined with in. Nothing can be proved against my people of having done any harm to your country. If you have any queries to make regarding this, apply to his Highness the Ameer and the British Government. I will willingly or unwillingly obey my master's orders, but without reason you have considered your well-wisher your enemy, and have written these improper words.

My forefathers never heard such orders from your ancestors. Consider me your true well-wisher and true friend. I have never done anything but wished wel for you, nor will I cease to do so. Keep your heart comforted and always make me happy by writing. May you have long life.

Enclosure 4 in No. 5.

Dated Jacobabad, December 1875.

From Colonel F. Loch, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Sirdar Sher Zuman Khan, Barozai Koorkh

I have had much pleasure in receiving your letter and its accompaniments, and I quite approve of your reply to his Highness the Khan. So long as you continue to act as your forefathers did, and do not permit your people to take any part in the disturbances against his Highness, or in any way to enter his country, or to oppress his people, your conduct will always meet with the approval of the British Government. I much fear that the Brahooee Sirdars intend creating disturbances, but I trust they may take the good advice so often given them, and think better of their present intention. Should they, however, not do so, I trust that you will hold aloof from them, and not allow your subjects to take any part in the disturbances. I have every faith in your good senses and good intentions. Write me any further news you may hear. I am always glad to get letters from you. All is well here.

Telegram, dated 13th December 1875.

From Commissioner, Sukkur, to Foreign Secretary, Calcutta.

Revolution in Khelat clearly imminent. Noordeen Mingul working a likely conspiracy in conjunction with Fukkeer Mahomed, commanding regiment at Khelat, and others, object to depose Khan and set up eldest son. Sarawan Sirdars in communication with Noordeen, but principal ones being in Kutchee will probably only create disturbances there for diversion. Am proceeding to frontier to watch events, avoiding all interference. Sandeman in Murree Hills by last accounts; have told him of above, and instructed him to be most careful to avoid any communication with Brahooee Sirdars or their people, and on no account to go beyond Murree Hills towards Bolan, Seebee, or Kutchee.

No. 8.

Dated Jacobabad, 14th December 1875.

Khelat Diary, No. 47, for the week ending 12th December 1875.

On the 22nd November a letter was sent by his Highness the Khan to the address of Sirdar Sher Zuman Baruzai at Kurkh, in which his Highness wrote that "His Highness "the Amir of Afghanistan does not allow persons evil-disposed towards my Government "to remain near him, how then have you given these evil-disposed persons a place to "reside in? If any person should commit any evil in my country, or have any evil "designs against me, I would have you to understand that no harm can come to me "either by you or them." Sirdar Sher Zuman Khan replied: "I am your well-wisher, "I have never done any harm to your country. Sirdar Moolla Muhammad has been "permitted to remain here by his Highness the Amir, and I have been ordered to do his "service, and to give him land and water. I have his Highness' written orders on this "subject; the British Government also have permitted him to remain here. If you "have any inquiries to make on this subject, you had better make them from his High‘ ness the Amir and the British Government. Ever since this Sirdar has come into this “ part of this country, he has never had any bad intentions towards your country: when- “ ever he had any designs, he always went and lived with his own people. None of my “ people have ever taken any part with him. It is not proper that you should write such “ hard words to me as you have done.”

2. There is great fear in Kutchee, everyone is taking their property out of the small villages and placing it in the large ones for safety. Much property has been taken to Shoran, where Waderah Imam Buksh Rhind lives, and Jalal Khan-ke-Busti, where Waderah Dost Muhammad Maghaira resides. His Highness' officials are quite unable to protect the standing crops of grain in Kutchee, and the zemindars have been obliged to hire a certain number of the Brahooees to take care of their fields.

3. Sirdar Noordeen Mingul sent two sowars to Wuderah Kaisir Khan Mugzi, and asked him to assist him with troops; the Wuderah replied that he could not assist him openly, but he privately sent the Jalawan Sirdar Rupees 4,000. Waderah Imam Baksh Rhind, at the solicitation of Abdul Aziz, Naib of Bagh, sent 100 Rhind sowars under Ruza Muhammad Rhind for the protection of Bagh, and Wuderah Kaisir Khan Mugzee has also sent 100 of his sowars under Muhammad Khan, Bhutiana Mugzee, for the same purpose, and they have all reached Bagh.

4. With reference to paragraph 4 of Diary No. 43 of the 8th November, and paragraph 4 of Diary No. 44 of the 23rd November, Khodadad Khan was the headman present with the Dhumars who robbed the kafilas on the 25th October and 5th November last, and he lives in the Zurgoon Hills. These Dhumurs were assisted by the Summalanis, who live with them in the Zurgoon Hills.

5. Regarding paragraph 3 of Diary No 35 of 13th September, wherein it was stated that some infantry and sowars had been sent with Sirdar Gazi Khan, Gitchki, to collect the revenue of Punjgoor, it is reported that at the instigation of Lulla Nowsherwani, nephew of Sirdar Azad Khan of Kharan, that everyone has refused to pay any revenue. On the arrival of the troops Sirdar Lulla Nowsherwani went to the fort of Khodabadan and began to collect a force with the intention of turning his Highness' troops out of the country. Sirdar Gaju Khan, seeing how matters stood, wrote to his Highness the Khan and asked for reinforcements, stating that, under present circumstances, it was a difficult matter for his troops. When this was reported to his Highness he remained silent and gave no orders. Sirdar Bhai Khan, Gitchki of Rij, who went to perform the Haj at Mecca, has not yet returned.

6. The Summalanis plundered four flocks of goats from Moongachur and one flock of goats from near Tehri, the Naib of Moostoong followed the plunderers, but did not come up with them.

7. A kafila was on its way from Afghanistan to Kurrachee, and another from Kurrachee to Afghanistan, and when they reached Sherimah in the Moongachur district, the Dhumars and Summalanis attacked both kafilas, two Pathans were wounded, but the plunderers managed to carry off only thirteen camels, all the rest of the kafila was saved.

8. Sirdar Pussund Khan Langoa, son of Rahimdad, and his brother, Saffar Khan, have quarrelled, they are residents of Moongachur, the latter with his family and followers has gone to reside in Shorawak in Afghan territory; and he has on two occasions plundered the cattle feeding near Moongachur, and has carried off two herds of camels belonging to the Langaos.

9. Nohuk Guzni and Pullia Koongrani, with some Talani Dhoombkees and Notani Boogtees, on the 6th of December about 10 p.m., carried off from near Mamool 103 camels, the property of certain Jutts residing there. The Jutts did not give information to the Sind Horse outposts, but sent word to Dhur Muhammad Jumali, who sent a man to the outposts at Rojan, the native officer went in pursuit, but too late to recover the property.

10. To-day news was brought to me that Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, had reached old Seebee six days ago, and that at his invitation all the Sarawan Brahooee Sirdars had visited him. His intention was to proceed to Bibinani viâ the Bolan, and it is currently reported that Captain Sandeman had sent to his Highness the Khan of Khelat requesting his Highness to meet him there. Captain Sandeman went from Rahim, viâ Nat Dahu and the Goorg Pass. Sher Dil Muzzaranee Murree accompanied him as guide, and he was accompanied by Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari.

No. 983, dated Camp Shikarpoor, 17th December 1875.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies forwarded to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, for information.

2. Captain Sandeman during the past year was repeatedly ordered by the Commissioner to abstain from communicating direct with the Brahui Sirdars, or having anything to do with Seebee or Kutchee.

3. Recently, in reference to the Government of India Resolution, No. 2819P. of the 16th October, that officer was particularly instructed to collect all the information he could get in the hills regarding the subjects mentioned in the Resolution, but on no account to go beyond the hills into Seebee or Kutchee, or to have any communication direct with the Brahooee Sirdars. According to the report now forwarded, Captain Sandeman would seem to have deliberately broken all these orders. He has been called upon for explanation of this conduct, which, on receipt, will be submitted to the Government of India with the Commissioner's further remarks. But in the meanwhile the Commissioner would observe that Captain Sandeman's services were placed at his disposal with a view of proper control being exercised over the Murree and Boogtee tribes, over whom, from his connection with them as Assistant and Deputy Commissioner in the Lower Derajat, it was supposed, he, Captain Sandeman, had great and salutary influence, sufficient to induce them to behave peaceably on the western side of the hills in the same manner as they had been acting towards the east. On these grounds the Commissioner was glad to accept Captain Sandeman's services. But the Commissioner never contemplated that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan would venture to act independently and meddle with the political affairs of Khelat, with which he had nothing whatever to do, and manifestly from his position should not have.

4. The Commissioner would submit to Government that such disregard of his orders is most reprehensible on the part of Captain Sandeman. But, more than that, interference by the Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, in political matters directly connected with Khelat, which are in the hands of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, under the Commissioner in Sind, would at all times be highly objectionable. But at the present moment, when a grave crisis is imminent between the Khan of Khelat and his nobles, it is very much more reprehensible and most embarrassing. The Khan of Khelat and the Sirdars, on hearing of this independent action of Captain Sandeman, cannot fail to imagine that two principles are being worked; two authorities acting differently; one from Sind, the other from the Punjab; and a dual arrangement in its worst form comes into play. The policy of non-interference which was laid down by his Excellency the Viceroy last January is being strictly and carefully followed by the Commissioner, and while it is so another person appears on the scene acting without authority from him, and certainly in direct contra-distinction to the principal of non-interference. His going to the Sirdars at Seebee will be immediately regarded in some measure as a recognition of their cause, particularly as they are engaged in organizing a rebellion against their ruler. The Commissioner need scarcely point out what a false position this places us in with regard to the Khan of Khelat, and in the present state of affairs between the two Governments.

5. An express has been sent after Captain Sandeman directing him to return at once to his district, and to answer for his breach of orders, and the Commissioner would request that he may be in future kept to his place in Dehra Ghazi Khan.

6. The representations made originally by the Commissioner had simply to do with the management of the Murree tribe. Captain Sandeman has been unable to do anything towards restraining them in the manner desired, and the demeanour of that tribe now is far worse than has ever been known. Better revert to the old state of affairs than this, and the Commissioner would prefer doing so. He would, therefore, request that the money sanctioned after the Mittunkote Conference may again be placed at the disposal of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, for use in reference to that frontier, and that the Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazi Khan, may simply attend to his own frontier, as before.

Telegram, dated 17th December 1875.

From Commissioner in Sind, Shikarpoor, to Foreign Secretary, Calcutta.

Captain Sandeman is stated to have visited Seebee and Dadur and communicated with Brahooee Sirdars. This is directly contrary to my orders; would be objectionable at any time, but at the present moment most improper and embarrassing: any appearance even of separate political action from that I have been ordered to carry out cannot be too carefully avoided. I have sent express to Captain Sandeman to return at once to his districts, and would beg he may be kept here. Papers by post.

From Foreign Secretary, Calcutta, to Commissioner in Sind, Shikarpoor.

Yours of 17th. While directing Sandeman not to interfere in the troubles apparently impending between Khan and his subjects, you should take care not to interfere with Sandeman's execution of orders he has received from Government of India, and particularly not to be hasty in condemning his conduct before he has explained it. Sandeman's movements among Murrees should not be interfered with.

Telegram, dated 22nd December 1875.

From Commissioner in Sind, Khanpur, to Foreign Secretary, Calcutta.

Yours of 20th. I do not understand and cannot suppose Sandeman has orders for what he has been doing, as it is directly contrary to policy laid down by Government of India, and gravely insubordinate to me. He has not only visited Seebee and Dadur, and held communication with Brahooee Sirdars, but has sent Imam Buksh Mazari and others with letters to Khan of Khelat. He has also entered Bolan accompanied by Sirdars. The whole of this is directly contrary to instructions given him by me; most indiscreet and unbecoming; must make present relations with Khan and Khelat affairs more embarrassing, and make all parties doubt in reality Government policy and its good faith. You may be sure Sandeman will not be finally condemned by me unheard, but above speaks for itself, and I must beg his being kept to Dehra Ghazee Khan and his own legitimate duties.

Dated Jacobabad, 21st December 1875.

Khelat Diary, No. 48, for the week ending 19th December 1875.

The Sarawan and Jalawan Brahooees, assisted by Sirdar Azaad Khan, Nowsherwanee of Kharan, had all agreed to commence disturbances on the 25th of this month. Azaad Khan was to move on Khelat by the Sobrah route, Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and Sirdar Gohur Khan Zarukzai were to go by the Zehree route, and the Sarawan Brahooees, who are now in Kutchee, were first to possess themselves of Kutchee, and then on the 25th of this month also to move above the passes on Khelat, and if they proved successful, it was the intention of the Brahooee nobles to depose the present Khan, Khodadad Khan, and place his eldest son, Meer Muhammad Khan, a lad of about nine years old, on the throne: a certain number of the officers about his Highness' court (vide Khelat Diary, paragraph 1, No. 46 of 7th December 1875) had also privately promised the Brahooee Sirdars their assistance. With this intention Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee had collected all his family and his property on the 9th of the current month, and was going to leave Koorkh that evening and join the Sarawan Brahooees. But on that evening Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, arrived in Seebee; he had come by the Guzee and Koorkh route with the under-mentioned following;—One troop of the 1st Punjab cavalry under Captain Wylie, 150 of the 4th regiment of Sikh infantry, and a European medical officer, by name Surgeon Thomson; Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari, Sirdar Jumal Khan Laghari, Sirdar Ghulam Hyder Lund, Sirdar Sekunder Khan Rosah, Meer Ula Khan Murree, brother of Sirdar Guzzun Khan, and many other Murree Muccadums; Shabaz Khan, son of Gulam Murteza, Boogtee Sirdar, Sirdar Kadur Khan Khetran, and the son of Babul Khan, Khetran Sirdar, the headmen of Dreshuks and Bogdars. Captain Sandeman moved to Doka-ke-Koomb near Mull, and he desired the Sarawan Sirdars at once to desist from creating disturbance in Kutchee or Khelat. He sent an order to the Naib of Bagh, Abdul Aziz, that he was at once to dismiss all the Rhind and Mugzi horsemen he had collected in Bagh (vide paragraph 3 of Diary No. 47 of 14th December 1875), and in accordance with this order they all returned to their houses on the 11th instant. Captain Sandeman halted there the 11th, 12th, and 13th, and on the 14th he moved his camp to Pirak-ke-Tukree; on the 15th he moved to Dadur, and halted there on the 16th. From here he sent two of his own sowars and two Sarawan sowars to Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and Gohur Khan Zarukzai with a letter to these two Sirdars, requesting them to refrain from making any disturbances in Khelat territory, as he was about to make a settlement of their differences and disputes with his Highness the Khan of Khelat. Captain Sandeman also sent two sowars to his Highness the Khan, and requested his Highness not to make any preparations to attack the Brahooees until he received another letter from him, and Captain Sandeman sent Sirdar Muhammad Khan, brother of Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai Sirdar, with six sowars to Candahar (but for what purpose is not known). Captain Sandeman presented Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan with a khillut or dress of honour, and the Sirdar then returned to Seebee. Captain Sandeman, taking with him Syud Aurung Shah, who lives at Dadur, and all the afore-mentioned Sirdars and troops and 200 Sarawan Brahooee Sowars, moved to Khoondeelanee. Captain Sandeman pays the Sarawan Sirdars and their 200 horsemen who are with him Rupees 150 per diem, with the exception of Sirdars Sumandar Khan and Dost Muhammad Lehris who are not with him. The following are the Sarawan Sirdars now with Captain Sandeman: Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, Sirdar Shadi Khan Bungulzi, Sirdar Syud Khan Muhammadshai, Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord, Sirdar Jhunda Khan Shawani, and their 200 followers. On the 18th Captain Sandeman and his followers moved to Bibinani, and on that day Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari, Sirdar Jamul Khan Laghari, Russul Buksh, nephew of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Sirdar Dost Muhammad, son of Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord, with 140 sowars, were despatched to Khelat to his Highness the Khan. They were to march by the Rhodbar, Jumbaeri, and Nurmorkh route, and on the 19th Captain Sandeman moved to Kirta, where he intends to halt and await the return of his party from Khelat. The kossid, by name Khomi, who brought a letter for me, stated in my presence that he had seen Sirdar Imam Buksh and the others above-mentioned leave for Khelat.

2. The two messengers sent from here on the 14th instant with important letters for Captain Sandeman have not yet returned from Kutchee. On the 17th instant two other messengers were despatched to Captain Sandeman with copy of Commissioner in Sind's telegram dated Shikarpoor, 17th December 1875.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies forwarded to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, for information.

2. The Commissioner cannot too strongly express his disapproval and condemnation of the proceeding of Captain Sandeman as herein detailed and as confirmed from other accounts. The manner in which Captain Sandeman has taken upon himself to assume direct political powers and enter into political relations, not merely with the Brahooee Sirdars, but even with the Khan of Khelat himself, is most unbecoming and improper.

3. The Government of India desired that a policy of strict non-interference should be followed. This was distinctly announced to the Sirdars and to the Khan, and has been carefully followed; yet a young officer, with only limited knowledge of what has previously passed, comes in and issues orders where he has no business to appear. This indiscreet (to say the least of it) meddling of Captain Sandeman will have a most pernicious effect by shaking the faith of the Sirdars and of the Khan in the real intentions of Government.

4. Instructions have again been sent to Captain Sandeman to return forthwith to his districts through the Murree Hills, submitting without delay such explanation of his conduct as he can offer, and that he should remain there pending further orders.

News from Shikarpoor.

Yesterday, Sunday, the 19th December 1875, it was rumoured in the town of Shikarpoor that an English force, consisting of four or five thousand men, arrived at Dadur in charge of Captain Sandeman of the Punjab. It was stated that he had been deputed to arrange to take the Murrees and Beloochees in Government employ, and that he is about to send for the subjects of Khelat to hold a conference with them.

Translation of a letter from Meer Khan Gholam Bholak, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 16th Zulkad 1292=15th December 1875.

The news I heard here is that in the year when the disturbances took place between his Highness the Khan, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and the other nobles, his Highness confiscated the Brahooee jaghir lands and cultivated them, sowing their lands with grain from his own granaries. After this the British Government mediated and made peace between his Highness and the Brahooees. The Brahooees in this settlement received back their own lands, and cut the produce of the grain which his Highness had sown. This year his Highness has demanded a return of this amount of grain from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and his friends, but they refused to give it, and his Highness has, by force, in exchange for this taken the sum of Rupees 1,200 from the zemindars and bunniahs who reside in Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's villages, and has also plundered the other Brahooees to a certain extent. Now all the Brahooees who had come into Kutchee intended to raise a rebellion. Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord's section were in Lukree, Sirdar Shadeo Khan Bungulzai in Bhadah, and the Shawanis in Hajee-ke-Shere; all having assembled together were of one determination, and all came together to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to Kurkh. The following Murrees who are all Shabijas came to Kurkh to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, viz., Sheran Mulwani, Sobdhar and Sukoo Lingranis, Dhooroo Langari, the Brahooees were also present there, and the Sirdar made peace between them and the Murrees. The reason of this peace being made was, because should there be a rebellion and fighting between his Highness' troops and the Brahooees, in the event of the latter getting beaten, they would have an asylum in the Murree Hills to retire to; but up to the present no disturbance or rebellion has taken place; but a rebellion had been determined on and was being arranged when Futteh Khan, brother of Kurrum Khan Bijarani, brought the news that the Deputy Commissioner, Captain Sandeman, on the 8th Zulkad = 7th December, was then in Goozee, and would arrive in Thullee the following day. On hearing this, Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai Sirdar, with all the Pani Muccadums, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and all the Brahooee Sirdars and Muccadums went to Thullee to meet the Sahib and do istakbal; but the Sahib came by the Goozee and Khechusee road which debouches into the plain to the north of Doka-ke-Koomb, and he encamped where the Thullee and Mull rivers join. The above-mentioned Sirdars and Muccadums who had proceeded to Thullee not meeting the Sahib there, proceeded to the Sahib's camp as soon as they learned where he had pitched it. The Sahib, on the 9th instant, moved from Doka to the Naree River. Here the Panis, Brahooees, and others who had collected together, amounted to about 1,800 persons, but amongst these were 200 regular infantry and cavalry, the rest were all Belooch, viz., Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari, the Lagharies, the Dushuks, the Gorchanis, the Lunds, the Kosahs, the Boogtees, the Khetrans, and Meer Ulla Khan, brother of the Murree Sirdar Kurrum Khan Bijaranee, and Sher Dil, Mazaranee Murrees. On the 10th instant, for the purpose of paying honour to Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan and Moolla Mahomed, the Sahib mounted his horse, visited Kurkh and old Seebee, and then returned to his camp, and he halted there for four days and nights. The Sahib made known the following to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, that he (Captain Sandeman) had come for the purpose of making peace between the Brahooees and his Highness the Khan of Khelat; that he intended to make peace between his Highness and the Sirdars, and that he would open up the Bolan road in such a way that travellers and wayfarers might proceed by this route without any fear; and that he would make peace also with the Murrees in such a way that the Murrees would refrain from plundering in Kutchee and Seebee, which belong to his Highness the Ameer. The Sahib also stated that his first intention was to take every one with him and proceed straight to Khelat; but those who were with the Sahib represented that during the present season snow falls at Khelat, and the climate is intensely cold. Captain Sandeman then directed Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari, with 100 horsemen, to prepare to proceed to Khelat to his Highness the Khan, and the Sahib said that he with the rest of his followers would await Sirdar Imam Buksh's return in Kula Bibinani or the Dusht Plain. The Sahib desired Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan Barozai to give him a Motabur to send to Candahar, and Sher Zaman got ready his brother, Mahomed Khan, with six sowars. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and the other Brahooees joined Captain Sandeman's camp at Nari and stayed with it for four days. On the 14th Zulkad=13th December, the Sahib intended to move to Dadur, but on Moolla Mahomed representing that he would have to wait for one day to enable him to have his horses shod, the Sahib stayed one day longer there, and from there he started Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari off to Khelat. On the 15th Zulkad=14th December, the Sahib gave Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai Sirdar, a khillut, consisting of one lungi, one choga, and a thân of velvet, and sent him back to his own town. Moolla Mahomed wrote a letter to Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, Gohur Khan Zurakzai, and Jam Ally, son of the Jam of Beylah at Nal, Wud, that they were not to create any disturbances, but to come to him. The force (Captain Sandeman's camp) will move from there (Dadur) on the 16th, but I do not know in what direction he will move, or where he will halt until Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari returns. I formerly asked you to give me information as to when the Commissioner in Sind would come to Jacobabad, but you did not reply to this. Kindly let me know so that I may pay my respects to him and to you.

2. This account confirms what has already been reported concerning Captain Sandeman's unseemly interference with affairs in which he had no business to engage.

3. The Government of India had directed that the Khan and his nobles were to be left to settle their affairs by, and of, themselves, and certainly unless Government was prepared to compel the Khan to carry into effect the agreements entered into on his behalf at Jacobabad in 1872, and to make him abide strictly by the treaty engagements he was bound to, this was the only course which could be followed with justice or any show of proper dignity. The Khan and Sirdars were accordingly left to themselves, and the latter were about to adopt their own plan of obtaining redress, when a young officer without any authority from the person in whose hands these political matters are confided, suddenly shows himself and proclaims himself the settler of all differences. A more unseemly proceeding the Commissioner has never heard of, and a more embarrassing one there could not possibly be, when character for political consistency and faithful adherence to decision publicly conveyed are regarded. This account further mentions Captain Sandeman's intention of proceeding above the passes. This may or may not be true, but the Commissioner's letter recalling Captain Sandeman should have reached that officer before he could carry into effect a measure even more gravely reprehensible than what he has already so improperly entered upon.

Translation of a letter from Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai Sirdar, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 30th Zulkad = 19th December 1875.

It must be known to you that your letter which you wrote and by which I was honoured reached me, the contents of which were as follows:—You Sher Zaman Khan should, in the same way your forefathers did, restrain your followers from joining in any disturbances or cabals against his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and you should prevent their taking any part in the spoliation of the country belonging to his Highness the Khan, and the British Government will approve of such conduct on your part. By the receipt of this letter I was made happy and much honoured. It has been my good fortune that until now none of my people have ever joined with the Brahooees in any disturbances, nor have they ever done any harm to his Highness the Khan's country, and for the future I will prevent any one doing so. For ages past my ancestors have been on most friendly relations with the rulers of Khelat, and in future this good feeling will be strengthened.

Your second letter, together with a letter to the address of Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, which was sent to me, and the contents of the one to me were as follows: That wherever Captain Sandeman may have marched to this letter is to be sent by your sowars to the Sahib, for it is emergent, and you must send a reply. When I received these two letters I found out that the Sahib had reached Quettah (Shawlkot), I at once got two of my own sowars ready, because no one else, through fear of the Summalanis and Dhoomurs, would go there. I arranged with these two sowars that they were each to receive ten rupees and started them off, and I hope that the above-mentioned Sahib would get your letter on the 19th December. When I receive the reply to your letter I will at once forward it to you by my own sowar; keep your heart comforted. The news of the Sahib is, that on the 9th December he came by the Lehree and Ghazee Pass to Doka on the Thullee River; next day the Sahib moved the Nari River. At that place he called Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and all the other Sarawan Sirdars to him, and the afore-mentioned Sirdar and all the others went and paid their respects to him. The following Belooch Sirdars are with Captain Sandeman:— The Mazari Dushuk, Laghari Kosah, Lund, Kulalh Sirdars, Meer Ula Khan, brother of Guzzun Khan, Murree Sirdar, and the other Murree Muccadums who live above Kahun, also the Ghorabain and Boogtee Sirdars. The Sahib halted here four nights, and then, with all the Brahooee Sirdars, moved to Dadur. Next day he sent Sirdars Imam Buksh Mazari, Jamal Khan Laghari, Rasal Buksh, nephew of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and 70 or 80 horsemen to Khelat, to wait on his Highness the Khan, and invite him to visit Captain Sandeman, and he arranged to move to Mustung. He then dismissed all the Brahooees, with the exception of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Sarawan Sirdars. His first march was to be Kirta, and he intended reaching Quettah on the third march. It is well known that the Sahib intends going straight, viâ Mustung, to Khelat. Whatever I hear I will let you know. There is no other news of any description, otherwise I would have written it to you. I am entirely your dependent. I do not look in any other direction. I am always under your orders and in your service. I am your servant waiting at your door for orders. Consider me as amongst your servants, and look on me with the favours of a King, because I am always exalted by this. Keep comforted. I am hopeful that I will not go one footstep beyond the orders of Government.

Telegram, dated 1[illegible] January 1876.

From Captain Sandeman, Camp Shaul Kote, through Rajanpoor, to Foreign Secretary, Calcutta.

On entering Khelat territory received a most enthusiastic welcome from the Khelat Government, Chiefs, and people. Khan's officials informed me that orders from his Highness directed them to treat me with the same respect as shown to his Highness when on tour. The Khan, in reply to the petition of the Murree and Brahooee Chiefs for a peaceful solution of present difficulties, has written me to say he fully consents and will arrange this with me in person, and for the protection of the Bolan traffic. Letter states his Highness deeply regrets misunderstanding with British Government. I am en route to meet his Highness, accompanied by Murree and Brahooee Sirdars. I telegraph this direct, as I yesterday received letter from Colonel Loch, written by order of Sind Commissioner received by telegram. Loch directs me to return to Ghazee forthwith and to report having done so. My engagements with Khan and Murree Brahooee Sirdars do not admit of my attending to order. Doing so would in all likelihood involve the peace of the country; it is, in my opinion, opposed to the instructions contained in Government Resolution of 16th October, and conflicts with orders of Punjab Government about opening Thull Chotialee route. Please telegraph final instructions to Commissioner, Colonel Loch, and myself. Special messenger will await reply. Message ends.

No. 30, dated 3rd January 1876.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of Punjab, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am desired to forward, for the information of the Government of India, copy of letter dated Camp Dadur, 15th December, from Captain R. G. Sandeman, reporting progress of the expedition he is now conducting under the orders conveyed in Foreign Department Resolution, No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875.

Enclosure 1 in No. 17.

Dated Camp Dadur, 15th December 1875.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

It is with very great pleasure I am able again to write you to assure you of the complete success up to date which has attended the expedition I am conducting into these hills.

I passed through the heart of the Murree Hills to the Seebee Plain, where I arrived on the 8th instant, in perfect safety and without a contretemps of any kind occurring. I took the old kafila route from Hurrand to this. The route is perfectly open and easy, with plenty of wood and water at the different halting places, sufficient for a large force. The distance from Kahan to Seebee is 81 miles, and from the Punjab frontier line to Dadur it is 155 miles.

In selecting our line of march I chose the old kafila route from Hurrand to this. The road is not only easy for camels, but the country is quite open. The only difficulty there ever apparently was on this route was caused by a deep ravine which crosses it. This has been filled up, and the Murree Chiefs told me that the tradition in existence regarding this is that this was done by the order of one of the Khorassan Emperors when marching through the country en route to the invasion of India.

There is another route from Kahan, viâ Mondai, in the Murree country, to Bibi Nani. It also enters the Seebee Plain at Tallie. It was described to me as rather more difficult than the route we took, but more direct. I trust some day to inspect it.

Before concluding my remarks about the kafila routes it is well to tell you that the merchants of Dadur paid me a visit yesterday. I had a long talk with them, and they not only say that trade between this and the Punjab is an easy matter were the routes safe, but they stated they and the Bagh merchants still possess their forefathers' books, which prove not only what they say to be true, but that the trade that then existed was at one time very extensive and flourishing.

On debouching from the Murree Hills I was at once joined by Sirdars Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, Shadi Khan Bungalzai, Junda Khan Shawani, Alla Dina Koord, the Khan of Seebee, and the Khujjak Chiefs.

On the 9th and 10th I held a conference with the Sirdars of the Murree, Boogtee, and Brahooee tribes. I associated with me selected Sirdars of our own districts.

The result of our conference was, that immediate steps were to be taken to prevent further plundering in his Highness the Khan's territory. Some camels were carried off lately from near Jacobabad, but in the Khan's territory, by Dhoombkees and Murrees, but these I will recover. It was tacitly admitted by all present that the Brahooee Sirdars had used the Kahan and Mondai Murrees, whose quarrel with the Khan was of the same nature as their own, to injure his Highness' Government, while on the other hand his Highness had, through his Naibs, employed the Bijarani Murrees to coerce the Sarawan Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. The assembled Chiefs of the Murrees, Boogtees, and Brahooee tribes came to me on the last evening of the conference (after it was over) and asked me to help them to make peace with his Highness. This I agreed to do, saying I would send their petition by the hands of two of my own Sirdars to his Highness.

It was absolutely necessary to take some step of this kind. Civil war all admitted was imminent, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed told me that his Highness the Khan's eldest son had been prevented visiting Kutchee by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, who was prepared to attack him did he attempt to march in this direction. The Khan of Seebee told me the same thing. Finding affairs so critical I selected Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan to take the petition to his Highness, telling them to tell him the true position of affairs in the country as above described, and that I was en route to the Bolan Pass to arrange for the protection of trade, &c. The Sarawan Sirdars sent off horsemen to tell Sirdar Noordeen that they and the Murree Sirdars were under agreement to me to do no harm in the country for the present, and that he was not to create a disturbance.

On the 10th I, accompanied by Captain Wylie and Dr. Thomson, and all the Punjab Sirdars, paid a friendly visit to the Khan of Seebee at New Seebee. I told the assembled Chiefs very briefly with what object I was in the country. On leaving, as the Khan had been of much use to me in various ways, supplying the expedition with grain, &c., I presented him and his nephew with a khillut each, together in value about Rupees 320. I arranged that on my onward journey his nephew was to accompany me to take a letter to the Governor of Candahar, asking if his Highness the Ameer had notified his intention in accordance with the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor's letter to him (a copy of which you gave me), asking him to send an official of some influence to meet me.

On the morning of the 13th I marched from my camp in the Seebee Plain en route to Bibi Nani by the direct road. Bibi Nani is three marches above Dadur, and the road goes by it into the Bolan Pass. There is no necessity for one coming from the Punjab en route to Shaul Kot or Candahar to come first to Dadur.

I had accomplished nearly one-half of my first march when I suddenly saw in the distance a small body of horsemen. They were clearly reconnoitring us, I therefore went off after them. On coming up to them all dismounted and presented their nuzzurs of a few rupees. They were in a great fright, but turned out to be the "Jahnasheen" of Dadur and the Khan's Commandant of cavalry stationed here. We entered into conversation. They very earnestly desired that I would come to Dadur, as they had supplies prepared for me, and had mended the bridges and got ready an encamping ground for my force. They said his Highness the Khan would be only too happy when he heard of my visit; in fact, they simply entreated me to come, saying the country people were in great fear of the Brahooee and Murrees, and that my arrival would restore confidence to all. They made no attempt to conceal the very great relief to their fears my arrival in the country had brought to them. The Naib of Bagh sent me a letter to much the same effect. I at once made up my mind to come here, and issued orders to divert the march of my people from Bibi Nani to Dadur.

On my arrival at Dadur the Khan's artillery fired a salute. During the day I received most of the principal inhabitants. In the evening I visited the town. One and all assured me that what the Khan's officials stated was quite true. They said that they and the Khan's Government would do anything in their power to meet the wishes of the British Government. I was greatly moved by an old grey-bearded headman of the Mingul Brahooees of the Bolan Pass, who, when shaking hands with me on taking his leave lifted my hand to his mouth before I could stop him, and kissed it, blessing me at the same time.

I do believe that in the long run all will come right. I do not pretend that the task I am on is an easy one, but I see nothing in the state of the country to lead me to believe it to be an impossible one, nor is the Khan of Khelat the only one to blame for the distracted state of the country. That Sorab Khan, the Chief of the Dhoombkees of Kutchee, and the Sarawan Sirdars have been aiding the Murrees to plunder in Kutchee, I am in a position fully to prove. Here the Khan of Khelat has commenced to build a fort, and done all he could to protect the country. His officials have been most attentive, and yesterday evening I presented the "Jahnasheen" and the Commandant of Cavalry each with a small khillut as a return for their kindness and attention.

I have a large party with me, and am anxious about my expedition. I have the hire of 350 camels to pay, and altogether my expenses are between 300 and 400 rupees per diem. This does not include such "khilluts" as those given to the Seebee Chiefs, but I am doing all I can to keep my expenditure as small as possible.

P.S.—I have written this under considerable difficulties as Chiefs and the followers are continually visiting me to pay their respects.

Captain Sandeman is stated to have returned to Dadur, but has not as yet acknowledged receipt of my orders. It is added he has invited the Khan to meet him, and the Khan has said he will do so. Unless he leaves at once for his own duties and districts the worst results must follow. His proceedings are directly opposed to the avowed policy of Government, are creating grave doubts and suspicions amongst all classes, and leading to unfounded hopes, which can only be most embarrassing in the future. If his Excellency the Viceroy desires any change in the policy ordered by him, I trust I may be informed of it. This unseemly interference of Captain Sandeman is, I would state, most unjustifiable and injurious to our name for good faith. It began at a moment when affairs were righting themselves, and this his action has prevented.

Your diaries and telegrams received. On the information now before him, Viceroy compelled to conclude you have not properly understood or carried into effect instructions of 16th October relative to Sandeman. You have not submitted to Government your instructions to him, but, from remarks on Diary No. 47 for 12th December, you appear to have placed restrictions on Sandeman not in accordance with letter or spirit of Resolution of 16th October. Nothing in Sandeman's proceedings, as reported by you, inconsistent with Resolution or in excess of powers thereby vested in him, or which warrants strong expressions of blame used in regard to him. During present tour Sandeman will now be under direct orders of Government of India, to whom he will submit his reports under flying seal, through you when possible, and in other cases keeping you acquainted with proceedings. Instructions will go to him from Government of India, copy being sent to you.

Exercise your own discretion as to your return to Punjab, but do not protract your stay in Khelat territory. Submit your reports to Government of India under flying seal, through Commissioner in Sind when possible, and in other cases keep him fully acquainted with your proceedings. You will take your instructions during your present tour from the Government of India.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Col. Sir William Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

I am directed by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council to acknowledge receipt of your letters and telegrams noted in the margin, and to convey to you the following remarks and instructions.

Khelat Diaries, Nos. 47 and 48, for weeks ending 12th and 19th.
Dockets, Nos. 1010, 1021, and 1036, dated 23rd, 27th, and 29th December.
Telegrams of 17th and 22nd December and 3rd Jan.

2. His Excellency in Council, upon the information now before him, is compelled to arrive at the conclusion that you have not properly understood or carried into effect the instructions contained in the Resolution of the Government of India, No. 2819P., of the 16th of October last, relative to the mission of Captain Sandeman. No copy of the instructions given by you to Captain Sandeman in consequence of that Resolution has been submitted by you for the information of Government. It is evident, however, from your remarks of the 17th of December, attached to Diary No. 47, that your instructions to Captain Sandeman placed restrictions upon that officer's proceedings which were not in accordance with the letter or spirit of the Resolution of the 16th of October.

3. His Excellency in Council can see nothing in the proceedings of Captain Sandeman as reported by you, or in a telegram from that officer of the 1st instant, a copy of which is enclosed, inconsistent with his instructions contained in the Resolution of the 16th of October, or in excess of the powers expressly vested in him by the Governor-General in Council by that Resolution, while your orders to Captain Sandeman to return to his district appear to be opposed to the policy and directions of his Excellency in Council as set forth in that Resolution.

4. Captain Sandeman seems to have found the country on the verge of a civil war, and his presence appears from the diaries to have prevented bloodshed up to the present time. Nothing in his conduct as known to the Government of India appears to warrant the strong expressions of blame which you have used in regard to him, notwithstanding the caution which the Viceroy directed me to convey to you in my telegram of the 20th of December.

5. Under these circumstances his Excellency in Council is reluctantly compelled, for the purpose of preventing further complications, to place Captain Sandeman while on his present tour under the direct orders of the Government of India, to whom he will submit his reports under flying seal, through you when it is possible, and in other cases keeping you fully acquainted with his proceedings.

6. In like manner he will receive his instructions direct from the Government of India, and you will be furnished with copies of them.

Yours of 7th received. I certainly did not understand that the duties confided to me were to be entered upon independently by comparative stranger to the country and people; that while I was carefully following policy ordered of non-interference, a junior officer of less experience and knowledge of subject should come in without reference to me, actively interfere and upset arrangements. Sandeman knew well my strong objection to his engaging in Khelat affairs and why, and should have addressed me before doing so. I fear some wrong information, unknown to me, has given Government of India wrong impression of state of affairs in Khelat. To adjust matters quickly interference must have been exerted for or against Khan. Government rejected this. Decision to wait patiently was about to be rewarded when Sandeman's appearance spoils all. On 16th December policy non-interference was approved; Sandeman was then directly meddling and, as will be proved in end, most mischievously initiating double policy. If interference was intended, I would respectfully urge it should have been by me who could point out best time and mode. My instructions to Sandeman have gone to you. I cannot too deeply deplore and feel acutely apparent loss of Viceroy's confidence your telegram of 7th conveys; trust to result for rectification.

From Foreign Secretary, Calcutta, to Commissioner in Sind, Jacobabad.

Your telegram of 9th and previous papers exhibit views and policy in regard to Khelat quite irreconcileable with those of the Government of India. Governor-General in Council has no other course left than to relieve you of responsibility for Khelat affairs. Colonel Monro will be ordered from Punjab to Jacobabad to take political charge. Colonel Loch will be relieved of all responsibility for affairs in Khelat, except his military duties. Remain at Jacobabad till Colonel Monro arrives, and meantime take no steps to commit Government in any way regarding Khelat affairs without previous reference to and approval of Government of India. All requisitions as regards military or police on entire Sind and Khelat frontier which Colonel Monro may make on Colonel Loch or yourself should be promptly complied with.

Please direct Colonel Monro, Commissioner, Derajat, to proceed immediately to Jacobabad and take over from Sir William Merewether charge of our entire relations with Khelat. Commissioner of Sind is relieved of all responsibility for Khelat affairs, Colonel Loch also so relieved, except in respect of military duties. Both are instructed to comply with all requisitions in respect both to military and police on entire Sind and Khelat frontier which Colonel Monro may make on them.

Place before Colonel Monro at once the letter No. 16P., dated 5th January 1875, and the Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, and any other papers necessary to give clear view of Government policy in Khelat. Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan will hold same relation of subordination to Colonel Monro as he formerly did to Commissioner in Sind, and will submit reports through Colonel Monro.

Change now made is urgently called for owing to difference of view and policy pursued by Commissioner in Sind from that held by Government of India. Presence of Colonel Monro at Jacobabad most urgently required, and he should proceed there at once. He will receive usual deputation allowance, and all travelling expenses paid.

Yours of 10th. I bow respectfully to the decision of Governor-General in Council, but I would beg to be allowed to express the extreme distress that decision has caused me, and, in justice to myself as well as others, would beg deferentially to observe that I have only endeavoured to carry out the policy confided to me of non-interference, not my own views, and Colonel Loch, acting under my instructions, has been accurately following this under considerable difficulties. Until yours of 7th, especially after that of 16th December, I believed this to be policy still, and therefore objected to Captain Sandeman's proceedings, pointed out how embarrassing they were, while the course of non-interference supposed to be required was being maintained by me. I have always endeavoured faithfully and truly to carry out orders and views of Government, and I cannot too deeply deplore my efforts and mode of management, after so many years of labour, have failed to procure approbation. As the administrative change proposed is such an extreme one, I would respectfully suggest it may be deferred until result of Captain Sandeman's tour be seen, orders regarding him being exactly observed.

2. It is with much regret that, owing to the irreconcileable difference of opinion which has been found to exist between the Government of India and Sir William Merewether on important questions of Imperial policy, his Excellency in Council has been constrained to relieve the Commissioner in Sind of responsibility connected with the affairs of Khelat, and to entrust the conduct of those affairs to another officer. There appeared to be no other course open by which it would be possible to ensure unity of political action on this portion of the Indian frontier.

3. Accordingly the Governor-General in Council directs that Colonel Monro, the Commissioner of the Derajat Division, be desired to proceed at once to Jacobabad and take over charge from Sir W. Merewether of the entire relations of the British Government with Khelat. The Commissioner in Sind has been relieved of all responsibility for Khelat affairs, and Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier, has been similarly relieved of all responsibility for affairs in Khelat, except in so far as his military duties are concerned. Both Sir W. Merewether and Colonel Loch have received orders to comply with such requisitions, in respect both to military and police arrangements on the entire Sind and Khelat frontier, as Colonel Monro may make on them.

4. I am to request that the Government of the Punjab will furnish Colonel Monro with copies of the orders of his Excellency in Council, No. 16P.C., dated 5th January 1875, and of the Resolution of the Government of India, No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, with any other papers which may be necessary to give a clear view of the policy adopted by the Governor-General in Council in regard to the affairs of Khelat. Colonel Monro's attention should be particularly directed to paragraphs 22-30 of the Resolution of 16th October 1875, as containing the views of his Excellency in Council regarding the responsibilities of the British Government, as well as the instructions which Captain Sandeman is endeavouring to carry into effect.

5. If the measures now in progress should prove successful, and his Highness the Khan of Khelat should evince a sincere desire to co-operate with the Government of India in promoting security and order in his Highness' dominions, it will, as stated in paragraph 29 of the Resolution of October 1875, afford the Governor-General great pleasure, on receiving an expression of regret for the past, to restore the former subsidy and to renew those relations of cordiality and friendship which previously subsisted between the two Governments.

6. Colonel Monro having been entrusted with the control of Khelat affairs, it will be necessary that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan should hold the same relation of subordination, in respect to the management of the Murrees and Boogtees and other similar matters, to Colonel Monro as he formerly held to the Commissioner in Sind, and that Captain Sandeman's reports on the subject of those tribes and of Khelat should be submitted to the Government of India through Colonel Monro.

7. I am to add that Colonel Monro, while employed on this special duty at Jacobabad, will receive the usual deputation allowance, and all actual travelling expenses incurred by him during the same period will be paid by Government. The Lieutenant-Governor may proceed to make temporary arrangements for the conduct of Colonel Monro's duties as Commissioner of the Derajat Division.

No. 6 of 1876.

Government of India. Foreign Department. Political.

To the Most Hon. the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Marquis, Fort William, 14th January 1876.

With reference to the Despatch from your Lordship, No. 91, dated 8th July 1875, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of correspondence* on the subject of Khelat and the Murree and Boogtee tribes.

2. In October last, as the time approached when Captain Sandeman, the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, had to proceed into Khelat territory in pursuance of orders previously given him, it became necessary for us to review the affairs of that country, and once more to set forth clearly in the light of recent events the policy which we desired should be adopted in Khelat, and the objects which Captain Sandeman should keep in view in his proceedings.

* Nos. 1 to 28.

3. We invite attention to Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, which contains a narrative of events and the instructions issued by us. It will be seen from paragraphs 20 to 22 of that Resolution that we deemed it necessary to modify in one respect the decision we had come to on 5th January 1875, by distinguishing more clearly our duties and obligations in respect to raids committed within or near the British frontier, and raids committed by the nominal subjects of the Khan within the territories of Khelat. The Resolution of 16th October fully explains both the modification we made and the reasons for it, and we need not enlarge on the subject in this Despatch.

4. Our policy may be summed up as follows :—

First. That we should afford complete protection to the lives and property of our own subjects, and suppress outrages within the Sind and Punjab frontiers by force if necessary.

Second. That while we may reasonably expect our troops stationed in the Sind outposts to afford some protection to life and property in Khelat territory immediately adjoining the Upper Sind frontier as far as their power can reach, we should not accept responsibility for the protection of life and property in the territories of the Khan of Khelat.

Third. That our frontier officers should use their influence and good offices for the promotion of peace and order, and for the settlement of disputes, whether among the tribes of Khelat or between the tribes and the people of Seebee or the Government of the Khan.

5. In pursuance of the above policy Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, was directed to proceed into the Murree Hills, in order (1) to procure all the information he could respecting local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahoees; (2) to endeavour to settle amicably such quarrels; (3) to report on such quarrels as he might not be able to settle; and (4) to report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's Government. Captain Sandeman was also to inquire and report whether anything could be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan, and whether a system of fixed tolls could not be arranged for, the proceeds of which would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the route; and in respect to all or any of these objects he was invested with discretion to make any arrangements he thought proper within the total sum sanctioned at the Mittunkote conference, viz., Rs. 66,960 a year.

6. Shortly after the Resolution of 16th October 1875 had been recorded we received Sir W. Merewether's report, No. 816, dated 21st October, and accompanying papers, which contained an unfavourable account of affairs in Khelat and of the Khan's conduct.

7. In his letter, dated 29th October 1875, the Commissioner in Sind acknowledged receipt of Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875. He renewed his complaints of the conduct of the Khan of Khelat, and he remonstrated at length against the policy which we had deliberately adopted in respect to the Murrees, contending that measures should be taken to check and punish the tribe for their forays upon the Khan's territory in Kutchee, and recommending that he should be authorised to protect that province by an armed force. We have not thought it necessary to issue any special orders on these communications, and we have not been induced by a consideration of them to deviate from the policy in respect to Khelat which we had already adopted, after mature deliberation, and after consideration of the views and arguments previously advanced by the Commissioner in Sind.

8. We next learned from the communications noted on the margin that a revolution was believed to be imminent in Khelat, the chief actors in the conspiracy being Noordeen, the Chief of the Minguls, in the south, and in the north Moolla Mahomed Raisani, the Sarawan Sirdar, who has for some time resided in exile at Seebee, and the object of the movement being to depose the Khan in favour of his son, Meer Muhammad Khan. By telegram, No. 3309P., dated 16th December 1875, the Commissioner in Sind was informed that his proposed policy of abstention from interference in the apprehended rebellion was approved.

Khelat Diary, No. 48, for the week ending 19th December 1875.

9. Meanwhile Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, had penetrated into the Murree Hills, and thence to Seebee and Dadur. Captain Sandeman's own account of his proceedings will be found in the enclosure of the letter from the Government of the Punjab, No. 30, dated 3rd January 1876, and in his telegram despatched from Rajanpoor on 1st January, with which may be compared the information received from Sind, and contained in the papers named on the margin. Captain Sandeman appears to have met with considerable success so far in his expedition. He took with him representatives of the Murree tribe, collected them and the Brahoee Sirdars together, prevailed upon them and Moolla Mahomed Raisani to uspend their quarrels and their threatened action against the Khan, and finally opened up communication with his Highness himself, in the hope of inducing the Khan to co-operate in the adjustment of those inter-tribal differences which are believed to lie at the root of the disturbances in his Highness' territory. In acting thus Captain Sandeman has proceeded, so far as we can judge, in conformity with the letter and spirit of our instructions as conveyed in the Resolution of 16th October 1875, and summarised in the 4th paragraph of this Despatch.

10. Sir William Merewether, however, has adopted a different view. On the 17th December he telegraphed that Captain Sandeman was stated to have visited Seebee and Dadur and communicated with the Brahoee Sirdars, that such proceedings were directly contrary to the Commissioner's orders, objectionable, and embarrassing, and that Captain Sandeman had been ordered by express to return at once to his district. The orders on this communication were conveyed by the Foreign Secretary's telegram No. 3,343P. of 20th December 1875, in which Sir W. Merewether was requested, while directing Captain Sandeman to avoid interference in the troubles apparently impending between the Khan and his subjects, to be careful not to interfere with Captain Sandeman's execution of the orders he had received from the Government of India, and particularly not to be hasty in condemning Captain Sandeman's conduct before he had explained it. It was added that Captain Sandeman's movements among the Murrees should not be interfered with.

11. The rejoinder from the Commissioner in Sind to the orders quoted in the foregoing paragraph will be found in his telegram of 22nd December. He therein erroneously asserted that Captain Sandeman's action was directly contrary to the policy laid down by the Government of India, in having not only visited Seebee and Dadur and held communication with the Brahoee Sirdars, but also in having sent messengers and letters to the Khan of Khelat, and in having entered the Bolan Pass accompanied by the Sirdars. Sir William Merewether added that the whole of this action was directly contrary to the instructions given to Captain Sandeman by the Commissioner, with many other expressions of strong disapprobation; and the Government of India were finally exhorted to keep Captain Sandeman to Dehra Ghazee Khan and his own legitimate duties.

12. Similar sentiments, showing that the Commissioner in Sind persists in regarding Captain Sandeman's efforts to adjust the quarrels between the tribes, the Brahoee Sirdars, and the Khan as meddlesome and embarrassing interference in the political affairs of Khelat are recorded in the papers marginally noted. In his remarks on Khelat Diary, No. 47, the Commissioner charges Captain Sandeman with disregarding instructions by which the Commissioner had ordered him on no account to go beyond the hills into Seebee or Kutchee, or to have any communication direct with the Brahoee Sirdars. We have received no copy of the instructions referred to; but if they were to the effect stated by the Commissioner, they were not in accordance with the wishes and orders of the Government of India as explained in the Resolution of 16th October 1875, under which Captain Sandeman was deliberately invested by the Government of India with discretion to make any arrangements he considered advisable without the necessity of previous reference to the Commissioner in Sind. The other papers mentioned on the margin abound in strong expressions of dissatisfaction which it is unnecessary to detail, for they are in fact attributable to a radical difference of opinion between the Government of India and Sir William Merewether. We, on the one hand, are anxious that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan should use every effort with the Khan, the Brahoee Sirdars, and the Murrees, to settle existing disputes. The Commissioner, on the other hand, would maintain peace in Kutchee by force of arms, and confine Captain Sandeman's action to the Murree and Boogtee Hills, and would debar him from that communication with the Government of Khelat, the people of Seebee, and the Brahoees which was contemplated by our instructions of 16th October 1875, and which we consider indispensable for the purpose in view.

13. Matters having reached this stage we found ourselves compelled to choose one of two courses, either to discountenance and recall the officer, who was acting in accordance with our policy and who appeared to be deserving of our support, and to uphold the Commissioner in Sind, from whose opinions on the subject of the action to be adopted in Khelat we have had frequent occasion to dissent, or to place Captain Sandeman while entrusted with the conduct of these special duties under our direct orders and control. It appeared useless to attempt further discussion of the question of policy with the Commissioner in Sind, who was already in full possession of our views. It would have been in expedient and even dangerous to have allowed the present complication to continue and to have endeavoured to work out a scheme of action by means of two agents at variance with one another, and one of whom had entirely misapprehended our intentions. In coming to a conclusion we were aided by the telegram from the Government of the Punjab of the 4th January, in which the Lieutenant-Governor suggested that it would strengthen Captain Sandeman's hands and facilitate his task if he were placed in direct subordination to the Government of India so far as the special duty entrusted to him was concerned.

14. Accordingly, on the 7th January 1876, we caused to be issued the orders noted on the margin. We pointed out to the Commissioner in Sind that he appeared to have not properly understood or carried into effect the instructions of the 16th October 1875, that the restrictions which he seemed to have placed on Captain Sandeman's movements were not in accordance with the letter or spirit of those instructions, that Captain Sandeman's proceedings as reported were not inconsistent with the instructions given him or in excess of his powers, that the Commissioner's orders directing Captain Sandeman to return to Dehra Ghazee Khan appeared to be opposed to our policy and directions, that there was nothing in Captain Sandeman's conduct as known to the Government of India which would seem to warrant the strong expressions of blame which had been used by the Commissioner in regard to him, and that with the view of preventing further complications we had been reluctantly compelled to place Captain Sandeman, while on his present tour, under the direct orders of the Government of India.

Telegram to Captain Sandeman, No. 50P., dated 7th January 1876.
Letter to Commissioner in Sind, No. 53P., dated 7th January 1876.

15. Captain Sandeman at the same time received orders to act upon the instructions of Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, but to be careful not to exceed them, or to interfere with questions between the British Government and the Khan of Khelat. He was directed to exercise his own discretion as to his return to the Punjab, but not to protract his stay in Khelat territory. It was further ordered that his reports should henceforth be addressed to the Government of India and sent under flying seal through the Commissioner in Sind, and he was told that he would receive instructions direct from us during his present tour, proper steps being taken to keep the Commissioner in Sind regularly informed.

16. After arrangements had been concluded as above described, we received a further telegram* from the Commissioner in Sind showing clearly that Sir W. Merewether was unable to accept our views, and that he persisted in disapproving of Captain Sandeman's proceedings, notwithstanding the intimation conveyed to him that those proceedings were not inconsistent with Captain Sandeman's instructions or in excess of the powers conferred upon him by us.

* Despatched on 9th January 1876.

17. In regard to the remonstrances of Sir W. Merewether, we need only remark that Captain Sandeman was not sent to Khelat territory without reference to the Commissioner in Sind; he was not made independent of the Commissioner until the Commissioner himself forced Government to the step; he has not been instructed to interfere in the revolution which was said to be impending, but, on the contrary, he has been instructed not to interfere; the instructions of the Government of India that good offices should be used by Captain Sandeman in the quarrels which he is now attempting to settle had been before the Commissioner in Sind since October last; and, generally, there is no justification, so far as we can see, for the terms in which Sir W. Merewether has telegraphed.

18. This telegram, however, afforded fresh evidence that there was no longer any hope of receiving from the Commissioner in Sind such full and hearty co-operation as we deemed to be indispensable for the furtherance of our efforts to bring about a better condition of things in Khelat. We were not prepared to abandon the policy which had been deliberately adopted after personal consultation with Sir William Merewether and full consideration of the arguments urged by him, and we were therefore constrained to take the only alternative remaining, to act upon the instructions conveyed at the close of paragraph 4 of your Lordship's Despatch No. 91, dated 8th July 1875, and to remove from the conduct of our affairs in Khelat the agent whose opinions have been found to be irreconcileable with our own.

19. The orders finally issued by us are contained in the telegrams to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Commissioner in Sind despatched on the 10th January 1876, and in our letter, No. 150P, dated 13th January 1876, to the Government of the Punjab. Sir William Merewether has been relieved of all responsibility for Khelat affairs, which will henceforth be conducted by Colonel Monro, Commissioner of the Derajat Division. Colonel Loch has also been relieved of all similar responsibility, except in so far as his military duties are concerned. Both Sir William Merewether and Colonel Loch are to comply with all requisitions in respect both to military and police arrangements on the entire Sind and Khelat frontier which Colonel Monro may make on them. Colonel Monro has been ordered urgently to proceed to Jacobabad, and Captain Sandeman will hold the same relation of subordination to Colonel Monro as he formerly did to the Commissioner in Sind, and will submit reports to us through Colonel Monro.

20. It is scarcely necessary for us to assure your Lordship that these measures have only been taken after anxious deliberation and in the full conviction that they were absolutely necessary for the purpose of ensuring unity of policy in the Government of this most important section of our frontier. Indeed it appears to us that the time has now come for taking into consideration the changes to which your Lordship referred in paragraph 6 of your Despatch No. 91, dated 8th July 1875, and on this subject we propose to take an early opportunity of expressing our views.

21. We trust that our action will be supported by the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.

No. 30.

Translation of a news-letter received at Jacobabad, 28th December 1875.

You should know that the news here is as follows:—Captain Sandeman came by the Lehri and Gazie Pass into the plains, and he sent Fateh Khan, brother of Karam Khan Bijerani, on ahead to Sirdars Sher Zaman Khan and Moolla Mahomed on the 9th instant, to give them news of his coming, and the following day the Sahib himself arrived by the Thulli road at Doka. Both the Sirdars went and met him. The next day Captain Sandeman marched to Nari, and he called all the Sarawan Sirdars to visit him there. All of them, with their own followers, went there. The Sahib gave Sher Zaman a daily subsistence of 40 rupees for himself and his followers; to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed he allowed Rupees 200 per diem for himself, the other Sarawan Sirdars and their followers; and on the following day the Sahib called all the Sirdars and their followers to make their salaams to him, and he made a searching inquiry into the causes of the present differences and troubles between his Highness the Khan and the Sarawans and Jalawans. The afore-named Sirdar (Moolla Mahomed) explained all fully to the Sahib, who then directed Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to send his sowars to Noorden, Gohur Khan, and Jam Ali, son of Jam Mir Khan, with letters to them, telling them that for the future they would not attempt to create a rebellion, that he, the Sahib, would make peace between his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars. The Sirdar Moolla Mahomed sent Ali Murad, son of Ittabar Girani, with three sowars to Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, Gohur Khan Zurukzai, Jam Ali, and Azaad Khan Nowsherwani, and wrote a letter to them, the contents of which were—" Give up all intention of now creating a " rebellion, lest reproach shall fall on us. Should his Highness create any disturbances " for which we might be rebuked, then they will be of his creating. After this the Sahib sent Nubbee Buksh and Izmut Khan Raisanis to Khelat with a letter to the address of his Highness to the following effect: " I have been " appointed by the British Government in England to " make a settlement of the disputes and disagreements " between your Highness and your nobles, and to make " proper arrangements for the protection of the Bolan " route, and I have arrived in Kutchi, having come march by march. I have assembled " Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and all the other Sirdars, and have ordered them to desist from " attempting to create any disturbances, and I am coming with these Sirdars to meet " your Highness to arrange for a termination of your quarrels on both sides. Your High- " ness should therefore desist from making any attacks on the Brahooees." The Sahib gave these sowars forty rupees for road expenses and started them off. The following day the Sahib told Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan that he wished to see the town of Kurk to-morrow, so next day the Sahib with Sher Zaman Khan and Moolla Mahomed visited Kurk, but previous to their arrival Sher Zaman Khan had sent orders to his people to have his reception-room properly arranged with carpets, &c. The Sahib rode through the town and then alighted at Sher Zaman's house and stayed there for about an hour. He gave Sher Zaman Khan a great deal of encouragement, and requested him to send for the son of Ikhtyar Khan (a child of about four years old) as he was anxious to see him. The boy was accordingly brought, and the Sahib presented him with 400 rupees, the Sahib then mounted his horse and returned to his own camp. The Sahib after this told Sher Zaman Khan that he wished to send his brother, Mir Muhammad Khan to Candahar, because the English Government have requested his Highness the Ameer to send certain trustworthy persons to meet him. When these (wakils) agents arrive, they will join the Sahib's camp, and remain with him to assist him in settling the disputes and differences between his Highness and his Sirdars. This the Sahib gave as his reason for wishing to send Sher Zaman Khan's brother to Candahar, because possibly the persons appointed to this duty may delay on the road. Sher Zaman replied that he would first consult with his people and then give a reply. Sher Zaman then assembled all his people and explained the matter fully to them, that the Sahib was very desirous of sending his brother to Candahar, but that he himself was opposed to it, because he considered himself a dependent and follower of Sir W. Merewether and Colonel Loch, and possibly these officers hearing about his brother going to Candahar might be annoyed; if he, Sher Zaman, objects to send his brother, the Sahib will not listen to it, as he says the duty to be performed is most important; now what advice do you give me? The people all replied without doubt it is as you represent, but our honour is involved in Moolla Mahomed's affairs (grievances) being settled; if you do not send your brother the Sirdar (Moolla Mahomed) will be angered, and the Sahib will be displeased. Place your faith in God, and the Sahibs will not be annoyed at your agreeing or disagreeing. After this Sirdar Sher Zaman desired his brother to get ready to go with two sowars to Candahar. The Sahib told Sher Zaman then to accompany him to Dadar. Four days the Sahib halted near here, and on the fifth day he moved to Dadar. When he reached Dadar he sent for Sher Zaman Khan to his tent and presented him with a choga, a loongee, and a roll of velvet, also Rupees 200 in ready cash, and then gave him his leave, and he promised to give Mir Muhammad Khan Rupees 500 for road expenses, and comforted Sher Zaman by telling him that he would take care of his brother; Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan then returned to his own country. The Sahib remained two days in Dadar, and before leaving he sent Sirdars Imam Buksh Mazari, Jamal Khan Laghari, Russool Buksh, nephew of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and 70 or 80 horsemen, to Khelat for the purpose of inviting his Highness the Khan to meet him, and he made arrangements with the afore-mentioned Sirdars that they were to rejoin him at Mustung, where he hoped to meet his Highness. He then dismissed all the Brahooees with the exception of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and 200 sowars. The first march the Sahib made after this was to Kirta, and he gave out publicly that he was going, viâ Quettah and Mustung, direct to Khelat. It will be seen, with God's assistance, what will happen in the future.

The letter, if such has been written, to the Khan of Khelat by Captain Sandeman, has been called for from that officer, and will show whether the statement of the contents as here given is correct or not.—W. L. M.

The following Belooch are with the Sahibs:—The Mazaris, Lagharis, Dushucks, Kosahs, Lunds, Kolalhs, Ghorchanis; the son of Sirdar Ghulam Murteza Boogtee, Mirula Khan, the brother of Guzzun Khan Murree, Sirdar Karam Khan Bijarani, and other Murree Muccadams, residents of Kohan, Kadar Khan Khetran, and the son of Badal Khan. When the Sahib arrived at the Nari River he sent a sowar to call the Murrees who live low down (Kot Mandai)—these are Wuderah Sobdar, Sheran, Ali Muhammad Baktier Dhusu, but they all only arrived in Mishk after the Sahib had left for Dadar; they therefore returned each to his own home. To-day, the 22nd, two Murrees who came to Kurk from the Sahib's Camp at Kuruk, near Bibinani, on the Sahib's business, and put up at Sher Zaman Khan's, stated that when the Sahib reached Kuruk, the Naib of Mustung, Faiz Muhammad, with 300 sowars, arrived there, and at once came and salaamed to the Sahib. The Sahib questioned the Naib regarding his Highness, and asked when his Highness heard of the Sahib's arrival, whether his Highness would come to Mustung or not. The Naib replied: I have received orders to collect supplies in the town of Mastung. I am hopeful that his Highness will come. If you make any request, or give any directions to his Highness, he will not make any excuses to evade them. The Sahib then said: I intend first to go to Quettah; should his Highness come it will be well; if not, I must go to Khelat. The Sahib's baggage camels are very much done up, and he told Mirula Khan to take two of his own Murree sowars and two Mazari sowars and take the tired camels back to Dadar, and Mir Bola Khan ordered us two on this duty; we were then to come and remain with Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan. Mirula Khan said that when he reached Mustung he will write all that has occurred and send the letter to us, and that we will have to convey it to Sirdar Guzzun Khan. Naib Faiz Muhammad is to reach Dadar on the 23rd of this month.

Whatever I hear in the future I will write.

No. 5, dated Camp Jacobabad, 4th January 1876.
Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies forwarded to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, for information, in continuation of correspondence ending with this Office endorsement No. 1036, dated the 29th December 1875.

2. This letter gives more details of Captain Sandeman's extraordinary conduct. The Barozai Sirdar of Kurk, Sher Zaman Khan, was naturally nonplussed at finding a new person entering the scene without any credentials from those authorities whom alone Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan and all others looked to.

No. 31.

No. 13, dated Camp Jacobabad, 7th January 1876.

From Colonel Sir W. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Not having been favoured prior to my departure from Bombay on the 19th November with any further instructions on my letter of the 29th October last, I wrote on the 21st of November the following directions to Captain Sandeman for his guidance in carrying out the orders of Government as given in Government Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October. They were that in reference to the above Government Resolution—

"I have the honour to request that you will proceed into the Murree Hills and endeavour, "as far as you can there, to carry out the instructions conveyed in paragraphs 26 and 27 "of that Resolution, viz., that you will obtain all the information you can submitting it "to me respecting the local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or "between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooes. You may possibly "be able to amicably adjust for a time some of the quarrels between the Murrees and "Boogtees, and perhaps with the Afghans; but any feuds that may be supposed or may "be stated to exist between the Murrees or Boogtees and Brahooee tribes should be first "fully and thoroughly reported to me before any action is attempted as regards the Brahooee "side of the question; and all reports on these subjects should be forwarded to me "through the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind, that I may be in "possession of his opinion on any points brought forward by you relating to the Brahooee "tribes or Belooch residents in Kutchi, those tribes belonging to his political charge."

"2. Your report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes, and the Khan's Government as viewed from the Murree and Boogtee side, I shall be glad to receive through the same channel. I do not propose deputing an officer from Sind to be associated with you."

"3. The report called for in the 27th paragraph should also be submitted through the "Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind, but no arrangements should be entered "into with any of the tribes to the westward of the Murree and Boogtee countries, until I "have had an opportunity of judging on the nature of your proposals. I am now about "to proceed to the frontier, and shall be at Kashmore about the 20th December. By that "time you will, in all probability, be in possession of all the information you will be able "to obtain in the hills, and I should desire to confer with you personally on what further "course it will then seem advisable to me that I should recommend for the consideration "of Government. I should therefore wish that you could arrange to meet me there, either "on the 20th or at the end of December." The above was written at sea, but before its despatch from Kurrachee on the 25th instant intimation was received of Captain Sandeman's having started for the hills, and the following postscript was added: "Your telegram "announcing your departure for the hills was shown me on my return here. Your so "proceeding is approved, and you will be good enough to follow the instructions now "forwarded in this letter."

2. In drawing up these instructions I was guided by the state of affairs politically as existing between the Government of India and that of Khelat, which was that owing to the failure of the Khan to comply with certain demands made upon him by the British Government, and to his disregard of treaty engagements, no further communications were to be held with him until such time as he came to a better sense of what was required of him as a friendly ally of the British Government. He also having failed to act up to the engagements made in his behalf in 1872 for the purpose of effecting reconciliation between himself and his discontented barons, he was to be left alone to settle the differences with them as he could, and they were to follow their own plan of readjustment, without interference of any sort from this side of the border, provided that any disturbances that might take place between the contending parties should not interfere with the peace and safety of the British possession. In fact there was to be a total withdrawal of all connection with the political affairs of the State of Khelat.

3. I was the more particular also in enjoining on Captain Sandeman careful abstinence from all interference in the affairs of the Khelat State, because I was well aware of the existence for some time past of a most unbecoming desire on his part to mix himself up in them. I say unbecoming, because it was manifestly most unsuitable that an officer who held the position Captain Sandeman did should engage in matters having no connection with the charge he held, and in which he should have no concern. He was far removed from the locality and circumstances he essayed to enter upon; he had had no practical experience of what had taken place previously, and for any little he supposed he knew he had to take it on trust from hearsay and from the vague information given by people about him who were necessarily very little better informed than himself, as the political relations with Khelat were in the hands of the Sind authorities, and Captain Sandeman was serving under a different local Government—that of the Punjab—it was also almost undesirable that he should enter on the scene acting separately and differently, and so making it appear that the Government of India had two views and two modes of management. This is most dangerous and improper action under any circumstances, but more especially so with Asiatics, they being unfortunately too prone to follow such crooked courses and ever ready to take advantage of them. To uphold the good faith and consistency of Government therefore, it would not be fitting that an outsider, like Captain Sandeman, should intrude and engage in duties which belong especially to others. I regret exceedingly that, as I shall presently have to show, my anticipations have been only too truly borne out as to the probability of Captain Sandeman being led away by undue assumption to commit a grave breach of official decorum, as well as to seriously complicate affairs, just, too, as they were about to right themselves.

4. Captain Sandeman has been credited with the possession of much valuable influence over the wild tribes on the border, and certainly, as far as the Punjab frontier was concerned, he had been able to induce the Murree and Boogtee tribes to abstain from the predatory inroads they formerly so frequently indulged in. It was understood that he believed himself capable of extending that influence and of making the Murree tribe behave as well in the direction of the Khelat province of Kutchi as they had been doing towards the Punjab, provided certain means in the shape of money were placed at his disposal. In accordance with the wishes of his Excellency the Viceroy, I accepted the services of Captain Sandeman for the above purpose, but for that purpose only, and the means were afforded him. Instead of confining himself to that task, or even fairly attempting to enter upon it, he has allowed the Murree to do very much what they liked towards Kutchi, and their conduct during the past year has in consequence been worse than I have ever known it in all my experience on this frontier, accompanied by an amount of insolent defiant bravado, which cannot but tell most injuriously against the reputation for power of a Government up to whose very gates they ride and plunder with impunity, and this when measures had been publicly sanctioned to prevent this very thing.

5. In place of attending to his legitimate duties Captain Sandeman has not ceased to endeavour to get beyond them, and engage in those with which he has no proper reason to deal. And now, without reference to me or the Political Officer in charge of Khelat relations, he has deliberately entered upon the political affairs of that State, matters quite beyond his sphere of duty. He has done this, too, in spite of his being perfectly well aware that such procedure was directly opposed to all I had repeatedly inculcated on him in regard to his avocations under me. He has acted therefore in direct opposition to my known orders, and a more grave breach of official decorum and deliberate insubordination could not possibly be.

6. To return to the letter of instructions, several copies were despatched by the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind, through whom they were forwarded, to ensure their reaching Captain Sandeman. One sent to the Boogtee Sirdar was received by him, and passed on immediately to one of Captain Sandeman's postal chowkees in the hills on the 10th December, and should have been in Captain Sandeman's hands a day or two later, but there has as yet been no acknowledgment of its receipt.

7. I first heard on the 2nd December from the Political Superintendent of Captain Sandeman's intention to enter Kutchi, but hoped my letter of instructions would reach in time to prevent his taking such a step. At any time such an act on his part would have been highly reprehensible, but just then it was still more necessary it should not occur, for these well-founded rumours that the Brahooee Sirdars, stimulated by Noordeen Mingul, as well as smarting under recent impolitic acts of their ruler and his officials, had at last determined on combined action against the Khan of Khelat, and there was every expectation that the differences between the Khan and the Sirdars were about to be settled by themselves after their own fashion. Their proposed plan was to depose the present ruler, and put up his son in his stead, and as they had succeeded in gaining over a portion of the regular troops, the revolt would most likely have been a successful one, and would have been the most suitable solution of present difficulties. It was what was being quietly awaited, and was the only means left, direct interference having been disapproved by Government, of obtaining a likely opening for the restoration of peace and order in the Khelat State, and a satisfactory renewal of the friendly relations which it is so desirable to have with that State.

8. On the 13th December, two days after my arrival at Sukkur, I received the account forwarded to Government under my endorsement No. 966 of that date, giving details of the plot as furnished by Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai Sirdar, and written by him on the 2nd December. On receipt of this intelligence I sent information of it to Captain Sandeman, supposed then to be still in the Murree Hills, directing him to be careful to avoid all communication with the Sirdars, &c., and abstinence from interference was enjoined on all. The same was telegraphed to you, and the reply received was "policy of non-interference approved."

9. About this very time Captain Sandeman has since stated he left the hills on the 10th December. When the approved policy of non-interference was being strictly observed, Captain Sandeman comes unauthorizedly forward, accompanied by British troops and a host of Belooch of sorts, enters the plain of Kutchi, tells the Sirdars and everybody he has arrived to arrange all differences and set everything to rights. Despatches letters to Noordeen Mingul and other Sirdars in Jalawan, directing them to suspend their revolutionary projects, and finally sends to the Khan of Khelat proposing to have an interview with him. This last was especially improper, for he must have been well aware all relations with that Sovereign had been broken off, and the orders of Government were that until certain demands by them were complied with, no communications were to be held with him. It is stated in one of the reports received that Captain Sandeman had given out that he was acting under instructions from the great Government at home ("Wilayut"), but I can scarcely credit this, while it is an unlikely thing for any one to invent. He is also reported to have taken men of the Sirdars' clans into service, if true a most impolitic measure at the present time.

10. All these strange proceedings on the part of Captain Sandeman have created extreme excitement amongst all classes, and will cause more. Expectations will be raised which will be most difficult, if not impossible, to meet. The Khan will think that all he has wrongly done during the past few years is about to be condoned, that he may go on defying our resentment and evading his obligations as much as he pleases, and that the intimation of the displeasure of the British Government, and withdrawal or continuance of its favourable countenance, are of no consequence, to be paid no attention to. That he may continue to ignore the rights of the Sirdars and subjects of his country, and to allow disorder and misrule to prevail throughout his dominions. The Sirdars will believe that their cause is to be taken up, their claims against the Khan enforced, their grievances righted, and a guarantee given that the Khan shall only act as they please in future. It is surely unnecessary to enlarge on this to show how extremely embarrassing such proceedings as those of Captain Sandeman are, how utterly impossible it is to carry out the views of Government, deliberately decided on, when such unauthorized and indiscreet interference takes place, and how undignified and inconsistent a position it places the Government in.

11. Immediately that I heard of Captain Sandeman having entered Kutchi, I instructed the Political Superintendent on the Frontier Upper Sind to convey my orders to the former as given in the following telegram : " Send express to Captain Sandeman, wherever " he may be, and direct him to at once return to his districts ; report his arrival there to " me, and explain why he has disobeyed my express orders not to visit Seebee or Kutchi, " or communicate with Brahooee Sirdars." This was despatched from Shikarpoor on the 17th December, and forwarded on the same day by Colonel Loch from Jacobabad, entrusted to special messengers. When these orders reached Captain Sandeman does not appear, but letters received here on the 3rd and 5th instant from that officer, acknowledging the receipt of my orders of the 13th and 17th December respectively, are dated 22nd and 25th idem from Shalkote, Quettah, copies annexed, Appendices A and A1. The tone of these letters I cannot too strongly condemn, especially the 2nd paragraph of that of the 22nd. The whole of both letters, however, are, I consider, highly unbecoming an officer filling the position Captain Sandeman does, and have an air of deliberate insubordination which is not only gravely improper, but quite incompatible with a decent regard for the public interests, showing plainly as they do that development of his personal views were the first consideration with him. There is nothing whatever in the Government Resolution he quotes which could justify the action he has taken, and when my invariable instructions to him to keep entirely aloof from connexion with Khelat State affairs are considered, his attempting to show that he believed he was doing what could be justified only makes his conduct appear in a worse light.

12. Until the receipt of further information it is difficult to say what mischief he has done, how far he has committed himself, or what measures had best be adopted to remedy what has occurred. But, with a view of saving as much ill as possible, I have again repeated to him my orders that he should return to his own districts in the Punjab, where I beg he may be kept strictly in future. This is not the first occasion on which I have had to notice Captain Sandeman's disregard of true subordination, and I must request to be relieved from the embarrassments caused by so impracticable an officer. He was placed under me solely to control the Murrees and Boogtees, and as he cannot do that I have no need whatever for his services. I have desired him, copy of letter attached, Appendix B, to submit such explanation as he has to offer for his late extraordinary conduct, and on receipt it will be duly submitted for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy.

13. In former correspondence I several times endeavoured to show that it was a grave mistake to depend too much on the personal influence it was stated Captain Sandeman had with the Hill tribes. I then pointed out the basis on which that influence, as far as it went, was formed, and that its continuance depended more on the pleasure and caprice of the Murrees than on any soundness of principle in the system itself. The Murrees, very readily and naturally, chimed in with the wishes of the Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan, and were his most obedient servants, ever anxious to please as long as they gained advantages from him, and no control over them was attempted in respect to other parts of the country. In fact, by keeping in with the authorities in the Punjab frontier, they had everything to gain and nothing to lose. It did not require much discrimination on their part to appreciate these benefits, and behave accordingly. But to believe that there are any germs of finality, or of even tolerable continuance, in such a system is only to lay up material for future disappointment, if not grave disaster. I should not be doing my duty if I did not take this opportunity of placing on record my opinion in the strongest terms possible, that dependence in such a system is utterly fallacious, and the sooner it is abandoned for ever the better for our credit and renown, and for the peace of the whole frontier. I have no hesitation in saying that our name for justice and vigour has suffered, and is suffering greatly from the ill-proportioned petting the Murree tribe has had extended to it, and the impunity they have enjoyed for the outrageous acts they have committed, and which have been largely on the increase since they have been more favoured. The other wild tribes cannot understand this, and are rapidly beginning to look upon it, that disorder and violence are more paying things to follow than peace and propriety of demeanour.

14. The anomalous state of affairs of the Murrees being in high favour on the Punjab side, while they were harrying the territory of our ally the Khan of Khelat, brought about the conference at Mittunkote in 1870, and, in preference to the firm principle recommended from Sind, it was determined the subsidizing coaxing plan should be continued and tried on both frontiers. The persistent misconduct of the Murrees* towards Kutchi prevented their being taken into pay, but at the beginning of last year it was determined to place these tribes, as well as the Boogtees, in the sole charge of Captain Sandeman, that with the money sanctioned for the protection of Kutchi and his influence he might induce the Murrees to abstain from their habits of plunder; and from what he said, I was, and am, certainly under the impression he stated he could do so if allowed to manage them in the same way as he had hitherto done with respect to the Punjab border. Having had much longer and more extended experience of these tribes than Captain Sandeman, I was not sanguine of his success; indeed I felt confident that complete failure would be the result. But in deference to the desire of his Excellency the Viceroy and of the Government of India, I raised no further objections than I had originally submitted. These were that though it suited the Murrees to respect the Punjab frontier, they would not mildly submit to be checked in their illicit gains elsewhere. That even if the principal Chief, Guzzun Khan, desired to act honestly, the remainder of the tribe would not agree or obey him, and that his influence over the whole would diminish in proportion to his ceasing to be their successful leader and participator in the engrossing forays they so much delight in. Predatory tribes are the same everywhere, and the Murrees certainly do not differ—only, perhaps, in the fact that they from never having been for years brought under any control, or made to fear a stronger power than themselves, are less amenable to civilizing influences than others.

* This is believed now to have been preconcerted and done with an object in view.

15. The experience of last year has, I would venture to maintain, proved the correctness of my opinion. There has been no improvement in the behaviour of the tribe. On the contrary, their conduct has been worse, more outrageous and lawless than I have ever known it, and there are not wanting symptoms, as may be seen from the report and accompaniments from Colonel Loch, the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, that the influence over them hitherto exerted by Captain Sandeman is beginning to fade away. The objections raised by Guzzun to Captain Sandeman passing through the Murree Hills, the firing on his escort, and the contemptuous disregard for his approbation, when they coolly brought the plundered camels into his camp and disposed of them almost under his eyes, all show that there is very little real respect in their feelings or bearing towards him.

Appendices C. and D.

16. The fact is the Murrees have never yet been made to feel that there are certain tangible disadvantages when they do not regard our orders and wishes, and until they are made to understand this, there will be no sincere adhesion on their part. It was decided that Sirdar Guzzun Khan should come into Jacobabad to pay his respects to the Political Superintendent whose orders he had previously slighted. It is stated that he only did so as a personal favour to Captain Sandeman, and that after much pressure. This is not the form in which one would wish to see influence used, and it was rather adding to the defaulter's position, instead of making him understand he had to make amends for past misconduct. The compensation taken from the Murrees for the kafila plunder was no punishment to them. I accepted the award, wishing to do all I could to forward the wishes of his Excellency the Viceroy, but it was absurdly low, and being taken from the subsidy paid to the tribe they scarcely felt it, while they had enjoyed far more in the loot they had gained. The restitution for the Khuttun raid is still most incomplete, not one tenth of the property plundered has been restored, nor has an equivalent in money been paid to the owners as promised. Of the camels carried off from Seebee, twenty-five are yet in the hands of the Bijarani Murrees, so in reality little pressure has been brought to bear on the tribe, and the effect has been that they have not hesitated to proclaim their utter disregard for the good opinions of the British power by their incessant acts of violence in Kutchi carried on throughout the year, though they well know that such are entirely against the wishes of the British Government.

17. As the Murrees will not conform to the peaceful proposals held out to them, and as these continued plundering so near the Sind borders will produce a demoralising effect on the other Belooch tribes residing thereon, I have the honour to request that I may be allowed to go my own way to work to keep them at a more suitable distance, and which I can easily do, provided I am not trammelled by connections with the Punjab frontier, and that the money sanctioned after the Mittunkote Conference, viz., Rupees 30,040 per annum, is again placed at the disposal of the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Sind. Captain Sandeman, or the officer who may be in charge of the Lower Derajat, can then manage the Murrees in regard to that frontier as he did before, and they will be treated on this side simply as they behave, without any reference to what passes elsewhere. I would beg, therefore, that the above money may be re-credited to the Bombay accounts for use here.

18. As regards the Khan of Khelat, Captain Sandeman's proceedings have been particularly infortuitous and inopportune. In accordance with the policy laid down by his Excellency the Viceroy, all communications with the Khan had been suspended after despatch of my letter in March last, and intercourse carefully avoided. The conduct of the Khan, as shown in my letters of the 21st and 29th October, has been very far from conciliatory, and has been in no way such as to lead to the supposition that he felt any regret for what had passed, or desire to make suitable amends by complying with the demands that had been made on him. Since the above letters were written by me, the Khan has addressed two letters to Colonel Loch, the Political Superintendent, both most objectionable in style, and not worded in the manner letters from the Khan to the chief official on the frontier should be. Copies of these letters* are forwarded herewith. No replies have been sent purposely, for had any been given grave notice must have been taken of the impropriety of their tone. It was also desirable to let the Khan understand, which he did not seem to do, or pretended so, that the abandonment of friendly communications was a reality and loss to him, and not a farce or a thing to be lightly estimated. Captain Sandeman, therefore, venturing to address the Khan and to propose a meeting was a most untimely act and gravely injudicious, as well as wholly unauthorised. It is another proof, however, of the mischief that must be caused by the meddling of officers in affairs that do not legitimately belong to them, and regarding which they must necessarily be but partially informed. I have now the honour to request that specific orders may be issued in this respect, that Captain Sandeman may keep strictly to his own duties, and not produce the embarrassment in important matters affecting the public interests in the way he has lately done. Also that such notice may be taken of his very unseemly behaviour as his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council may be pleased to direct.

Appendix A.

No. 171, dated Camp Shalkote (Quettah), 22nd December 1875.

From Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel F. Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, without number, dated the 13th instant, informing me, by desire of the Commissioner in Sind, that a revolution in Khelat was so clearly imminent that the Commissioner directed you to tell me to avoid any communication whatever with the Brahooee Sirdars or their followers, and that I was on no account to go beyond the Murree Hills, towards the Bolan, Seebee, Mittree, or Kutchi.

2. In reply to the above I shall be obliged by your informing the Commissioner in Sind that I left the Murree Hills on the 10th instant, or three days before your letter under reply was written. It will, however, doubtless afford the Commissioner in Sind pleasure and relief to know that the State of Khelat is so far quite tranquil that the contending parties, notwithstanding their differences, express their earnest desire to maintain the present peaceful state of the country, which I trust may be maintained.

3. I am at present busily engaged in carrying out the instructions contained in the Government of India Resolution of the 16th October last. As soon as they are concluded I will submit, through the Commissioner in Sind, for the information of the Government, the report called for in the above-named Resolution of Government of India.

Enclosure 2 in No. 31.

Appendix A1.

No. 174, dated Camp Shalkote, 25th December 1875.

From Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel F. Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In reply to your No. 4419, dated 17th instant, I have the honour to refer you to my Office No. 171, dated Shalkote the 22nd December. In addition to the explanation given in that letter, I have the honour to state that I fully understand that I am on special duty, acting directly under the orders of Government of India conveyed to me in their proceedings of the 16th October last. As already stated in the letter above referred to, directly I have completed the duty I am now on, I shall submit a report through the Commissioner in Sind for the information of Government as directed.

Enclosure 3 in No. 31.

Appendix B.

No. 1031, dated Camp Jacobabad, 28th December 1875.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dehra Ghazee Khan.

I have the honour to desire you will, without delay, submit replies to the following questions.

2. On what date and at what place did you receive my letter of instructions, No. 918, dated 21st November last?

3. On what grounds you ventured to enter Seebee and Kutchi without first obtaining my permission, when you knew I had decided objections to your visiting either of those places?

4. Why, after the repeated injunctions I had given you not to communicate with the Brahooee Sirdars direct, you received and visited them? Whether it is true, as has been reported to me, that you took certain of these Sirdars and their followers, or the latter only, into Government employ without any previous reference either to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, in whose hands political relations with these Sirdars are, or to myself?

5. Whether it has been correctly reported that you took upon yourself to address his Highness the Khan direct by letter, and sent messengers to him? If so, what explanation have you to offer for so grave a breach of propriety and official decorum? Copy of any such letter should also be forwarded to me.

6. I have to desire also that you will submit to me notes of any conversations you held with the Brahooee Sirdars, and of what was the nature of the communication you made to them.

7. And further any explanation you may have to offer in reference to your late extraordinary proceedings in interfering with matters totally distinct from the official charge you hold.

8. You will, as already ordered by me, return to your own district of Dehra Ghazee Khan forthwith, and report the date of your arrival within them.

Forwarded through the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, with request that he will despatch this letter by the quickest and most direct route to wherever Captain Sandeman may be.

A duplicate copy is enclosed for despatch viâ Dehra Ghazee Khan.

Enclosure 4 in No. 31.

Appendix C.

Jacobabad news-letter, dated 1st December 1875.

Pullin Kungrani and Nohuk Guzeenee, Murree Maccadums, left Kahan on the 16th ultimo, and came straight to Kurk, and they state that a messenger sent by Captain Sandeman came to Sirdar Guzzun Khan when they were both present with a letter, in which Captain Sandeman stated that it was his intention to proceed direct to Kot Mundai viâ Kahan, to which place he wished to invite Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani for the purpose of settling the present difficulties between his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars. Sirdar Guzzun Khan was to let him know if there was a road from Kahan to Kot Mundai by which guns and troops could travel; if there was not, Captain Sandeman wrote that he would proceed viâ Dhera Bibrok to Bagh, where he would invite the Raisani Sirdar for the same purpose. Sirdar Guzzun Khan sent the messenger back with a reply that there was no road viâ Kahan, that Captain Sandeman had better proceed viâ Dhera Bibrok. The messenger left in the presence of the two afore-mentioned Murree Maccadums. When the Brahooees heard this, they all became very much excited, and are anxiously expecting the British Government to interfere in their behalf with his Highness the Khan.

Submitted to the Commissioner in Sind.

Enclosure 5 in No. 31.

Appendix D.

No. 16, dated Jacobadad, 4th January 1876.

From Colonel Francis Loch, C.B., Political Superintendent and Commandant, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

I have the honour to submit for your information the letters noted in the margin.

1. Original and translation of a note received at Jacobabad from Bagh, dated 30th December 1875.
2. Original and translation of a letter from Salla Shah and Mahomed Wario Bagh, no date.
3. Original and translation of a letter received in Jacobabad from Kurk, dated 26th December.
4. Letter from Captain Sandeman, on special duty, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

2. From the date of Captain Sandeman's letter, which however was not despatched until he had reached "Guroo" on the 28th ultimo, owing to the sowars not having been able to travel sooner on account of the severity of the weather, it would appear at first sight that the information contained in letters Nos. 2 and 3 could not be correct; but from the statement made by the sowars who brought Captain Sandeman's letters, it would appear that Captain Sandeman intended to stay two days at Khelat, that on the 28th he was only two marches from Khelat; then they left, and that the following day he was to march to Mangachur, and next day to Khelat. These sowars also state that a Molatur Maccadum of the Dushuks, by name Hyder Khan, had to be sent back to Dadar, as he suffered greatly from the intense cold, and that Captain Sandeman informed him on his taking leave, that he, Captain Sandeman, would be back in Dadur in six days from that time. This, of course, would be impossible, as the marches between Khelat and Dadar are as follows, viz.:—

1.	Khelat to	Mangachur	26 miles.	6.	Khelat to	Abgoon	10 miles.
2.	„	Kud Mustung	18 „	7.	„	Bibinani	11 „
3.	„	Mustung	14 „	8.	„	Kietah	9 „
4.	„	Mobee	8 „	9.	„	Dadar	24 „
5.	„	Mach	10 „

and as these stages are a good distance apart it would hardly be possible to march the whole distance in less than nine days. It is more than probable however that the Dushuk Maccadum had a tent with him which Munshi Khoda Buksh imagined to be Captain Sandeman's advance tent, and hence the mistake with regard to Captain Sandeman's sudden retrograde movements in Dadar.

3. It will be observed that the information given comes from three different quarters. That regarding Captain Sandeman being at Dadar is from Mustoee, about 16 miles to the north-east of Bagh in Kutchi; that regarding his Highness the Khan coming from Khelat direct to Bagh, from Bagh itself, and that regarding the supplies being laid in, from Gundava. This news has again been reported to me by one Illias Lyerani, resident of Lyerani-ke-Bustie, 24 miles to the south of Bagh, who states that one Alloo Meerdeh, or person who is sent to collect supplies, came to his village when he was there three days ago, and informed the Jansheen, Arraf Khan, brother of Samunder Khan Lehree, that he had been sent by Naib Abdool Azeez to inform the Jansheen that his Highness had written to say that after the Eed, which takes place on the 10th of this month, he, his Highness, intended coming by the Lakaree Pass to Bagh, and that supplies were to be laid in for him at once, and that the Jansheen, Arraf Khan, was to assist in collecting what he could, and thus each report, bearing on the other as it does, makes me think that there must be truth in them.

4. I am informed that in 1872, when his Highness the Khan's troops—i.e., cavalry, infantry, and guns, Shukkur Khan, commanding, and Naib Mahomed Khan, Vakeel—marched from Khelat to Haji-ke-Sher in Kutchi and attacked the Brahooees, that they marched by the Lakaree Pass, so if his Highness has really determined on coming to Bagh as stated, he would have no difficulty in coming by this road, and that it would be the most direct route into Kutchi.

5. I have further to bring to your notice the following reports current in Jacobabad, as I consider it my duty to submit the same for the information of Government, for if the stories are correct, it shows that Captain Sandeman has not the power over the Murrees, and that he has not got them in hand as the Government have been led to believe. I make this report with no wish to detract from Captain Sandeman in any way, but I consider it right that such reports should be brought to the notice of Government, in order that investigation may be made regarding their truth or otherwise, and thus to prevent further complications hereafter.

6. I will give the reports seriatim, so that you may be able to follow each, and dovetail the one into the other. First, it is stated that when Captain Sandeman wrote to the Murree Sirdar to say he intended coming to Kahan, and from there proceeding to Mundai, and wishing to know if there was a road by which troops could march, Sirdar Guzzun Khan, his brother, Morula Khan, and Karam Khan Bijarani, with many of the Muccadums, were much annoyed at Captain Sandeman's wish to march troops through their country, and they determined not to allow him to go. Eventually a meeting of the headmen and Maccadums was held, at which Sher Mahomed, Guzeen Mari, who is a brother-in-law of Sirdar Imam Buksh Mazari, and some of the Muccadums, his adherents, said—if Captain Sandeman was not given a road through their country, they would leave the tribe and join the Boogtees or Mazaris, that on this a very animated discussion took place, at which it was decided Captain Sandeman should be allowed to travel by the route by which he eventually marched, but that he should first of all be requested to go by some other route, and a reply was sent to the effect that there was no road through the Murree country, if Captain Sandeman wished to go to Seebee and Dadar he had better go viâ Dhera Bibrok, the head-quarters of the Boogtees, then down the Sangsela Valley, and so to Poolaji and Lehri in Kutchi, and so on to Seebee. That when Captain Sandeman did arrive at Kahan, the Murree Sirdar requested Captain Sandeman not to bring his troops near his town, and he informed Captain Sandeman that he had better go viâ Nufoost and Surtaf, that there was no road through the Murree country for troops. Eventually Captain Sandeman was permitted to march by the road first agreed upon by the Murrees amongst themselves, viz., Ghuzzee, Goork, &c., and to Thulli, to the north of Kutchi, but not by the Mundai road. When Captain Sandeman's baggage left Kahan and was opposite the Lehri defile between Kahan and where the Lehri River rises in the hills opposite the halting place at Dakà, some 70 or 80 Murrees [Badanis], who were collected on the hills, drew their swords, and waved them over their heads and fired two shots. The baggage was then all stopped, and Karam Khan Bijarani was sent to pacify these on the hill side, and make them desist from showing any further warlike signs. One of Captain Sandeman's jutts passing through Jacobabad stated that this was really true. Karam Khan Bijarani pacified the Murrees, and the baggage marched on without further let or hindrance.

7. When Captain Sandeman was on the march between Ghuzzee and Goork, Nohuk Guzzini Murree with his followers driving 103 camels, which they had carried off from near Mamool in his Highness the Khan's territory, happened to be coming along the road, where they were met by Captain Sandeman, who enquired as to who they were, and where they had come from, and on being told, he enquired if Mamool was in his Highness the Khan's or British territory, being informed it belonged to his Highness, he replied very good, I have nothing to do in the matter. Nohuk then went on with his camels, and having distributed them he returned to Captain Sandeman's camp, and marched with it to Dadar.

8. It will be observed from letter No. 1 attached to this that his Highness the Khan's troops attacked the Brahooees, all of whose Sirdars and Muccadums, excepting one or two of the latter of very small note, have gone with Captain Sandeman towards Khelat and killed eight of them, other six of them being wounded, as well as five on his Highness the Khan's side. It is stated that this attack was made in accordance with Captain Sandeman's written orders to Naib Abdool Aziz of Bagh, that in the event of the Brahooees looting, or in any way ill-treating the villagers, he was to send a force to punish them.

9. The letter which Captain Sandeman states contains his full explanations, dated the 22nd December, has not yet been received. It will be submitted as soon as it reaches me.

10. It is reported that Shabuz Khan, the Boogtee Sirdar's son, who was released from the Bakkar jail in November last, has become insane, and that he had to be sent back from Captain Sandeman's camp, and that he is now in confinement in Dera Bibrok.

P.S.—Attached is also Captain Sandeman's letter No. 171*, referred to in accompaniment No. 4, since received, and a telegram† from the Superintendent, Bakkar subsidiary jail; that Sirdar Shabuz Khan never showed the slightest sign of madness whilst in Bakkar.

Enclosure 6 in No. 31.

Translation of a Note from Said Lallu Shah and Muhamed Warrio, received at Jacobabad, dated Bagh, 30th December 1875.

Thanks be to God by His goodness I am well, and I trust that you are the same. There has been a fight between his Highness the Khan's troops and the Brahooees, eight of the latter have been killed and four wounded, five of the former have also been wounded. All the Brahooees have collected in Hajee-ke-Sher. On the 28th of Zulkad 1792, i.e., 27th December 1875, his Highness the Khan intends leaving Khelat for Mustung.

Enclosure 7 in No. 31.

Translation of a letter from Lallu Shah and Muhamed Warrio to Munshi Russool Buksh, Bagh (no date).

Captain Sandeman who went to the Khelat country was at Dadar on the 1st January, i.e., 3rd Zulkad, and he hoped to reach Bagh on 5th Zulkad, i.e., 3rd January. His Highness the Khan will reach Bagh on the 10th Zulkad, i.e., the 8th January. We heard this from Naib Abdool Azeez Naib of Bagh, and so we sent the news to you at once.

Enclosure 8 in No. 31.

Letters received in Jacobabad from Koork, dated 26th December 1875.

All the news from this place, from beginning to end, I have already sent you by the hand of a sowar; I trust that you have received and read the same. This is the latest news. Jullul Peerdada Mooree came from Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dhera Ghazi Khan's camp, to Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan's on the 23rd ultimo, and brings the following story, viz., when I reached Bibinani with the Sahib, Nubbee Buksh, and Izmut Khan Raisanis, the persons sent with the letter of invitation from Captain Sandeman to his Highness the Khan, returned from Khelat, and their sowars give the following verbal information, that his Highness said wherever the Sahib directs me to attend there will I present myself. His Highness also sent another reply to this effect—"By "your coming I am much more happy than I can explain, wherever you please to tell "me to meet you, at Mustung or Quetta, I will at once come, and I will in no way "whatever act in opposition to your directions, I will remain dependent on you." The receipt of this letter made the Sahib very happy.

2. The Murree force, which consisted of 200 sowars under Mir Ula Khan Murree, requested him to let them return, as they were suffering much from the excessive cold.

* Enclosure No. 1. † Enclosure No. 9.

Mir Ula at once made their request known to the Sahib, and said if you wish to detain the Muccadums with you, you can do so, but allow the sowars to return to their homes. The Sahib kept Mir Ula Khan and the Motabur Muccadums with him, and gave all the rest their leave. I, Jullul, came back to Dadur with them. I came on to Seebee, and the others went straight to their several homes in the hills. The son of Hajee Ketran also asked to be allowed to return, and he came back.

Enclosure 9 in No. 31.

Telegram, dated 5th January 1876.

From Surgeon Leahy, Sukkur, to Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

The Sirdar never showed the slightest sign of madness whilst in Bakkar.

Enclosure 10 in No. 31.

Appendix E.

Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Colonel F. Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated Khelat, 2nd Rumzan = 21st October 1875.

Moolla Pir Buksh, Naib of Nusseerabad, has just informed me, my friend, that the Naib of that place had sent a few of my sowars to inquire into a dispute which had taken place amongst some of my camelmen who were residing within my border, and with whom one flock of my camels were, but these camelmen, through some villany on their part, went and made a report to the British outpost, the sowars of the Thanna made my sowars prisoners, and the camelmen with my camels have gone and settled within British border. Again, Syud Uchun Shah and Lall Shah, residents of Shahpur, killed three persons of the Bungur caste without any cause, and they have now, my friend, sent you a written request that they may be allowed to reside within British limits, now that they receive encouragement from you, they are inducing many people by threats and oppression to desert Shahpur and Chutter. Ever since I have been on friendly terms with the English, no officer residing in Jacobabad has ever interfered in the disputes of my people residing within the Khelat border before this. If any persons residing within my country left and entered British territory they were not permitted to settle there, but were sent back. Now, on the following account, I am entirely without hope of receiving any benefits. If I ever address you for any purpose, you my friend never send me a written reply, but you inform the bearers of my letters by word of mouth, that all the information they contain will be submitted to the Commissioner in Sind, and when the Commissioner in Sind's reply is received it will be forwarded. If ever I address a letter to the Commissioner in Sind at Kurrachee, the Commissioner replies that I write direct contrary to the general rule and custom. This matter puzzles me much. Formerly I made a representation to your Government regarding the allowance I received in lieu of the kafilla taxes and about certain other matters, but I have not received any reply to them. Until now I have been anxiously expecting a reply regarding the allowance formerly granted me. When I place hopes in you my friend and look on you as a friend, and I write to you for certain information and explanation regarding my own affairs, it is necessary that you should give me full explanatory replies, so that my heart may be satisfied, this is in no way opposed to friendship. I have much in my heart I should like to express, but as I have not received any replies to my former communications, I have not written about it to you. All is well here, keep your heart comforted my friend, and look on me as one who is always looking anxiously for your welfare, and make me happy by writing.

No. 4153, dated Jacobabad, 5th November 1875.

Appendix F.

No. 37, dated Jacobabad, 5th January 1876.

From Colonel Francis Loch, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

In submitting the accompanying letter and translation of the same from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, forwarded to the address of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, through Pir Jan, Naib of Nusseerabad, I have the honour to request your particular attention to the innuendoes used throughout the letter, as well as to the phraseology of the letter itself, which shows a marked disrespect to an officer of my standing, and more especially so to one in the position I now hold with respect to his Highness the Khan.

2. It may be remembered that in June 1874 his Highness requested me to arrest Dhur Muhammad Jamali, stating no specific charge against him, the matter was referred to you under my No. 1901, dated 20th June 1874, for decision, and in your No. 833, dated 27th June 1874, you directed me to inform his Highness that, unless specific charge was made against Dhur Muhammad, it was out of my power to arrest him. I presume his Highness refers to this when he says that Dhur Muhammad always goes to Jacobabad when his Highness' people go to collect the outstanding revenue, and that in the same manner his Highness' wishes to infer that, although Dhur Muhammad is an acknowledged subject of his Highness, that the authorities in Jacobabad assist him in defrauding his Highness of his just revenue. The use of the term "Huzur Humdost" is most improper on the part of his Highness, as it is lowering the representative of the British Government on the Sind Frontier, and shows anything but a desire to be more conciliatory to, or on better terms with, the representatives of the British Government than he was when all communication between the British Government and his Highness was ordered to cease, see paragraph 8, Government Resolution No. 16 P., dated 5th January 1875. "After "its despatch all communications with the Khan should, if possible, be avoided till such "time as he comes to a better mind." The annexed letter shows his Highness' present state of mind, which in my opinion is far from that expressed in paragraph 29 of Government Resolution No. 2819 of 16th October last. His Highness and his officials are well aware that the revenue derived from lands irrigated by water from Government canals are always collected by his Highness' officials, and the amount due paid by them to the Mukhtyarkars of the different talukas, so that his Highness requesting me to collect this revenue I look on as most disrespectful to me, and such as should not be passed over.

Enclosure 12 in No. 31.

Translation of a letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated Khelat, 20th Zulkad 1292=19th December 1875.

There are about two thousand rupees of last year's and this year's revenue due by Dhur Muhammad Jamali on the land in your friend's district. When my people go to his village to collect this revenue he (Dhur Muhammad) at once goes into the Jacobabad Districts, and when they leave his village he returns to it and gives a decided refusal to pay. When the above-mentioned person is an acknowledged subject of your friends, and justly owes this outstanding balance, then how does he refuse to pay this money? I write to you as a friend to ask that you will either kindly make this person a prisoner and hand him over to the Naib of Nusseerabad, or that you will collect the revenue due, and send it to (Huzur Humdost) your illustrious or noble friend, or that you turn him out of the town (meaning Jacobabad), so that my people may be able to admonish him in a proper manner. Keep your friendly heart comforted. All is well here, write of your welfare and make me happy.

No. 32.

No. 49, dated Jacobabad, 29th December 1875.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 27th December 1875.

On the 26th of the current month four Murrees, Guzini, Badanis, residents of Dahoe, plundered a buniah near the town of Lehri in Kutch of all his property and clothes;

the buniah, through fear, cried out for assistance, and two men, hearing his cries, ran to his assistance. The four Murrees at once attacked these two men, one of whom, Galu wulud Hukum Kuthar, resident of Lehri, was killed, and the other man escaped.

2. With the exception of the news contained in the letters received from Meer Ghulam Bolock, Sirdar Sher Zuman Khan, Barozai, and his cousin, Sar Bulund Khan, and a Jacobabad news-writer, translations of which, as well as the originals, or copies of all of which have been forwarded for the information of the Commissioner in Sind, there is no other news to report.

No. 33.

Telegram, dated 14th January 1876.

From Colonel Sir W. Merewether, Jacobabad, to Viceroy, Calcutta.

Information has been received from several sources that grave disturbances occurred at Khelat on or about 8th instant. Notwithstanding Khan's oath to Noordeen Mingul the latter was attacked by Khan's troops outside the city and killed, with some thirty men. Darogah Attah Muhammad and his brother, Ali Muhammad, joined in with Noordeen. Attah Muhammad was badly wounded and likely to die, Ali Muhammad killed. This will exasperate the Sirdars more than ever against Khan, and probably cause immediate outbreak in Kutchi. Captain Sandeman stated to have left Khelat on return to Dadur on 5th; if, as I suppose, he is with Moolla Mahomed Raisani, I have no fear of any injury to him or his party.

No. 27, dated Camp Jacobabad, 14th January 1876.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies of the following papers, with original vernacular letter from Azim* Khan, Khyberi, are forwarded to C. U. Aitchson, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, for information.

* From Azim Khan.

2. Captain Sandeman will, fortunately, have been well away from Khelat when these disastrous events took place, and as he is probably with Moolla Mahomed Raisani, a staunch man, and the leader in Sarawan, there need be no fear of any injury happening to Captain Sandeman or his party.

3. The events that have occurred at Khelat (and having come from several sources they can scarcely be doubted) will exasperate the Sirdars more than ever against the Khan, but they will attempt nothing directly against him now on account of the inclemency of the weather above the passes. They are, however, almost certain to cause an outbreak in Kutchi, seize the Crown rain and stores, and eject the Khan's officials. If this were all, there would be no harm to others, but disorderly characters are sure also to break out and plunder the defenceless, which the Sirdars will not be able to prevent.

Enclosure 1 in No. 34.

Translation of a letter from Azim Khan, Khyberi Sirdar, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent (no place or date mentioned).

After taking leave of you I returned home. To-day, the 14th of this month (i.e., 12th instant), a letter from Azim Jan, son of Naib Muhammad Khan (late Vakeel of Jacobabad and now at Khelat), bearing Azim Jam's seal, was brought from Bagh to the Janshin of this place (Chuttur), and in the above-mentioned letter the following news was given :—Sirdar Noordeen Mingul with his followers encamped outside the city (Khelat).

His Highness the Khan's troops attacked Noordeen's followers. Atta Mahomed Wuzeer and his brother, Ali Muhammad (properly Muhammad Ali), took part with Noordeen Mingul. In the fight Noordeen Mingul was slain amongst his own followers. Darogah Atta Mahomed Wuzeer was badly wounded and is dying, and his brother, Ali Muhammad, with 30 men were killed. It is not known how many of his Highness' troops were killed. This was the only news in the letter. The sowar who takes this saw and heard this news. I have sent it for your information. Besides what was written in the letter, the sowar, who brought the above letter to Chuttur, states verbally that Captain Sandeman could not arrange matters with his Highness, and that officer finding that his Highness would not be guided by the advice given him, determined on returning. The last news was not written in the letter, but was brought by the sowar who brought the letter regarding the fight. God knows if this is true or not.

Enclosure 2 in No. 34.

Translation of a letter from Meeah Sadeh Shah and Muhammad Wario, to Munshi Russool Buksh, dated Bagh, 14th Zulhaj 1292=12th January 1876.

The news from this place is, by God's blessing, good. I pray to God for your welfare. Noordeen and Abdul Guffur Sheikh and Ali Muhammad brother of Atta Mahomed Darogah, have been slain. Atta Mahomed himself is severely wounded and likely to die. Twenty-four men were killed in the Miri, and the Brahooees were killed outside; there is no list of those killed given.

This somewhat differs from the other account and somewhat mystifies it.—W. L. M.

On the 7th Zulhaj=5th January, Captain Sandeman left the city of Khelat and proceeded towards Dadur. Besides this I have no other news, when there is I will write to you. To-day a kossid from Khelat arrived in Bagh. When I heard this news from the kossid I at once wrote it to you.

Enclosure 1 in No. 35.

Translation of a letter from Lall Buksh, to Munshi Russool Buksh.

You should know that "Sandeman Feringee" arrived in Khelat, and informed his Highness that he had brought all the Brahooee and Belooch Sirdars with him, and the more benefits his Highness bestowed on them, the more pleased he (Captain Sandeman) would be on hearing this; his Highness' assurances to the Brahooees were without bounds. The Sahib tried to pursuade the Khan to visit Kutchi, but his Highness replied, when a letter reaches me from the Governor I will then visit Kutchi. No lasting arrangement has been made. No one has ever thought of trying to make any settlements regarding us poor zemindars; no one has ever mentioned our names until now; no proper reconciliation has taken place. I place my hope in the Almighty. It is believed that Captain Sandeman will obtain a letter from the Governor asking his Highness to visit Kutchi, and send the same to his Highness; he will then visit Kutchi. His Highness the Khan's affairs are now entrusted to this Sahib, and he is to act as he considers best.

Enclosure 2 in No. 35.

Translation of a private letter from Khelat (no place, no date).

I have received all the news regarding you. Noordeen Mingul arrived here (Khelat); he is a man not to be depended upon, sometimes he sides with one party, sometimes with the other; he is not to be trusted. Captain Sandeman with all the Sarawan Sirdars and Belooch has reached this. The arrangements made are as follows: Captain Sandeman has had long discussions regarding assurances being given to the Kohistan people (i.e., the nobles), and on his representation and advice his Highness has assured the Brahooees. The Sahib endeavoured much to persuade his Highness to visit Kutchi, but his Highness replied, when a letter from the Governor (to this effect, I suppose) reaches me I will then visit Kutchi. The Sahib has sent Gohur Khan Zurukzai a letter of assurance (tusalee namah), and has directed him to proceed to the village of Ghut in Ziri, and has promised that he will settle matters for him.

Telegram, dated 15th January 1876.

From Colonel Sir W. Merewether, Jacobabad, to Viceroy, Calcutta.

Other information confirm to-day the news from Khelat of Noordeen and the others having been killed by the Khan's troops. Two Belooch Sowars, who had been sent to Captain Sandeman, returned to-day, having left that officer on the 11th instant safe at Mittree in Kutchi, fourteen miles south of Dadar. Captain Sandeman had come the direct route from Khelat into the Bolan, not viâ Mustung and the Dusht.

No. 37.

Translation of a letter from Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Bamuzai, dated Quetta, 3rd January 1876.

My servant Derwesh has returned to me, but he brought no note with him from you, my friend, nor letter from the Sahib; from what cause has this happened? If you do not choose to write and show kindness, it rests with you. You are well aware of the difficulties I have got into through my constantly writing to you on account of the great intimacy I had with your father and my friendship for you. I have always sent you information. Perhaps you imagine that your not sending me any note would be to my advantage. Derwesh told me that the Sahib had sent a verbal message requesting me to furnish him with any fresh news I might hear, and you reminded Derwesh regarding this, consequently I consider it proper that I should write and let you know that Captain Sandeman has arrived in this part of the country; he marched one evening to Siriab and next night to Quetta, and from there he sent back all the Sirdar's followers, keeping the Sirdars themselves only with him. He halted there one night, and in the morning I went and paid my respects to him. The Sahib asked me a great many questions about the hills and the passes, Thull (Chotiali) and Zoor, and said that he intended making proper arrangements for the safety of this route. The Sahib sent to the Governor of Candahar appointed by his Highness the Amir, Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Baruzai, with ten horsemen from the Dusht plain, and he sent Sirdar Imam Khan Mazari with 100 horsemen from the Bolan Pass to Khelat. The Sahib ordered me to come to him at Siriaq; I went there, and he again made a great many inquiries about the hills. Next morning he marched to Mustung. Whilst at Siriab a letter was received from Noordeen Mingul, saying that he had reached Khelat. I heard that when the Sahib arrived in Mustung, Fakir Muhammad Mustowfi (son of Abdul Aziz) came out and met Captain Sandeman, and that they all started for Khelat, where they must have arrived. There is no other news. All the Brahooee followers have returned to Dadur.

Memo., No. 15, dated Camp Jhangar, 7th January 1876.

The undersigned has the honour to forward translation of report, dated the 27th ultimo, from Ali Muhammad, Sub-Inspector, Frontier Police, for perusal.

I have in a former report informed you that Sirdar Noordeen Mingul had left for Khelat and halted at Guazdar owing to the Mingul Brahooees having dissuaded him from proceeding. He remained there several days until his Highness the Khan sent Abdulla Jan and Mustowfi Vakeels to bring him, and also sent him his sealed oath on the Koran, saying that he was in no way his enemy. After this Noordeen proceeded with the two above-named Vakeels to Khelat, and has now reached "Sorab," which is 20 miles from that city.

2. Gohur Khan, Sirdar of the Ziri Brahooees, is living near to Khelat on the west side, and he has looted some merchandize from the Pathans on the Mula road. This Gohur Khan has quarrelled with his Highness the Khan about the Sirdarship of the Ziri Brahooees, and his Highness the Khan named another person to that position, but the Brahooees decided to have Gohur Khan, and it is said that he (Gohur Khan) has killed the person named by the Khan. Noordeen has been called to Khelat that he may bring Gohur Khan and the other Brahooees to reason, and he has not gone willingly, but because he could not help himself.

District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee.

From Colonel F. Loch, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

I have the honour to report that two Rhind Sowars, whom I sent with a letter to Captain Sandeman, have just returned, and they inform me that they left that officer near Mittree on the 11th instant. They also state that when they were at Jumbara, one of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul's followers brought the intelligence to the Brahooee Sarawan Sirdars with Captain Sandeman that their Sirdar Noordeen with 60 of his followers, also Darogah Atta Mahomed and his brother, had been slain in the city of Khelat by his Highness the Khan's troops on the 8th of the present month.

Dated Jacobabad, 10th January 1876.

Khelat Diary, No. 1, for the week ending 9th January 1876.

On the 24th ultimo Mir Baz Khan, commanding the Waziri Regiment, with 400 men, reached Bagh, having come by the Mula Pass. On the 26th of last month, two days after the arrival of the above troops, Haji Murad, resident of the Bagh District, made a complaint to Abdul Aziz, Naib of Bagh, that the Brahooees were doing great damage to his fields, and on receiving this complaint the Naib ordered Mir Baz Khan to take one gun and his 400 men to punish the Brahooees. The Brahooees belonged to various sections of the Sarawan tribe, viz., Budozais, Shawanis, Dinazais, Sheranzais and others, and they were all then collected near Hasham-ke-Dusti at Gumbaz Shah Wali. They were totally ignorant of the approach of the troops, until Mir Baz Khan opened fire on them with the gun and the small arms. Eight of the Brahooees were killed, four wounded, and seven or eight taken prisoners, four flocks of goats belonging to them, as well as all their goods and chattels, were carried off, and five of the troops were wounded. No Sirdar or Muccadum of any influence was with the Brahooees at the time, all having accompanied Captain Sandeman to Khelat. The goats and all the property captured were taken to Bagh. The Brahooees have left Hasham-ke-Dusti, and are now collected between Haji-ke-Shere and Mittree; they at once sent two messengers to inform Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani of what had taken place.

2. When Captain Sandeman was marching from Kirta to Bibinani, some Murrees (tribe not at present known) who were on the hills, taking his party for their enemies, drew their swords and whirled them round their heads and fired some shots. Captain Sandeman at once sent Sher Dil Mazarani Murree to them, and he, after some persuasion, managed to induce them to come to Captain Sandeman, who gave them some money as a present. Captain Sandeman had hardly left the hills, when these Murrees raided a flock of goats from the Seran Kakurs, who live with the Shawanis near Siriab. The owners of the raided property complained to Captain Sandeman at Siriab, who replied that he could make no arrangement about it then, but it would be investigated hereafter. Captain Sandeman halted two days at Quetta near where the old cantonments are. He has only the Sirdars, and the 200 infantry and 50 cavalry belonging to the Punjab force with him now; all the Brahooee Sirdars' followers have been allowed to return to Dadur. Captain Sandeman returned to Siriab, and then marched to Theri, and when there the above mentioned Murrees together with some others, looted the Yasurzai Kakurs near Alla Buksh's killa of three flocks of goats and sheep, in all about 1,200 animals. The owners complained to Captain Sandeman, who refused to interfere, saying it was the Naib of Quetta's business. On the 3rd of this month two sowars brought two letters from Captain Sandeman to the address of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier. These men report that Fakir Muhammad, son of Abdul Aziz, Naib of Bagh, had been sent to meet Captain Sandeman at Mustung: that officer was at Ghuru on the 28th. All the Brahooees and Murrees, with the exception of the Sirdars, having returned to Dadur.

3. When Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's letter reached Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, he marched to Sorab and sent word to Sirdar Azaad Khan Nowsherwani to come to him; but Azaad Khan refused to do so,and sent a message to Noordeen to the effect that all the arrangements the Sirdars had made for a rebellion had been upset by him (Noordeen), and it would be a most difficult matter again to get all persons to be unanimous and to act in concert; and added, take care that we are not all disgraced. After the sowars, who took Noordeen Mingul's reply to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, had left, his Highness' sister, Bibi Fateh Khatun, who had him sent by the Khan, arrived, and she pursuaded Noordeen to accompany her to Khelat.

4. The Murrees living at Kot Mundai raided the Murkhiani Pathans and carried off 20 goats. On the 28th December Hyder Khan Mussur[illegible]oogtee attacked the Pathans (tribe not known), and carried off 20 head of cattle. On the 29th December Dilli Jan Notani Boogtee, with 14 men, carried off seven donkeys and one flock of goats from the Brahuis from near Shur Shori, close to Shahpur. The Brahooees followed them up and recovered the goats, but the Notanis carried off [illegible] donkeys. Fateh Khan, brother of Karam Khan Bijarani, with 40 sowars, attacked the Khetrans and carried of 30 bullocks and eight donkeys: the Khetrans assembled and raided the Bakranis near Ghiandari, killing 20 of them and carrying off a large number of their cattle, sheep and goats. On the 28th of last month the Khetrans again raided the Bakranis and carried off their cattle; the Bakranis collected and followed up, a fight ensued, in which 20 Bakranis were killed and the Khetrans carried off all the cattle.

Telegram, dated 18th January 1876.

From Commissioner in Sind, Jacobabad, to Foreign Secretary, Calcutta.

The following news has to-day been received about late proceedings at Khelat. The news from here is as follows :—Captain Sandeman marched from here, Mustung, to Khelat, the first day his Highness the Khan's son came out to meet Captain Sandeman, and next morning Captain Sandeman without the Sirdars visited the Khan, but no conversation took place. The third day the Khan visited the Sahib, but the afore-mentioned Sirdars were not present. The Sahib and his Highness conversed together, but the conversation, I believe, ended in nothing. On Tuesday, the 4th January, the Sahib determined on leaving, but Khan Sahib, Mir Khodadad Khan, went to Captain Sandeman, reassured him, and prevented his leaving. On Wednesday, the 5th January, the news of the attack on the Brahooees by the Khan's troops which took place in Kutchi was received, but you will be well acquainted as to who was in fault regarding this fight which took place in Kutchi. The Brahooees, however, wrote to their Sirdars as follows : One of our sections have been attacked, some of our people have been killed, and our flocks carried off. At last, on Wednesday, the 5th January, Captain Sandeman with all the Belcooh Sirdars left to return by the Rhodbar route to Kutchi, this route by Rhodbar enters the Bolan Pass at Bibinani. Sirdar Noordeen was first in Khelat, meaning that he arrived before Captain Sandeman ; he came by means of Atta Mahomed, who was lately his Highness the Khan's Wuzeer. The day after Captain Sandeman left, Noordeen and Atta Mahomed visited his Highness the Khan, and they stayed all day in conference with his Highness. They then left and went together to Atta Mahomed's house. Noordeen's followers, mounted and foot, amounting to about 300, were outside the town. It was Thursday, the 6th January, when Noordeen and Atta Mahomed went to the latter's house together. His Highness ordered Masam, commanding the Nurwai Regiment, to take 400 Sepoys with him, and to proceed to Atta Mahomed's house to arrest these people or to kill them. By the will of God a fight began, in which Noordeen, Atta Mahomed's brother, Muhammad Ali, with thirty persons, were slain, also two young sons of Atta Mahomed. Atta Mahomed himself and Ali Jan the Shahgassee were also present in the fight, but it is not known if they have been slain or if they have been made prisoners. When I know about it I will let you know. Fakir Muhammad, commanding the Jangli Regiment, took his regiment and guns and attacked Noordeen's people outside the town, and a desperate fight took place, but I have heard no particulars of the fight. I wish to send this man with the letter off quickly, so I have written this letter.

From Captain Sandeman, Camp Bolan Pass, viâ Rajunpore, to Foreign Secretary, Calcutta.

Am returning without having settled matters between Murree tribe and Khelat Government. Have fully discovered true causes which keep country in state of anarchy. At first Khan appeared most desirous for peace, but said he had heard day or two before my arrival I had not authority to arrange it. Told Khan objects of expedition. He then received Murree and Bolan Chiefs in public Durbar. Murree Chiefs made full submission. Khan publicly said they should have back service and Ghuzzun his jaghire, which Khan had confiscated. After this negotiations progressed well until day before I left. Khan that day sent word that his troops had attacked Brahooaes in Kutchi killing several. In evening Khan visited me, but could not get him to be reasonable, and end the war. Admitted he had not sufficient power to protect Kutchi and Bolan from Murree inroads. Khan said he was carrying out policy he was educated in, and could not alter until he had referred point to British Government. Khan pressed letters on me for Viceroy and Lieutenant-Governor. I accepted them, telling him I must inform Government true position of affairs. Tone of letter submissive, acknowledge subordination of Khelat Government to British. During visit Khan's object clearly was to show he had no quarrel with British Government. I telegraph direct, because since leaving news received that Khan had imprisoned or killed Sirdar Noerdeen and exaggerated accounts may reach Government. This Sirdar had separated from other Sirdars, was negotiating direct with Khan, and in no way connected with me. Quarrel very bitter between Khan and Sirdars. Both sides fully admit their inability on account of its long standing to settle it without the powerful but friendly intervention of British Government, which they solicit. Message ends.

Dated Jacobabad, 19th January 1876.

Khelat Diary, No. 2, for the week ending 16th January 1876.

On the 1st of the current month Captain Sandeman arrived at Khelat, his Highness the Khan sent his son, Mir Muhammad Khan, as far as Zearut to meet Captain Sandeman according to the custom of the country, and Captain Sandeman went to Ghulam Muhammad Janeshin's house, which had been prepared for his reception by the orders of his Highness the Khan. Next day Captain Sandeman visited his Highness the Khan in the Miri, and the following day his Highness visited Captain Sandeman, when a long conversation and conference took place. On the 5th instant Captain Sandeman left Khelat by the Rhodbar road, his first march being to Johan. On the 6th of this month Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and Atta Mahomed Wuzeer, by whose influence Noordeen had come to Khelat prior to Captain Sandeman's arrival, paid his Highness a visit, and they afterwards both went to the latter's house. His Highness the Khan then ordered Moosum, commanding the Nurwai Regiment, to take 400 of his regiment and attack Atta Mahomed's house. The following people—Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, Darogah Atta Mahomed Wuzeer, Darogah Muhammad Ali, his brother, Naib of Khelat, Atta Mahomed's two young sons, Muhammad Ali's eldest son, Janeshin Shabun, who was formerly Janeshin of Gundava, and Abdul Guffur Muhammad with 30 men were killed. It is not yet quite certain whether Atta Mahomed is dead or not, but he was badly wounded. A few of his Highness' troops were also killed. One of his Highness the Khan's regiments also attacked the followers of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, who were encamped outside of the town, and killed a great number of them, but it is not yet known for certain who the headmen, if any, were killed in this fight. It is, however, rumoured that Chakur Khan, Jatak Sirdar, was killed.

This puts the attack on, and death of, Sirdar Noordeen Mingul two days earlier than the first account.—W. L. M.

When Gohur Khan, Ziri Sirdar, heard this news he went with 20 of his followers and murdered Musty Khan Dewar, Darogah of Ziri, and brother of Metha Khan Chobdar. Gohur Khan is now collecting his people with the intention of plundering in Kutchi near Gundava and Kotra.

2. Captain Sandeman has returned to Kutchi and remained at Mittree and Mull for a few days, and it is reported that he has made peace between the Sarawan, Brahooee Sirdars, and the Murrees, and that he has given Sirdar Moolla Mohamed permission to reside with the Murrees in the Murree Hills. Captain Sandeman was at Lehree on the 17th instant.

3. Tonghan, Janeshin of Gulham-ke-Basti, not far from Mittree, went there to look after the crops, and he was murdered on the 10th of this month. His body was not found for six days after the murder was committed.

4. Three days after the murder of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, his Highness the Khan ordered four hundred seepahis to be sent to Bagh in Kutchi to reinforce the troops stationed there.

Translation of a letter from Sirdar Azim Khan, Khyberee, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 19th Zulhaj, i.e., 17th January 1876.

To-day, the 19th, i.e., the 17th January, Captain Sandeman reached Mull, and he will move to Lehri to-morrow. Sohrab Khan, Dhoombkee Sirdar at Lehri, went to meet Captain Sandeman at Mull. The following is the account of what has taken place: — The above-mentioned Sahib ordered Sirdar Moolla Mohamed Raisani to go and live in the Murree Hills, and he gave an order to Mir Oola Khan, Murree, brother of Sirdar Guzzan Khan, Murree Sirdar, that he and the Belooch Murrees were to give Sirdar Moolla Mahomed every assistance for one month; that he, Captain Sandeman, was going to see the Government; and that he would inform them of what arrangements had been made for them. It is now Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's intention to go into Murree Hills.

A person has come from the Mula Pass or river, who says that Sirdar Gohur Khan, Zurukzai, with 28 followers, has killed Chobdar Metha Khan, Naib of Nurgarrah in the Ziri District. Gohur Khan is now near Pir Chuttur, and is collecting a force, and it is his intention to plunder Gundava (about 80 miles west from Jacobabad) and Kotri, about seven miles still further to the west. God knows whether this is true or not. I hear from people that Captain Sandeman is very dispirited and out of wits.

After taking my leave of you I arrived here in safety. When I reached Shahpur I at once learnt from Gulzar Mazari that Captain Sandeman had returned from Khelat with the Brahooee, Sarawan, and Belooch people, and was encamped at Mull in the Seebee District, that he had made peace between Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Mir Ula Khan, Murree, brother of Guzzun Khan, Murree Sirdar, and made them take oath on the Koran. All the Brahooee Sarawans are leaving Seebee and Mull and are going to the Murree Hills, besides this I have heard that Captain Sandeman intends stationing a (thanna) post in the Sangsila valley (Boogtee country) and in Kahan (head-quarters of the Murrees). Mir Gohur Khan, Ziri Sirdar, with his people, attacked some of his Highness the Khan's people, and killed 20 of them, including one Naib, and one or two men were killed on Gohur Khan's side.

2. Gohur Khan, Ziri Sirdar, together with other Jalawan Sirdars, are leaving Khorasan and coming into Kutchi by the Mula Pass.

Intelligence received from Shikarpur.

This morning (17th January) Ali Murad, Belooch Sinjani, stated that he left Khelat 10 days ago. Noordeen Mingul, brother-in-law of the Ex-Jam of Beyla, came to Khelat about 20 or 25 days ago; he paid his respects to the Khan and took up his abode with him. On the 4th January a Sahib accompanied by the Sirdar, Murrees and Boogtees, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani, arrived at Khelat, having travelled viâ Shalkote and Mustung. He stayed four days, after which he departed, returning by the same route he had come, and accompanied by all the Sirdars. Two days after the Eed (Huj) festival the Khan, through the agency of Darogah Atta Mahomed Khan, invited Noordeen Mingul to the residence of the Darogah, where Noordeen took up his abode with 60 or 70 men. The Khan then directed his infantry, artillery, and cavalry to kill them both. A fight ensued, in which Noordeen with 62 men fell, the Darogah's brother, Muhammad Ali, and his son, were also slain; Atta Mahomed received two gunshot wounds, but three men escaped on horseback. When the wife of Muhammad Ali, Darogah's sister-in-law, beheld her son fall, she threw herself from an upper storey window and broke her legs.

Translation of a letter from Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 16th Zulhaj, i.e., 14th January 1876.

You must be acquainted with the news from here regarding which I formerly wrote to you. The most recent news is as follows: Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Sirdars went march by march to Khelat. The first day his Highness visited Captain Sandeman, and Captain Sandeman strongly urged his Highness to make peace. His Highness replied, by your coming I am made excessively happy. I will give you a written receipt. If you get a written order addressed to me from the Governor, in whatever manner you may be pleased to order, I will abide by it and obey the order. Captain Sandeman replied, I am going back to Kutchi and I will get an order from the Sahib; you write a receipt. His Highness wrote a receipt and gave it to Captain Sandeman, and he has it now. On the day this conversation took place, a report from Abdul Aziz, Naib of Bagh was received by his Highness, in which it was stated, I took a force and attacked the Brahooees, killed six of them, and a few of their leading men were made prisoners, and I carried off large numbers of their flocks. On hearing this, Captain Sandeman became very much enraged with his Highness, and said the Brahooees had, at his desire, delayed taking any steps, and now your Highness' troops have attacked the Brahooees and have carried off by force their flocks. Now act just as you please and carry on your affairs after your own fashion. It was then evening, and the Sahib ordered his troops to get ready to march at once. His Highness entreated him with tears to delay his departure, but Captain Sandeman refused to listen to his entreaties and said he would leave at once. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed then represented to Captain Sandeman that it was not the hour to begin a march, that he should wait till the morning; the Sahib took the Sirdar's advice and remained there that night. The next morning he marched to Johan and then came by regular marches to the other side (north) of Mittree and halted there. The story regarding Noordeen is that some time ago his Highness sent Darogah Atta Mahomed to Sirdar Noordeen and gave him a Koran with his seal on it to take to Noordeen with a message from his Highness that for the future he intended no harm to him, and that he would get the British Government to release the Jam of Beyla, Mir Khan, from confinement. The above-mentioned Atta Mahomed went to Noordeen and took his oath to him and brought him before his Highness the Khan. The day after the Sahib left, his Highness sent a man to Noordeen to say that the Darogah had called him, the Sirdar came with his friends to the Darogah's house. His Highness then ordered the infantry and other troops to kill Noordeen and his friends, also Atta Mahomed. The infantry went there and commenced firing, a fight took place, in which 36 of his Highness' infantry were killed. Noordeen and his friends, Atta Mahomed and his brother Muhammad Ali were also slain, and Ali Jan, son of Rahimdad, fled and took refuge in the Khan's sister's house, and the Juttuk Sirdar managed to escape and reached his friends in safety.

Owing to this and the fight which took place in Kutchi the Sarawans are all united and the Murrees have become friendly with them, and it is their intention to create a rebellion. It will be seen what will be done. Whatever takes place hereafter I will send you a full report.

My brother, Nur Muhammad Khan, was sent by the Sahib to Candahar. To-day, the 16th Zulhaj, i.e., 14th January, I received a letter from him in which he writes:—

I arrived in Candahar on the 25th Zulkad = 24th December, and the letters I brought were at once forwarded to his Highness the Amir, but up to the present no reply has been received to them; when I get the replies I will return to you. Up to the present I have not been fully acquainted on what duty my brother has been sent to Candahar; when he returns in safety I will write and let you know. It will be seen if the Sahib, intends returning to his own country or not, or what he will do. I am very much pleased to hear Sir W. Merewether has arrived at Jacobabad. I am very anxious to pay my respects to him. I now ask that you will kindly invite me that I may pay my respects both to him and you, by which my dignity and my reputation in this world will become as bright as the sun. You yourself said that when Colonel Sir W. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, came to Jacobabad that I was to come there to pay my respects to him without being invited, I was ready to do so. If, however, you will kindly send me a letter, either from the Commissioner in Sind or from yourself, it will greatly increase my reputation and good name. Be quite confident that I am a dependent on the British Government. In whatever way you please to order, I will act on. Your letter which you sent for the Sahib, I sent with my sowars; they have returned, but the Sahib (Captain Sandeman) gave them no answer to bring.

Translation of a letter from Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 26th Zulhaj 1292.

Previously I gave you full news. What has since occurred I now beg to report:—Captain Sandeman, with Moolla Mahomed Raisani and others, Sarawans, on return from Khelat, passed two nights at Mittree, the third night having marched therefrom, arrived near the city of Mull, where also he stayed two nights. On the 3rd he marched and proceeded to his country. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, with all the Sarawan Sirdars, i.e., Wudera Mir Shadi Khan Bangulzai, Sirdar Alladina Koord, Sirdar Said Khan Muhammad Shai, and Jundo Khan Shawani and others, conferred together and started for the Tuli River along the skirts of the hills, where they are still staying. The Ooloos (clansmen) of all the Sirdars are assembling, they will get together in two or three days. The Murrees have also joined the Sarawans, and they all intend to create disturbances. There will be a great fight in two or three days. The Murree force is also collecting. When the Sarawan people get together they will make a combined fight. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has taken away his family from my city to his own toman. You may be aware that Naib Faiz Muhammad, with 200 cavalry and infantry, has come to Dadur, and there are about 500 or 600 cavalry and infantry with Naib Abdul Aziz at Bagh under the command of Fakir Muhammad. It remains to be seen what may happen. The Dumars and Sumalanis are also collecting in the Bolan to join the Sarawans and Murrees. The two former tribes will create disturbance from their part of the country; while the Murrees and Sarawans begin their action from here (this side). It is apprehended that the country will be so set on fire, that God's creation will be seriously distressed. The Brahooees that were in my town previously and those who now came I have sent away to prevent reflection upon me, and they have all gone to their own tomans. My respect depends upon your generosity, for I am an adherent and subordinate of yours. I am exceedingly desirous of paying you respects. If I am kindly called, I will present myself, and have my honour raised thereby. I will write in detail what may occur hereafter.

No. 50.

Translation of a letter from Sir Bullund Khan, Barozai Sirdar, to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 16th Zulhaj, i.e., 14th January 1876.

I have received your letter and the one from the Commissioner in Sind on the 15th of this month (yesterday), and by the receipt of the same I have been a thousand times exalted. May God keep you Sahibs in safety. The accounts from here are that Captain Sandeman with the Sarawan Sirdars went by the usual marches to Khelat, and urged his Highness the Khan to make an agreement with the Brahooees. His Highness replied to the Sahib, the treaty between myself and the Brahooees is that formerly made by the Commissioner in Sind. After that treaty was made the Brahooees never came to salaam to me, and no other treaty can now be made. After this Captain Sandeman left that place and came by stages to Mitree, where he arrived on the 14th of this month (12th January). Captain Sandeman informed every one that his purpose had failed, now do whatever you like. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed sent to the different places to give the Brahooees this news, and told them that whoever were his friends should come to Thuclee, and live at the foot of the hills, and that a rebellion would take place, and he requested the Sahib to remain at Mitree for two or three days until his people, the Brahooees, may be able to leave Kutchi. The Murrees are of one mind with the Sarawans, it will be seen, if the Sahib remains here or not.

Sirdar Noordeen, Atta Mahomed, and Ali Jan, determined together that they would murder his Highness the Khan on the day of the Eed. His Highness, however, had them killed beforehand, on Thursday, the 9th of this month (7th January). I write this for your information. I will write again whatever there is to report.

No. 85, dated Camp Duhar, 22nd January 1876.

From R. H. Vincent, Esq., Acting District Superintendent of Police, Shikarpoor, to Commissioner of Police in Sind, on Circuit.

I have the honour to inform you that the town inspector of Shikarpoor reports that a caravan, consisting of about 250 Pathans, which left Shikarpoor some 20 days ago, and was destined for Candahar, is rumoured to have been plundered by Gohur Khan, Brahooee Sirdar, in the Mulla Pass.

2. During the encounter some 200 Pathans are said to have been murdered, and their merchandise, consisting chiefly of indigo and cloth, valued at about $1\frac{1}{4}$ lakhs of rupees, plundered.

Translation of a letter received at Jacobabad, dated 23rd Zulhaj, i.e., 21st January 1876.

You should know that Ghoram Khan, Brahooee, has come from Mittree, and he reports that when Captain Sandeman returned from Khelat to Mittree the following Brahooees were with him :—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani, Alla Dina Khoord's son, Shadi Khan, Bungulzai. The Sahib told them I will make peace between you and the Murrees; after this you go and remain in the Murree Hills and create a rebellion, and make war with his Highness the Khan. To this the Brahooees agreed, but Captain Sandeman told them when I go to Dehra, having made a proper treaty with Ghuzzan Khan, I will let you know of it, and you must act on it.

No. 53.

No. 3, dated Camp near Seebee, 13th January 1876.

From Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind.

I have the honour to acknowledge your No. 1007, dated Camp Khanpur, the 22nd December 1875, and forwarded under cover of Colonel Loch's No. 4477, dated Jacobabad, the 23rd December 1875. You have also with the same letter forwarded, for my perusal and reply, copy of Khelat Diary, No. 48, for the week ending 19th December 1875. These papers I only received four days ago in the Robdar Pass. Before replying to the contents of the diary I will reply to your endorsement acknowledged above.

2. Your letter directing me to meet you at Kashmor between the 20th and 30th of December did not reach me until after I had entered the Bolan Pass, which I did on the 15th December, and long after I had been joined by the Sarawan Brahooee Sirdars, while a telegram from Colonel Loch, which told me you could not reach Kashmor until the 15th January (or two days hence), I only received a few days ago, on my return journey from Khelat. It was therefore out of my power to have acted on the instructions then sent. But putting these facts altogether aside, as already explained in this Office Nos. 171 and 174, dated 22nd and 25th December respectively, to the address of Colonel Loch, I have since starting on this expedition believed I was acting directly under the orders of the Government of India conveyed in their Proceedings of the 16th of October last, No. 2819P., and forwarded for my information and guidance under cover of your endorsement, No. 862, dated Kurrachee, 3rd November 1875.

3. I will now reply to the contents of the diary referred to above. It first states that a conspiracy on a large scale headed by Sirdar Azaad Khan of Karan had been organised against the Khelat Government, but that my arrival in the country had entirely prevented its execution.

I believe that a conspiracy had been entered into between Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and several of the Khan's officials, and bitterly, as the issue has shown (of which I only heard particulars a day or two ago), the conspirators have suffered for their temerity. But the Sarawan Sirdars, who joined me of their own free will on entering Seebee, declare they did not know of any such scheme.

4. I believe this statement to be true from the fact that on my arrival at Kahan the Murree Sirdar, Ghuzzan Khan, showed me a letter (a copy of which I have) which he had received a day or two before from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, in which the Sirdar asked the Murree Chief for aid, with men to enable him to oppose the Khan's army shortly expected in Kutchi. This letter Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan placed in my hands and asked me to advise him how he should act. In reply I asked him whether he desired peace or war with the Khan's Government. On his emphatically declaring he anxiously desired peace, and would send his brother and headmen with me with the object of obtaining it, after requesting him to record this in writing, which he did, I promised to see the Sarawan Sirdars and inquire of them what their views on the subject were. They joined my camp directly it arrived in Seebee territory, and they also in writing petitioned me to obtain for them, if possible, a peaceful solution of their present difficulty with the Khelat Government. We then all together marched for the Bolan Pass to inquire into Brahooee and Murree quarrels regarding the Bolan Pass traffic, which the Proceedings of the Government of India, No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, authorised me to inquire into and, if possible, settle. What action I took on the joint request of the Murree and Brahooee petition for peace with the Khelat Government will be recorded in my general report directed to be submitted to the Government of India through you directly the expedition is concluded.

5. I may further mention here another fact in support of my belief that the Sarawan Sirdars did not know of the conspiracy named in the diary against the Khelat Government, viz., that Sirdar Noordeen had been called into Khelat by the Khan himself, and had actually proceeded there with the Wuzeer, who went for him previous to my arrival in the country having become known. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed heard of this from Faiz Muhammad, Naib of Dadur, soon after we entered the Bolan Pass, whom we met in it, but would not at first believe the news. After our arrival in Khelat we found what the Naib had said was true, and the Sarawan Sirdars came and told me of it, saying in strong language, which I need not here repeat, that Noordeen was "a scoundrel and had "betrayed their (the Sirdar's) cause."

6. In regard to the statement in the diary that after my arrival I had directed the Sirdars and the Khan's officials to cease from making war on each other, I have the honour to reply that it is wholly devoid of truth. The only document I wrote to the Naib of Bagh was in acknowledgment of a civil letter I received from him saying that he desired to come and visit me, in which I thanked him for his courteous desire, but would not give him the trouble as I was leaving that afternoon for Kirta, 30 miles within the Bolan Pass. No other communication of any kind passed between us.

7. Regarding the statement in diary that I sent sowars to Sirdars Noordeen and Gohur Khan Zarukzai, that also is wholly untrue. The only statements in the diary, as far as it concerns me, that are true (for even my movements are incorrectly stated, as well as the size of the escort accompanying me, which is greatly exaggerated) are the ones regarding the giving of a small khillut to Sher Zaman Shah of Seebee and sending a party to Khelat and Kandahar. I presented the khillut to the Seebee Chief in return for the valuable aid he had afforded the expedition in providing it with grain and other supplies of which I had run short.

8. Regarding the deputation of a party to Khelat and Kandahar, I will fully explain this act, and the necessity for it, when I submit my report to the Government of India as directed in their proceedings already above referred to.

9. The despatch of kossids with instructions for me, noted in the concluding portion of the diary as having set out from Jacobabad on the 14th and 17th December as already reported, did not join me until I arrived at Shawlkot. I left Dadur on the 15th or the day after the first kossid was despatched from Jacobabad. That day I marched to Kirta, as already stated, distant from Dadur about 25 to 30 miles, it was therefore impossible your instructions could have reached me in time to prevent my acting in the way explained in this letter.

10. On account of the season of the year and the severe weather I experienced above the passes I have not delayed my movements, since I started on my return journey in order officially to report them. I am now en route to Dera Ghazi Khan, and have halted here a day amongst other things to afford time for this letter and for the dismissal to their homes of the Murree and other Chiefs. The results of the expedition I will report directly I reach Dera Ghazi Khan. I may here, however, briefly state them to be as follows:—I have inquired into the Murree, Boogtee, Afghan, and Brahooee quarrels, and some of these I have been able to amicably settle. I have not been able to effect a settlement of the quarrel between the Khelat Government and the Murree tribe, but I have discovered the real causes which have led to this and other quarrels. I believe also I am in a position to report on what can be safely done for the protection of the Bolan trade.

2. This letter was only received by me here to-day.

3. In the 2nd paragraph Captain Sandeman states my letter, despatched from Kurrachee on the 25th November, did not reach him till after the 15th December, when he had entered the Bolan Pass. The cause of this delay has yet to be explained. Captain Sandeman merely speaks of my desire that he should meet me at Kashmor; he does not acknowledge the important part of the instructions sent to him, excepting in so far as to say, "I have since starting on this expedition believed I was acting directly under the "orders of the Government of India, conveyed in their Proceedings of the 16th October "last, No. 2819P., and forwarded, for my information and guidance, under cover of "your endorsement, No. 862, dated Kurrachee, 3rd November 1875." But Captain Sandeman forgot, and appears to forget still, that the Government Resolution he quotes merely ordered him to proceed into the Murree Hills, that it in no way relieved him from subordination to me, and that, having been before repeatedly enjoined by me, both verbally and by letter, to confine his operations to the Murree and Boogtee hills and on no account to communicate with the Sirdars or any of the people in Katchi, he was bound in all duty to refer to me before he adopted such a course, or ventured on leaving those hills to enter the plains of Kutchi. As an officer also serving under me, as the above Government Resolution showed him to be, he should have kept me regularly informed of his proceedings, and before entering on any new line of conduct, which he knew to be contrary to the orders I had given him, he should have applied to me for consent to his proposed action. All this he entirely neglected to do, and with the exception of his two letters from Shawlkote, dated respectively 22nd and 25th December, addressed to Colonel Loch, and forwarded by that officer to me, I received no report from him of what he was doing from the time he announced his departure for the Murree Hills until now. I am still without any reply to my letter, No. 1031, of the 28th December 1875.

4. With regard to Khelat Diary, No. 48, ending 19th December 1875, it was therein stated that in the rebellion projected by the Brahooee Sirdars, Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan was to assist, not head it. It was also shown in letter from Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan of Kurkh to Colonel Loch, dated the 2nd December 1875 (forwarded to Government under my endorsement, No. 966, of the 13th December), that on the 26th November "Afzul Khan Mingul brought a letter to Sirdar "Moolla Mahomed* from Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, and "the messenger gave the following information, that Sirdar Noordeen Mingul was with a "Jalawan force in Baghwana, and that he had presented Sirdar Gohur Khan Zehri with "the Sirdar's khillut or dress of honour. The latter Sirdar is at Hurtoshah with 300 "men. The sowar said that when he left it was Noordeen Mingul's intention to proceed "to Zehri. Ali Jan, son of Rahimdad, had been sent by his Highness the Khan to "Noordeen, who had falsely agreed to go to Khelat, but from what people say, he intends "going there to create a disturbance." The son of the Jam of Beyla was said to be joining in the conspiracy, also some of the Khan's regular troops at Khelat, and further on, "on the 28th Shaval, i.e., 28th November, all the Sarawan Sirdars came to Sirdar "Moolla Mahomed Raisani, and the sowar who had come from Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, "as well as a sowar from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, were sent to Sirdar Noordeen, and all "the Sirdars remained with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed two nights, and are all unanimous. "They returned on the 30th November to their several stations, and their intention is "to create a disturbance." This intelligence was written by a man who has always sent good information, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was at the time living in his village, to which the Sarawan Sirdars all came. Captain Sandeman joined these Sirdars only a few days after the above events were said to have taken place, and how they could declare to him "they did not know of any such scheme" is certainly very incomprehensible. Captain Sandeman says, "I believe that a conspiracy had been entered into between "Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and several of the Khan's officials;" he should have had no difficulty in feeling certain the scheme had been communicated to the Sarawan Chiefs, and that had he not come to take up their cause they would have joined in it, as Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan had reported it was their intention to do. The Sarawan Chiefs naturally went to him, and of their own freewill, because they would believe, even if they were not told, that he was coming to arrange matters for them. I cannot concur in any way in Captain Sandeman's expressed view of the events which took place at Khelat the day after his departure, when he says, "and bitterly, as the issue has shown, the con- "spirators have suffered for their temerity." Sirdar Noordeen had then abandoned his plan of rebellion, having entered Khelat under sworn safe conduct from the Khan, and he paid his respects to his Sovereign, confident in security. A few days afterwards the Khan, unmindful of his pledged word, has Noordeen attacked and killed. I should consider no expression of disapproval too strong for such unjustifiable treachery.

5. The plan of petition for peaceful solution of present difficulties would very naturally be adopted by the Brahooee Sirdars in place of fighting, and a Sahib having come amongst them would at once raise such hopes in their minds. It was this very sequence I have all along pointed out would occur, and further from my knowledge of the real state of affairs between the Khan and the Sirdars, that such hopes must meet with disappointment, when matters would be far worse than before.

6. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed may have heard in the Bolan of proposals that Noordeen should go to Khelat under promise of safety, conducted by the Wuzeer; but I can hardly conceive he could have then received intimation of Noordeen's actually having gone there, for all accounts agree now in saying that Noordeen entered Khelat only a few days before Captain Sandeman himself. This point will be cleared up when kossids return from Khelat, who were present at the time of Noordeen's arrival and death.

7. As the informant who supplied the news for the diary was not at Dadur, he may, if the Sarawan Sirdars sent sowars to Noordeen from there, have been misled and misinformed as to Captain Sandeman having sent himself. Captain Sandeman also distinctly denies the truth of the statement that after his arrival he had directed the Sirdars and the Khan's officials to cease from making war on each other, as well as what he was reported to have written to the Naib of Bagh.

8. I am not aware, of course, what quarrels Captain Sandeman has been able to settle, but if he refers to animosity between Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the Murrees, I would call attention to the postscript to my letter, No. 816, of the 21st October, in which it is shown that any difference that may have existed between the Murrees and that Sirdar had been forgotten and foregone, when the Muccadums sent the message they did to the Sirdar. The letter Captain Sandeman was shown by Ghuzzan Khan at Kahan, in which aid was asked of the Murrees by the Sirdars, proves that no animosity then existed between them. I trust I may be allowed to peruse the reports Captain Sandeman alludes to in his 8th and 9th paragraphs, as his proceedings cannot but be regarded as affecting most materially my reputation for political judgment and fidelity to the interests of Government in the management of the affairs which I have had the honour of conducting for so long.

Translation of a letter from Muhammad Khan Kajjak, to Commissioner in Sind, no date

Captain Sandeman and all the Chiefs, including Moolla Mahomed Raisani, had gone to his Highness the Khan of Khelat. There they conferred, and then his Highness the Khan observed that you should go to Dadar. I will also come there. Captain Sandeman borrowed Rupees 6,000 from the Khan, and distributed the amount in Rupees 200 to each of the Chiefs. About this time his Highness the Khan received a letter from the Naib of Bagh to the effect that he had killed numerous Brahooees and had seized a considerable amount of property. Captain Sandeman on hearing this was enraged with the Khan, and told him what sort of a ruler are you that you kill people. I do not know of what caste you are. You are Ooroosee or Gajai and yet have a human form. You have no sense. Those who are human beings command people by conciliation and leniency; while you do so by murder. We take country somewhere by war and somewhere by leniency; having said this, he (Captain Sandeman) returned by the Bolan route. After Captain Sandeman was five or six koss away from Khelat, the Khan sent for Noordeen Mingul and Darogah Atta Mahomed; when these men had arrived at the bazar with 60 followers the Khan got them killed. A sowar came to inform Captain Sandeman and Moolla Mahomed of what had occurred. This intelligence so much angered Captain Sandeman that he would not ever receive Moolla Mahomed whenever the latter went to him, and that he put out the lamps that his servants lighted in the tents. When Captain Sandeman received at Mittree instructions from "Willayat," he called the Sirdars and Moolla Mahomed Raisani and told them—"You should be at "rest. Major Harrison was removed, because he had taken to Jacobabad Shahgassi "Wullee Muhammad, a servant of his Highness the Khan." Captain Sandeman also said, "That we Sahibs had a meeting at which the Commissioner said the people should be "commanded by a military action, while I said it should be done by leniency; but the "Commissioner in Sind spoke the truth; he was correct in his statement, and what he "said has been realized, these people are false speakers and bad." Moolla Mahomed invited the Sahib to stop two or three days, so that he (Moolla Mahomed) might remove his people and be settled in one place. Mittree has been devastated. Captain Sandeman then came to Mull and told the Murree Sirdars not to harm the Brahooees. Guzzun Khan's brother is gone to Kahan. Karam Khan is with Brahooees at Khumb Doka. Moolla Mahomed has left a wife and two sons at Kurk and taken two wives with him. Samandar Khan Lehri has broken off friendly relation with Moolla Mahomed and Futteh Khan Raisani, and the Shawanis have also disconnected themselves from Moolla Mahomed. Orders from his Highness the Khan have reached the Naib of Bagh and Dadar not to fight until Brahooees do not create disturbances. Naib Abdool Aziz has sent an order to the Brahooees, telling them that those who belong to Moolla Mahomed should leave and go to him, and those who are not evil-designers should go and live with Samandar Khan. The Barozais of Kurk have also been fighting among themselves. The Murgzhai tribe is on the side of Misri Khan's sons. The people of Kurk side with Sher Zaman. This difference has arisen on the right of pagri (Sirdarship).

The Brahuis say that Captain Sandeman's proceedings have been such as if one sets fire to two pieces of fire-wood together. Colonel Loch has written to us that the Governor Sahib and the Commissioner Sahib were coming so you should be prepared to come, but I excused myself on account of sickness. As now I apprehend that this might have displeased the British Government, I entreat that I may be forgiven. I have been penitent that I shall never again fail in this respect. Consider me and my brother, Ali Muhammad, your faithful and obedient servants. There is no art that Lukman Hakim did not command, and likewise there is nothing that has not been arranged by the Commissioner. Let there be Brahooee or some other tribes concerned; you can best adjust it.

No. 55.

Translation of a letter written on the 15th of Zulhaj 1292, i.e., 13th January 1876.

The news from here is—Captain Sandeman with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Sarawan Sirdars went from here by regular stages to Khelat. The first day his Highness went and visited Captain Sandeman, Captain Sandeman urged the Khan to make a treaty with the Brahooees. His Highness replied, I am excessively pleased at your coming, but if you will get an order from the Governor to my address I will attend at whatever place you may appoint. I will carry out whatever orders you may be pleased to give me and I will in no way break through them. The Sahib replied to his Highness, if you will write an agreement in accordance with these terms I will obtain an order addressed to your Highness. The Khan then and there wrote a paper in accordance with the terms, which Captain Sandeman now has. His Highness the Khan said to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, whatever I have done or you have done has been through fear of our lives; now you must wait and I will wait. The Sirdar answered that if your Highness will remain quiet, we will remain quiet, if not, it rests with you. His Highness said to Karam Khan, Murree, you are an inveterate enemy of mine, my troops were defeated, and my guns taken by you. Karam Khan replied, your Highness had better make peace with your people, no peace can be made with us. The day on which this conversation took place, the report from Abdul Aziz, Naib of Bagh, reached Khelat, in which it was stated that he had attacked the Brahooes with some troops, had killed six of them, had made some of their headmen prisoners, and had carried off a great many of their flocks of goats and sheep. When the Sahib heard this he became very much enraged, and said that at my request the Brahooees had desisted from creating further disturbances, and your troops have attacked them and carried off their flocks; do as you think proper and act as you please (meaning, I have nothing further to say to you). The Sahib at once ordered his troops to get ready to march; the Khan entreated him with tears to stay, but the Sahib would not listen to his entreaties. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed then represented that it was near evening, and that Captain Sandeman had better wait until the morning. The Sahib at the request of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed stayed for one night, and in the morning marched to Johan, and from there he came stage by stage to the north of Mittree.

The news regarding Noordeen is as follows:—Some time ago his Highness the Khan sent Darogah Atta Mahomed to him, and sent with him a Koran with his Highness' seal on it, and he took an oath that for the future he would not harm Noordeen. After this the Darogah went, gave the oath and brought Noordeen back with him to his Highness the Khan. The day after Captain Sandeman left Khelat his Highness sent some one to Noordeen to tell him that the Darogah had sent for him. Noordeen with his friends went to Atta Mahomed's house, and his Highness then sent some infantry to Atta Mahomed's house to murder him and Noordeen. The infantry went and opened fire, and a fight ensued, in which 36 of the infantry of his Highness the Khan were slain, and Noordeen and his friends and Atta Mahomed and his brother Darogah Mohamed Ali were also killed. Ali Jan, son of Rahimdad, escaped and took refuge in the house of the Khan's sister; the Juttuk Sirdar also managed to escape, and he joined his friends and people. When the Brahooees heard of this and the attack on their tribe near Nori, they were all of one determination, and the Murrees are united with them. In one or two days six thousand Brahooees will be collected between Haji and Mittree.

It remains to be seen what will happen, and whether the Sahib returns to his own country. Whatever other news I hear I will write to you. The Sarawan Brahooees and the Murrees are on really friendly terms now. I believe that they will create a rebellion.

This they have been for some time, as far as the Chiefs on either side go. It will be recollected when the Khan took the Bands away from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani, the Murree Sirdars opposed their support to Moolla Mahomed, saying he was their Sirdar.—W. L. M.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 14th February 1876.

On the 9th February letters were received from the Sarawan Brahooee Sirdars to the address of the Commissioner, Colonel Munro, and the Deputy Commissioner, Major Sandeman. The contents of the letters were to the effect that the confederate Sirdars saw no other course open to them than to put their quarrel with his Highness the Khan to the issue of a battle. The reason for this was the conduct of his Highness the Khan in having caused the destruction of Sirdar Noordeen, his Shahgassee, and Wuzeer Atta Mahomed.

The letters stated that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani had sent his eldest son, Hasad Khan, to Kahan, to Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan to obtain the support and active aid of the Murri clan; that Ghuzzan Khan had agreed to give these, and had sent Sher Muhammad, his cousin, to Mondai, where Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had proceeded and had held an interview with Sher Muhammad. The result was that the Brahooee and Murree clans were to be friends and to act in concert.

The letters further stated that the Brahooees are collected in two places. The Sarawan Sirdars are at Tulli and the Sumalani Minguls hold the Bolan Pass.

A few days prior to the writing of these letters the Brahooees had caused some loss to a village situated near Bagh in Jallal Khan's country. The Brahooees plunder where such is possible, and this the Sirdars cannot now prevent.

On the 4th of February a sowar arrived at Tulli with a letter from Jam Ali, son of Mir Khan, Ex-Jam of Lus Beyla, to the address of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. The purport of the letter is that Jam Ali is very anxious that all the Sirdars, Sarawan and Jalawan, should remain in rebellion against the Khan, who cannot now be trusted. Jam Ali now considers Sirdar Mulla Mahomed in the light of a father, and that he ought (there being no other course open) to join heartily in opposing and fighting with his Highness the Khan.

Jam Ali's letter also stated that Mir Brahim Khan, brother of the late Sirdar Noordeen, and Mir Gohur Khan Zarakzai were already in arms and held the Mulla Pass. The Jalawans were also collecting at Wud with the object of raiding Khozdar and Baghwana. If possible, Mir Gohur Khan intended to attack the village of Kotra in the Mulla Pass.

It was also believed that two kafillas en route to Candahar had been plundered in the Mulla Pass.

The Sirdar's letter concluded by saying that the Brahooees, who were taken prisoners by the Khan's troops in the early part of January, were released, a fine of Rupees 40 being imposed on each.

The reply sent to the above communications was as follows :—

" I have received your letter of the 6th February, also the one for the Commissioner, Colonel Munro. The latter I have delivered.

" Colonel Munro is greatly concerned to hear of the disturbed state of Kutchi.

" It is proper for you to send me once a week an account of your doings and of all that takes place in the country.

" I regret extremely to hear that there is now, in the opinion of your Sirdars, no cure for your troubles, but war with his Highness the Khan. At any time should you change your minds, and should you desire it, I will gladly write to his Highness on your behalf, and do my best still to bring about a peaceful solution of your present difficulties. Do not forget this. With the consent of the Commissioner I am ready at any time to do my best for you with his Highness the Khan. Tell this to the Murree Chiefs also, and be careful all of you not to cause injury to poor people. I note what you say about the death of Sirdar Noordeen at the hands of his Highness the Khan. I have seen Naib Pir Jan on this subject, and he tells me that Sirdar Noordeen and Wuzeer Atta Mahomed and others had conspired together to kill the Khan on the day of the Eed. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed will also remember what passed between him and me on the subject of this conspiracy against the Khan's throne and life. He will remember that Noordeen's agent, when he arrived at Mustung with news of Noordeen's arrival at Khelat, told us all that Noordeen was not doing well, and was acting a double part. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed himself at Khelat said to me that Sirdar Noordeen was a treacherous man and a scoundrel (loocha) both to you (Sirdars) and his Highness the Khan.

" Now in acting at the present time as you Sirdars in your letters describe you are doing, it is right you should recall these things to your memory and not forget what was Sirdar Noordeen's character, and whether it is advisable for the sake of such a man to widen the breach between yourselves and his Highness the Khan.

" I hear that Gohur Khan attempted to attack Kotri, but that the Naib stationed there was joined by the Magassie Belooch and their Chiefs, who declared they were ready to fight for his Highness the Khan. On hearing this Gohur Khan and his people had to retire into the hills."

The following news has been received from the Murree head-quarters of Kahan :—

The southern Murrees (they reside in the hills about Tulli, Dadar, and as far as Kirta in the Bolan Pass) lately made a raid on Tall, carrying off 200 sheep and 12 cows.

On the 4th of February Hassad Khan, eldest son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, visited Kahan. He was well received, and went with Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan's cousin, Sher Muhammad, to Mondai to meet Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani.

On the 5th instant Colonel Loch sent one Roshan to the Commissioner to complain that two bullocks of his had been carried off into the Boogtee Hills. Commissioner directed Major Sandeman to take up the case. The complainant was sent with some Boogtee sowars into the hills to try and trace the plundered animals. Every effort is being made to try and trace the cattle which had apparently strayed, it being only conjecture that they had been plundered by Boogtees.

10th February.—Intimation was sent to the Murree and Brahooee Chiefs that did any plundering parties belonging to their respective tribes come near any of the Sind military posts they would be attacked.

11th February.—The Commissioner in Sind's docket No. 131, dated 4th instant (enclosing a letter from District Superintendent of Police, Shikarpoor), to Commissioner Colonel Munro, on special duty, gives the following news :—

That a report, dated 27th January 1876, received from the Thannadar of Shadadpoor, states, " That the Bunnias (shop-keepers) of that place have received letters from the " Nari District to the effect that Moolla Mahomed has collected a number of Sarawans " and Murrees at Tulli. Great plundering prevails in the Nari District, and many people " are preparing themselves to leave the country.

" Sett Utman Chand, resident of Gundava, and his brother have left the Nari, together with their families, and are now in the village of Mohil on their way to Shikarpoor.

"Khan Muhammad, mounted constable, of Panj, reports that 200 Magassie sowars have put up in Gundava, and other foot and mounted regiments in Jhal.

"Gohur Khan together with 500 or 600 sowars stop the Mulla Pass, and have taken possession of Baghwana, and have also plundered two caravans of Pathans, one of which was proceeding from here to Candahar, and the other coming from thence to this district; consequently proceeding to and from Candadar viâ the Mulla is stopped.

"Ibrahim Khan, brother of Noordeen Mingul, is collecting forces in Wud, and it is not known where he intends to go: Brahooees are plundering everywhere."

The following report has been received from his Highness the Khan of Khelat's Naib stationed at Nasirabad in Kutchi:—

"Since the Brahooees raided Bar Shori they have not attacked any other village. All the people in Kutchi residing in hamlets have moved from these and gone into the larger villages. I have heard of no one leaving Kutchi on account of Brahooee depredations. No raid has been made in the Gundava direction.

"Mir Gohur Khan Zarakzai did collect a force of 500 or 600 men with the intention of occupying the Mulla Pass; but the Sirdar of the Magassie Belooch, Kaisar Khan, came to the aid of the Naib of Gundava with 1,000 men. On hearing this Gohur Khan fled.

"His Highness the Khan has since sent Naibs Abdul Latif and Pir Baksh with a body of troops under the command of Fakir Muhammad, commandant, to attack and punish Gohur Khan and re-open the Mulla Pass.

"Two hundred infantry and Naib Itbar Khan are stationed at Khozdar.

"Noordeen's brother Ibrahim collected some men in Wud, but as yet has not been able to do any damage to the people or country.

"Regarding the report of the plunder of kafillas in the Mulla Pass, nothing authentic is yet known. I heard a small party of Pathans en route from Shikarpoor to Khelat viâ the Mulla were attacked, and some loss caused to their property. I have sent to get full information regarding this, and will send it when received. I have heard of no kafila plundered en route to Kurrachee from Candahar."

Syud Aurang Shah of Dadar has sent the following news:—

After the return of the Sarawan Sirdars from Khelat they settled at Tulli at the foot of the Mondai Murree Hills.

The Sumalani, Pashani, Bodozai, and Lahri Brahooees are at Kundlani and Abigoom, in the Bolan Pass.

Generally the Brahooees seem to be of opinion that the way out of their present difficulties is to fight with his Highness the Khan.

The Naibs of Kutchi wrote to his Highness the Khan that the Brahooees of K uthi were again in rebellion and intended to attack his Highness' troops.

The Khan, in reply, sent orders that the troops were to remain passive, and were not to take the initiative against the Sirdars, but to let the Brahooees first attack them. The Naibs were directed not to cause any injury to the Brahooees.

On the first Moharram his Highness sent Naib Abdul Latif of Quetta and Fakir Muhammad, commandant, with the troops under his command, to attack Gohur Khan Zarakzai, Chakar Jatak, and other Jalawans.

A letter was received on the 12th from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to say that since he last wrote no further plundering had been done by the Brahooees in Kutchi.

With reference to your telegram of the 16th instant, I have the honour herewith to submit copy of my own, transmitting letter of the 12th instant, enclosing Major Sandeman's report of his mission to the hilly tracts of Beloochistan (Khelat) to the address of the Secretary to Government, Punjab, in whose hands the complete reports, with their enclosures and appendices, now are.

2. In my telegram of yesterday, acknowledging yours, I explained the difficulty of sending copies of all the papers from this station; but, for the future, all communications relating to Sind border or Khelat affairs shall be sent to you direct, copies being furnished to the Government of the Punjab, as required by your telegraphic message under acknowledgment.

From Lieut.-Col. A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner, Derajat (on special duty, Jacobabad), to C. M. Rivaz, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

Reference to Government orders of 12th ultimo.

On receipt of your telegram of the 12th ultimo, with orders from the Government of India, directing me to proceed to Jacobabad to assume charge from Sir W. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, of entire relations with Khelat, I at once made preparations for compliance, being at Dera Ghazi Khan en route to Lahore, to attend the reception to be there given to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Departure from Dera Ghazi Khan. And arrival in Sind.

2. Leaving Dera Ghazi Khan on the 16th January by boat on the Indus, with such office establishment as I had with me on circuit, I reached Kusmore in Sind on the 22nd, and reported my arrival there to you.

Orders communicated to Captain Sandeman.

3. Before my departure from Dera Ghazi Khan, I transmitted a copy of your telegram to Captain Sandeman, who was then believed to be on his return march from the Bolan Pass and Khelat through the Murree and Boogtee Hills. Soon after my arrival at Kusmore, I was gratified by receiving a note from that officer, written the previous day at Boogtee Dera, intimating his readiness to join me at any convenient point between Kusmore and Jacobabad, if apprized of my being on that line of route. I at once communicated with Captain Sandeman, who made a forced march, outstripping his escort, and joined me at Toj on the night of the 23rd January. The troops composing the escort and the baggage cattle being fatigued with long marches in a hilly country, we proceeded to Jacobabad by easy stages, arriving there on the force, which had formed the escort of the mission, to their respective regiments.

Official papers received from Punjab Secretariat.

5. During my progress to Jacobabad I received the documents from your office, with which I was to be furnished in accordance with the instructions from the Government of India, and carefully acquainted myself with their contents. Whilst Captain Sandeman's report was in preparation I was occupied with such of the current duties of my office as could be carried on at this distance; in making local inquiries as to the more recent doings in the Khelat State; in organizing a small Intelligence Department through the Belooch Sirdars accompanying Captain Sandeman, and in familiarising myself as much as possible with the later correspondence and orders of authority in regard to Sind border management generally, and to our relations with Khelat in particular.

Submits that report with comments.

6. With this preliminary notice of my own proceedings, I now beg to submit Captain Sandeman's full report, dated the 5th instant, with a running commentary, concluding this transmitting letter with such remarks on the actual position of affairs as I may deem myself to be justified in offering for consideration, on a necessarily short acquaintance with and study of the subject.

Captain Sandeman crosses frontier line at Harrand.

7. After noting the requirements of the Resolution of the Government of India, authorising his visit to the Murree and Boogtee Hills, and to Khelat territory, Captain Sandeman reports that he crossed the frontier from Harrand on the 22nd November 1875, escorted by small detachments of infantry and cavalry from the Punjab frontier force, detailed as an escort under orders of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. Captain Wylie and Dr. Thomson were respectively in command and medical charge of the escort.

His regular escort.

His large irregular escort.

8. In addition to that escort, Captain Sandeman was accompanied by a very large body of Beloochis of the Dera Ghazi Khan District and border, headed by their Tomandars or Chiefs; the only absentee being the Kasrani Chief, the locality of whose tribe was deemed too distant from the scene of operations to render their presence or absence of any moment. The numbers of Beloochis, chiefly horsemen, in the Deputy Commissioner's train, may be estimated at from 1,000 to 1,200, consisting mainly of picked men in attendance upon their Chiefs. This irregular, but very dependable following, was sufficient to obviate or bear down any semblance of opposition which might anywhere appear, though none was anticipated from the first.

Its numbers, consistence, and object.

Punjab system requires no description.

9. His Honour is well aware of the system pursued for nearly ten years past on the Dera Ghazi Khan border in controlling the border tribes and maintaining security and peace; it is therefore quite unnecessary here to describe it. The assemblage referred to in the last paragraph was an illustration of it on a large scale. The Deputy Commissioner has found it ever profitable to enlist the sympathies and aid of the Belooch Chiefs, and of the better disposed headmen and members of their Tomans, in favour of good border administration. They had repeatedly responded to his call on former occasions, securing results which could not otherwise have been obtained without a display of military force, at great expense. In this last friendly expedition the moral effect of such a gathering of clans, assembled publicly in the interests of peace and good government, to traverse regions the inhabitants of which have long been strangers to either, must have been great, apart entirely from the respect which the strength and numbers of the invading body must secure. Without a justifiable faith in such a combination of moral and tribal influences, the Deputy Commissioner admits that he could never expect success in his endeavours to extend a system which has been found to produce salutary effects on the Punjab border, to the Murree, Boogtee, and other tribes occupying the remoter hills of Beloochistan, forming the frontier of Sind.

The palpable demonstration of it.

Its good effects.

Moral effect of assemblage to be also borne in mind.

Success of Deputy Commissioner's measures dependent upon proper application of this moral force.

Joining of independent tribes.

10. On the 25th November the Loharani section of the Murree tribe appeared, and, on being informed of the objects of the mission, joined, and were soon after followed by the Bijarani Murrees, under their notorious sectional leader Karam Khan. The Khetran and Boogtee Chiefs, with a considerable retinue, also presented themselves, and the mission, thus swollen in proportions by the adhesion of so many Beloochis, entered Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, on the 2nd December, receiving a cordial welcome from the Chief, Ghuzzan Khan, and his immediate dependents, who had advanced to meet it.

Arrival at Murree head-quarters, and reception.

Conference at Kahan. Disclosures.

11. A conference at Kahan disclosed the facts that the Murree Chief had already been in friendly communication with Moolla Mahomed Raisani, the acknowledged leader of the Sarawan Brahooee faction, opposed to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and that a general rising of the disaffected throughout the Khelat State was imminent. Friendly discussion elicited an assurance on the part of the Murrees that they would be amenable to any reasonable requirements consequent upon a reconciliation between the Khan of Khelat and his rebellious Brahooee Sirdars. Reviewing their own position as a poor, wild, and predatory tribe, to whom robbery and spoliation had descended as an inheritance, they admitted that they had been made the tools of designing men, of both the contending factions, in plundering the Kutchi subjects of his Highness, who had, moreover, been ever exposed to Murree raids from their geographical position. Such arrangements as had once existed, when the late Nusseer Khan ruled in Khelat, would not be disagreeable to them; but their acceptance must be contingent upon his Highness' reconciliation with all the Sarawans.

General rising contemplated.

Effects of friendly discussion.

Exposed state of Kutchi to Murree raids.

Professed amenability of Murrees.

12. Captain Sandeman undertook to mediate, and Ghuzzan Khan delivered to him the letter received by the Murree Chief from the Sarawan leader, in furtherance of the proposed mediation, deputing his brother, cousin, and leading mukkaddams to accompany the mission, and granting the first two relations written powers to act for him in his own unavoidable absence owing to weak health.

Captain Sandeman's mediation accepted.

Murree Chief's personal inability to accompany.

13. On the 8th December Captain Sandeman reached Seebee (in the territories of his Highness the Ameer of Cabul), the temporary asylum of the refugee Moolla Mahomed Raisani, who had called to his councils several other leading Brahooee Chiefs. These leaders, with the Afghan chiefs of Seebee and Khajjak, joined the camp in a friendly manner, soliciting a written declaration by Captain Sandeman of the objects for which he had been deputed by Government to their country. This was given for important reasons detailed in the 14th paragraph of this report; and, after full discussion of the position in all its bearings, the Sarawan Chiefs expressed their readiness, as the Murree Chief had already done, to suspend warlike operations, and to accept Captain Sandeman's mediation between themselves and his Highness the Khan of Khelat. They further expressed their willingness to accompany the mission through the Bolan Pass to Shalkot, or Quettah, the opening of which pass for traffic was a principal object of Captain Sandeman's deputation. It had been resolved that two leading Belooch Sirdars of the Dera Ghazi Khan District should be deputed to his Highness the Khan, bearing the joint petitions of the Murree and Brahooee Sirdars, and a written intimation to his Highness of the objects and authority with which Captain Sandeman had visited the country. Until assured of his Highness the Khan's satisfaction at the visit, Captain Sandeman preferred entering the Bolan by Bibinani, thus avoiding contact with the Khan's officials at Dadar. On his way, however, the Khan's principal officials met him with a welcome to Dadar, to which place he was specially invited. The mission accordingly turned off to that place, where it was very cordially received, both by officials and residents generally.

Mission reaches Seebee.

Meeting with Brahooee and Afghan Chiefs.

Sarawan leaders also accept Captain Sandeman's mediation.

And join the mission in its progress through Bolan.

Proposed deputation to his Highness the Khan.

Diversion to Dadar.

Reception.

14. Starting for Kirta in the Bolan, on the 15th December, Captain Sandeman received certain prohibitory orders from the Sind authorities, compliance with which he deemed to be impossible in the circumstances, especially with reference to subsidiary orders received by him, before leaving his district, from the Government of the Punjab. These appeared to him to require an exploration of the Bolan Pass, and part of the country beyond up to Quettah. From Kirta the Lagari and Mazari Tomandars were deputed on a visit to his Highness the Khan as bearers of the joint petitions of Brahooees and Murrees, a letter from Captain Sandeman having preceded them. To this communication a very favourable reply was received, referring to his Highness' adherence to former treaties and stipulations which had been broken, he alleged, by his Sirdars. Allusion is made to the arrival at Khelat (on 13th December) of Noordeen Mingul, Jalawan Sirdar, who had been specially summoned by the Khan, without reference to Captain Sandeman's mission at all.

March to Kirta.

Despatch from Sind authorities.

Deputation of Sirdars to Khelat.

Correspondence with his Highness the Khan.

Sirdar Noordeen's arrival.

15. The mission proceeded through the Bolan to the Dasht-i-bedaulat, and thence onwards to Shalkot or Quettah. During the march further prohibitory orders, which are quoted at length, were received from Jacobabad and replied to. The Dumar Kakar (Pathans) Chiefs presented themselves, expressing a desire to join in any arrangement by which the Bolan Pass route might be again opened for traffic, as they were considerable losers by the closure. The reception of the mission at Shalkot was as cordial as elsewhere in his Highness the Khan's territories. A letter from his Highness, in reply to that sent by the Belooch Sirdars, was received on arrival, couched in the most favourable and encouraging terms, and intimating the appointment of a high official to wait upon the mission and attend to all its wants. The written report of the Belooch delegates was equally encouraging, and, up to this point, matters appeared to prosper beyond expectation.

Shalkot or Quettah.

Express from Jacobabad and reply.

Dumar Pathans.

Cordial reception at Quettah.

Reply to letter sent by Belooch deputation.

Favourable prognostications.

16. Ominous interruptions continued to arrive, however, by express, from Jacobabad. Captain Sandeman received orders from the Commissioner in Sind to return forthwith to his district, and replied that compliance was then impossible, without sacrificing the objects for which he had been sent under orders of the Government of India to visit the hills. The prejudicial effect of these communications is noted by Captain Sandeman, who reports that the contents of the letters appeared to have been generally made known to the natives by the kossids, causing doubts in the minds of chiefs and others as to the validity of authorisation by which the mission was supported. Endeavouring to assure the Chiefs and dissipate their increasing doubts, Captain Sandeman proceeded to Mustung en route to Khelat. Traders from Candahar had solicited his aid at Quettah in securing a passage through the Bolan Pass for a kafila, but nothing could be done in contravention of his Highness' orders on that subject. The occupation of Shalkot by his Highness the Khan's troops covers the kafila route at this point, and it was clear that nothing effectual for the permanent opening of the Bolan could be secured without his Highness' assistance, however anxious other Chiefs and tribes might be to re-open an ancient traffic route by which they had largely benefited.

Captain Sandeman's recall by Commissioner in Sind.

Reasons for non-compliance.

Contents of letters known and promulgated by the kossids.

Injurious effects of this.

Solicitations of a Kafilabashi.

Reasons against interference.

17. At Mustung the Khan's delegate joined the mission, accompanied by the Lagari and Mazari Chiefs, bearing messages of cordial welcome from his Highness, between whom and Captain Sandeman friendly written communications passed. The mission arrived at Khelat on the 31st December, apparently under the most favourable auspices; for the details of the receptions and subsequent attentions of the Khan and his officials give every indication of cordiality.

Arrival at Mustung.
Return of Chiefs deputed to Khelat.
Friendly communications.
Arrival at Khelat.

18. That intelligence adverse to the objects of Captain Sandeman's visit to the hills was sedulously spread throughout the country is proved by the doubting interrogatories of Chiefs and others immediately after the arrival of each messenger from Jacobabad. Apart entirely from the vexed question in regard to Captain Sandeman's discretion to visit Khelat under the instructions he had received, it soon became clear that the reports thus circulated by persons, officials and otherwise, apparently interested in the results, were producing the worst possible effect. This did not prevent the members of the mission from being well received by his Highness, who at first gave unmistakeable signs of his appreciation of the visit.

Evidences of injurious effects caused by reports from Jacobabad.

His Highness the Khan's earlier encouragement notwithstanding.

19. The description of Captain Sandeman's interviews with the Khan of Khelat conveys the impression that his Highness was at first most favourably inclined to all the overtures made to him, whether in the interests of good government and peace throughout his territory, or specially in reference to the hostility of his Sirdars, and the predatory raids of the Murrees. His allusions to the attempted mediation of 1872 were contemptuous, demonstrating his belief in the impracticability of compliance with its stipulations, even by his enemies. He described his difficulties in regard to the opening of the Bolan Pass for traffic, which, he averred, had been closed by order of the British authorities, necessitating withdrawal of his protective police posts. Whilst admitting his inability to be solely responsible for the security of traders passing through, he still pointed to his rights to a share of transit fees were the Pass to be re-opened. Symptoms of hesitation on the Khan's part, in regard to the various proposals made by Captain Sandeman, gradually became apparent. Evasive replies, contradictory of those implied in his earlier communications, were given, and it became evident that some sinister influences were at work.

Symptoms of vacillation and insincerity on his Highness' part.

Sinister influences.

20. During the various public receptions it was observed that Sirdar Noordeen Mingul who had been summoned, under peculiar circumstances, by the Khan to his presence from Lus Beyla, the government of which south-western portion of the Khan's territory had recently been entrusted to this leading Chief of the Jalawan faction, kept aloof from the Sarawan confederacy, notwithstanding previous friendly overtures on the part of the latter. Sirdar Noordeen appeared to deal directly with his Highness; but the Sarawans believed him to be playing a double part, opposed to the interests of the Sirdars of the Khelat State generally. Captain Sandeman judiciously (as the sequel proved) declined to interfere between this Chief and the Khan at the request of the Sarawans.

21. That the change of tone and manner on the Khan's part was partly, if not entirely attributable to the conflicting disclosure by messengers from Jacobabad, may be inferred from the discoveries made by the Mazari and Lagari Sirdars (paragraph 51), and the scene described in paragraph 53. Captain Sandeman felt under the necessity of reassuring his Highness; who, however, adduced very pertinent reasons (vide paragraphs 55 and 57) for the doubts and hesitation more recently exhibited by him. What is set forth in the paragraphs last referred to appears to me to be important, demanding serious consideration, as evidencing a pre-existing state of affairs which was utterly irreconcilable with the success of what has been termed, in connection with Beloochistan affairs, "the Punjab policy," now tentatively approved by the Government of India in contradistinction to the "Sind system," to which his Highness the Khan's remarkable expression of opinion and obligation refers.

Probable causes of Khan's change of tone and demeanour.

Pertinence of reasons adduced by him.

What they point to.

22. The Khan's expressed inability to coerce his Sirdars is alleged by him as the incentive to his compliance with a system in itself disagreeable to him, and, moreover, alleged by him to be the cause of the commotions by which his Principality has, for so many years, been distracted. Captain Sandeman's description of his interview with the Khan, in paragraphs 53 to 60 of his report, seems to me specially worthy of the consideration and orders of Government. His Highness' earnest request that Captain Sandeman would be the bearer of letters to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General was acceded to, and both khureetas form enclosures to this report.

23. The account of the public Durbar held by the Khan, the day following the more private discussion just referred to, is interesting. The causes of the temporary suspension of the public ceremonial reception are set forth in paragraphs 64 to 66, and are moreover separately described in a letter from Captain Wylie, which forms one of the appendices to this voluminous report. The reference to Sirdar Noordeen's position and bearing during the Durbar points to the segregation of him and his party from the Sarawan confederacy. His Highness reply in Durbar to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's address on the part of the Sarawans evinces intelligence and determination of character. It also discloses the fact above noticed that his Highness is really anxious to communicate more freely with the highest British authorities than it has hitherto been in his power to do for reasons given by himself. The Khan's address to the Murree representatives is noticeable as showing his own estimate of that most turbulent and unruly Belooch clan after long experience. Their past history certainly gives little good augury for the future though their abstinence for so many years from plundering the Punjab border (under circumstances which it must always be remembered have been very favourable to themselves and their objects), and also their professed amenability to Captain Sandeman's demands on the late, as on

24. Thus far Captain Sandeman's public and private interviews with the Khan of Khelat promised well: as if, however, to illustrate the constant liability to miscarriage of the motives and objects of truthful agents negociating with Asiatics—always fickle and suspicious, and often viciously bent upon pursuing crooked and mischievous courses—a report arrived at once expressed his disappointment at this occurrence. Whether preconcerted, as is not improbable, or whether accidental, merely in furtherance of previous instructions, having no special reference to Captain Sandeman's mission, the event supervened very inopportunely. The Sarawan Chief at that time did not appear to view the matter so keenly as did the English officer. Moolla Mahomed was still professedly anxious for such arrangements as might ultimately lead to a permanent cessation of hostilities between the Khan and the Sarawan Sirdars. His Highness sought another interview with Captain Sandeman, which was granted. moment. Whether the Khan's inconsistencies are to be ascribed to studied dissimulation from the first—to sinister influences, brought to bear upon him from any quarter during the progress of the mission or its sojourn at Khelat—to a naturally fickle and vacillating disposition—to the effect upon his mind of greater immediate danger to his person and throne from the hatching conspiracy of Noordeen, or to a combination of some or all of these causes
